Owing to the Dragon Festival (which is a settlement time with the Chinese) and the Whitsun holidays falling together, there were no piece goods auctions this week. The exchanges were closed yesterday and practically no business has been done throughout the week, so that there is nothing to report.

THE LOCAL COTTON MARKET

Messrs. A. B. Rosenfeld & Son, in their weekly report, state:—

China Cotton.—Since our last report, the cotton trade has witnessed a succession of firm market, which, although due in a large measure to the attitude and operations of the local bull clique, have carried prices well over 50 points, while forward positions scored practically a corresponding advance. Whatever may be the ultimate object of these operations, their influence has been one of the controlling factors in the market and has brought about a moderate revival of bull speculation on the part of the outside public. At the close, however, Mid-Americans declined some 275 points for spot and 93 points for October, in consequence of which our market responded accordingly. The general undertone of the market has been fairly good, due to the firmness with which spots are still held by strong holders. From present indications, therefore, we see no reason to change our views that any recession in prices is unwarranted and we believe the progress of the crop will continue to be the chief basis for important price changes.

Extracts of Correspondence

Tungchow, June 1.—The weather has been ideal the last couple of days and farm work is well advanced.

Shanghai and Districts, June 2.—The general rains that prevailed during the past few days have proved very beneficial. Planting will be general next week.

Chêkiang Province, June 1.—During the past week, the weather has been ideal for crop preparations; planting will be general within the next week. Conditions in every way perfect.

Yangtze Valley, May 30.—Weather favourable; planting now under way.

Honan, Shensi and Shansi Provinces, May 29.—We are having ideal weather. Preparations for the new crop are advancing generally.

Yarn.—Since our last report, the market has been steady to firm and prices have advanced Tl. 1 to Tls. 2. In all some 3,000 to 4,000 bales of all counts were contracted for shipment to interior marts, whilst over 1,000 bales direct business with the mills have been recorded.

Messrs. J. Spunt & Co. report:—

China cotton.—Due to the continued unfavourable weather conditions for the newly planted cotton, prices on the local cotton exchanges for forward contracts showed a steady to firm tendency, which, however, relaxed somewhat at the close, apparently in sympathy with the decline in Mid-Americans, but on the whole the range of prices for distant deliveries registered higher than those recorded during the previous period. There has been but little activity in spot cotton during the past week, nevertheless prices were in no way affected and remain in a steady to firm position by reason of the value of equivalent foreign grades being higher than that available of the local staple. As to the trend of prices in the immediate future, there is nothing visible at the moment to support expectations of any recession in prices on available old crop stocks. However, modifications may ensue on better reports of the condition of the growing crop. Tone of the market, steady.

UNVULCANISED RUBBER

Government Notification No. 1372, dated February 28, 1924, prohibits the importation into the Federated Malay States of unvulcanised rubber. The prohibition does not apply to unvulcanised rubber in transit by sea or rail.

RUBBER OUTPUT

The output of rubber from the Taiping Estates for the month of April was 6,548 lb., the decrease being due to the wintering of trees.

DUTCH PETROLEUM CO.'S DIVIDENDS

The Hague, May 28.

The Royal Dutch Petroleum Company announce the payment of a final dividend of 15 per cent. for 1923, together with an exceptional payment in July of an interim dividend of 10 per cent. for 1924. This latter is being done in order to help shareholders to pay for shares in the forthcoming issue.—Reuter.

SHELL CO. DIVIDEND

The Asiatic Petroleum Co. (North China), Ld., announce that the Shell Transport & Trading Co., Ld., have declared a dividend at the rate of 2s. 6d. per share, free of income tax, payable on July 5. Bearer coupon to be presented, No. 43.

NEW KOREA SERVICE

The Chosen Yusen Kaisha (Korea Mail S. S. Co.) have opened a passenger service to run every three weeks between Fusan and Shanghai, calling at Tsingtao, Jinsen, Kunsan and Moppo. The first steamer, the Fusan Maru, to be berthed on this line is expected at Shanghai on June 9. The N.Y.K. are the acting agents.

SHIPPING IN THE SCHELDT

Antwerp, May 30.

The Belgian and Dutch pilotage directors have decided that vessels drawing 30 feet may again use the Bath channel of the Scheldt, providing they observe the precautionary measures prescribed.—Reuter.

N. Y. K. POOTUNG WHARF

The Nippon Yusen Kaisha now have opened new wharf and godown premises at Pootung under the name of the N. Y. K. Pootung Wharf and have appointed as compradore Mr. Dung Yu-nong, who has had considerable experience of godown business for many years at the company's mail wharf.

The premises are situated between the Shanghai & Hongkew Wharf Co.'s Pootung Wharf and the China Merchants' S. N. Co.'s Eastern Wharf. The wharf consists of a reinforced concrete building with a frontage of 1,064 feet, breadth 50 feet and depth 28 feet at lowest low water in Shanghai, being available for berthing simultaneously two ocean-going steamers. There is a pontoon of 38.6 feet at the upper end of the wharf for delivery of cargo and berthing of launches, and also two cranes for heavy cargo.—one 10-ton portable crane and one 5-ton travelling locomotive crane. "A" shed, a reinforced concrete and fire brick wall building, stores 5,000 tons of general cargo or 30,000 bales of Indian cotton, and there are two godowns, reinforced concrete three-storied and fire-brick buildings, each storey separated into three compartments by strong fire-proof walls with a storage capacity of 15,000 tons general cargo or 100,000 B/s. Indian cotton and an open yard allowing for 30,000 tons coal, timber, etc. The steam launch Lunghwa Maru will ply every hour on all week-days to and from the Customs Jetty and the N. Y. K. Pootung Wharf.

COAL OUTPUT

The total output of the Kailan Mining Administration's mines for the week ending May 24 amounted to 95,900 tons and the sales during the same period to 90,772 tons.

Messrs. George McBain have received a telegram from the manager of the Mentoukou Mine stating that the output of coal for the month of May was 16,533 tons.

There has been no life in the local share market during the past week and the volume of business reported too small to call for special comments. A cloud of depression shrouds business generally at the present time.

COMPANY MEETINGS

CHINA IMPORT & EXPORT LUMBER CO.

The Sad Death of Mr. Dinsmore: Chairman's Strong Words on Bandit Evil

The 22nd annual general meeting of the China Import & Export Lumber Co., Ld., was held last Friday at 6 Kiukiang Road, Mr. C. H. Arnhold presiding, supported by Mr. W. J. N. Dyer and Capt. R. E. Sassoon (Directors). There was an attendance representing 3,538 shares.

Mr. Arnhold said:

Gentlemen, before proceeding with my report on the accounts and the regular business of the meeting, I would refer to the very strong statement made at our annual general meeting last year, when the Chairman spoke of the unsatisfactory conditions of business in China resulting from the deplorable state of the Government of this country, as evidenced by the continued interference with ordinary trading by illegal taxation, civil war and bandit depredations. He mentioned that foreign members of the company's staff, travelling in the exercise of their duties, had repeatedly been fired upon by bandits in attempts to seize them for ransom.

Throughout the past year troubles of this nature have continued, and the courage, faithfulness and spirit of loyalty of our staff in meeting such problems has been deserving of the highest praise.

Every possible precaution to safeguard our staff when travelling in the interior has at all times been observed by providing them with fast motor-boats and by having them move, in bandit infested areas, in parties sufficiently strong in numbers to offer resistance in case of attack. Despite this and other precautions, we have this month had a deplorable incident take place when a party of our forestry inspectors, travelling in the regular course of duty, were attacked by brigands.

The Late Mr. Dinsmore's Heroism.

The party, according to the information so far received, consisted of Mr. Jay Dinsmore, an American Mr. Mackay, an Australian; and Mr. Paul Lee, a Chinese Yale graduate and two men of our Chinese forestry staff, besides the usual attendant coolies and servants.

They were attacked at a place called Nangia, a forest area about 10 miles from the village of Pichikou, which is 20 miles south of the town of Shahsien, in Fukien Province. During the fighting Mr. Dinsmore was shot is the abdomen and badly battered, but somehow made his escape, ultimately arriving at Shahsien. He could have gone on to Yenpingfu, a day's journey down the river, for medical attendance, but stayed at Shahsien in an heroic attempt to help save his companions in the party, who were being held prisoners by the brigands. He wired from Shahsien that his wounds were not serious, but nevertheless died on the 21st instant, due, apparently, to internal hemorrage.

Mr. James Carroll, our senior forest inspector for that area, is now working with local Chinese for the release of the captives. The local Chinese military officials seem powerless or afraid to take active steps against the brigands. The civil officials, however, are co-operating with Mr. Carroll, and through negotiations along customary Chinese lines we hope soon to receive favourable news as to the prospects of release of Mr. Mackay, Mr. Paul Lee and the others.

Our sincere sympathy goes out to the relatives of Mr. Jay Dinsmore. He had given many years of loyal, faithful service to the company. He was one of Nature's true gentlemen, a kindly but strong man, well, imbued with charity and courtesy to his fellow men. He loved China and its people; yet met death through their brutality.

It can only be hoped that lives sacrificed, such as this, may bring to the attention of our Home Government, the American Government, and other nations the necessity to enforce steps whereby other foreign lives in China may eventually be adequately protected.

Satisfactory Year.

Considering (continuing) the generally upset conditions of trade in China during the past year, results realized in our operations can be regarded as essentially satisfactory. Our profits as shown on operations last year would have been even better had lumber values remained steady. During February, however, a break in prices occurred, especially in Oregon pine, following the inflated values which had ruled during the latter part of last year, due to demand in Japan for the rebuilding of Tokio and Yokohama. As a consequence, stocks had to be written down to below actual cost in the valuations adopted for the closing of our annual accounts. We furthermore deducted from such reduced stock valuations the sum of Tls. 300,000, as margin to cover market fluctuation. After making such provision, the total valuation of our stocks is Tls. 915,276.83, as shown on the balance sheet.

The total sum at credit of profit and loss account is Tls. 393,406.47, which includes balance carried over from last year. Deducting dividend paid, directors' and auditors' fees, as well as depreciation, there remains at disposal a balance of Tls. 330,406.47, out of which it is proposed to pay a dividend of 8 per cent. absorbing Tls. 40,000, and to carry forward to new account the sum of Tls. 290,406.47.

Buildings stand in our books at a value of Tls. 583,154.36, as compared with Tls. 568,565.29 on Feburary 28, 1923. The increase is due to cost of completion of our sawmill at Shanghai and erection of a new staff quarters building on our property at Tsingtao, less sale of our office building at Tientsin, on which the company realized Tls. 11,890 over the book value, as shown in profit and loss account. A new office building, better adapted to our needs, is now in course of construction at Tientsin to replace the premises sold.

Investments.

Investments have been reduced from Tls. 228,808.13, on February 28, 1923, to Tls. 142,808.13 at the end of our last financial year, due to disposal of some of our holdings.

Values of machinery and mill Equipment have, during the past year, increased from Tls. 190,000 to Tls. 261,232.98, due to costs of additional machinery installed in our new sawmill at Shanghai.

General and floating equipment shows a reduction during the year from a value of Tls. 273,039 to Tls. 256,197, due principally to depreciation written off motor trucks and yard operation machinery.

Sundry debtors obligations, which at the end of our previous financial year stood at Tls. 1,009,652.62, were reduced at the end of the last year to Tls. 798,042.80.

This sum includes old Government accounts, which are gradually being paid off. All bad and doubtful debts have been written off.

Our cash balance in hand and with bankers at the end of last year was Tls. 104,002.90, and under sundry creditors our liabilities in bills payable, etc., are Tls. 2,209,639.59, which shows a market reduction from the sum of Tls. 2,571,729.28 due under this heading at the end of the previous financial year.

Speculation in Lumber Market.

Our reserves, amounting to Tls. 2,100,000, remain unchanged. In recommending to carry forward, at credit of profit and loss account, the comparatively large sum of Tls. 290,406.47, your directors have in mind the difficult conditions which are now being met in the fluctuation of lumber market values. So far we have done rather well in the new year's business, considering the problems which our staff have had to meet. Continued interference in the market by Chinese and foreign speculators in lumber may, however, make it necessary for us to submit to sacrifices in order to hold our prestige in the China trade. You may rest assured, however, that in exercising any such indulgence in the market the policy of the company will continue to be conservatively governed.

This, gentlemen, is all I have to say regarding the accounts, which I think you will agree with me, show careful handling of our interests by our executive staff.

I hope you will approve my recommendation, which will presently be submitted as a motion, that a bonus to our foreign staff be authorized.

Resolutions.

The following resolutions were then put to the meeting and passed unanimously:—

That the report and accounts for the year ended February 29, 1924, as presented, be passed, and that the balance at disposal under profit and loss account, of Tls. 330,406.47, be appropriated as follows:

To pay a dividend of 8 per cent. absorbing Tls. 40,000 and to carry forward to new account for the financial year 1924 the sum of Tls. 290,406.47—proposed by Mr. C. H. Arnhold and seconded by Mr. W. J. N. Dyer.

That Mr. W. J. N. Dyer be re-elected to the Board of Directors—proposed by Mr. C. H. Arnhold and seconded by Mr. C. L. Seitz.

That the appointment of Capt. R. E. Sassoon as a director of the company be hereby confirmed—proposed by Mr. W. J. N. Dyer and seconded by Mr. E. Evensen. The former voiced the regret of the board in losing the services Mr. R. M. E. Dalgleish on his retirement from China and welcomed the appointment of Capt. R. E. Sassoon.

That Messrs. Lowe, Bingham & Matthews be re-elected auditors for the ensuing year at a remuneration of Tls. 1,000—proposed by Capt. R. E. Sasson and seconded by Mr. Han Yung-keng.

That in addition to the annual bonuses customarily paid to the executive staff of the company, at discretion of the directors, as a charge in working account, the directors be, and are hereby authorized, according to their judgment in each case, to pay to the company's foreign staff a bonus equivalent to one month's salary—proposed by Mr. C H. Arnhold and seconded by Mr. J. S. S. Cooper.

WEEKS & CO., LD.

Business of the Year Affected by General Depression

The 24th ordinary general meeting of shareholders in Messrs. Weeks & Co., Ld. was held last Friday afternoon, Mr. H. M. Little presiding. The other directors present were Messrs. T. E. Trueman, L. J. Cubitt and R. H. Gaskin, and the attendance represented 6,243 shares.

The notice convening the meeting, and the auditor's report, having been read, the Chairman said: Gentlemen, the report and accounts for the year ended 29th February, 1924, have been circulated to shareholders, and with your permission we will take them as read.

There is a small typographical error in the printed balance sheet, the issued number of shares is stated as 21,811, whereas it should be 21,822. This number is correct on the outside of the report.

When we met last year we had to deal with a disappointing result, and your Directors regret that we have again to face a similar position.

The widespread general depression in commerce is primarily accountable for this, and not any inherent defect in working your business. That is shown by the proportion sold of various commodities representing necessities. luxuries and other things which can more easily be done without. In the first category our departments have shown larger sales and on a smaller margin of profit, than in the previous year. A curtailment of buying power in the community, is a natural and inevitable result of the depression in commerce, and in turn creates competitive prices which reduce the margin of profit, while the overhead expenses of the organization remain the same, and our high standard of quality and workmanship are maintained.

Our working expenses are lower than the previous year, and I can assure you, gentlemen, that every care is taken to economise where it is possible.

The balance sheet sets forth clearly the position of the Company's finances, but I wish to refer to a few points.

The extraordinary meeting held after the ordinary meeting last year, authorized your Directors to consolidate the total mortgage indebtedness of the company, by redeeming the whole issue of Tls. 100,000, 7 per cent. Second Mortgage Debentures of 1913, by an advance from the Hongkong & Shanghai Banking Corporation. The Debentures have, therefore, disappeared from our liabilities and the amount of Tls. 100,000 has been merged in the overdraft in current account with the Bank, which however, has been increased by only Tls. 54,608.59; or in other words, the combined liabilities of the Debentures and Bank overdraft have been reduced by Tls. 45,391.11 as at February 29, 1924:—

1923	Tls.	Tls.
Overdraft	579,551.57
Debentures	100,000.00	679,551.57
1924
Overdraft only		634,160.46
		45,391.11

You will be pleased to hear that to-day our overdraft is under the six lakhs.

The amount in Exchange Fluctuation account last year has been reduced by $3,858.77, caused by the difference in the rate of exchange, 73, at which the Debentures stood in our books, and the rate of 71 at which our books are kept. Sundry Creditors also show a reduction of $2,724.12 from last year.

Turning to the Assets. The value of your land and buildings has been reduced by $12,708.89 and furniture and fixtures by $3,750.00, by the sale of our Kuling property, which ceased to be a profitable investment, and your Directors considered it wise policy to accept an offer to purchase the land, buildings and furniture. The profit made on this transaction has been carried to profit and loss included in the balance from working accounts.

Our stocks have been reduced by $92,558.64, while sundry debtors have been increased by $4,261.62, due to some large contracts still outstanding.

Gentlemen, that is all I have to say, except a reference to the staff, who have worked well and given loyal support to the business during a very trying period, and although it is not possible to give a bonus, the Directors wish to express their appreciation of the work which has been done.

I will now propose the first resolution: "That the report and accounts as presented be passed." This is seconded by Mr. R. H. Gaskin, but before putting the resolution to the meeting it will be open for discussion, and I will do my best to answer any questions which may be put.

There were no questions and the resolution was carried, as also were the following:

That Mr. Leslie J. Cubitt be re-elected a Director: Proposed by Mr. A. K. Craddock, seconded by Mr. C. E. Shepherd.

That Messrs. Lowe, Bingham & Matthews be re-elected auditors of the Company at an annual remuneration of $600 per annum. Proposed by Mr. C. E. Shepherd, seconded by Mr. A. K. Craddock.

This was all the business of the meeting.

SHANGHAI MUTUAL TELEPHONE CO., LD.

"Absolute Necessity of Increase in Subscribers' Rates:" Fall in Net Profits

The annual general meeting of the Shanghai Mutual Telephone Co., Ld., was held on Monday at the company's central offices in Kiangse Road. Sir Edward Pearce presided, in the absence of the Chairman, Mr. C. Holliday, and was supported by Messrs. C. M. Bain, W. P. Lambe and P. Le Bris. There were 4,091 shares represented.

The notice convening the meeting having been read, the Chairman said:

Ladies and gentlemen:—Before commencing the business of the meeting I am sure we all think with regret of the absence of our Chairman, Mr. C. Holliday, who is still, I regret to say, in hospital. I am sure I voice the feelings of you all when I say we all wish him a safe recovery.

Continuing, the Chairman said: The report and accounts having been in your hands for some little time, I propose with your permission to take the report as read. With regard to the technical side of your business, the year under review has shown a marked increase in the demand for telephones—on last year's work there is an increase of 1,904 lines and 2,987 telephones. The total number of telephones, inclusive of exchange lines, private lines and extension lines, is 20,640. Our record of messages effected in one day amount to 199,352 calls, the average per subscriber per diem being 12.4. A telephone business is not placed in such a fortunate position as an ordinary commercial undertaking, inasmuch as an increase of a telephone system does not add proportionately to the profits of the undertaking. In spite of our growth our revenue per line has been steadily falling year by year, and we have consequently had to approach the two Municipal Councils with a view to an increase in our rates. In all big cities nowadays the message rate is adopted. This method it is hoped we will be able to commence as soon as we have installed the automatic system: Our east exchange—capable of carrying 700 lines—has now been completed on the automatic system and the experience to be gained with this small exchange will considerably help us with the large work to come. Tenders for a further 5,000 lines for the central exchange have been asked for.

Extension of Franchise

Attached to our report is a copy of the correspondence we have had with the Municipal Council which gives you the progress of our negotiations for an extension of our present franchise which expires in 1937. The progress we have made so far must, I think, be considered very satisfactory to all parties concerned, and will I hope meet with your approval. The matter is now in the hands of our legal adviser, and when the necessary documents are completed an extraordinary general meeting will be called to pass such alterations to our articles of association as will be needful, and to increase the capital of the Company.

Your directors intend inviting applications for the remaining 5,644 shares of the company's nominal capital at a price of about Tls. 75.00 per share. The applications will be confined to shareholders and subscribers and your directors would point out that these shares will participate in the issue of bonus shares in the proportion of one bonus share for every four shares so soon as the share capital of the company has been increased.

Inter-communication with Chinese Lines

The question of intercommunication with the Chinese Government Telephone Administration in the Native City and Chapei has again come to the front, but owing to certain conditions asked for by the Chinese authorities which neither the Municipal Council nor the company can agree to, there is not much hope at the moment that any agreement can be arrived at.

Working account—Turning to this account you will have noticed that our revenue account has increased by Tls. 125,082.92. This amount, however, has been very much reduced by the extra expenditure incurred in salaries and wages, our staff as you are aware having been very considerably augmented towards the end of last year. The net balance transferred to profit and loss account is Tls. 448,843.38, an improvement over the preceding 12 months of Tls. 38,601.11.

Profit and loss account—The decrease in rents of Tls. 7,043.42 is due to rooms in the central building being required for the company's use. Interest I am glad to say shows a credit of Tls. 7,698.93 against a debit last year of Tls. 1,812.43. There was a profit of Tls. 19,422.60 on the sterling bonds taken up by the company during the war, due to their sale and conversion into local currency.

On the debit side the principal increases have been in the Chinese provident fund of Tls. 8,118.99 and depreciation account of Tls. 48,855.34. The increase in the former is due to all Chinese employees being now placed on the fund instead of only those who had served two years as formerly. The latter of course is a natural increase due to the development of the company.

Reduction in Net Working Profit

The net profit shows an increase of Tls. 2,153.06, but this is after taking credit for Tls. 19,422.60 profit on the conversion of the sterling bonds. The net working profit is therefore considerably less than the previous year and goes to show the absolute necessity for an increase in the company's rates to subscribers.

Balance Sheet—There is nothing special to bring before the attention of the shareholders except that the entire cost of the material, etc., expended in connexion with the East Automatic Exchange is shown under "Automatic Exchange under Construction."

The foreign and Chinese employees' superannuation fund now amounts to Tls. 169,482.64, and it is probably that your board in the future will have to invest a portion of this amount in a separate fund. I do not think there is anything further for me to add, but before moving the first resolution I shall be glad to answer to the best of my ability any questions the shareholders would like to ask.

On the proposition of the Chairman, seconded by Mr. C. M. Bain, the report and accounts were adopted.

The following resolutions were also carried:—

That the appropriation recommended by the Board be adopted.—Proposed by the Chairman, seconded by Mr. C. M. Bain.

That Messrs. C. Holliday and W. P. Lambe be re-elected as directors of the company.—Proposed by Mr. A. L. Anderson, seconded by Mr. J. T. Inch.

That Messrs. Lowe, Bingham and Matthews be re-elected auditors of the company for the ensuing year at a remuneration of Tls. 1,000.—Proposed by Mr. R. E. Stewardson, seconded by Mr. W. A. Roberts.

This concluded the business of the meeting.

CLUB AND SOCIETIES

LANCASTRIANS IN CHINA

Association's Annual Meeting: What is a Lancastrian? A Problem of Membership

"What is a Lancastrian," is a problem which worried the members of the Association of Lancastrian's in China for some time last Friday, at their annual meetting held at the offices of Maitland & Co., Ld. The question arose out of a proposal to make the rule of admittance to the association stricter than it is at present.

Mr. R. Grimshaw took the chair, supported by Messrs. H.W.P. McMeekin, R. W. Wells, E. G. Barnes, T M. Yates, H. H. Holgate and L. A. Harrap (hon. sec. and treas.).

The Chairman remarked that there had been a small profit on the year, which was quite satisfactory, but which might have been larger had some of the back subscriptions been paid. There had been a certain amount of apathy on the sporting side, and in reply to the letters he had sent out regarding tennis, only seven people had answered.

On the proposition of Mr. McMeekin, seconded by Mr. D. Kemp, the report and accounts were adopted.

In reply to a question regarding the association's benevolent fund, the Chairman said there had only been one call upon it during the year, and that was within the last two or three days, and meant paying out the sum of $40 only.

Mr. D. Kemp suggested that the fund might be more patronized if it were better known, to which the Chairman replied that if there were any deserving cases among Lancashire men in Shanghai the association would be only too pleased to give their aid, and if their funds were not sufficient, then he felt sure the members would not be backward in putting their hands in their pockets to help out a fellow countyman.—(Applause).

In reply to a question regarding the missing of the annual dinner during the year, the Chairman stated that this had only been done after due consideration on the part of the committee. They had felt that with so many people starving in Shanghai, people who could do with the price of a dinner, it would not be right to spend something like $800 or $900 on themselves for such a purpose.

Scotsmen Members.

Mr. P. Campbell raised the question of the membership rule, which stated that admittance would be granted to Lancashire-born people, or those who "had sufficiently identified themselves with the county by residence or otherwise." He thought that last phrase "or otherwise" much too loose. An association of this sort should be composed of Lancashire men only, whereas at present their list numbered Yorkshiremen and Scotsmen, of which latter, incidentally, he admitted he was one.

Similar views were expressed by members, and the general consensus of opinion appeared to be that the rule should be tightened up.

Mr. T. M. Yates remarked that the problem of what exactly was a Lancastrian was a difficult one. Take his own case. On his father's side his family was Lancastrian for generations back, but his mother was from the Isle of Man and had no connexion with Lancashire, except through marriage to his father. The problem remained, therefore, what was he, the son? He thought they could not be too strict owing to similar difficulties.

Mr. Kemp proposed that the rule be revised by the words "or otherwise" being struck out, and that the phrase "who had sufficiently identified himself with the county, either by birth or residence of not less than ten years" be put in. Mr. Barnes seconded this, but on the proposition of the Chairman the matter was left over for the incoming committee to deal with, that they might formulate a resolution to be brought up at the next annual meeting.

Proposed "Tea Fight."

Mr. McMeekin informed the meeting that Mr. Kearsley had very kindly offered to put his house and grounds at the committee's disposal if they should wish to hold some sort of social gathering during the year, and it was the speaker's suggestion that a "regular tea fight" to which they might all bring their wives, be arranged, at the price of, say, $2 per head.

The matter was left to the incoming committee.

The Chairman stated that it was intended to place a wreath on the War Memorial on June 3, the King's birthday, and he hoped there would be a good showing of members.

Officers for the coming year were elected as follows:

President: Mr. H.W.P. McMeekin.

Vice President: Mr. H. H. Holgate.

Hon. Sec. and Treas.: Mr. L. A. Harrap.

Committee: Messrs. E. G. Barnes, P. Carr, R. Grimshaw, R. W. Wells, T. M. Yates, and W. E. Dailey.

The meeting concluded with a very hearty vote of thanks, carried with acclamation, to Mr. Grimshaw for the work he had done during the past year as President of the Society.

SHANGHAI PHOTOGRAPHIC SOCIETY

Annual General Meeting: A Successful Year and Optimism for the Future

The annual general meeting of the Photographic Society of Shanghai was held at the Union Church Hall on Tuesday evening, Dr. Hay Bolton, President, taking the chair. There was a good attendance and the meeting was followed with enthusiasm.

The Chairman, presenting the annual report and accounts, said:

I think the first year's working of the resuscitated Society has been on the whole not unsatisfactory. We started off with an exhibition in order that members might see what work others were doing and also that the Committee might find out what talent there was lying dormant. And we finished off the year with another exhibition at which the quality of the work shown was maintained, but the proportion of members who did exhibit was somewhat small. The Committee is not certain that the competitive nature of our last exhibition was a wise thing, and the question will have to come up for discussion whether future exhibitions should be non-competitive,—the honour of having pictures hung being sufficient without awards. Numerous lectures and demonstrations have been held during the winter at which the attendance has been fairly good. Your Committee however feel that these meetings have been rather too formal and it is hoped that in future members will liven things up by taking more part in discussions of the various subjects. Considering our large membership of 130 the number who have turned out to the various expeditions has been disappointingly small, and I must confess that I have been remiss in that respect myself. Such excursions however are more in the nature of a holiday picnic than a search for serious photographic subjects as it is difficult to do good work in a crowd. To my mind the most flourishing branch of the Society is the Portfolio Section. Those members who have joined this section have been interested, amused, and—thanks to Mr. Mennie's able criticisms—instructed. And I am sure that no one who has contributed to the portfolio this season will wish to be left out of it in future.

On the proposition of the Chairman the report and accounts were adopted.

After a short discussion it was decided to alter the subscription rule in order to allow a member's wife to become a member on her husband's fee. The rule concerning the committee was also altered, so that instead of being limited to four the body can now be made as wide as desirable.

Officers were elected as follows:—

President: Dr. Hay Bolton.

Vice Presidents: Messrs. A.E.C. Hindson and F. Large.

Sec. and Treas.: Mr. Kendal Ward, in place of Mr. Vanderberg who intimated the impossibility of his carrying on.

Committee: Messrs B. T. Brideaux, (assistant secretary), Gutierrez (as lanternist) Dent, Hummel, Vanderberg, Chatel, Morita, Mishin, C. J. Westbrook and Godby.

The meeting concluded with a vote of thanks to the officers for their work during the past year.

SWIMMING BATH CLUB

Annual General Meeting

The 32nd annual meeting of the Swimming Bath Club was held on Monday at the Club house and was well attended by enthusiastic members. Mr. W. J. N. Dyer presided, supported by Messrs. F. B. Pitcairn, H. Martin, R. Grimshaw, Dr. Robinson, Mr. F. R. Ormston, Hon. Treas., and Mr. K. M. Cumming, Hon. Sec.

After the reading of the notice convening the meeting by the secretary, the Chairman stated that he was very much pleased with the successful season of this unique club, which was now holding its third meeting in the Club house, itself. They had a very enviable financial position, in that the reserve fund was added to, the expenses for last year were less than the season previous, while the subscriptions and ordinary revenue were much the same. He proposed the adoption of the report and accounts, and the resolution was carried unanimously.

He then stated that in future the water bill would amount to much more as the Waterworks company was raising the rates and he hoped, though he could not see how it could be avoided, that it would not be necessary to increase the subscription in 1925 to meet this large increase. He recommended that the incoming committee would consider the revision of the rules and regulations, for the present ones were considerably antiquated and the organization had outgrown them.

The following were elected to the general committee for the current year:—Messrs. W. J. N. Dyer, K. M. Cumming, H. Y. Irwine, H. Martin, R. P. Melhuish, F. R. Ormston, F. B. Pitcairm, R. E. Stewardson, H. V. Wilkinson and Dr. Robinson, while Messrs. R. W. Wingrove, J. J. Keegan, B. Firth, R. Grimshaw, L. A. Harrap and H. Morfey were elected on the balloting committee.

TELEGRAMS from Berlin to the Chinese press state that a Chinese in Germany attacked and injured Mr. Liang Shih-yi, a former Premier, who is the leader of the Chiaotung Party and better known in China as the "God of Wealth."

GEN. Chao Heng-ti, Governor of Hunan, has been ordered by Loyang to surrender to justice Gen. Chang Chin-yao (a former Tuchun of the province) whose apprehension has been demanded for years by the American Government in connexion with the murder of Mr. Reimerts, a missionary, during the Anfu trouble. Gen. Chao Heng-ti has not complied with Marshal Wu's request, but says he has ordered the fugitive general's arrest on quite another charge—attempting at Hankow to sell the public lands of the province.

CAPT. E. R. G. R. Evans, R.N., the Antarctic explorer, hero of the Dover Patrol Action in 1917, and of the China Sea, speaking in Weymouth, pleaded for the bad boy. He said:—"I am one of those unfortunate fellows. I was expelled from school at the age of eight because three of us went on a little expedition down Barking Creek. On the way we boarded an old barge with the idea of sailing to the Spanish Main. We laid in two guineas' worth of provisions, which I put down to my father's account, and then got arrested by two policemen."

SPORTS AND PASTIMES

CRICKET

Bad Day for the S.C.C.: Machine Gunners and S.R.C. Win by Wide Margins

Cricket commenced in earnest on Saturday afternoon, two first-class matches being played, and the Shanghai Recreation Club and the Machine Gunners claiming decisive victories over the S.C.C. "B" and "A" teams respectively. The cricket in both matches was interesting and though there was nothing startling in either game, the play augurs well for cricket for the remainder of our short season. Despite the fact that there had been extremely little opportunity of practice, there were both good bowling and batting performances and the fielding, on the whole, was keen and excellent.

MARATHON TRIAL RUN

London, May 31.

McCleod Wright (Scotland) won the Polytechnic London to Windsor Marathon (26 miles 385 yd.) in 2 hr. 53 min. 17-2/5 sec. Ferris (Air Force) came in second in 2 hr. 54 min. 3 sec., and Mills (Polytechnic) third in 3 hr. 2 min. 46-3/5 sec.

Eighty started in the race, which is recognized as the official Olympic trial.—Reuter.

BRITISH AMATEUR GOLF CHAMPIONSHIP

Tolley and Wethered Defeated: Holderness Amateur Champion

London, May 29.

In the fifth round of the British Amateur Golf Championship at St. Andrews to-day, the Scottish international, Denis Kyle, beat Tolley, 3 up and 2 to play.

Tolley's defeat was the more surprising as a feature of the fourth round this morning was the enormousness of his and Wethered's victories. Tolley beat Major Campbell, of Tantallon, 7 up and 5 to play, and Wethered beat C. Leese (Wilmslow), 7 and 5. On the other hand, Kyle beat Braid at the 21st hole after a terrific match.

In the fifth round, 2,000 people watched Tolley, who was excellent, but Kyle was in top form and his putting was deadly. The Scot was a hole up at the turn and after that seemed inspired.

Wethered beat Major Hezlet (Royal Portrush), 3 and 2, Caven defeated I. Sidebottom (Stockport) 2 and 1, Harris (Murcar) won from W. Tweedale, 3 and 2, and Holderness knocked out John Wilson (Prestwick), 3 and 2.—Reuter.

May 30.

The sixth round of the Championship was played at St. Andrew's in drizzling rain before a large number of spectators. The results were as follow:—

Storey beat John Caven 2 and 1.

Wethered (holder) beat the Irish champion, J. McCormack 3 and 1.

Murray beat Kyle 3 and 2.

Holderness beat Harris 2 and 1.

Wethered, who began the tournament brilliantly, fell away and played an indifferent game in defeating McCormack, and Storeys defeat of Caven, who was in wonderful form and was the chief Scottish hope, boded ill for the champion.

At St. Andrew's to-day, in the British Amateur Golf Championship semi-finals the Cambridge Captain and English International, E. F. Storey, beat the holder, Wethered, by 2 holes and E. Holderness, a former holder, beat W. Murray of Westhill, 3 up and 2 to play.

In the semi-final Wethered started well. Storey was one up at the fourth hole. Wethered won the fifth and halved the sixth, seventh and eighth. Storey got a brilliant three at the ninth holt, but Wethered at the eleventh and took the lead at the fourteenth. The fifteenth was halved, but Storey squared at the sixteenth and won the seventeenth and eigthteenth.

In the Holderness-Murray match the players were all-square at the turn. Then the ex-champion, by brilliant putting, took the lead at the twelfth, won the thirteenth and halved the next two holes. Murray was bunkered at the sixteenth, and Holderness did not have to hole out.

The Final Round.

London, May 31.

Mr. E. Holderness of Walton Heath, the 1922 Champion, beat Mr. E. Storey, the Cambridge University captain, by 3 up and 2 to play in the final of the Amateur Golf Championship at St. Andrews to-day.

The weather was bleak.

A sensational start was witnessed, Mr. Storey holding a 15-yard putt. He turned 3 up and was 4 up at the eleventh, where Mr. Holderness missed a yard putt. Then Story struck a bad patch. His driving was faulty.

Holderness on the other hand improved and finished the morning round 1 down.

Storey in the afternoon began badly and went from bunker to bunker. Holderness squared at the second and halved the third, the ex-Champion taking the lead at the fourth for the first time. The fifth and sixth were halved and Holderness won the seventh with a beautiful approach in three. He was then bunkered and lost the ninth and turned I up. Story squared at the eleventh, Holderness won the twelfth, was bunkered and halved the thirteenth, won the fourteenth and halved the fifteenth. Storey won the sixteenth and then pulled a drive amongst the spectators. Holderness running up to 10 feet from the pin won the hole and match.

Professional Play.

May 31.

In the final of the Thousand Guineas Professional Golf Tournament, at Leeds to-day, Fred Robson (Cooden Beach) beat A. Compston (North Manchester) at the fortieth hole.—Reuter.

Leeds, May 30.

In the Thousand Guineas Professional Golf Tournament A. Compston (North Manchester) beat George Duncan (Hanger Hill), 4 up and 3 to play, and Fred Robson (Cooden Beach) beat J. Gaudin of Alwoodley, 3 and 2, in the semi-finals.—Reuter.

HOME CRICKET

Scotland v. South Africans: England and the Rest: County Championship

London, May 30.

The match between Scotland and the South Africans was continued [illegible] made 177 yesterday, to which the South Africans responded with 95 for three wickets. To-day the South Africans were all out for 186, Blanckenberg contributing 47. Scotland then went in a second time and made 163 for four wickets (Kerr 80 not out) and declared. In their second venture the South Africans made 59 for two wickets, and the match was drawn.

At Lord's, in the County Championship, Middlesex defeated Yorkshire by an innings and 152 runs. Yorkshire made 162 and 131, while [illegible] wickets (declared). For Middlesex, Dales scored 113, Stevens 114, Lee 70 and Mann 79.

England beat the Rest in the Test Trial match at Nottingham by three wickets. In the first innings the Rest made 295 (Holmes 86) and 199 in the second. England scored 270 in the first innings (Fender 81) and 226 for seven wickets in the second (Woolley 72). For England Tate took four wickets for 39 runs and Parkin four for 56.

Essex beat Notts at Leyton on the first innings. In the first innings of Essex, Douglas made 102 not out, while in the Notts' second innings Gunn made 112.

Gloucestershire won on the first innings in their match against Surrey at Bristol. Surrey scored 183 and 225, while Gloucester made 184 for nine (declared) and 93 for seven. Rain prevented further play.

In their match against Kent at Manchester, Lancashire won on the first innings. In Lancashire's second innings E. T. Tyldesley made 148 not out.

Somerset defeated Cambridge University at Cambridge by 115 runs.—Reuter.

South Africans v. Scotland: Return Match

London, May 31.

[illegible] were all out for [illegible] South Africans. The South Africans, Meintjes took four wickets for 19 runs, [illegible] for the 14 and Dunne [illegible] for 16. The South Africans, at the close of play, were 261 for three wickets, Catterall [illegible] 116 and Nourse 78.—Reuter.

Glasgow, June 2.

The attendance was small and the cricket slow to-day for the continuation of the match between Scotland and the South Africans.

The South African total was 95 innings and 286 runs.

Following Scotland's phenomenal [illegible] innings, the South Africans made 389 for 5 wickets and declared. Hearne and Deane were both not out with 63 and 80 respectively. Scotland followed and were all out for 67, Dixon taking 6 wickets for 39.—Reuter.

The County Championship

London, June 3.

The matches between Middlesex and Notts at Lord's, Surrey and Essex at the Oval, Glamorgan and Northamptonshire at Cardiff, and Yorkshire and Kent at Hull, were all drawn owing to rain.

At Brighton, Sussex beat Somer[illegible]

At Manchester, Lancashire beat Warwickshire on the first innings. Warwick made 115, Parkin taking 6 wickets for 44 and R. Tyldesley 4 for 66, and 71 in the second innings, Parkin taking 4 wickets for 34 and Tyldesley 6 for 37. Lancashire declared with 132 runs for 3 wickets.

At Derby, Derbyshire beat Worcestershire on the first innings.

At Southampton, Gloucestershire beat Hampshire on the first innings. [illegible]

South Africans v. Yorkshire

Sheffield, June 4.

Rain interested with the play on the opening day of the match between Yorkshire and the South Africans. The weather was dull and the wicket sticky. The attendance was small. Yorkshire opened the game and when stumps were drawn had scored 187 for 5 wickets. Oldroyd made 67 and Rhodes 52—Reuter.

LAWN TENNIS

Davis Cup Competition

Arnhem, May 29.

In the second round of the Davis Cup competition, Mr. Jacob (India) beat M. Van Lennep (Holland), 0/6, 3/6, 6/2, 7/5, 9/7, and Mr. Sleem (India) beat M. Timmer (Holland), 6/1, 6/2, 6/2.

At the outset M. Van Lennep easily got the better of Mr. Jacob by means of better driving and beautiful drop-shots. Jacob was unsteady at the beginning, but gained the upper hand by steady base line play. Van Lennep became fatigued after leading 5-4 in the fourth set and 7-6 in the final set.

In the other game, Sleem was much superior to Timmer, who had no chance against Sleem's stonewall base-line play. Timmer was erratic in his smashes and volleys.—Reuter.

Arnhem, May 31.

MM. van Lennep and Timmer (Holland) beat Messrs Jacob and Hadi (India), 6/4, 4/6, 3/6, 6/2, 6/4, in the doubles match of the second round tie between Holland and India in the Davis Cup Competition.

It was a thrilling struggle. The Dutchmen were brilliant but somewhat erratic. They were leading 4/1 in the second set, when India won the next seven games successively. The Dutchmen recovered brilliantly in the fourth, but the deciding set was a desperate struggle, the sides dividing the first eight games equally. Then the Dutchmen produced another flash of brilliance and took the next two games and the match [illegible] matches to nil.

Arnhem, June 1.

In the second round of the Davis Cup Competition, India beat Holland [illegible] to one.

Mr. Jacob (India) beat M. Timmer (Holland), 6/2, 2/6, 6/2, 6/[illegible] —Reuter.

[illegible] him a keen match, as Timmer [illegible] and altogether too much for Lennep, returning the ball in spite of Lennep's hardest drives.—Reuter.

London, May 31.

In the second round of the Davis Cup Competition, Mr. J. Wheatley (Britain) beat Senor M. Alonzo (Spain), 6/3, 9/7, 3/6, 4/6, 6/4.

London, June 2.

At Edgbaston to-day, in the second round match between Britain and Spain in the Davis Cup Competition, Messrs. Godfree and Woosnam (Britain) beat Senors Alonzo and Flaquer (Spain), 6/1, 6/4, 6/8, 6/2.—Reuter.

London, June 3.

Britain beat Spain in the second round of the Davis Cup Competition by 3 matches to 2.

Senor Manuel Alonzo (Spain) beat Mr. Wheatley (Britain), 6/3, 9/7, 2/6, 6/0, while Mr. Gilbert (Britain) beat Senor J. Alonzo (Spain), 6/0, 6/4, 6/0.—Reuter.

Dublin, May 31.

In the second round tie between France and Ireland in the Davis Cup Competition, M. Coutieas (France) beat Mr. McCrea (Ireland), 6/3, 8/6, 3 6, 4/6, 7/5, and. M. Lacoste (France) beat Mr. Dillon (Ireland), 6/1, 6/2, 6/2.

Dublin, June 2.

In the Davis Cup doubles, played here to-day, MM. Lacoste and Couiteas (France) beat Messrs. Meldon and Dillon (Ireland), 8-6 6-1 6-2. France has thus won 3 matches to 0.—Reuter.

Dublin, June 3.

In the second round tie between France and Ireland, France won by 5 matches to 0.

M. Lacoste (France) beat Mr. McCrea (Ireland), 6/1, 6/3, 6/3, and M. Couiteas (France) beat Mr. Dillon (Ireland), 4/6, 1/6, 6/2, 11/9, 6/2.—Reuter.

BOXING

George Cook and Dick Smith Defeated at Albert Hall

London, May 29.

At the Albert Hall to-day, in two 15-round contests (heavyweights), the Londoner, Phil Scott, defeated the Australian, George Cook, on points, and Jack Bloomfield knocked out Dick Smith in the fourth round.—Reuter.

Flyweight Championship

New York, May 30.

In a match for the world's flyweight boxing championship to-night Pancho Villa, the holder, beat Frankie Ash decisively on points. Villa carried a relentless attack to Ash throughout the 15 rounds, winning each easily. Villa weighed 112 and Ash 110½ pounds.

Villa frantically tried for a knock-out in the closing rounds. In the 13th it appeared that he might succeed, but Ash pluckily survived, though several times he was staggering about. The Englishman often countered, but his blows carried no force. Villa was warned several times for using a back-hand punch and hitting after the bell. The spectators membered 10,000.—Reuter's American Service.

Carpentier Beaten

Michigan City, May 31.

Tom Gibbons beat Georges Carpentier to-day in a ten-round bout, before 30,000 spectators.

Carpentier repeatedly caught Gibbons's jaw with rights, but the American became ever more aggressive, butting the Frenchman into his corner and landing at close quarters. Carpentier sank to the floor in the ninth round, indicating that he had injured his right ankle, but struggled gamely to his feet and continued the contest, although limping badly. The match went the full 10 rounds. Gibbons was Carpentier's superior in every round, sometimes chasing him round the ring. The decision in favour of Gibbons was that of newspapermen at the ring-side as the law of Michigan does not permit a decision. Gibbons weighed 12 stone 9 pounds and Carpentier 12 stone 6 pounds.—Reuter's American Service.

Featherweight Championship: Leach Beaten by Mackenzie

London, June 3.

In a contest for the Featherweight Boxing Championship of Great Britain, at Holland Park Hall to-night, George Mackenzie, of Leith, beat Harry Leach, of Doncaster, on points.

Leach, who is only 18, outspeeded Mackenzie in the early rounds and got home several lightning right leads. For a time he outboxed his opponent, and at the half-way stage led well on points. After this, however, the Scotsman improved. Frequently landing left jabs and hooks to the head and body. In the last few rounds Leach tired, and Mackenzie, fighting hard to the end, won by a narrow margin.—Reuter.

Philadelphia, June 2.

In a ten-round bout here to-day Micky Walker successfully defended the world's welterweight boxing title, beating Lew Tendler on points.—Reuter's American Service.

THE DERBY RESULT

Sansovino's Win from St. Germans and Hurstwood

London, June 4.

Derby Result:—

Sansovino	1
St. Germans	2
Hurstwood	3

Won by six lengths; a neck. 27 ran.

Betting: 9-2 Sansovino; 100-7 St. Germans; 20-1 Hurstwood.

—Reuter.

[Lord Derby's Sansovino and Lord Astor's St. Germans were coupled in Tuesday's cabled betting as third favourites at 100—9 behind Diophon (6—1) and Tom Pinch (8—1). Mr. Somerville Tattersall's Hurstwood stood at 22—1 in the latest quotations received.]

Later.

In spite of a persistent rain and the heavy going enormous crowds gathered at Epsom to-day to witness the Derby. Their Majesties the King and Queen, the Prince of Wales and other members of the Royal family were present.

There was a false start, Grand Joy, Browside, Tom Pinch and Woodend going a furlong. Eventually the barrier ascended and a fair start was made, but Salmon Trout, Corolet and St. Germans were crowded out. Dawson City made the running from Arausio, Defiance, Polyphontes, Donzelon, Woodend, Skyflight, Tom Pinch, Hurstwood and Spalpeen, these quickly racing clear of Sansovino, Parmenio and Bright Knight. At the mile post Sansovino improved his position and joined Dawson City in descending the hill. Rounding Tattenham Corner, Dawson City was beaten, and Sansovino, entered the straight well clear of St. Germans, Hurstwood, Polyphontes and Parmenio. A quarter of a mile from home Lord Derby's colt increased his lead and won easily amid tremendous cheering. Parmenio was fourth, Polyphontes fifth and Salmon Trout sixth. The time was 2 min. 46⅘ sec.

The following were the starters:—

Sansovino (Weston), St. Germans (Frank Bullock), Hurstwood (V. Smyth), Arausio (R. Jones), Bright Knight (Lane), Browside (B. Lynch), Bucks Yeoman (Smirke), Canusa (Lister), Corolet (E. Morris), Dawson City (Jelliss), Defiance (Donoghue), Diophon (Hulme), Donzelon (Carslake), Grand Joy (Ingham), Great Barrier (J. Leach), Obliterate (T. Burns), Optimist II (McGee), Parmenio (Elliott), Polyphontes (McLachlan), Resinato (Archibald), Salmon Trout (Gardner), Skyflight (G. Richards), Spalpeen (O'Neill), Thunder Cloud II (Esling), Tippler (Childs), Tom Pinch (H. Beasley), Woodend (Beary).—Reuter.

The Woodcote Stakes

London, June 3.

The following is the result of the Woodcote Stakes, run at Epsom this afternoon:—

Iron Mask	1
Bravado	2
Dalmagarry	3

There were 11 starters. Won by two lengths; a length between second and third.

Betting:—5 to 1 against Iron Mask; 5 to 2 Bravado; 100 to 8 Dalmagarry.—"North-China Daily News" Special Service.

The Caterham Plate

London June 4.

The following is the result of the Caterham Plate, run at Epsom to-day:—

Bustle filly	1
Pommade Divine	2
David Garrick	3

There were 10 starters. Won by two lengths, four lengths between second and third.

Betting:—6 to 1 against Bustle filly; 5 to 2 Pommade; 10 to 1 David Garrick—"North-China Daily News" special Service.

PEKING, June 2.—A lawn tennis match between Peking and Tientsin was played here to-day and resulted in a win for Peking by one point.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE NATIONAL RIFLE ASSOCIATION

New Bisley Competition for Overseas Visitors with Record Entries

London, May 29.

Baron Cheylesmore, presiding at the annual meeting of the National Rifle Association, announced that a new Bisley competition, "The [illegible]seas," open to British [illegible]sects resident overseas, had been [illegible]duced in view of the [illegible] of visitors from the Dom[illegible]. The prize-list would amount to £100 not be charged.

The Baron went on to say that there would be a record number of competitors at Bisley this year, including representative teams from Canada, Australia, South Africa, India, Rhodesia, Natal, the Gold Coast and Malaya. He said that the Australians, the holders of the Empire trophy, had again waived their right to have the match competed for in Australia and were sportingly bringing the trophy to be contested for at Bisley. [illegible] announced that the Prince of [illegible] had consented to present the [illegible] at Bisley this year.—Reuter.

AN American visitor to Colombo from the President Garfield recently made a strange bequest to a police constable. The constable was on duty on the vessel referred to when the American approached him and handed him a small black bear in a box, subsequently writing on a slip of paper. "I . . . . . give and bequeath my honey bear to Police Constable. . . . ." The constable was somewhat embarassed by the unusual gift, but the American insisted upon his retaining it, and the result is that the police mess has acquired a queer pet. The Customs duty on the animal, which came from Singapore, was, incidentally, 20 cents.

IT is recorded that Nestorian missionaries from Persia entered China in the seventh century and translated some part of the Scriptures. But not a fragment of this ancient version has come down to the present day, states the "Bible in the World." A Mongolian version of the New Testament and Psalms was made some seven centuries later by a Franciscan monk, but this version has also disappeared. Jesuit missionaries, in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, made a partial translation of the Scriptures into Chinese. Morrison copied a manuscript of this in the British Museum before leaving England and used it as the basis of his translation. There is no evidence that the Roman Catholic missionaries ever put their version into circulation among the people.

Excerpts from Minutes.

Proposed for Storied Parking Garage.—Works Department report with alternative plans for a building to accommodate from 200 to 400 cars has been circulated. From the figures submitted, it is noted that the approximate cost of a building to accommodate 208 cars is Tls. 220,000 based on the assumption that land can be acquired for the purpose at Tls. 50,000 per mow, which estimate, so far as regards the price of land, is considered low. In comment on the proposal the Acting Commissioner of Police suggests that the only means by which an exhaustive, impartial and authoritative survey of the whole traffic question could be made and a comprehensive policy formulated is by the appointment of a special Traffic Commission. Members favour this suggestion, and recommend that the matter be referred to the Watch Committee for its consideration.

Fire Brigade Report for April.

The total number of calls received was 35, of which 29 were genuine fires, 25 (including 2 chimney fires) occurring within the Settlement and 4 outside. The remaining 6 were false alarms.

The damage on assessed property within the Settlement was estimated at Tls. 31,850 (Foreign Tls. 1,000: Chinese Tls. 30,850), whilst the property at risk was estimated at Tls. 848,000 (Foreign Tls. 38,500: Chinese Tls. 809,500).

No lives were lost, but 3 firemen and 4 other persons were injured at fires within the Settlement. One woman was injured at a fire outside the Settlement.

Six premises were destroyed and 16 were damaged.

In dealing with these calls Brigade machines travelled approximately 324 miles, 30,030 feet of hose were used, and the time occupied was approximately 201¼ hours.

The fires of note attended by the Brigade are as follows:—

April 17, 7.54 a.m. P. & O. S. N. Co.'s S.S. Mirzapore, Shanghai and Hongkew Wharf Co.'s Pootung Wharf.

No. 3 lower hold containing about 3,800 bales of Indian press-packed cotton was well alight on arrival of the Brigade, under the Chief Officer, and the Customs Float. Owing to the dense fumes, difficulty was experienced in removing the lower portion of the cargo, and a large quantity of water had to be used to deal with the outbreak. The whole of the cargo in No. 3 hold was more or less affected by either fire or water, but the fire was confined to this hold. During the operations a number of Officers and Men were affected by carbon monoxide fumes and had to be revived by oxygen. Dr. Gauntlett crossed over and rendered valuable assistance.

April 18, 1.56 a.m. Tientsin and Shanse Roads. Shops, Restaurants, etc.

Central Division found no less than ten wooden-fronted shops, restaurants, etc., at the corner of Tientsin and Shanse Roads in flames. The fire was spreading rapidly, the flames sweeping the houses on the opposite sides of both roads, and Hongkew turned out to render assistance. The fire was practically confined to where it was found, but eleven premises were badly damaged.

The unusual rapidity with which the fire spread causes the outbreak to be regarded with a good deal of suspicion.

Return of Communicable Disease.

"A CAT AND DOG LIFE"

Husband's Allegations of Ill-Temper against Wife: Story of Insults and Ill-usage

At H. M. Supreme Court on Wednesday, before Judge Sir Skinner Turner, Mrs. Lena Brook prayed for a decree of restitution of conjugal rights. Mr. M. Reader Harris appeared for petitioner; Mr. R. G. McDonald for respondent.

Petitioner pleaded that her husband had refused to take up marital relationship with her since September, 1922, in spite of repeated pleas on her part that they should continue to live together. The answer filed was that though Mr. Brook had certainly refused conjugal rights, he was justified, inasmuch as his wife was possessed of a violent and uncontrollable temper, that she had assaulted him and made allegations of immorality against him in front of his guests, and that she had committed adultery with various persons since their marriage.

Mr. Reader Harris, outlining his case, stated that Mrs. Brook received a letter from her husband on August 17, 1923, definitely refusing to live with her any longer.

Mr. McDonald contended that petitioner should be put into the witness box in order that the letter be proved.

Mr. Harris said since the offence was virtually admitted in the answer filed by defendant this was unnecessary.

The Judge held that it was necessary to prove the letter and also that where a petition of this description was concerned it was also necessary formally to prove the marriage, and that would necessitate petitioner going into the witness box.

Mrs. Lena Brook, in evidence, said the marriage took place at H. M. Consulate in Shanghai on February 16, 1912. On August 17, 1923, her husband wrote to her stating his intention of living at the Shanghai Club and refusing to live with her any longer. He had carried out that intention and had not lived with her since.

Cross-examined by Mr. McDonald witness denied that there had been serious quarrels between herself and her husband four years after their marriage. There were no serious disagreements until September, 1921.

Mr. McDonald:—Is there any reason why your husband should refuse to live with you?—No.

Wife's Alleged Assaults on Husband.

Further cross-examined witness denied that she was of violent and quarrelsome disposition, or that she ever used abusive language to her husband, or shouted at him and accused him of immorality so that people passing their house in Weihaiwei Road could hear. She further denied locking him out of their house on three occasions in November, and once in October, 1922, so that he had to break in by the back way.

Mr. McDonald—Do you deny that on several occasions in April or May of 1922 you struck him with your clenched fists and open hand?—I do.

Mr. McDonald—Do you deny, also, that about November, 1922, you struck him with a chair, and on several occasions that month you threw various articles, such as books, coin, etc., at him—That is not true.

Asked whether it were not true that she had assaulted her husband in the presence of their child at Weihaiwei in September, 1922, witness said it was not true, and she could bring the child into Court to say so.

The Judge—How old is the child?

Witness—Seven years of age.

Threatened to Slap His Face.

Mr. McDonald—Have you ever used an angry word to your husband?

Witness—No.

Have you ever had a quarrel with him?—Only on one occasion.

And you never used an angry word to him then?—No.

Further questioned witness admitted that she did on one occasion threaten to slap her husband's face.

Mr. McDonald—Did you on one occasion threaten to go down and throw things at your husband through the window of the Shanghai Club?—No, never.

Mr. McDonald—Do you deny that in April and December of 1922 you called your husband a "damned liar," a "damned cad," a "damned thief" and a "damned cur"?—I did not call him those names.

Did you ever accuse him of being an associate of Russian harlots and a loose and immoral man generally?—No.

Mr. McDonald—Now Mrs. Brook we come to the last allegations. Do you deny admitting to your husband in September, 1922, after returning from a holiday at Tsingtao, that you had, at Tsingtao, committed adultery with various persons?—I never made such an admission.

Do you remember refusing to give your husband the names of the persons involved?—I do not because I never made the admissions.

Can you give any reason why your husband should be prepared to go into the witness box and swear that you did?—Yes I can give a reason.

Further questioned, Mrs. Brook admitted that if all these allegations were true no man could be expected to live with his wife, but, she added, they were not true.

Husband's Character

Mr. McDonald—I put it to you that your husband is a man of the highest moral character.

The Judge here pointed out to counsel that Mrs. Brook had not, in the petition to the Court, made any suggestions that he was otherwise. He would be putting such a question at his own risk, because he would have to accept the answer, whether in the affirmative or otherwise.

Counsel repeated the question, however, and after some hesitation witness returned a negative answer.

Mr. Reader Harris, (re-examining)—Why should your husband make these scandalous allegations against you?

Witness: Because he wants to get a divorce. I have seen him at his office several times, and also once at the General Hospital where my little son lay sick with typhoid, and when I asked why he was making these allegations he said he wanted to get a divorce, and unless I gave him one he would trump up every charge he could think of. He was determined to get a divorce at any price.

Further questioned Mrs. Brook said her husband had never accused her of committing adultery at all until they came into Court.

Racecourse Incident

Asked on what was the occasion she had had the one quarrel she admitted, Mrs. Brook said it occurred on the steps of the grandstand at the Race Course during the spring meeting. Her husband was standing with another lady and when she went past he looked straight at her and refused to recognize her. She spoke to him and he still refused to recognize her. She got him by himself later on, and then told him that if he ever repeated the offence she would slap his face in front of the general public.

Regarding the allegations her husband made against her at Tsingtao, witness stated that while she was at that resort her husband had been seen about quite a lot in Shanghai with a certain lady whose name she would not mention. He had lent her witness's car and it had been seen standing outside the lady's door on several occasions. She understood her husband had had relations with this lady.

Mr. Reader Harris—Did you commit adultery at Tsingtao?—No.

The Judge—When did you really cease living together?—Since September, 1922.

Petitioner's "Ungovernable Temper"

Mr. Brook, in evidence, said there had been constant friction between himself and his wife since 1916. She was possessed of an ungovernable temper and had frequently abused and insulted him. On one occasion he was going out to dinner and a friend called at his house at about 8 o'clock to go in his car. When they had both got to the car witness's wife came down the steps and called him various names, accusing him of immorality with Russian women and Japanese women, so that his friend could hear.

Witness went on to describe the incidents when he had to break into his house by the back entrance because Mrs. Brook had locked him out. One Christmas he had intimated his intention of going out to dinner. His wife threatened to cause trouble if he did, and so for the sake of peace and quiet he stopped in, but she went out to dinner. That night as he lay in bed reading she came back and started quarreling again. She got into a frenzy and threw his book at him and various other articles, including some coins he had left on the dressing table. She then picked up a $50 note, also lying on the dressing table, and tore it to shreds before his eyes, throwing the pieces into the fireplace. When she came back to Shanghai from her Tsingtao holiday they met to talk things over, and again she flew into a temper and told him that she had committed adultery there, not with one man but with a number of men. He asked her if she realized the seriousness of what she was saying and intimated that this was the finish as far as they were concerned. After that he had had nothing to do with her.

Cross-examined witness admitted that he had suggested a divorce as the best way out.

Mrs. Brook's Alleged Perjury

Mr. McDonald, for respondent, characterized petitioner's story as being totally untrue. With the exception of three statements she had made, her whole evidence amounted to perjury. The three exceptions were the statement as to her name, the statement as to the date of the marriage, and the statement that she had threatened to slap her husband's face. He submitted that the decree asked for in this case should in no wise be granted. The two people concerned had lived a cat and dog life, probably with as much friction as ever existed between any two people in Shanghai. Then they should look at the way in which the woman had given her evidence. She had made up her mind to go into the box and deny every statement made against her, absolutely regardless of the truth, but she had gone too far. Asked whether she had even used an angry word to him she had not the sense to say "yes," that she was just a human being and had angry words with her husband occasionally in the same way as everyone else. She went as far as definitely to deny even that. If they accepted her story there was not a woman in Shanghai who was such a model of virtue as she. There had been constant trouble between these two, and to send them back to live with each other would be wrong, and to show up the marriage laws as a mockery of the sanctity of married life.

The Tsingtao Incidents.

Mr. Reader Harris also addressed the court at some length. He reminded his lordship that Mrs. Brook had said in her evidence that the first intimations she had of these charges of adultery were when she saw them in the answer filed to her petition. He submitted that they were entirely untrue, and were put in the answer with a view to frightening the lady out of bringing her case. Since she had decided to proceed all the respondent could do was to brazen it out. They had heard that these adulteries had all taken place in Tsingtao, yet they had it in evidence that the husband had sent his wife to Tsingtao for a holiday the following year, and had paid her fare and supplied her with money, also leaving the children with her. It seemed rather a remarkable thing to do to send an adulterous wife back to the scene of her adulteries, pay her fare and give her charge of the children. He had supported his wife while she was there, also, but had sent her a letter to the effect that the $500 a month he was allowing her, he might not be able to keep up. And that was the real reason the petition had been brought. If the decree were granted and the husband refused to return, then alimony could be obtained and assured.

The Judge reserved his decsion.

SEQUEL TO GRANTHIS' CASE

Civil Proceedings Now Brought against Sucha and Amar Singh

Sucha Singh and Amar Singh, the two granthis of the Sikh Gurdwara, North Szechuen Road, who were recently acquitted at H. M. Supreme Court on a charge of misappropriating $910 belonging to the ghee fund, appeared before Judge Grain on Monday to answer a civil claim for the same amount. Plaintiffs were the Sikh police, represented by Mr. E. T. Maitland.

The funds in question were in respect of a consignment of ghee sent out to the Gurdwara from India, and placed in charge of the defendants, who were granthis, or priests, of the Gurdwara, and by whom it was sold. The funds accruing from the sale, it is alleged, should have been returned to the police, who state in their petition that it was short by $910. Defendants pleaded in the criminal proceedings that a part of the money was spent on entertaining a delegation from Singapore, that some payments were outstanding, and the rest was given over to the police. They denied that they had misappropriated the money.

All of Monday morning was spent in hearing the evidence of Indar Singh, treasurer to the Gurdwara, who went through the books at some length, and the case wsa adjourned till the 10th instant.

SEAMAN'S WILD NIGHT

Charge at H. M. Police Court: Violence in Hongkew and at Police Station

A seaman's wild night ashore was described at H. M. Police Court on Saturday, when William Best, a member of the crew of the str. William Camkin, appeared before Mr. Peter Grain on charges of having been drunk and disorderly, assaulting the police, assaulting a Japanese woman, and doing damage in the police station charge room.

From the evidence of various witnesses, it appeared that Best first became troublesome outside the Isis Theatre, where he made a rush for several rischa men. He attempted to assault one who was drawing a ricsha in which a Japanese woman was riding, and in attempting to avoid him the coolie swerved and overturned the ricsha, the woman receiving an injury which had to be attended to at hospital. Two foreigners, Messrs. Berthet and Hinton, assisted the police to arrest the defendant and he was got to the police station. Here he used bad language, broke the guard rail, and threw a book at the head of the sergeant on duty, but was finally put in a cell, where he raved for about a quarter of an hour before falling asleep.

Mr. Berthet, who is a chemist, told the court that he noticed a strong smell of cocaine about the defendant, who spoke to him of having gone to a Russian house.

Defendant said that he remembered nothing about the affair.

The Magistrate—You said you had been to a Russian house.

Defendant—Yes, but when I am drunk I'll tell 'em anything.

In answer to further questions, Best denied that he had taken cocaine on Friday or any other day, but added that he had had plenty of drinks.

The Magistrate, observing that the case was a serious one, said defendant would be lucky in not being sent to prison, and he would not do this because it would leave him "on the beach" and without a ship when he came out in a month's time. He would have to pay a fine of $10, and $25 (to be deducted from his wages) for the damages and compensation. Mr. Grain furthered ordered that the police should escort Best back to his ship, which was sailing that day.

OBTAINING honours in the whole general examination, arithmetic, algebra, geometry, trigonometry, mechanics, mensuration, surveying, experimental science and geometrical drawing, F. H. Castro, of St. Xavier's College, has won the Engineering Society of China's Mathematical Bursary. The prize was awarded on best results in the Cambridge Junior Local Examinations.

INQUEST AT UNITED STATES COURT

Unemployed Seaman's Death Outside the Hanbury Institute

Before Mr. Nelson E. Lurton, U. S. Commissioner for China, and a jury composed of Messrs D. J. Lawson, G. R. McCoy, T. A. Magee, N. A. Viloudaki, and D. H. Wythe an inquest was held on Monday afternoon on a body presumed to be that of Milton A. McGillvrey, an unemployed American seaman, who was paid off the str. William Campion some days ago. Dr. T. B. Dunn stated that he was called to the General Hospital on Saturday afternoon and found the deceased unconscious, apparently suffering from a basal fracture of the skull and not likely to live long. To confirm the diagnosis he took a spinal puncture. The external marks of injury, he stated, were slight but he had known cases of fractured skulls with even less external evidence of injury. He found no evidence of intoxication, the patient did not regain consciousness while he was with him, and he was later informed of his death.

Police constable W. B. Curtis of Hongkew Station stated that when on duty on Friday, May 30, about 11.45 p.m. on Broadway near the Astor bar, a ricsha coolie spoke to him, saying "Have got foreign man." On finding the foreigner incapable of moving, and smelling of Chinese wine, he had him taken in the ricsha to Hongkew Station, carried him up the stairs, into the charge room, where he was charged with being drunk and incapable. He did not appear conscious and grunted like a drunken man, no marks of violence being apparent. Deceased was handled gently.

Sgt. C. Doyle, on duty at the Hongkew Station, stated that he assisted in taking the deceased into the charge room, that he staggered, and appeared drunk and incapable. Sgt. E. C. Stokes who relieved the previous witness said that he first saw deceased lying on the floor of the charge room, apparently drunk and incapable. He was taken to a cell as is customary in such cases, made as comfortable as possible and visited every half hour. Deceased behaved as a drunken man would do. No marks of violence were seen. When deceased showed no signs of sobering up after some hours, witness visited him more often and about 5 a.m. called the ambulance and had him taken to the General Hospital.

Chief Inspector O'Toole of Hongkew Station stated that about 2 o'clock on Monday afternoon two unemployed seamen had called at the Station to inquire about the deceased and one of them, Kelly, had stated that he saw the deceased at the Hanbury Institute on Friday afternoon about 2 o'clock and noticed his condition. The assistant manager of the Institute, Mr. Murphy, also noticed deceased's condition, said this was no place for him and pushed him out. Kelly told the Inspector that he believed the deceased was injured at that time. In view of the fact that Mr. Murphy resigned from the Institute on Friday the Inspector suggested that it would be well to secure his testimony, as well as that of Kelly, but that it had not been possible on account of the shortness of time to present them for this hearing. The Commissioner asked the Inspector to assist him in bringing the two men, who are both British, to the adjourned hearing at 9 o'clock next morning, and also to find the Chinese girl whose picture was found among the deceased papers, to ascertain from her when she had last seen the deceased.

Further evidence was given on Tuesday, Mr. E. T. Maitland, Police Prosector, conducting the examination.

Maurice Kelly, an oiler, said that he saw McGillvery put out, althangh he was not making a disturbance.

A. F. Adams, another seaman, stated that deceased was dragged across the floor by his collar and thrown down three or four stairs, so that he fell on the pavement, striking his head.

The No. 2 coolie at the Institute said that the man fell down; he was not pushed.

Nicholas Rusesky, manager of the Astor Bar, said that the deceased went to sleep at a table and remained there until the bar was about to close. Witness was unable to waken the deceased, so he carried him outside and left him on the pavement with a Sikh and a Chinese policeman.

Chinese Policeman No. 261 stated that he did not think the man was injured when he was put out.

Charles D. Murphy stated that he was formerly manager of the Hanbury Institute, but he resigned at 9 o'clock on the morning of May 30. On the afternoon of May 30 he saw deceased sitting at a table, with another man, Kelly, shaking him. There was a film coming out of his mouth. Witness told him to leave and deceased got out of his chair, made a swing at witness and said, "I'll punch your head." Witness took hold of his arm and walked him along with a Chinese boy on the other side. At the top of the stairs deceased swung round to strike the boy, overbalanced, and fell in the street.

The jury remained in consultation for about an hour, finally returning the verdict that McGillvery died from a fracture of the skull caused by a fall down the front steps of the Hanbury Institute while being evicted therefrom by C. D. Murphy.

HUANGPU TRAGEDY

Fireman Returning to the Roman Prince Drowned on Sunday Night

An inquest was held by Mr. R. F. le Mesurier at H. M. Police Court on Wednesday on John Alphonse Rigby, a fireman on board the str. Roman Prince, who was drowned in the Huangpu on Sunday night.

Deceased had been ashore with a man named Durrand, who stated that they returned in a sampan at about 11.30 p.m. to where the ship was lying, off No. 10 section of the river. It was a dark night, but witness got on to the gangway safely expecting deceased to follow. He heard a splash and on looking round saw deceased's head disappearing under the water. The watchman threw a couple of life-belts to him, and they searched for an hour, but failed to find the body. They were both sober.

Evidence was given by Pol.-Sgt. F. Visser, Water Police, as to finding the body close to the New Point Hotel on the foreshore at 2.30 p.m. on Saturday.

Mr. Wm. L. Duncan, master of the Roman Prince, and Mr. Wm. Evans, Chief Officer of the vessel, described deceased as a steady and reliable man.

The proceedings were adjourned for medical evidence to be procured, the Coroner intimating that subject to this evidence a verdict of accidental death by drowning would be returned.

JUDGE PURDY AND HIS COMPRADORE

Breezy Comment in Compradore's Action to Recover $2,397.91

Evidence was heard by Judge Purdy at the U. S. Court on Tuesday in the action of Tong Jack-hing v. Andreas Teodoro (trading as the Philippine American Import & Export Co.). Plaintiff alleges he entered the services of defendant as compradore. During the two months he acted in that capacity he paid chits worth $2,397.91 upon request of Teodoro; further he estimated his services during that period at Tls. 300. The defence was a general denial. There was a counter-claim for Tls. 5,000, alleging that plaintiff did not abide by the terms of his agreement to serve for one year and that he did not advance the agreed amount of Tls. 10,000.

Plaintiff stated that he had advanced the sums, though in cross-examination he said he did not always know for what purpose the funds were used.

The Judge—I guess that is right. My compradore advances me funds daily and does not know why or where it goes.

To another question regarding the relations between the company and compradore, Judge Purdy commented that it was not necessary for a compradore to advance all sums required, if so there might not be many compradores. He himself would like to get one or two wealthy compradores, were such the usual procedure.

Judgment was given in favour of plaintiff for $2,397.91 and one month's claim for salary—Tls. 150.

WEBB v. "CHINA PRESS"

Question of Particulars not Furnished by Defendants: Judge Purdy's Logic

Judge Milton D. Purdy of the United States Court for China on Wednesday stated that facts in the case of C. Herbert Webb v. The China Press, Inc., which were not stipulated definitely in the bill of particulars of the defendants might be ruled out at the hearing if they proved inimical to the interests of the plaintiff.

Two weeks ago, Judge Purdy ruled that the defendant's counsel should provide a bill of particulars covering certain affirmative allegations in defendant's answer to the original complaint. Yesterday, he was informed that defendant's counsel had given a vague bill of particulars to counsel for the attorneys for Mr. Webb. Mr. H. D. Rodger, of Rodger & Husar, and Mr. C. S. Franklin appeared for Mr. Webb. Defendant was not represented at the hearing.

Mr. Franklin told the Court that defendant alleged certain actions on the part of the plaintiff without specifiying the dates or giving the names. Counsel for defendant stated that plaintiff charged the defendant with assigning under-employees of the "China Press" to do certain work for which they were unfitted and then cancelling these orders; of failing to write sufficient editorial matter for the "China Press;" of entertaining in the "China Press" office persons who had nothing to do with that publication; and several similar allegations, none of which, they said, were accompanied with names, dates and circumstances.

Plaintiff's counsel wanted an order to issue from the Court directing them to be more explicit with their charges in order that plaintiff's counsel might meet the allegations in the trial, which opens to-morrow morning.

Judge Purdy said he did not fancy the idea of giving an order when counsel for both sides were not represented in Court; that he very much feared if an order were to issue it could not be complied with by the time the case is to be opened; but that he would give counsel for plaintiff time in which to meet the issues after the case begins and that he would see that no facts are allowed to be brought out for which plaintiff's counsel had refused detailed mention in the bill of particulars and which had not been given.

"Back home, lawyers make a lot about bills of particulars, but when these are provided they generally put them on the side of their desk and go ahead to try the case," said Judge Purdy. "I know, because I've had many of them furnished to me when I was a practising lawyer."

THE BAIKAL ROAD MURDER

Man and Two Women Charged at Mixed Court: A Gruesome Story

A gruesome tale of the finding of the hacked body of a Chinese was described to Messrs. Whitamore (British Assessor) and Li (Chinese Magistrate) at the Mixed Court on Monday when two women (Ziang Wo-sz and Ching Zia-sz) and a man (Moo Ching-yoong), natives of Shaohsing, were charged with the murder of one Tsang Tsung-foo at 1364 Baikal Road on the morning of May 13.

Sub-Inspector MacDermott stated that the police had received information regarding the affair from a woman who lived downstairs (accused renting the upper section of the house) who said that blood was dripping downstairs through the ceiling from the floor above. Witness, accompained by several Chinese detectives, went to the spot, where they found exactly what the woman had told the police. They went upstairs and arrested the three accused who were there at the time. A careful search was then made of the room and an automatic pistol and 76 rounds of ammunition as well as some bloodstained rags were found under the bed. Further search revealed that blood was leaking from a Chinese white pig-skin trunk which, the woman stated, she had seen being brought into the house by the male accused earlier in the day. The trunk was at once broken open and the police were confronted with the mutilated body. Closer inspection showed that the body bore a bullet wound in the right temple and a stab wound below the left ear. The man had evidently died two hours before the discovery was made. The bullet taken from the head, however, was a .32 and did not correspond with the others that were seized. The accused, when questioned, stated that another man had committed the crime and he had now absconded. They had taken no part whatever.

Other evidence was given by police witnesses and the case was again adjourned.

MR. GOLDRING'S REPLY

Explanation that by Mathias's "Torture" He Meant Effect of Solitary Confinement

Last week, Mr. E. T. Maitland, Police Prosecutor, appeared at the Mixed Court and made an application to Mr. Martin, British Assessor, and Magistrate Kuan, that Mr. P.W. Goldring, solicitor, be called upon to retract a statement he made to the court recently regarding alleged ill-treatment of Oscar Mathias, who is detained in custody for debt. He characterized Mr. Goldring's statement as "wild, irresponsible, and untrue, and tending to bring the Model Settlement into disrepute."

Mr. Goldring appeared at the court last Friday and made his answer. He began by saying that he considered it to be absolutely wrong that anyone attached to the court should have been allowed to make an ex-parte statement about another practioner without his being present to answer, and that a motion should have been brought without his receiving notice of it as it reflected upon him as a member of the Bar. He entirely denied that there was anything untrue, wild or irresponsible in the statement made regarding Mathias. What he attacked was not the methods of the so-called Model Settlement, or of the police, but the system of imprisonment for debt.

The Assessor—You did say that the conditions of imprisonment amounted to little less than torture.

Worse than the Fleet Prison

Mr. Goldring—What I did say was that I had had a letter from Mathias saying that solitary confinement was so preying upon his mind that he had thought of committing suicide, and that this amounted to little less than torture, and I repeat, it is torture for him or for anybody else to be locked up in that place without any human intercourse. Counsel repeated his description of the small room in which the prisoner was lodged, containing a bed and a chair but no table, and having primitive sanitary arrangements, and insisted that nothing he had said was untrue. Even in such places as the old Marshalsea and Fleet Prison, the inmates did have some human intercourse, but this man was absolutely alone.

The Assessor—It does amount to solitary confinement because, unfortunately for Mr. Mathias, he is the only foreigner there.

Mr. Goldring—I have always argued, and always shall argue, that unless a creditor can prove that a debtor has means to pay it is nothing short of cruelty to put a man in gaol for debt. In this case there was utter failure to prove that Mathias was able to pay, and that being so, he should not be kept in custody. In no civilized country is it done. That was all I was arguing, and I do not think I said one untruthful word; certainly my statements were not wild or irresponsible. I spoke with a full sense of responsibility, and in view of the publicity given to Mr. Maitland's remarks, I take this opportunity of refuting them.

Friends Allowed to Visit Him

The Assessor said the court would accept Mr. Goldring's statement that the torture he referred to was solitary confinement, which probably did amount to torture. It would have been advisable to notify him that Mr. Maitland proposed to make a statement to the court. His honour had visited the prison, and it seemed to him that nothing more could be done for Mathias. He had a small, simply furnished room, entirely separate from the place where convicts were kept, and his friends were allowed to visit him. In the ordinary course he would have prison fare, but it was open to his friends to provide him with food, periodicals, writing paper, cigarettes, and everything he wanted.

Mr. Goldring—That was not my argument. I do not say that the prison authorities were not doing their best for him.

The Assessor—As regards imprisonment for debt, that is the system of this court and we must follow it. I should point out that Mathias incurred these liabilities without having the means to meet them. He is not a criminal detained under punishment, but detention is the only means by which the court could secure his future attendance here. He obtained security, but that was withdrawn, his guarantor being afraid that he would abscond.

Mr. Goldring—The principal cause of his difficulties is that a partner of his absconded with several thousands of dollars, more than sufficient to pay all he owed.

Mr. Maitland was present in court during this discussion, but took no part in it.

CHARGE OF PERJURY

Wealthy Cantonese Involved: Non-Appearance of Accused: Fined $25

An elderly Chinese, charged with perjury, was fined $25 on Monday morning by Messrs. Martin and Kuan, British Assessor and senior Chinese Magistrate, for failing to put in an appearance when his case was called for hearing.

The defendant, a wealthy Cantonese named Liang Zung-chien, was charged as follows:—

1. That on May 20, in the International Mixed Court, Shanghai, during the hearing of a criminal case wherein one Yu Wan-sai was charged with forgery, you did give false evidence by stating that you did not write a certain document, whereas, in truth and in fact, the document was written by you, Liang Zung-chien;

2. That you made a false complaint and did charge one Yu Wan-sai with attempting to obtain property by means of a false document in order to cause the complainant to be punished; and

3. That, being called as a witness, you made a false statement that a certain receipt dated the 19th day of the 5th moon of the 10th year of the Republic of China, acknowledging receipt of Tls. 5,000 from the said Yu Wan-sai, was not written by you.

The case, which arose from a recommendation of the Court, was remanded for special hearing.

Mr. W. S. Fleming (for the defence) stated that this case was remanded from the previous Monday and was set for last Monday morning in order that the case for the defence might be heard, and the accused pleaded not guilty. Counsel would ask the Court to set the case for special hearing. Owing to a misunderstanding his client was not present at the hearing: counsel had telephoned but could not reach him. Mr. Fleming therefore thought that accused must have come under the wrong impression that if he pleaded not guilty there would be no need for him to be present.

Mr. M. B. Brown (prosecuting) had no objection to the case being set for special hearing, but he expressed surprise at accused's non-appearance.

Mr. Fleming stated that he was largely to blame.

The Assessor said that the Court could not understand why the accused did not know that he was to appear as the charge sheet was very clearly marked "Remand one week on bail $2,000." It was perfectly clear. By not appearing accused was taking the risk of having his bail forfeited and a warrant issued for his arrest. The case would be remanded for special hearing, but accused would be fined $25 for not appearing.

"We think that it is a very serious offence," concluded the Court. "He was remanded and it was his duty to appear unless he received information that the case was not going to be heard."

DAIRYKEEPER FINED FOR ADULTERATION

Fined $100: 77 per cent. Fat Extracted: Court's Severe Remarks

"It seems in these cases that the fines are not sufficient. This dairy has been fined four times, and the Court thinks that the Council should withdraw its licence," remarked Mr. A. J. Martin (British Assessor) and Mr. Kuan Chun (senior Chinese Magistrate), in fining a 53-year-old Chinese woman, the licensee of the Yui Chong Dairy, $100 for furnishing milk which, upon analysis, was found to be of a poor quality.

Health Officer Bloom stated that at 1.20 p.m. on May 16 he took a sample bottle from a delivery coolie and sent it to be analysed. The bottles bore the seal of the Yui Chong Dairy, that of accused.

Health Inspector Burton stated that the analysis showed that 77 per cent. of the fat was extracted from the milk.

Cross-examined by Mr. H. D. Rodger (representing accused), Mr. Burton denied that he had told the Yih Ping Shang Hotel not to buy milk from the accused's dairy farm. He went there regarding this case, and also in connexion with another case. Witness could not say whether any criminal proceedings were instituted against the accused in 1921, nor did he know that the dairy had been open for 24 years, or that accused's husband was 73 years of age, but he knew that accused had supplied the Yih Ping Shang for the past 10 years.

The accused, Yau Z-kya, was called. She stated that her husband was in the country and that they had been in the dairy business for 24 years. The Yih Ping Shang was one of the dairy's best customers. She had learned that a foreigner and a Chinese had gone to the Yih Ping Shang and told them not to buy milk from her dairy, but she did not know their names. Since she had been charged witness had told her employees, who worked under her daughter-in-law, to be more careful.

Health Inspector Burton said that he had been to the Yih Ping Shang because he had considered it to be his duty as the hotel was paying the full market price for the milk.

The Court found accused guilty and, in fining her $100, made the above remarks.

Health Inspector Burton informed the Court that the question of withdrawing accused's licence was being considered.

CHINESE PRINTER'S LABEL SAMPLES

Prosecution's Allegations in Charge of Imitating Sun Maid Labels

Tsang Soong-nyoen, manager of the Wo Sung Printing Co., 321 Shantung Road, was charged on remand before Mr. Jabobs (American Assessor) and Magistrate Kuan at the Mixed Court on Tuesday, on a complaint by the Sun Maid Raisin Co., that "on various dates, at its address, he did print large quantities of labels in imitation of the label of complainants."

Mr. J. W. Schoenfeld prosecuted and Mr. L. K. Kentwell appeared for the defence.

Det.-Sgt. Papp stated that he visited defendant's premises and there found a lithographing slab on which were impressions similar to those on the labels of the complainant firm. There were also a large number of printed labels, exactly like those used by the complainants. (The slab and the labels were produced in Court).

Mr. W. J. Brehm, of the complainant company, stated that the label was exactly the same as that used by his company. The characters were the same. The colour of the background differed in not a single respect, but the sun was of a lighter yellow hue than that on their own labels. The labels were flooding the market. Spoiled, inferior and damaged raisins were being sold in the packages and these were liable to have a dangerous effect on the health of the public.

Cross-examined, witness admitted that he could not produce any of the inferior paints in the cartons printed by the defendant.

10,000 Sample Labels Printed.

The defendant then stated that he was manager of the defendant company. In the 11th moon of last year he had visited the complainant company to apply for printing business. There he met the compradores and accountants, including a man named Tsang Ming-liang. He was given a sample of the label with instructions to have some samples printed before a contract could be settled. These witness printed and used up about half a ream of paper in doing so. He then [illegible] office, but was told that the price was too high and that the colours were not exactly the same as the original sample. He did not get the business, and took the samples back to his shop, where, instead of destroying them, he put them under the bed of one of his assistants, hoping later to secure complainant's business and that the samples might come in useful. The lithograph stone was also left undestroyed. Witness had not sold any of the sample labels, nor, to his knowledge, had any of his employees. In all 10,000 samples were printed, and when found by the police, they were covered with dust, so there was no question of their being sold.

Mr. Schoenfeld—Do you usually print labels for your friends?—Witness—No.

This was all the evidence, and the hearing was adjourned.

LONG SENTENCES FOR ROBBERS

Chinese Desperadoes Convicted at Mixed Court: Leader's Lurid Record

Tsha Ah-ling, Tan Zang-nyoeh and Van Z-yoong were again brought before Mr. H. Bucknell (American Assessor) and Magistrate Li, on Tuesday, charged with entering No. 1565 Avenue Road on May 9 and, after using violence, taking away money, jewellery and clothing, valued at $7,000. Very severe sentences were imposed in each case.

Evidence was given by Chief Det.-Insp. Eek who stated that the first-named was an old offender and a master mind. After making arrangements with his accomplices to rob the house in question, he went there and tied a piece of rope round a brick and threw it up to the drying stage. Climbing up, he walked into the house and removed a bowl which he took away with him. He then went to a foodshop near by and met his companions. Together, they went back to the house, the door of which had meanwhile been opened by the first man, and were intercepted by a watchman, who demanded to know where they were going and what they were doing in that part of the Settlement at four o'clock in the morning. Instantly came the reply from the first man, that they had been playing mahjong and had just been out for something to eat. This explanation [illegible] watchman, who allowed them to go. The men then entered the house, where the first man distributed among the [illegible] with which to intimidate the inmates if they raised an alarm. The result was that they got away with the booty named. The Police were notified and efforts were at once made to apprehend the robbers.

Seized at Ningpo

It appears that the first accused disposed of all the booty himself and distributed only $50 to each of his accomplices, arranging to meet them at Hangchow later on. However, he did not go to Hangchow but went to his native home at Shaoxing. His [illegible] went to Hangchow as arranged, but there learned that warrants had been issued for their arrest. They immediately returned to Shanghai and passed the night at the house of two members of the Shanghai Municipal Police. They left [illegible] the latter to escape before it was too late. [illegible] make any attempt to run away. He gave them each another $70.

The two accomplices were shortly afterwards arrested and the Police got the first accused arrested immediately afterwards in Ningpo. Records would show, stated Inspector Eek, that the first accused was an old offender and had escaped from the French Municipal Goal on February 8.

The Court found the accused guilty and sentenced the second two to ten years' imprisonment each, to be followed by expulsion from the Settlement. The first accused received 15 years and re-expulsion, the Court adding a rider that accused might be sent to the French Police for imprisonment relative to his escape.

A Wild Career

The first accused escaped from the French Municipal Gaol by scaling a 25 ft. wall after telling his fellow prisoners two days beforehand that he was going to [illegible]. He refused to march in the street to the Mixed Court with other prisoners, saying that he was their superior and required the motor van to escort him. However, his desires were not met and he was handcuffed to two policemen, who had to drag him through the streets to the Mixed Court. When questioned outside the Court room, he refused to make any comment other than that he would escape within five years or commit suicide. His record shows that he had a dozen convictions.

ILLICIT TRADING IN DRUGS

Large Seizures and Exemplary Sentence in Mixed Court: Bench's Strong Comment

"The Court takes a very serious view of cases of this nature. The enormous quantity of drugs seized shows the extent of the business which has been carried on by the accused. Fines are quite inadequate to meet these cases, especially in cases on such a large scale," said Mr. C. E. Whitamore (British Assessor) at the Mixed Court on Wednesday when five men were charged with dealing in drugs at 836 North Soochow Road on May 27. Magistrate Lee concurrred.

Questioned by Mr. E. T. Maitland (Prosecuting Soliciter), Mr. M. O. Springfield (Assistant Commissioner of Police), Inspector J. P. Coghlan and Sub.-Inspector G. Hermitage gave evidence to the effect that, acting on information received, they went to the place, raided it and arrested the five men in the dock. They found a large quantity of drugs, including a parcel and 12 tins of caffein, a tin of chinchomine hydrochlorate, a package of morphia, six bottles of novocaine, 21 bottles of powdered tragacanth, a bottle of strychnine, two tins of saccharine, two tins of [illegible], a number of packages [illegible] of morphia and other pills, a quantity of raw opium, and [illegible] of cocaine.

The accused were called by Mr. A. Cavey (for the defence). The first man admitted that the goods were found in his place, but denied being engaged in the drug business. He sold his goods to the chemists, but he had never sold any to unauthorized persons. The opium, which was Turkish, was underneath the bed. The drugs were left there by a friend.

The second man stated that he came to Shanghai only three months ago and went into the first man's employ on the same day on the strength of a letter of introduction from a friend. Arrangements were made to pay him $6 per month, but he had not received his salary up to the present. He had never handled any money, nor had he any capital in the business. In fact, he had nothing whatever to do with the business.

The third man stated that he knew nothing about the drugs. He was the tenant of another section of the house and did not know in what business [illegible] were engaged. The fourth and fifth prisoners denied any knowledge of the drugs or the sales. They had [illegible] premises.

The Bench sent the first man to prison for four years and the [illegible] months. The [illegible] men were [illegible] Magistrate adding that the Bench had taken into consideration his youth and the fact that he was [illegible] evidence. He was [illegible]

Missing Witnesses.

Inspector J. MacKenzie stated that, after a subpœna had been issued by the Court, on Mr. Covey's application, for two witnesses for the defence, the police had great difficulty in serving them. After service, which was done in person on both men, one of them had failed to put in an appearance in Court. He (Inspector MacKenzie) would ask that a warrant be issued for his arrest so that the man would in some way be punished. The orders of the Court must be obeyed, otherwise it could be held in contempt at random, and the police would be faced with great difficulties in executing the Court's orders in future.

Mr. Covey stated that he would assume responsibility in the matter. As they were his own witnesses he had told them not to come because he would not require their evidence. He would apologize to the Bench because the misunderstanding was his.

The Assessor warned Mr. Covey of the seriousness of the matter and told him to see that it did not happen again, no matter who made the application. The Court's orders must be obeyed.

$10,000 FORGED ORDER ON CHINESE BANK

Police Discovery of Many Other Spurious Blanks: Jewellery Disappears in Court

A story of the defrauding of the Bank of Communications was related on Wednesday morning to Mr. A. J. Martin (British Assessor) and Magistrate Kuan in the Mixed Court when three men and two women were charged with being concerned in obtaining $10,000 by means of a forged native bank order.

Mr. E. T. Maitland, assisted by Chief Det.-Insp. Cruickshank, prosecuted on behalf of the police; Mr. C. Mansel Reece and appeared for the Bank of Communications; Mr. A. M. Preston watched the proceedings on behalf of the An Yue Native Bank; Mr. W. W. Worthington (who later retired from the case), Mr. T. Z. Zung, Dr. O. Fischer and Mme. F. Rosemberg defended.

It was stated that on May 8 two of the men went to the Bank of Communications and presented a native bank order bearing the chop of the An Yue native Bank for the sum of $10,000. The order was accepted and the amount paid out. Later a forgery was discovered and the police traced the accused to a house in Yunnan Road. In their possession were found other forged blank native orders. One of the men made a full confession, to the effect that he obtained the money from the bank and handed $2,000 to one of the women. He also stated that he purchased jewellery, clothing and furniture for one of the other men and that he lent the balance of the money to his friends. The police were able to recover $18 and also obtained jewellery to the value of approximately $3,000.

The Court found Chien Tsoo-lien, an unemployed native bank clerk, and Kao Kien-sang, a Chinese doctor, guilty and sent them to prison for a year each. The other three were discharged, the Court holding that they were in no way implicated in the affair.

Mr. Mansel Reece, on behalf of the Bank of Communications, made an application for the return of the articles which had been purchased, and the Court ordered that the furniture in the house, as well as the clothing and jewellery, be confiscated and the proceeds handed over to the Bank of Communications.

Not a little consternation reigned after the case had been concluded when it was found that the jewellery was missing.

AN armed robbery occurred at No. 200 Rangoon Road in the early hours of on Thursday morning. Four men, two armed with long knives and two with iron bars, broke into the house from the back, and after intimidating the householder and his family, stole $300 in money and jewellery. Another robbery under arms took place at 497 Medhurst Road on Wednesday early in the morning. Three armed men broke into the house, and demanded the sum of Tls. 5,000, otherwise they intended to kidnap the householder's son. He handed over all the money he had, about $197, and the robbers departed without carrying out their threat.

ANOTHER STOCK EXCHANGE CASE

Cotton Goods Exchange and Brokers Jointly Sued for Tls. 53,771

An important stock exchange case was heard at the Mixed Court on Thursday morning by Mr. Martin (British Assessor) and Magistrate Yui, when Fong Yao-kee claimed from the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange and the Heng Yue Hong the sum of Tls. 53,771 with interest.

Plaintiff's petition stated that the first defendant was a stock exchange registered at the Ministry of Agriculture and Commerce and the second was a hong of brokers admitted and registered as the first defendant's broker numbered 54. Between October 29 and November 2, 1923, plaintiff bought of the first defendant from the second 4,050 bales of cotton yarn and 2,600 piculs of cotton in 21 different contracts. For the goods plaintiff claimed to have paid the first defendant, through the second defendant, a total margin of Tls. 32,100, besides leaving a credit balance with the defendants amounting to Tls. 2,671. On November 6, 1923, the petition states, plaintiff instructed the defendants to sell his holdings at the close quotation of that day, which would have meant a profit of Tls. 19,000, but the defendants refused to pay to plaintiff this profit, together with the margin money of Tls. 34,771, in violation of law and of the exchange's regulations, to plaintiff's damage of Tls. 53,771 or more. The second defendant, the petition continued, had disappeared, but had deposited with the first defendant a cash guarantee of Tls. 15,000, which the latter has refused to hand over to plaintiff as payment, pendente lite. Repeated demands had been unavailing. Whereas, plaintiff claimed for these items.

Alleged Gambling Transaction.

The Cotton Goods Exchange (the first defendant) denied these items, and alleged that all transactions entered into by the second defendant and recorded by them, the first defendants, have been duly carried out and settled by the second defendant. The second defendant, the Heng Yue Hong, denied also the plaintiff's allegations and stated that it was intended by the parties that the 4,050 bales of cotton yarn and the 2,600 piculs of cotton referred to was not to be delivered by the first defendant to plaintiff, but was a speculation and a gambling transaction, a settlement to be made upon payment of differences, and that therefore the contract was void, invalid and unenforceable in law.

Dr. H. C. Mei represented plaintiff; Mr. A. M. Preston the first defendant, the Cotton Goods Exchange; and Mr. R. T. Bryan, Jr., the Heng Yue Hong, whom, plaintiff alleged, had disappeared.

Dr. Mei, after going through the pleadings, opened the case briefly.

Mr. Preston intervened, saying that he disliked the idea of the Court having to listen to the very complicated and difficult evidence which would have to be given by the employees of his clients, the Stock Exchange, as it would be most difficult to understand and follow and it would also occupy considerable time; but on the pleadings themselves, he suggested that there was an opportunity for him to argue on the law that the defendant exchange was not liable provided that the 21 contracts referred to in the petition were the same as those produced by Dr. Mei for inspection of the first defendant prior to the trial.

The Court, after argument, finally ruled against Mr. Preston and ordered Dr. Mei to proceed with the case.

The evidence-in-chief of the plaintiff was then taken and the case was adjourned and set for hearing at 2.30 p.m. on the afternoon of June 18.

A motion for a re-hea[illegible] case of the Belgian Tr[illegible] Neuss, Hesslein and [illegible] argued in the U. S. [illegible] on Monday, Mr. Bryan [illegible] a re-hearing on the [illegible] of defendants on the ground [illegible] there was a material differe[illegible] between the two exhibits submitted as contracts, that no evidence was on record that the contract as cla[illegible]ed had been ratified by the defendant; and that the counterclaim had been allowed. The case [illegible] shipment of 100 tons [illegible] yoke and 500 tons of [illegible] bumen alleged to have [illegible] tracted for by the defendan[illegible] pany, and damages representing the difference between the alleged contract price and the market price were awarded by the Court in respect of the alleged refusal of the defendant company to accept the goods as contracted for. As the case had not been heard by Judge Purdy originally, much of the evidence in the case had to be repeated and Mr. Bryan had not finished his argument when the matter was adjourned.

CUTICURA HEALS ECZEMA IN RASH

On Child's Face. Irritation Caused Scratching. Face Disfigured.

"When my little girl was fourteen months old wet eczema broke out in a rash of small pimples under her chin. It soon spread to her face and the irritation was so great that she scratched, causing it to bleed. She was very restless at night, and her face was disfigured.

SOUTHERN RHODESIA

SOUTHERN Rhodesia which was inaugurated as the youngest self governing Colony of the British Empire on October 1, 1923, and which had previously for 33 years been ably administered by the British South Africa Company possesses one of the finest climates in the world with long hours of sunshine, breezy temperate days and cool nights. For those who wish to take up farming or ranching in order to make the most they can of their capital, energy and technical knowledge, or for those who wish to retire from strenuous business or professional life and make a home, Rhodesia offers many advantages unequalled elsewhere. The business, social, sporting, educational and medical facilities bear favourable comparison with those of other countries. Native labour is plentiful and when properly managed is cheap and efficient. Taxation is light. Good land in healthy surroundings and amidst fine scenery is plentiful and not expensive.

Full information is obtainable on application to The Secretary, Southern Rhodesia Settlers' Board (attached to the Government of Southern Rhodesia), P. O. Box 372, Salisbury S., Rhodesia.

The giving of advice to prospective settlers will be facilitated if applicants will advise the Board in detail of their circumstances and the amount of capital they would be prepared to invest in a suitable venture.

FOREIGN TELEGRAMS

A NEW PROGRAMME FOR FRANCE

Herriot Demanding Recognition of Soviet: The Attack on President Millerand

Paris, May 31.

The executive committee of the Radical and Radical Socialist party, which is drafting the programme of the future Government, to-day heard a statement by M. Herriot, who, the newspapers say, insisted on resumption of relations with the Soviets, together with a conciliatory international policy, in conformity with which M. Herriot will personally attend the September session of the League of Nations, where, it is hoped, he will meet Mr. Ramsay MacDonald.

The vexed question of the Presidency, however, is becoming more critical. The Radical Socialist paper, "Oeuvre," contradicts a report that M. Herriot will form a cabinet at the behest of President Millerand. On the contrary, it states, M. Herriot will only take office conditionally on the President resigning or promising to resign as soon as possible.

The Cabinet has decided to issue decrees giving effect to economies in various public services totalling 440,000,000 francs.

Later.

M. Herriot, in a letter to the Socialist leader, M. Leon Blum, urging the Socialists to collaborate with the Radical-Socialists in the new Government, says that the country clearly desires electoral union and the two parties should be transformed into a Governmental partnership, with a view to far-reaching social reforms and the building up of peace abroad. The Socialist Party Congress, which opens to-morrow, will discuss the letter. It is generally believed that the Socialists will reject participation in the Ministry, while they will make their support in debate a condition of M. Herriot's refusing to accept the Premiership from President Millerand.—Reuter.

Resignation of French Premier

Paris, June 1.

M. Poincaré has resigned the Premiership.

Later.

The dead set against President Millerand by the Left parties is considerably aggravating the political crisis and is likely to render the formation of a new Cabinet very difficult, as several sections oppose collaboration with the President in the slightest degree.

The Radical and Radical Socialist Federation yesterday demanded President Millerand's immediate resignation, while to-day the Radical Socialist deputies, of whom the leader, M. Herriot, is the prospective Premier, unanimously adopted a resolution that the new majority in the Chamber was unable to accord President Millerand its confidence because "he has exceeded his constitutional rôle." Only the intervention of M. Herriot, who explained that he desired to retain freedom of action if summoned to form a Cabinet, prevented the meeting from adopting a proposal forbidding any member of the Left bloc accepting the Premiership from President Millerand.

Meanwhile the Socialist Party Congress and also the Republican Socialist and Independent Socialist deputies, at a meeting presided over by the ex-Premier, M. Painlévé, were uncompromising in their attitude, the former instructing the Parliamentary representatives to fight any Government formed under President Millerand's aegis and the latter declaring that the least collaboration with President Millerand was inconceivable.

Prior to M. Poincaré's resignation becoming effective, the Council of State ratified the decree laws which were forced through the last Parliament in the teeth of strong opposition, reducing departmental expenses Frs. 400,000,000. President Millerand subsequently countersigned the ratification.

Unanimous votes were carried at the plenary meeting of the Left bloc to-day, which was attended by all the sympathetic parties.

The meeting endorsed the Radical Socialist proposal referred to, adopted M. Painlevé as a candidate for the Presidency on the proposal of M. Herriot, and expressed unconditional confidence in M. Herriot.—Reuter.

Paris, June 2.

In the course of a speech last night M. Herriot declared that, if he did not secure the support he asked from the Socialists, he would not consent to assume office. He anticipated that the external difficulties would not be so many as was suggested, for democratic Europe had confidence in him. The aim of his Government would be European peace. He would take all measures to maintain the equilibrium of the budget, even recourse to the courts, if it were needed, to put an end to certain manoeuvres.—Reuter.

Drastic Changes in Domestic and Foreign Policy

Paris, June 2.

A striking programme is outlined by M. Herriot in a letter to the leader of the Socialist party. It embraces the immediate suppression of the decree laws, and the re-establishment of the match monopoly, both of which were passed by the Poincaré Government, and also a general amnesty, except for evaders of military service and traitors. It further proposes the suppression of the Embassy at the Vatican, the application of the law regarding religious congregations, and the reduction of military service by organization of the nation for defensive purposes.

M. Herriot, after describing his fiscal proposals and pro-Labour tendencies, favours strengthening and extending the rôle of the League of Nations, the Hague Tribunal and the International Labour Office, and resumption of normal relations with Russia. He unconditionally accepts the Dawes report.

Notwithstanding his party's opposition over the Ruhr policy in the past, M. Herriot does not believe in the possibility of evacuating the Ruhr at present before the safeguards, laid down in that policy, are enforced and an international régime established.

Later.

The Socialist Congress has rejected participation in the Government in the present circumstances. M. Herriot's statement of programme, however, was greeted with cheers, and the Executive of the Radical Socialist Party unanimously approved the programme.

June 3.

The Congress of Unified Socialists has decided to support M. Herriot's Government.—Reuter.

President Millerand's Firm Stand.

Paris, June 4.

The "Matin" states that President Millerand does not dream of resigning. If the politicians whom the country has called to office decline it, President Millerand will call someone else to form the Ministry, and if this Ministry is overthrown it will only be after an historic debate on the question of the President's right to appoint a Cabinet, after which President Millerand will take the decisions of the same.—Reuter.

M. Painleve President of French Chamber

Paris, June 4.

M. Painlevé was to-day elected President of the Chamber of Deputies by 291 votes. M. Maginot received 209 votes and the Communist candidate, M. Marty, received 27.—Reuter.

BRITISH AND FRENCH PREMIERS

Probability of an Early Conference on Policy Regarding Germany

London, June 2.

With reference to reports in the French press that Mr. Ramsay MacDonald has written to M. Herriot, offering to confer with him in Paris on the international situation, and that M. Herriot has replied, pointing out that he has not yet been entrusted with the formation of a Cabinet, Reuter's Agency is informed that it is obvious that both sides desire a settlement as soon as possible and that it is reasonable to assume that there has been some form of communication regarding a possible meeting of the two statesmen.

It is further pointed out that Mr. MacDonald agrees to a suggestion that he should meet Signor Mussolini, but that it is impossible at present for Mr. MacDonald to absent himself from England long enough to go to Switzerland for that purpose. It is not so difficult, however, for him to meet the new French Premier in Paris.—Reuter.

KING'S BIRTHDAY HONOURS LIST

No New Peerages and Few Outstanding Awards but Several O. B. E.'s

London, June 2.

The first honours list issued by the Labour Government on the occasion of the King's Birthday does not contain any surprises. There are no new peerages and the honours are largely a reward for State and semi-diplomatic services. In addition to a few outstanding awards, there is a long list of appointments in the lower grades of the Order of the British Empire for home and overseas services.

The honours include:—

Order of Merit.—Mr. Francis Herbert Bradley, Fellow of Merton College, Oxford, the well-known writer on philosophy.

Sir Charles Scott Sherrington, President of the Royal Society and Professor of Physiology at Oxford University.

Grand Cross of the British Empire:—

Mr. Robert Donald, the well-known journalist, who is Chairman of the Publicity Committee for the British Empire Exhibition, for public services.

Field-Marshal Baron Plumer, of Messines, Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Malta.

Privy Councillor:—

Mr. T. P. O'Connor, M.P., for political services.

Companions of the Order of St. Michael and St. George:—

Mr. Hayes Marriott, General Adviser to the Government of Johore.

The Raja Muda of Perak (Honorary).

Knight Commander of the Order of the British Empire:—

Mr. W. G. Maxwell, Chief Secretary to the Government of the Federated Malay States.

Knights Bachelor:—

Mr. Henry Edward Pollock, Unofficial Member of the Executive Council of Hongkong.

Dr. Malcolm Watson, of Selangor, in recognition of his services for the prevention of malaria.

Mr. Harold George Parlett, Japanese Counsellor of His Majesty's Embassy in Tokio.—Reuter.

LONDON UNDERGROUND RAILWAY STRIKE

Claims for Better Wages and Working Conditions: A Number of Demands

London, June 4.

The shopmen and electricians of the London Underground Railways and the Great Western system have decided to strike at midnight owing to a dispute with regard to wages and working conditions. The strike is disavowed by the National Union of Railwaymen, whose members will remain at work and prevent a general stoppage, but the situation is complicated by the action of the Locomotive Society, which has sent a strong letter to the railway companies giving a time-limit for satisfaction of a number of demands in connexion with anomalies arising from the last strike settlement and threatening drastic action if they are not conceded.

June 5.

The authorities had not received information of the operation of the threatened railway strike at midnight up to two o'clock on the following morning.

The strike of the railway shopmen developed rapidly during the night and as a result many tube services have been considerably affected and to-day city workers were much delayed.

Underground railway companies in London officially state that train service is being maintained on all lines, but that it has been necessary to close some of the least important stations in order to conserve power for the benefit of long distance passengers.

Forty per cent. of the shopmen at the Lotts Road power house and station were working this morning.

As regards the Great Western Railway only shopmen are involved. The traffic was hitherto not affected.—Reuter.

IRISH BOUNDARY DISPUTE

Commission and Judicial Committee to be Appointed: Premier's Proposals

London, June 4.

In a statement before the House of Commons to-day on the Irish negotiations, the Prime Minister intimated that the Government had secured a chairman for the boundary commission. He would announce the name to-morrow. The Government had also decided to ask a judicial committee to advise them regarding their legal and constitutional powers to constitute the commission. The committee would include the Chief Justice of Australia and, he hoped, also a member of the Canadian Bench.

There was every reason to believe that the judicial committee would be able to sit and resolve the issues in July. The Government had not abandoned hope that the two Irish Governments might reach an agreed settlement before the commission was constituted, though even in that event the commission would be necessary to give formal effect to the agreement. The conciliatory utterances of Mr. Cosgrave, the Free State President, and Sir James Craig, the Premier of North Ireland, had encouraged these hopes.

Mr. MacDonald said that at his meeting with the two Irish leaders on Sunday he had asked them to consider certain proposals which he had since submitted to them in the form of a letter. He hoped that Irish statesmanship would enable a solution to be reached (cheers).

It is stated unofficially in the lobby of the House that Sir James Rose-Innes, the Chief Justice of South Africa, will be chairman of the Irish boundary commission.—Reuter.

GERMANY'S HIDDEN RE-ARMING

Allies Insisting on Inspection of Armaments: Military Control Commission

Paris, May 31.

The text of the long inter-Allied note to Germany on the question of military control has been published.

It rejects the proposal to abolish the Military Control Commission, and other German suggestions, and reiterates the demand that Germany shall agree to a general inspection of armaments. It promises that, if the result is satisfactory, control will be limited on certain specified points and the effectives of the Commission will be considerably reduced, whereas, if Germany persists in refusing the offer, the Allies will demand the strict application of the Treaty.

The Note declares that from every point of view the present situation cannot further be prolonged and requests acceptance by June 30 at the latest.—Reuter.

GERMANY'S FOREIGN POLICY

Chancellor's Willingness to Carry Out Experts' Recommendations

Berlin, June 4.

The Chancellor, Herr Max, in a statement on the Government's foreign policy before the Reichstag to-day, declared that he intended to continue the preliminary work of carrying out the experts' report in conformity with his previous announcement that Germany was ready to co-operate in the experts' plans as offering a quick solution of the reparations problem. The Government were prepared to translate the report into a reality, but the measures they were preparing would only be enforced if it were clearly shown that the other parties would accept the report as indivisible and unchangeable.—Reuter.

BRITAIN AND TURKEY

Breakdown in Negotiations Regarding Mosul

Constantinople, June 2.

The negotiations between Britain and Turkey with regard to the Mosul Vilayet threaten to break down. Sir Percy Cox has informed Fethy Bey that he has been instructed to return to London unless the Turks modify their attitude.—Reuter.

SOVIET DESIGNS ON TURKEY

Rumoured Rash Speech by M. Trotsky Discredited in Later Report

Berne, June 4.

According to a telegram from Warsaw, M. Trotsky in a speech at Podolsk declared that the Soviet needed the Straits and Constantinople and therefore Bessarabia was vital to them as the first step towards Constantinople. If the Rumanians or the Poles tried to bar the way, he said, the Soviet would fight them.—Reuter.

London, June 4.

Russian quarters in London discredit the report of M. Trotsky's speech at Podolsk in view of the fact that M. Trotsky has not left Moscow recently.—Reuter.

Revolt in Albania.

Belgrade, June 5.

Civil war is spreading throughout Albania. The insurgents have captured Scutari and are marching on Tirana. They have sent an ultimatum to the Government demanding its resignation. The troops at Alession, which have been attacked, are in a critical position.—Reuter.

Bukharest, June 5.

A sensational rumour of a revolution in Rumania is semi-officially denied. It is declared that perfect order prevails throughout Rumania.—Reuter.

ATTACK ON AUSTRIAN CHANCELLOR

Dr. Seipel Fired Upon and Seriously Wounded: His Assailant Captured

Vienna, June 1.

The Austrian Chancellor, Dr. Seipel, was shot and seriously, but not fatally wounded, to-day. The would-be assassin was also shot and seriously wounded during the arrest.

Later.

Dr. Seipel was returning from Wiener-Neustadt and had just alighted at the Southern Station, when a man, who had travelled in the same train, made the attack. The shot penetrated Dr. Seipel's lung, inflicting a serious wound, but it is not thought to be fatal. The assailant turned the weapon on himself when about to be arrested. He refused to disclose his identity. The Chancellor was immediately removed to hospital.

June 2.

The Chancellor was wounded twice. The first was slight, but the second was more serious. The assailant has been identified as a weaver, named Jaworek, of Pottendorf near Wiener-Neustadt.—Reuter.

London, June 2.

A telegram from Vienna states that Dr. Seipel was leaving the station to enter his motor-car, when a young man approached and fired three revolver-shots. The Chancellor fell to the ground unconscious. His assailant shot himself in the head and his condition is desperate. An operation was subsequently performed on the Chancellor, whose life the doctors hope to save. The Chief of Police has issued a statement that the crime is a political one and that the assailant is a railway worker and supposed to be a Communist.—Reuter.

June 2.

A bulletin issued this morning says that the Chancellor, Dr. Seipel, passed a quiet night and his condition is satisfactory. The haemorrhage has not extended and an operation has not been performed.—Reuter.

Chancellor's State Unchanged

Vienna, June 3.

The Chancellor's condition is unchanged. Jarowek is reported to have made a confession, in which he says that he had repeatedly heard that the Chancellor was responsible for the misery of the great masses of the people, and therefore he had long ago resolved to remove him. He denies that he had any accomplices. He admits that he belongs to a Social-Democrat organization, but says that he has long abandoned political activities.

M. Bauer, the leader of the Social Democrats, in the course of a speech yesterday, strongly condemned the attack, as does the whole Vienna press. Several papers urge more moderate conduct of political hostilities.—Reuter.

Vienna, June 3.

The doctors now cautiously express hopes of Dr. Seipel's recovery.

A special sitting of the National Assembly to-day passed a resolution of horror at the crime.—Reuter.

U. S. IMMIGRATION RESTRICTIONS

Publication of Japanese Protest: An Injustice to Self-respect

Washington, May 30.

The Japanese protest is coupled with a request that the American Government shall take all possible steps for the removal of the discriminatory measures. The Note declares that international discriminations are particularly unwelcome when based on race, and the history of the commercial agreements between the two countries shows that the Japanese Government has sought to protect its nationals from discriminatory immigration legislation in the United States, which position "is fully understood and appreciated by the American Government." Citing the Japanese-American Treaty of 1911, the Japanese Note points out that the new legislation is in entire disregard of the spirit and the circumstances underlying the treaty. The Note concludes with the Hope that the communication will be received in the same spirit of friendliness and candour as it is made.—Reuter's American Service.

Tokio, June 1.

The Japanese protest to the American State Department against the American Exclusion Act has been officially given out here.

After lengthily discussing the relations with America under the treaties of 1894 and 1911 and under the Gentlemen's Agreement, and after countering arguments that the Japanese are undesirable, the note declares that the Act disregards the spirit and circumstances making those treaties. It does not deny the right of any State to limit and control immigration into its own domain, "but when in exercise of that right evident injustice is done to a foreign nation in disregard of its proper self-respect, international understandings or ordinary rules of comity, the question must assume an aspect which justifies diplomatic discussion and adjustment." The note requests the American Government to take all possible and suitable measures for the removal of such discrimination.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Weight of the New Law Bearing on Italians

New York, June 2.

The Italian colony of Brooklyn is excited by the announcement that 700 of their compatriots who arrived on board the steamer Dante Alighieri were not allowed to land but would be deported under a recent Supreme Court decision. 200 of them originally intended to land at Halifax, but were barred owing to the lack of the necessary $1,200 each.—Reuter's American Service.

The Emigration Conference

Rome, June 2.

The Emigration Conference has concluded after adopting, practically unanimously, resolutions drafted by the Committee, dealing especially with the general principles of treaties respecting emigration and colonization. An important matter which was determined was a declaration of principle in regard to the legal status of emigrants and conditions governing residence of workers in foreign countries. The Conference passed a resolution urging States to institute compulsory medical examination of emigrants before embarkation. It was decided to hold a second Conference in 1927 in one of the immigration countries.—Reuter.

United Act of Protest by Japanese Press

Tokio, June 3.

All the Tokio and Osaka newspapers were represented at a meeting held in Tokio to-night to protest against the American exclusion legislation. A resolution was adopted declaring their "grim determination" not to abide permanently by the "rash and discriminatory decision" of Congress.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

A Mass Meeting

Tokio, June 5.

This afternoon some 25,000 citizens filled a huge wrestling hall to its utmost capacity at the first national anti-exclusion protest meeting. The meeting was promoted by publicists, including representatives of every moderate and extreme political party organization of the Lower House, as well as the Press. A resolution was adopted to the effect that "every step be taken to maintain Japan's position against America's anti-Japanese Immigration Bill."

The large attendance, which was due as much to the holiday as to the purpose of the meeting, responded enthusiastically to a series of speeches in which was emphasized the seriousness of the disgrace inflicted on Japan as the attempt to close the white lands to the Asiatic people was, for which Japan should strive to strengthen her national power on behalf not only of herself, but of all Asiatic people.

The promoters propose to organize a nation-wide campaign in order to call to the attention of the people the gravity of the situation.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

CANADA AND JAPANESE IMMIGRATION

A Request for Restriction

Ottawa, June 2.

In the Dominion House of Commons to-day the Minister of Immigration, Mr. J. A. Robb, said that representations had been received from retail merchants in British Columbia requesting the same restrictions on Japanese immigration as obtain in the case of Chinese. The question of the advisability of further restriction of Japanese immigration was under consideration. The Japanese Government had agreed to restrict the number of Japanese coming to Canada annually as household servants or agricultural labourers to 150, this constituting the quota now allowed to enter, though the total number of Japanese entering last year was 448.—Reuter's American Service.

2,500,000 HOUSES FOR BRITAIN

Government's Agreement with Building Industry and Brick Combine

London, May 31.

Official details of the Government's scheme to build 2,500,000 houses in 15 years show that the contributions by the State and the local authorities would total £1,376,000,000, spread over 50 years, the State's share being £926,000,000.

Ninety-thousand houses would be built in the coming year, rising to 225,000 yearly by 1934.

May 30.

The second national ballot of the building trade operatives has resulted in acceptance of the employers' offer of a half-penny an hour increase. The danger of a threatened strike has therefore been removed.—Reuter.

London, June 3.

In the House of Commons to-day, the details of the Government's housing policy were outlined by Mr. J. Wheatley, the Minister of Health, moving the financial resolution on which the Housing Bill will be founded.

The Minister stated that the programme aimed at producing 2,500,000 houses over a period of 15 years, beginning with 90,000 in 1925 and rising to 225,000 in 1934.

Mr. Wheatley declared that an agreement had been reached with the building industry which stipulated for the production of at least two-thirds of the foregoing figures. The brick combine had agreed to fix the prices prevailing in January, 1924, and legislative steps would be taken to prevent profiteering. A subsidy would be paid amounting to £9 annually over a period of 40 years, but the subsidy would be reviewed every few years in the light of prevailing circumstances.—Reuter.

INDIAN NATIONALISTS

Homage to a Murderer

Calcutta, June 3.

The Bengal Provincial Conference, consisting of representative Bengal members of the Indian National Congress sitting at Sirajganj, to-day adopted a resolution paying homage to Gopi Nath Saha, who was hanged for murdering Mr. Ernest Day, a prominent Calcutta merchant, in January last. The speakers urged that he aimed at ridding the country of its enemies and so, while condemning his action, they admired its object. Mr. C. R. Das, one of the Nationalist leaders, voted in favour of the motion.—Reuter.

Serajgunj, June 5.

The Bengal Provincial Nationalist Congress has passed a resolution calling Bengal Ministers to resign and urging the resignation of the Governor, the Earl of Lytton, on the ground that he does not enjoy the confidence of the public.—Reuter.

GANDHI RECANTING?

Reported Repudiation of Swaraj Policy

Bombay, May 30.

Under the heading "Gandhi repudiates Swarajists" the newspapers publish a statement by Mr. Gandhi referring to the working of Congress organization and urging those who do not believe in the boycott of councils, law courts and Government schools, etc., to resign from the Congress bodies.—Reuter.

EMPIRE WIRELESS TELEPHONY

Successful Tests Between England and Australia

London, June 4.

Wireless telephony has been successfully tested between England and Australia by Marconi stations. Signor Marconi, interviewed, said that they used the new system but without the "beam." He predicted that distance would be no obstacle with the new system, which comprises something more than the beam.—Reuter.

THE DEATH RAY

Reported Purchase by English Company for Development

London, May 31.

It is reported from Paris that it has been decided that Mr. Grindell Matthews will transfer the "death ray" rights to an English company with a capital of £350,000 with which tests will be carried out on a large scale.—Reuter.

QUEEN AT WEMBLEY

Buying Chinese Toys in the Hongkong Section

London, May 30.

The Queen, accompanied by Prince George, paid another visit to the British Empire Exhibition at Wembley to-day. They spent over an hour at the Hongkong section, where they purchased a number of articles, including vases, a miniature elephant and Chinese toys.

Later.

The Hongkong exhibit at Wembley is thronged daily. Thousands of visitors are attracted by the Hongkong street with its open shops. The native workers are surrounded continuously by a large crowd. The Chinese restaurant is insufficient to hold the crowds of would-be diners.—Reuter.

BUCHAREST EXPLOSIONS

Continuing at Intervals: Huge Financial Loss

Bucharest, May 29.

A fire has broken out in an ammunition dump in the centre of the city. There have been numerous explosions, which have done much damage in the vicinity. A large force of firemen is endeavouring to localize the fires.—Reuter.

Vienna, May 30.

A thousand wagonloads of munitions containing 12,000 shells, which had recently been received from the Skoda Works and also a quantity of old munitions were involved in the explosion at Bukharest. It is estimated that 2,000,000,000 lei worth of damage was caused by the explosions, which are continuing. A fearful panic prevailed for two hours. The population of the threatened area fled to the centre of the city. Many houses have fallen and an immense number of windows have been shattered. King Ferdinand had a narrow escape as a shell exploded on the spot he had just vacated.

An official communiqué states that the explosions of munitions began in the night and set fire to three magazines, several supply depôts and Army workshops, a block of barracks and a number of private houses. The prompt measures of the authorities saved a great quantity of munitions and restricted the fire to one area.

"The ammunition store destroyed was only one of many possessed by the Army and thus no great disaster occurred. Four persons were killed and 20 wounded. The report that a shell fell into the Royal Palace is untrue."—Reuter.

Vienna, June 1.

A traveller from Bukharest, describing the disaster, says that the explosion of a magazine filled with shrapnel grenades was so terrific that it seemed that every building had fallen, every house shook to its foundation. Tiles and parts of facades fell into the streets. There was hardly a pane of glass left unbroken throughout the city. He adds that the people of Bukharest are convinced that the disaster was the work of Communists.—Reuter.

RHODESIA'S FIRST PARLIAMENT

Meet in Dancing Hall for Want of Other Chamber

Salisbury, May 30.

The first Southern Rhodesian Legislature opened to-day in unique conditions. There was a huge attendance, including many settlers from remote districts. In the absence of a Parliament building, the Assembly is being held in the dancing-hall of a local hotel.

This is probably the first case in the history even of Colonial Legislatures of an Assembly deliberating in licensed premises, nevertheless the dignity of the occasion was well maintained, though the waiting crowd was entertained with orchestral music.

The opening was attended by the usual pomp and ceremony.—Reuter.

THE RED FLAG IN SOUTH AFRICA

Political Meetings Made Impossible by Rowdies

Capetown, June 2.

Several newspapers here demand that drastic action should be taken to prevent disturbances in the political campaign which have already broken up many South African Party meetings, notably at Durban last night, where General Smuts was unable to get a hearing. The General subsequently declared: "The red flag has come to South Africa and free speech is denied us. This will do more than any speech of mine to arouse the public to a realisation of the dangers of pact rule."—Reuter.

AMERICA AND THE WORLD COURT

President Coolidge's Ideas

Washington, May 30.

President Coolidge in the course of an address at the Memorial Day ceremony at Arlington Cemetery said that any proposals that American adherence to the World Court should be contingent upon the dissociation of the Court from the League of Nations were unworthy of American principles and conditions. The President did not mention the Senate Foreign Relations Committee's plan, but the address is generally accepted as indicating his rejection of it.

President Coolidge renewed his endorsement of the original Harding-Hughes World Court plan and added that, while he would not oppose some further reservations, "any material changes, which would probably not receive the consent of many other nations, would be impracticable."

He reminded the audience of the necessity that nations should always be prepared for war, but emphasized the point that the American Government had been founded to maintain peace.—Reuter's American Service.

A PORT DARWIN BASE

Said to Be Not Only Useless But a Danger

Melbourne, May 30.

The Nationalist, Mr. Marks, moving the adjournment of the House of Representatives in order to discuss defence matters, suggested that, if a naval base were constructed at great cost at Port Darwin, the Japanese, in case of war, would be deeply obliged. Such a base would have to be destroyed, because, if left, the enemy would use it, and Australia would be at the mercy of the Japanese fleet without the protection of the British Navy.—Reuter.

ANTI-SCARLATINA SERUM

Great Results Claimed for American Discovery

SATURDAY'S TELEGRAMS

THE DISORDERS IN THE PUNJAB

Gen. Dyer's Orders and Actions Vindicated by Judge and Jury in King's Bench Division: Wrongly Punished by Secretary of State for India

London, June 5.

An important libel suit, the hearing of which occupied no fewer than 25 days and cost £20,000, ended to-day when Sir Michael O'Dwyer, former Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, was awarded a verdict against Sir Sankaran Nair, a former member of the Government of India. Damages were agreed on at £500 and costs.

Sir Michael O'Dwyer complained that defendant in his book, "Gandhi and Anarchy," accused him of resorting to methods of terrorism to obtain recruits for the Army during the war and of being responsible for alleged outrages at Amritsar and elsewhere in the Punjab.

Plaintiff's Innocence.

Plaintiff's counsel contended that Sir Michael O'Dwyer had opposed coercive measures of recruiting, that General Dyer's action in firing on a mob at Amritsar in April, 1919, was justified and that Sir Michael O'Dwyer was not responsible, as martial law had been proclaimed and the military had charge of the situation.

The judge, summing up, expressed the opinion that General Dyer had acted rightly and had been wrongly punished by the Secretary of State for India.

The dramatic character of this vindication was enhanced by the fact that it was announced in the course of the trial that General Dyer was dying.—Reuter.

The trial of this action began in the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice on April 30, before Mr. Justice Cardie and a special jury. Mr. Ernest Charles, K.C., and Sir Hugh Fraser appeared for the plaintiff; Sir Walter Schwabe, K.C., Mr. H. J. Wallington, and Mr. J. M. Parikh for the defendant.

Plaintiff's Distinguished Service

At the first day's hearing, Mr. Charles, in opining the case, said that the alleged libel was made much graver than it otherwise would have been by the position held by the defendant. Sir Michael O'Dwyer joined the Indian Civil Service in 1885. He had done valuable work in various provinces, and had devoted his whole life to India. In May, 1913, he was appointed Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab. During the war recruits were needed for the Army, and they were to be obtained from the Punjab as quietly as possible. The defendant, as a member of the Indian Government, was kept in touch with the exact course of proceedings in the province. From 1915 to 1919 the defendant was a member of the Government of India. For some years he had been a member of the Indian Judicial Bench.

The alleged libels were published in a book written by the defendant, entitled "Gandhi and Anarchy." In that book the defendant attacked Gandhi violently for his responsibility for the most ghastly atrocities but there were also attacks on Sir Michael O'Dwyer which went to the very heart of his governance of the province. The first passage complained of was:—"The recruitment of non-Mahomedans also went up and both were due to the terrorism of Sir Michael O'Dwyer, very useful in this instance." That charge of terrorism was a black lie. Another passage was: "Before the Reforms (a period during which the plaintiff held his office) it was in the power of the Lieutenant-Governor a single individual, to commit the strocities in the Punjab we know only too well." The defendant could not set his hand to the commission of a single atrocity by the plaintiff. "Above all it will be remembered that it was necessary to pass an Act of Indemnity to save the delinquents (the plaintiff and his subordinates) from proceedings in Civil and Criminal Courts." That had relation to the imposition of martial law which was proclaimed against the wish of the plaintiff, and the indemnity referred to acts under martial law which the Government, of which the defendant was a member, had established.

The King's Enemies.

The defendant also wrote: "I realize that the eulogium passed by the English Cabinet on Lord Chelmsford and Sir Michael O'Dwyer was an outrage on Indian public opinion." The jury would hear from Lord Chelmsford what the Indian and British Governments thought of that eulogium. It might have been an outrage on the opinion of seditious blackguards, but not on decent Indian opinion. Anything like praise of the Viceroy of India and of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab must have been bitter to those who were always ready to curse the King.

Mr. Charles, dealing with the question of recruitment, said that Sir Michael O'Dwyer had many times forbidden the purchase of recruits and the withholding from villagers of the privileges of irrigation if recruiting were poor. He went from village to village calling on the bravery and honour of the people to provide recruits. He directed that there was to be nothing like coercion. The recruiting policy was settled by the Indian Government, of which the defendant was a member.

The Amritsar Rising.

Referring to the Amritsar disturbances in 1919, counsel said that violent excesses were committed by the mob. White persons were murdered and burned and premises were sacked. The position was very grave, and the disturbances might have spread like a forest fire. Sir Michael O'Dwyer, therefore, called on the military. General Dyer arrived at Amritsar in due course, and the incident which gave rise afterwards to inquiry occurred—namely, the firing on the mob—two days later. That was done without the knowledge and direction of Sir Michael O'Dwyer, but on that incident was founded the justification for the statement that Sir Michael O'Dwyer had power alone to commit atrocities. It was impossible to call General Dyer as a witness, because he was ill and was not expected to live. It was also alleged that Sir Michael O'Dwyer was responsible for floggings, but those floggings were carried out by the military during martial law, and Sir Michael O'Dwyer persuaded the military to abandon them and other punitive measures. Even if all the punitive measures imposed by the military were entirely wrong. Sir Michael O'Dwyer was in no way responsible for them.

A Crisis to Be Stayed.

Sir Michael O'Dwyer gave evidence in support of this statement. He said that from 1913 to 1918 he practically did not have a single day's leave, and at the end of that period he was worn out. It was through him that the pay of bonus to recruits was increased and that land was set apart for the reward of Indians who served well during the war. Four hundred thousand combatants from the Punjab served in the war on different fronts. When he instructed the commander of the native police at Lahore not to hesitate to fire if necessary, because the mob had to be held up at all costs to save the lives of thousands of Europeans, prominent Indians had agreed with him that the situation was very grave, and that it was necessary to restrain the storm at the outset.

BRITAIN'S HOUSING BILL

Companion Measure to Prevent Profiteering

London, June 5.

In the House of Commons to-day, Mr. Wheatley, the Minister of Health, formally introduced a bill to prevent excessive charges for building materials and providing for the securing of an adequate supply of such materials.

The bill, which was read for the first time, is a companion measure to the Government's housing bill.—Reuter.

FRENCH POLITICAL CRISIS

M. Herriot's Refusal to Form a Ministry under M. Millerand

Paris, June 5.

President Millerand to-day asked M. Herriot to form a Cabinet.

M. Herriot declined the Premiership because M. Millerand refused to resign the Presidency.

Later.

President Millerand this afternoon summoned M. Herriot to the Elysée and offered him the Premiership. M. Herriot raised the question of the Presidency, but M. Millerand declared that he was determined that the Constitution should be respected, adding that he was resolved to remain President for the remainder of his seven-year term. M. Herriot thereupon declined to form a Ministry.

The President is continuing his consultations with other statesmen.

Later.

In consequence of the decision of M. Herriot, President Millerand is likely to seek a politician who would form a Cabinet. Thereafter he will present a Presidential message to Parliament, on which a vote will be taken.

Alternatively, the Left Parties will introduce a motion involving the Presidential issue. M. Millerand will doubtless abide by the result in either case.—Reuter.

JAPANESE RUSH BACK TO AMERICA

Shipping Unable to Cope with Crowds in Anticipation of Exclusion Law

Tokio, June 6.

The ordinary shipping services here are not sufficient for the transportation of the large numbers of Japanese who desire to return to America before the first of next month, when the new immigration Bill comes into force.

An arrangement has been made between the Government and the shipping companies for three additional steamers to proceed to America immediately, each capable of carrying 1,200.

The vessels are the Nippon Yusen Kaisha Mishima Maru, the Osaka Shosen Kaisha Hawaii Maru and the Toyo Kisen Kaisha Persia Maru. These ships will leave Yokohama on the 12th and 14th instant respectively.

The Government is assisting to the extent of Yen. 1,200,000.

Holiday-Makers.

Later.

It is explained that the majority of those who are proceeding to the United States are on furlough in Japan. According to the regulation they could stay in Japan for three years before returning to the States, while the others were granted passports before the immigration crisis occurred—such passports being valid for six months from the date of issue.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE IRISH BOUNDARY COMMISSION

South African Judge as Chairman

AEROPLANE CRASH IN TEXAS

Collision in Mid-Air

San Antonio, Tex., June 5.

Colliding in mid-air, two Army aeroplanes caught fire here to-day and fell 1300 feet. They buried a Mexican peasant boy, working in a cotton-field. One pilot was killed, but the other made a sensational descent by parachute.—Reuter's American Service.

FROM THE FOUR WINDS

MARGARINE AND MUSIC

How Some of the British Unemployed Live

FROM OUR TRADE UNION CORRESPONDENT

If the figures printed in our Liberal and Labour newspapers on the wages and the costs of living in Germany are correct it is difficult to understand how the workers there manage to exist. And if the stories in the other newspapers of the enormous wages of the Americans are also true it is evident that most of those lucky workers will soon be able to retire and live on the interest of their capital. To the British worker the accounts of conditions in other foreign countries are equally perplexing. Relative statistics on the subject are easy to get, and it is even more easy to generalize from them. What is lacking is a detailed account of just how the workman lives; what—as the American cinema captions put it—his "eats" are, and what he pays for housing accommodation, whether he is able to save any considerable proportion of his wages, and what share he has in the more civilized amenities of modern life.

The difference between the general and the particular in dealing with these problems was sharply brought home to us a few days ago through a visit we paid to the home of a skilled artisan who had been out of work for nearly three years. He was one of the million and a half unemployed who are customarily visualised as being the most unhappy section of our populace. He is middle-aged, married, and has two children at school; and his mother, an old woman over 70, lives with him. On the surface one would think that here was a case of particular hardship, for there are children at school, the unemployment has been prolonged, and the wife has no trade.

How It Is Done.

Their weekly income consists of 15s Unemployment Insurance Grant for the man, and a dependants allowance of 5s for the wife and a shilling each for the children. The grandmother was drawing the Old Age Pension of 10s per week. The man's trade union paid him 10s per week from a fund maintained by a special levy on his fellow craftsmen in work. Most of the skilled trade unions pay a grant of this kind. This made the joint income of the family 42s per week. Their house was a six-roomed one in a working class suburb and the rent was 11s 2d per week. They sublet one room for 6s 6d, which made their net rent 4s 8d.

His wife was very discursive on the standard of living possible with this income. From her we gathered that breakfast consisted of tea, and toasted bread and margarine. The midday meal consisted of meat and two vegetables followed by boiled rice. Tea was the same as breakfast with the occasional addition of herrings or kippers when they were cheap, and for supper there was bread and margarine and cocoa. Gas for lighting and cooking cost 1s. 3d per week, and coal 3s. The housewife's greatest problem was clothes and boots. Her house was clean and neat, but it was evident that all the curtains, tablecloths, and clothes of the family were threadbare and badly worn. She said it was only possible to spare 3s per week for clothes and boots, and that only paid for leather and materials for mending.

Vested Interests.

It should be noted that although the whole of this family's income consisted of grants, none of them were strictly charitable grants or Poor Law Relief. They were a part of what might now be called the vested interests of a British workman. And in addition to these direct payments there were other benefits. Ten minutes walk from his house there are municipal baths and wash houses carried on at great loss by the corporation. In these his wife for a few coppers could have the use of every modern power-driven laundry device for doing her week's washing in a few hours and drying and mangling it. This abolishes the dirt and discomfort of the old washing day in the home. And for 2d. it is possible to get the use of a sumptuously appointed private bathroom with unlimited soap and hot water in the same building. Nearer still there is a fine Free Library and reading rooms. From these he can obtain the latest and best novels and technical works a few days after publication. By filling in a form any special book will be bought for him to read, subject to the approval of the librarian, which is usually freely given. The living room of this unemployed man's house contained a shelf exclusively filled with new books lent from this library. Other municipal amenities at his disposal gratis were half a dozen art galleries, several beautiful parks and flower gardens, and many courses of free lectures by men of world famous reputation.

His son and daughter having shown an intelligent interest in the subjects taught in the early standards of the elementary school had been drafted into a secondary school. In this the teaching was far superior to that at a good private school. The curriculum included mathematics, French, chemistry, and physics, and the most modern laboratories and the best equipped workshops were at the service of the scholars. All books and apparatus were supplied free of charge.

State-Provided Luxuries.

All these luxuries were provided at great expense by the State or the municipality. But the crowning luxury was being supplied by private enterprise. It was "broadcast.' This unemployed man had built for a few coppers a wireless crystal receiving set, and for 10s a pair of second-hand phones. It had an inside aerial impossible of detection and he had no licence. It was only two miles from a broadcasting station and with it he was receiving a seven-hour daily programme consisting of the latest news, the best vocal and instrumental music, and the most interesting lectures and plays.

He said that he got up about 8.30, and after breakfast went to the trade union "out-of-work room" to 'sign on' and see if there were any jobs in the papers. Twice a week he had also to go to the Labour Exchange and make a formal application for work at the vacancy counter. There never was any work to be had there, he said, but it was necessary to do this to fulfil the Uuemployment Committee's demand that he should prove he was looking for work. His trade union forbade its members to go round the workshops seeking work as it had a tendency to bring wages down. Applications for men had to be sent to the union offices who then supplied the employer with a list of the men out of work.

After signing on at the out-of-work room he usually went on to the allotment garden he rented from the municipality at a nominal rent and did a few hours' work. After dinner he did any boot mending or other casual job that needed doing in the home and then spent the rest of the day reading or 'listening in" on his wireless set.

There are tens of thousands of unemployed in the same position as this man and his family. The two circumstances that lift them above the destitute remainder are membership of a good trade union that has not frittered its reserves away in hopeless disputes, and the luck of being a householder. When all the expensive indirect benefits are added to the direct cash payments which the State and the municipality give these members of the community, the cost of providing them with food and amusement must be enormous. And yet it is almost impossible to put a finger on any specific benefit and say that it should be abolished or reduced, and it would be difficult to argue that some of them should not be increased.

This man is a skilled workman getting on in years and willing to work to the utmost of his capacity. There is a slump in his trade and every time there has been a vacancy the employer or foreman has chosen a younger and more active man. For all the signs there are at present of improvement there seems no reason why he should not remain an unwilling parasite on the community for another three years. And by that time he will no doubt be a complete man-about-town, philosophically resigned to poor living and high thinking and indisposed to exchange bread and margarine and leisure, for eggs and bacon and work. Twenty years ago there would have been a small chance of such a man finding a semi-skilled or unskilled occupation without any difficulties. It would be almost impossible now because every kind of labour is organized and the rules of every trade union contain a clause forbidding its members to join another society. The only occupation open to him is door-to-door canvassing for which the chief asset is the ability to excite pity.

Something Radically Wrong.

Yet there is something radically wrong in a state of things that enables a man to have at his command innumerable luxuries without doing anything to earn them. A Labour Government is likely to increase these amenities by an increase in the allowances. No Government would dare to reduce them. Wholehearted individualists like Austin Hopkinson, M.P., demand the abolition of all these devices to ameliorate unemployment. If this were done, they say, the workers would compete more desperately for work; wages would come down; production would go up; and very soon we should win back our old place on the world's markets. It is a false assumption. The menaced workers would be more likely to combine and lend a more attentive ear to the agitators who tell them that the only solution of their miseries lies in the abolition of the capitalist system.

That the out-of-works should be employed on "works of National importance" has long been a plank in the Labour programme. It is, however, doubtful if it will ever be a plank they will walk on. To employ inefficient factory-bred workers on out-of-door work at less than the ordinary navvy's wages would bring official Labour into disrepute with trade unionists, and to pay such labour the full rate would provoke opposition from anti-waste enthusiasts. The trade depression has been so prolonged that foremen and employers have now weeded the older and less fit workmen out of their factories and the bulk of the present unemployed are not of the type for heavy out-door work. Labour's policy will be an increase of the "dole," and the abolition of the gap between payments. This will increase unemployment and the burden on those who remain in work. The solution of the problem seems as far off as ever.

COUNTESS FLIES TO COURT

London to Perth to Answer a Charge

After flying from London in a De Havilland aeroplane at an average speed of 100 miles an hour, the Earl and Countess of Kinnoull, who were recently married, landed near Balhousie Castle, Perth, at 9.30 the next morning.

The trip was made in order that the Countess might personally answer a charge in the Perth Sheriff's Court of exceeding the ten-mile limit while motoring at Scone on her first visit to Perth on April 6.

Clad in flying wraps, the Countess pleaded guilty.

She explained that she was in a hurry at the time of the offence. The Sheriff imposed a 50s. fine.

Interviewed afterwards, the Countess laughingly remarked that she was caught speeding while on her homecoming to her husband's family seat, Balhousie Castle.

The Earl said they left Hendon the previous morning at 10 o'clock, and would have reached Perth the same day, but for rough weather. Much rain, wind and fog was experienced at Lincoln. They could scarcely see 100 yards ahead.

After lunch at Hull the journey was resumed, but bad fog developing, Captain Barnard, the pilot, decided, when nearing Scotland, to return to Middlesbrough, and landed there early in the afternoon.

In order that the Countess might be in time for the Court the flight was resumed at 7.30 this morning On the way the aeroplane flew beneath the famous Forth Bridge, which the Countess said was "a jolly fine little stunt."

OUR CANADIAN LETTER

Beachcombers from the Orient Stowing Away to Canada: Cossacks also Trying to Enter

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Vancouver, B.C., May 15.

Approaching a total of 400 passengers, an unusually large list for this time of the year, sailed to-day aboard the Empress of Australia for the Orient. In the saloon were Mrs. Helen and Miss Violet Judah, for Shanghai. Also bound there was, among many others, Mr. W. S. King, a prominent London business man, as well as M. C. S. Baines, of Paris, who is also travelling on business. The Rev. John McKim and his bride, formerly Mrs. E. P. Baird of Chicago, had Tokio as their destination. Mr. R. White, O.B.E., and Mrs. White were also among the saloon passengers.

The Australia brought here a week ago, among other missionaries, the Rev. Jonathan Goforth, D.D., the veteran Presbyterian missionary of Honan. Clericals and others closely interested in Oriental missions met him and he proceeded to Toronto where he met his sons. He will spend a year in Canada on furlough and hopes to spend a few days amid the mountains and woods of British Columbia on his return.

Once in five years Capt. Joseph Barrett, who commands a steamer on the Yangtze river, gets a holiday, and he spends that holiday in Vancouver. He will stay until March of next year. "I like the British Columbia people," he said in an interview. "They are so friendly and give one such a good time."

British Sailor Stowaways.

Four stowaways were discovered among the 930 passengers on the Empress of Australia. When she arrived last week officers reported that they were found shortly after the liner had left the Orient. They were handed over to the immigration authorities here. One was a Chinese, who was marked down for deportation when the ship sailed. Three were British sailors who were homeward bound in search of berths. They were given an opportunity to sign on with some foreign-bound ship, the alternative being a trip back to their port of embarkation to be turned loose again.

German Detained.

A German who came in with the vessel, and who was well supplied with money, arrived with New Jersey, U.S.A., as his destination. He proposes to enter the export and import business there. He was refused admission into the United States because the German quota was exhausted. He then had to take steps to get permission to stay in Canada until the new U. S. quota comes in on July 1, when he would take his chance of passing into the land of promise.

The Australia came in with her holds bulging with silk, this cargo being valued at $7,000,000. It was one of the heaviest silk cargoes arriving this year.

Captain Married.

Staff Capt. A. J. Holland, R.N.R., of the Empress of Australia, has been enjoying shore leave in Hongkong. He was married the day after the big liner left that port on her last trip. Miss Alice Green, of London, England, was his bride.

Fiji Chiefs Arrive.

Among the most interesting of recent trans-Pacific passengers arriving here were two Fiji chiefs who were on their way to the British Empire Exhibition at Wembley. One was Ratu P. Veili, who led the squadron of Fiji soldiers to London for the coronation of King Edward in 1902, the other Ratu J. Rebeci, O.B.E., who was decorated for the great assistance he give the British Government during the war. The two chiefs were given a warm welcome at the dock by Canadians, as they represented another unit in the great British Empire. Chief Veili created an unusual amount of interest from the fact that he stepped down the gangway attired in regulation clothes, but with a grey bathrobe trimmed with dark red collar and cuffs doing the service of an overcoat.

To Confer with the King.

A Chinese who has been commanded to attend upon his Majesty at Buckingham Palace, Kom Tong-ho a wealthy Chinese of Hongkong, was in the city a few days ago. Decorated in 1921 with the order of the Cross of St. John and Jerusalem for the excellent service he rendered to Britain during the war, Kong Tom-ho, like his brother Sir Robert Ho Tung, is remembered here for his fine war work and as a keen admirer of the British government of Hongkong, as well as for his generosity in giving money and time to Chinese hospitals and Red Cross work. Although he is not a Catholic he stated here that he would visit the Pope before returning to China.

Cossacks Looking to Canada.

Stranded at Manila, P.I., to which place they journeyed from Shanghai to give exhibitions in horsemanship, a troop of 12 Cossacks are endeavouring to get into Canada. A Russian resident here has received a letter from the Cossacks informing him that they had heard that Canada is a cattle country and that they might bolster up their fast dwindling finances by a rough-riding show. In their letter the 12 Cossacks admit that they are the pick of the old Imperial Russian Army's hard-riding Cossacks from the Don, and say they would like to try their luck as hard-riders on cattle ranges in Canada. There are, however, one or two little difficulties in the way. The second one is that they do not know how the immigration laws affect them, but that is considered immaterial alongside the first one, which is that they owe a board bill for themselves and their horses and they have'nt got the steamer fare to get here. Hence the letter.

SINGER MAKES AN ART "FIND"

Believes She Possesses Two Priceless Rembrandts

While international experts scour the world for Old Masters, it sometimes happens that the early amateur makes the find.

Sonia Herma, the soprano, who has been appearing at Wigmore Hall and Queen's Hall, London, believes that she is the owner of at least one original Rembrandt. She described how she came to acquire it to an "Evening Standard" reporter.

"I am a Circassian," said Sonia Herma, "and in artistic matters I am but an amateur. One day I was walking through a famous private gallery in Moscow, before the war. 'That is a Rembrandt,' I said to my host. 'Will you sell it?' The sale was duly completed, and part of the purchase price was completed, and part of the purchase price was made up in land. The sale included another picture which is certainly at least of the school of Rembrandt.

Saved from the Revolution.

"I put away these pictures, and eventually took them to Paris before the Russian Revolution. I never bothered about their value, until an expert told me 'You are a richer woman than you know.'

"He assured me that I possessed Rembrandt's lost portrait, painted by him two years before his death.

If so, it's value is incredible. On this expert's advice, I sent my two treasures over to the United States. Several American experts believe these pictures are Rembrandts, but before they buy, they wish to have them examined by Dr. Bodé, of Berlin, the great authority on such matters. Dr. Bodé is 75, and is at present ill. He cannot make the journey to America, but offers to send his assistant. Reply has come from America that it must be Dr. Bodé or no one.

"Not to be defeated, I am going to America next October on a two months' singing tour. If necessary, I am prepared to carry these two masterpieces to Berlin, get them examined by Dr. Bodé, and then take them back to America.

"I don't believe I shall be disappointed in Dr. Bodé's verdict. It is, however, tantalising to have such wealth just outside your reach for the moment."

OUR SCOTTISH LETTER

There Are Bad Scots: A Concession from North o' the Tweed

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT .

Edinburgh, Apr. 23.

The Scottish Trade Union Congress at Ayr devoted some attention to that hardy annual—nationalization of banking. The usual vague statements that the existing order was prejudicial to democratic government, the interests of industry, and the economic welfare of the whole body of the people, were again complacently set forth, but, beyond the demand for another Royal Commission to inquire into the existing system, and another Blue-Book, no constructive policy would seem to have emerged. The advocates of banking nationalization seldom venture beyond generalities.

They fail to realize the basic fact that London owes its premier position in the world—if not entirely, at any rate to a very large extent—to the unquestioned stability of its great banking institutions, and that successive Governments have been, and still are, to a very large extent guided by the financial experts who conduct their operations. A legislative control of banking would result only in irksome restrictions deterrent to public interests. Critics of the existing system would appear to have been asleep during the war period, or at any rate sadly out of touch with current events. It was mainly due to the banks of the United Kingdom, who were, on account of their liquid position, able to respond so loyally to the War Loans, that successive issues were so satisfactorily taken up. No country in the world can show a banking mechanism of a finer grade; and a system which coped so successfully with the unparalleled exigencies of the decade since 1914 is not likely to be undervalued by responsible statesmen. The banks are in every case able and willing to foster industrial enterprise provided they are given satisfactory cover, and their rates are extremely moderate, considering the risks which are incidental to all human ventures. It is a common fallacy to confuse our great joint-stock institutions with "capitalists." The only money-lending capitalist nowadays is the man who runs a moneylending business on his own account. A "banker," like a "professor," is a somewhat elastic term. The great banks, however, which are owned by tens of thousands of shareholders all over the kingdom, are, so far from being inimical to the democratic ideal, the very embodiment of a democracy, and that one of the best, because their success is entirely bound up with goodwill of the constituencies among whom they do business, and their profits contingent upon the enterprise which they show.

The Scot in Byron.

The bad blood which permitted Byron when a youth to write to his mother from abroad, "I know you are a vixen," and which on the very threshold of life caused him to blaspheme his native land and the friends of his youth, was Scottish blood. Scottish blood when it [illegible] and [illegible] which [illegible] ask [illegible] and [illegible] a [illegible] a grandfather, and with the aid of the Gordons of Gight behind him. These early slanderings of the Albanian highlands, his association with wild elegance and the riff-raff of the Morea, are perhaps accounted for by the old Gight feeling in his blood. All Harrow's screams could not pierce him into a decent, settled Englishman. Others accept this view of heredity and maximize Byron's Scottish strain of feeling. He certainly shows some pride in Caledonia, but here and there we find a confession like this in the 10th canto of "Don Juan."—

> And though, as you remark, an Irish fit
> Of wrath and raptre, when juvenile and early,
> I raved at Scots to show my wrath and wit,
> Which must be owned was sensitive and early,
> Yet [illegible] such sallies to permit.
> They [illegible] fresh and early,
> I [illegible] the Scotchman in my blood
> And [illegible] land of "canny and of [illegible]

Lord Byron, [illegible] that detracted quality in Byron's character [illegible] Scots Calvinism which is being blamed to-day for the religious excesses of the melancholy Hebrides. There may be little in this, but it is noteworthy that no English poet since Milton has drawn so copiously on the Bible for the matter of his poetry. There were, however, causes of that temperamental derangement nearer to hand.

On of the things which always strike readers of Byron is the poet's sound and extensive knowledge of the Bible. It is said, and no doubt with truth, that this originated in the teaching of his Scots nurse at Aberdeen, May Gray, and was later carried on at the Grammar School of Aberdeen.

James Welsh, Miner-poet.

Mr. James Welsh, Labour M.P. for Coatbridge, and known as the Scottish miners' poet, has just published his second novel. It is called "The Morelocks," and deals with the lives of the people with whom he was brought up, in his native Lanarkshire. Mr. Welsh's previous novel, "The Underworld," which had a very good reception, has already been translated for circulation in Holland and Scandinavia. He has just completed a further arrangement for its translation into German. Mr. Welsh worked in the mines until about four years ago. He has been writing poetry and prose since 13 years of age. "I think," he said in the course of an interview, "I was born with a rhyme on my tongue. I find a great deal of interest now in looking back over the old things I wrote long ago. Some time ago I began to burn them, but my mother stopped that, and now she treasures them." Mr. Welsh had been turning over in his mind for some time the idea of producing another volume of poetry. "My difficulty is in finding time. I have sufficient material for a volume of songs and poems, and when I do compile it I have no doubt that my Parliamentary experience will provide some inspiration, and that the House of Commons will creep into it in some way." Discussing his new book, Mr. Welsh said that he had been particular to avoid anything in the way of conscious propaganda. "I feel that the propaganda novel misses its aim, I have read a number of such novels, and I always find that they tire people. There may be propaganda in a way in my book, but the volume cannot be said to be propagandist."

E. H. Liddell.

Mr. E. H. Liddell, of Edinburgh University, the famous sprinter and Rugby footballer, whose family is well-known in the Far East, is to take part in a series of evangelistic meetings to be held in Glasgow in September. At present he is on a visit to the United States with the Cambridge University team of track athletes.

Unconscious Humour.

It is good to see the tracks being laid for a joke or a sample of humour worthy of the name, but the diffused humour is better still. If it has a superior it is to be found in the entirely unconscious exercise of the spirit of jumbledom. Here, for instance, I have before me the results of an egg-laying competition sent from a certain quarter with the compliments of the "Association for Peace with Honour." Can you improve on that sample?

"Goff" or "Golf."

Quite an interesting dissension has been taking place in Scotland as to the proper pronunciation of the name of our premier Scottish game, and the most authoritative opinions are in favour of "goff," or, even more Scottish, "gowf." One of our oldest and best known golfers says—"I first tried to play that fascinating but elusive game at St. Andrews, in the 'sixties, where I knew all the leading professionals, including Old and Young Tom Morris, Jamie Anderson, Bobby Kirk, Tom Kidd, etc., and venture to say that not one of them ever pronounced it otherwise than 'goff.' It was the same with the crack amateurs of the day, such as Maitland Dougall, Gilbert Mitchell Innes, Sir Robert Hay, Robert Clark, Tom Hodge, Colonel Boothby, and others. Golf was 'goff' to them, whatever it might be to English visitors. In the 'seventies I used to play not infrequently at Musselburgh, on the famous old nine-hole course, where the proper pronunciation was in vogue among both amateurs and professionals. Later on I joined the Prestwick Golf Club, where again I found that 'goff' was the word used by everyone who knew anything about the game, from old Charlie Hunter downwards; and I am glad to think that it still obtains there. Those who frequent the numerous golf courses (I can't call them links) that have sprung up like mushrooms in recent years may play g-o-l-f, and good goff at that, but they might with advantage follow the old Scots usage and pronounce the word according to the manner that prevails at the three famous centres mentioned above—a manner that has the sanction of Jamieson and of the Oxford English Dictionary."

The Call of Sport.

With Eastertide we are in the midst of the transition stage from winter's work and winter games to holiday time and summer sports. There is every reason to suppose that the increasing popularity of games like golf and tennis will be maintained. Cricket is not played in Scotland to such an extent as it might be. More frequent introduction of teams from across the Border might prove a good missionary enterprise in stimulating interest in the game. In the realm of golf we are being prepared for the annual invasion from America in quest of the honours. Nowadays we to take the invasion seriously. But if the season is to continue the run of almost phenomonally low scores put up in the big golfing events which have already taken place, we may hope that our home competitors will secure a full share of the records.

Scottish Cup Final.

A new name falls to be inscribed on the Scottish Cup; the Airdrieonians defeated the Hibernians in the final of the national competition at Ibrox, Glasgow. As a rule these finals are disappointing, and the one just decided was no exception. There were long spells of listless play, and before the interval it was a general impression that the Airdrieonians, then leading by two goals to nothing, had settled the issue. As a matter of fact, they did that two minutes from the start, when, following a brisk attack, against which the Hibernian defenders made a poor show, they forced a corner, from which a goal was headed by Russell. That blow was the most telling in the game, one from which the Hibernians never recovered. True they fought out the issue well in midfield, and kept the ball for long spells in Airdrieonian ground, but in their progress to the final they had not shown themselves to be a ready scoring side, and this was again manifest. Under the slashing defence put up by the Airdrieonians they were never allowed to settle down. The Airdrieonians, on the other hand, were smarter in their raiding, and perhaps lucky in finding the Easter Road club's defence less strong than usual; at any rate they made them pay for their mistakes, and it was really these that decided the game. There was little brilliant work seen. Airdrie thus close a most successful season, being also runners-up to Rangers in the League.

Closing Stages of the League.

The League would be a very dead affair were it not for the dramatic struggle going on to escape relegation. The most interesting event of the week was Queen's Park victory over Falkirk. The amateurs are by far the most popular club in Scotland—at least they have the greatest number of well-wishers—and there were many happy hearts last week end over their success, as it saved them for relegation to the Second Division. Clydebank's defeat of Rangers, however, was by far the most sensational event, although it did prevent them going down in later matches and thus losing their position in the First League. They defeated the Champions, it may be said, by punch, not polish. Clyde is the other club relegated. The bottom of the table reads thus—Queen's Park and Kilmarnock have each 30 points with a game still to play; Third Lanark have finished their card with 30 points; and the relegated clubs are Clyde with 29 and Clydebank with 25.

THE BUNGALOW MURDER

Discovery in a Lonely House: Details Suggest Case for Sherlock Holmes

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT

London, May 8.

Politics have this week been quite pushed into the background by what is known as the "Bungalow Crime." It certainly is a remarkable tragedy even in these days when crime is being carried to such a high measure of perfection.

Last Friday evening a man went to the cloakroom at Waterloo Station and presented a ticket for a Gladstone bag which had been deposited there about a fortnight before. As he was about to carry away the bag two detectives spoke to him and requested him to accompany them to the Kennington Road police station where the bag was opened. It was then found that its contents were two long and broad pieces of silk, an article of woman's underclothing, a small piece of flesh, some powder, said to be lime, and a large knife something like a bread knife. The silk and underclothing were bloodstained. Apparently someone in the station cloakroom had noticed what he thought were bloodstains on the bag and had communicated his suspicions to the Scotland Yard authorities, who decided to place detectives on watch until the article was claimed. Hence the detention of the man.

Sinister Associations.

The police were obviously face to face with a very grave crime, but the result of their inquiries speedily drew them to a bungalow known as the Officer's House, Langley Bungalows, Pevensey Bay, one of a row of whitewashed houses formerly occupied by the coastguard. It was, by the way, within a short distance of this house that nearly three years ago the dead body of Irene Munro, a young London typist, was found, and in connexion with whose murder two men named Gray and Field were executed. The officers searched the house and discovered many traces of a gruesome crime, in fact, portions of a body which showed that the victim must have been a tall well-made woman, although there was no head, and for this the police are now digging in the garden. One doubts, however, if the head will ever be discovered because, clearly, the criminal has been making away with bits of the body and he had more than a fortnight to do it in. The victim has, however, been identified as a Miss Emily Beilby Kaye, who seems to have been a North-country girl and to have started life in Manchester, where she was employed as secretary to Messrs. Beith, Stevenson & Co., merchant shippers, and she left Manchester in October, 1922, to take up a similar position in London. During the 18 months before her departure from Manchester, Miss Kaye was in apartments in Oswald Road, Chorlton, and her landlady stated yesterday that it was impossible to imagine a nicer girl to have living in a house. She was reserved, homely, athletic, and fond of novel reading; she had no male friends. Her favourite game was lawn tennis, but she was also fond of golf and used to go off early on Sunday mornings to play with friends in the country. Miss Kaye was for five years a member of Edgelane Lawn Tennis Club, and she was one of the first six players in a strong ladies' team connected with that club. Shortly before Easter one of the members of the club received a letter from Miss Kaye saying she was going to be married to a boy she had only known six months, and that they were going out to Africa in three weeks' time. Her Manchester friends subscribed for a wedding present, and despatched it three weeks ago, but to their surprise they received no acknowledgment. What happened to her after that is not known, though she undoubtedly stayed at Eastbourne, since her clothing has been recognized by the hotel girl clerk. There seems to be no doubt whatever, from a letter she wrote to her friends, that she did intend to marry and go to South Africa.

The Accused Man.

The detained man is named Patrick Mahon who has for the past 12 months lived with his wife and nine-years-old son in rooms in Pagoda Avenue, Richmond, Surrey. Mrs. Mahon is still living in rooms in Pagoda Avenue. Her daughter, aged 12, is at Kew Hill School for Girls. Both he and his wife are connected with a soda-water company at Sunbury-on-Thames. He is a prominent figure in Richmond bowling circles, and is a member of the Mid-Surrey Bowling Club. He played with other members only last Thursday and seemed then in his usual good spirits. A member of the club said last night: "He was an exceedingly charming and popular man. I recently visited him, and he and his wife seemed very happy. He was organizing secretary of a very successful open bowling tournament at Richmond last summer and carried out the arrangements most satisfactorily. He was going to be selected for another tournament this summer." The accused man up to the present has denied the murder, though he has made a statement to the police the purport of which is not known. It would, however, appear that he will have considerable difficulty in exculpating himself. The authorities have just opened the inquest which took place in the bungalow itself, though it seems to me this must have been rather a dramatic addition of mental torture to the accused man, for whom crowds of people waited outside and gave him such a hostile reception that the police had great difficulty in clearing the way to a waiting car. It was, however, curious that as they drove away one woman shouted "Poor chap; leave him alone." Another screamed "Be English; be fair."

WOMEN HYPNOTISED BY A STATUE

Priest with a Mona Lisa Smile: British Museum Image

A Chinese priest in the Buddhist room has become the centre of interest at the British Museum. He hypnotises all who behold him. Artists by the score set their easels at his feet and attempt in vain to reproduce his elusive Mona Lisa smile. The Queen, who visited the Museum before she left Buckingham Palace for Windsor recently, was as interested in him as any of her subjects.

The Lohan is a porcelain image, nearly four feet high, and is one of the masterpieces of the T'ang period, 618-906 A.D. It is said that his purchase price was in the neighbourhood of £5,000. The Lohan is seated, Buddhist fashion, on a raised pedestal, with crossed legs, and exquisite hands tranquilly folded on his lap.

Around him a dead black cloth screen concentrates all the light in the gallery on his face. He wears a simple but beautiful robe of soft green, tied round the waist with a thin yellow sash, over which is an outer robe of brownish yellow crossed by white bands. These are narrowly edged with green and adorned with designs of white plum blossom on a yellow ground.

Apostle of Buddha.

The Lohan is one of the apostles of Buddha, and his full style and title is Sohinda Sonja, in Chinese Su-pin-t'o. He was found in a secret mountain sanctuary, in wild, lonely and almost inaccessible country.

"Visitors who come here," said his guardian to a "Daily Express" representative recently, "say he is the most wonderful thing they have even seen. Many compare him to the Venus of Milo for the perfection of his modelling, and Mona Lisa for the magnetism of his expression.

"He has a remarkable effect on the imagination of women. Some turn away almost in fear from his slanting, deepset eyes;; others cannot get away from their spell. His enormous ears always arouse their curiosity. The lobes were probably dragged down to their unusual size by weights attached to them for the purpose.

"Although I have been in China myself, I never get tired of sitting here all day watching other people watch him, and sometimes even I can imagine that his expression changes as he notes his extraordinary effect on them."

THE GLOBE TROTTER

Dumm & Dummer File More Detailed Report of Trip Through Europe

FROM THE "NEW YORK SUN."

LONDON: London is a fog with a population of eight million people and four million sandy mustaches. It is the home of 3,876 restaurants in which Dickens once ate. It would be a nice city if they'd ice their ale and change their policemen's hats.

The principal ruins are Lloyd George, Papyrus, Horatio Bottomley and practically all the first class hotels. The historic buildings are Buckingham Palace, which is a cross between a 16th century gaol and a 19th century apartment house; Westminster Abbey, where the sexton's orders have long been "kings or better to open," and the Tower of London, where the head bobbing craze and the "Positively No Waiting" sign originated.

PARIS: This is a city of beautiful women, even if you don't see 'em, and of terrible looking taxi drivers, even if you do. It is famous for its light wines and dark cathedrals. It has memorials to Napoleon in front of every cafe, and 57 victory arches denoting the spots where Cook tourists won battles with French hackmen. It is the home of the Latin Quarter, which is now worth only about eight cents at the rate of exchange. This quarter is famous for its Smock Set. It has 89 museums, and each one is full of the hat and coat worn by Napoleon at the Battle of Waterloo, and of the horse that carried him through his campaigns. This proved to us that Nap went into battle riding 18 horses abreast and met final defeat through wearing too many clothes. We visited Notre Dame Cathedral, which was full of American tourists, who were hurrying through it on a trot for fear they wouldn't get out in time for the Folies Bergere.

VERSAILLES: This is the geranium growers' delight and the hedge and tree clippers' despair. It is the only place in the world having more mirrors than the Terminal barber shops. Here is located the palace in which Napoleon and Josephine fought. There is a museum in the back yard (to the right of the pear tree), containing the gold embroidered hack out of which Madame DuBarry once fell; the mahogany desk Napoleon Bonaparte slept on, the oil stove he threw at the Empress and the low cut imperial taxi in which Marie Antoinette, returning from the ball with Louis the Five-Eighths, made her famous remark, "It couldn't have been pre-war stuff or we wouldn't feel this way."

GENEVA: We couldn't get in here as all the hotels were full of delegates to the League of Nations, which was rehearing a new summer revue. All the hotel proprietors were running around hanging up "Watch your coat and hat" signs as the delegates arrived, and stamping "Stolen from the Hotel Blank" on all the pillow cases and quilts.

VENICE: This is an amusement resort flooded by the local fire department and never pumped out. It is a tough spot for automobile and bicycle salesmen. Venice is the site of St. Mark's Square, where all the hick tourists get their pictures taken feeding the pigeons. We fed the birds some tan shoe buttons as a substitute for yellow corn and had our pictures snapped for home consumption. Its most curious building is an American bar, where a bartender with red whiskers serves a pink drink with sliced bananas in it as a Manhattan cocktail.

FLORENCE: This is the town in which the old painters gave a guarantee of five masterpieces to the gallon. It was the home of the famous Medici family. (There was Dan Medici, Ike Medici, Webster Medici and the Medici girls—Irene, Sophia and Kittie).

ROME: The city of fallen arches and one church to a person. We saw the Coliseum, which was built by the Flavius Fuller Construction Company on a cost-plus basis 1,800 years ago. It was guaranteed not to bend or break and never has done so. The guides show you animal dens and cells of early Christians for a nickel. For a dime they will show you an early Christian. 15 cents will get you a lion.

NAPLES: Vesuvius defying the "No Smoking" signs.

POMPEII: The only city in Europe that is all it was cracked up to be. Downtown Jersey City.

MOST BRILLIANT OF ALL SEASONS

London as World Centre of Society and Sport: Two Royal Visits

"In the number and splendour of its entertainments," said an official of the London Association, "this season will surpass any that London has known.

"I do not suppose we have ever before had so many visitors from the Dominions and Dependencies, or so many brilliant official functions arranged in their honour.

"We have the Prince in town again, Princess Mary at Chesterfied House, the Duke and Duchess of York at the White Lodge, Lady Maud Carnegie at No. 5, Norfolk-street, and Lady Louis Mountbatten at Brook House.

"Private entertainments will be more lavish than ever, and the 81 dances already arranged by no means exhaust the list.

"May 5 sees the opening of the Royal Academy and the Covent Garden season of international Grand Opera.

Two Royal Visits.

"On May 12 the King and Queen of Roumania arrive. A State banquet will be given at Buckingham Palace. The Lord Mayor entertains their Majesties at lunch at the Guildhall on May 13.

"The first evening Court will be held at Buckingham Palace on May 20, and the second on May 21.

"On the 25th the King and Queen of Italy will be the guests of the King and Queen at Buckingham Palace. The State Ball at Buckingham Palace on May 28, when 2000 guests will be present, has been arranged in honour of the visiting monarch.

Royal Movements.

"The King and Queen will be present at the Derby on June 4, at the Oaks on June 5, and at a Garden Party at White Lodge on the 14th. They will have a house party at Windsor Castle for Ascot week, returning in time to hold their third and fourth evening Courts on June 26 and 27.

"Their Majesties will give a Garden Party at Windsor that month in honour of visitors from Overseas, for whom also a State Ball will be given at the Guildhall on June 30. Hampton Court will present a brilliant scene when the Colonial Office acts as host to our Overseas visitors.

"The biggest event of the season will be the Garden Party at Buckingham Palace, to which 6000 guests will be invited. After the fourth Court the King and Queen will visit Goodwood, staying with the Duke of Richmond and Gordon at Goodwood House, and the first week in August will see them at Cowes.

Sport and Festivals.

"Sporting and musical festivals will be very numerous. On May 24, Empire Day, the largest band ever seen, with over 1000 performers, will play at Wembley Stadium. On June 12-14 there will be the Richmond Horse Show, and on June 20 the International Horse Show.

The All-England Lawn Tennis championships take place from June 23 to July 1 at Wimbledon.

England plays South Africa at Lord's on June 28. From July 2 to 4 there is Henley Regatta, on July 7 Oxford v. Cambridge, and on July 11 Tton v. Harrow. Both are at Lord's.

Festival of the Shops.

"One great attraction for all our visitors, whom we estimate at from 12 to 15 millions, will be the London shops.

"I doubt if our shops have ever made such a display of their treasures, as they are making now."

OUR PARIS LETTER

General Election Preparations: Complications of Voting Dear to the Gaul

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT

Paris, April 18.

The electoral campaign being now in full swing, the official notice-boards outside the town halls and other public buildings are blossoming out into posters of brilliant hues. Just as one man's necessity is another man's opportunity, so does the meritorious printer benefit by the present outpourings of political souls. Printing used to be an even bigger item when candidates stood "on their own," but the scrutin de liste system introduced in 1919 has led to a good deal of splitting expenses, and the cost of contesting a seat remains quite reasonable. Before the war a candidate usually had to disburse about Frs. 12,500 or £500, in Paris, and rather more in provincial constituencies where more travelling had to be done. In 1919 the economy resulting from the new system partly counteracted the general increase in the cost of living, and Frs. 18,000 was an average election bill. This year it will be about the same, thanks chiefly to a more complete sharing of expenses among all the candidates on the same list.

Complicated Voting.

One of the most baffling features, from an English point of view, of a French general election is the complicated system of ascertaining the results. In Great Britain the candidate who polls most votes is elected without any question, and if there is a second or third seat, it is allotted in the same way. This is clear, definite and easy to understand. During nearly all the life of the Third Republic, France has had a similar system, the only real difference being that, to be elected at the first ballot, a candidate must have an absolute majority of all the votes polled. Should this condition not be fulfilled, the election had to be repeated a fortnight later, and then the candidate with the biggest poll secured the seat. These second ballots, which took place in a great many constituencies, came to be regarded as a nuisance. The free and independent electors, and possibly their wives as well, thought that one Sunday was quite enough to spoil by having to vote. Earnest politicians also became possessed by the notion that the then exising system was too favourable to the money candidate and particularly to the large employer of labour. They argued that persons were of much less importance than principles, and that every man qualified to represent his fellow citizens in Parliament should have an equal chance.

An Arithmetical Problem.

The result is the present system—a new and revised edition of the scrutin de liste formerly prevailing. Candidates do not stand independently but in sections, or listes, of men with more or less the same political views. After the votes are counted, an arithmetical process has to be carried out and a thing called the "electoral quotient" generally comes into play. It is obtained by dividing the total votes polled by the number of seats. Thus, if 50,000 votes have been cast in a constituency entitled to 5 members, the quotient is 10,000. A liste obtaining 10,000 votes is entitled to one seat, 20,000 votes giving two seats, and so on. This is without prejudice to the rights of any one candidate who may obtain the absolute majority, or more than half the total votes. He is elected without further calculation and the quotient is applied to the remaining seats. When the position of the lists has been ascertained, the seats have to be apportioned among the candidates on the successful lists. The votes cast for the list are divided by the number of candidates, so as to obtain what is called a moyenne électorale, or average, below which no candidate can be elected. Sometimes the application of the quotient does not fill all the seats, and those remaining are allotted to the list having the best average.

In spite of all this elaborate machinery there were still a few constituencies where in 1919 the voting did not give any definite result and a second ballot had to be taken. The outcome of the present combination of scrutin de liste with another political fetish called "proportional representation" is that, as a rule, it is impossible to tell the result of a French election until an expert has subjected the figures to all the arithmetical processes required by law As we are always being told that the genius of France calls for light and a clear atmosphere, one can only wonder whether the French public really likes the highly ingenious apparatus with which its politicians have presented it.

A Great Nephew of Napoleon.

Napoleon's grand-nephew, Prince Roland Bonaparte, who has just passed away, was singularly devoid of the ancestral temperament, and, for that reason and others, not even the wildest anti-monarchist objected to his presence in the country from which the head of his family was excluded. Prince Roland was descended from Napoleon's younger brother Lucien, the most prolific of the Bonapartes. Born in 1858, he was intended for the army, and although the dynasty was swept away when he was still at school, no change was made in the plans for his career. He went through St. Cyr military academy and entered the army as second lieutenant, but, very soon afterwards, Parliament voted the law which prohibits from residence in France the heads of families having ruled over the country. It was impossible for a Bonaparte to remain in the French army in these circumstances, and the military career of Prince Roland came to an abrupt end. Probably the world lost nothing, but rather gained. Prince Roland was much more interested in travel, exploration and science than in military affairs, and he was fortunately able to gratify his tastes. His great house in the Avenue d'Iéna contained a very fine collection of scientific books and specimens. He was a pillar of the Geographical Society and gave freely to many branches of investigation. He was one of the simplest and most unassuming of men, and his pleasantness and cheerfulness, combined with his great name and wealth, gave him a unique position in Paris. His only child married Prince George of Greece, a brother of the late King Constantine.

JERUSALEM SURPRISE

Important Discoveries in the City of David

New discoveries made during the excavation of the City of David at Jerusalem are described by Professor R. A. S. Macalister (who is working under the auspices of the Palestine Exploration Fund and the "Daily Telegraph").

One of these discoveries, says the Professor in a dispatch from Jerusalem, carries back the history of the city in all probability at least 500 years behind the farthest point hitherto attained.

This is the section of a great trench. Only on the north side, goes on the Professor, was Jerusalem vulnerable to the assaults of primitive warfare. The steep valleys east and west of the ridge protected it effectively; the inhabitants acknowledged the protection thus afforded them by endeavouring to cut an artificial valley on the north side.

This is our reading of the entirely unexpected discovery with which we have been favoured.

We can hardly allow less than 500 years as the term of usefulness of a work so extensive. I should scarcely hesitate to assign a date near to 3,000 B.C.

There are broken steps now cleared of soil that has cumbered them since the time of Abraham. I venture to claim that those broken steps are a record of a previously unknown siege of Jerusalem.

Another important discovery is a gigantic bastion, unquestionably part of a great city wall, previously undiscovered. It was about 20ft. thick.

I have no doubt that it was the Jebusite outer wall, and in all probability the bastion which we have unearthed was the very spot from which the Jebusites taunted David with his inability to take the city.

THE DARDANELLES LANDING

Sir Ian Hamilton's Story

General Sir Ian Hamilton, lecturing at Hull in aid of the British Legion, told his story of the Dardanelles landing, and, incidentally, expressed some frank opinions of some of the men who directed British operations during the Great War.

"By the winter of 1914-15," said Sir Ian, "the First Sea Lord was Winston Churchill. That is a name to conjure up brick-bats or bouquets according to fancy. But we need not here trouble ourselves with his goodness or badness. Genius is an X-ray faculty which enables a mortal to see what is on the other side of the mountains.

"Whether, having seen, he uses his knowledge ill or well is another matter. Mr. Churchill saw. After all, he is an artist—a seer. He can see; he saw the Dardanelles, and so seeing he resolved to use the long-distance boots given us by our Fleet to get round the enemy's Eastern flank.

"Next in power to this young genius sat an old man of the sea. Lord Fisher, brilliant as he was, sensible as he could be, was more narrow than Winston Churchill in that he was essentially a one element man. He never wasted a thought on anything so dry as the land. He reckoned to mask Borkum, force an entrance to the Baltic, and land Russian and British armies within 70 miles of Berlin."

Lord Kitchener

The chief of the War Office was Lord Kitchener, who was eager to save the nation, but was badly handicapped.

Generally speaking the officers at the War Office were capable but in the wrong posts, or they were capable but too terrified of Lord Kitchener to say "Boo" to him. England's destinies really rested upon Lord Kitchener himself. He had not vision, or if he had, he could never explain what he saw, but he had instinct, and, given a free run, it rarely failed him.

Sir Ian spoke of the morning of March 12, 1915, when Lord Kitchener sent for him.

"I entered his room. He was writing. After a moment he looked up and said 'We are sending a military force to support the Fleet now at the Dardanelles, and you are to have command.'"

Within 24 hours he must hand over a command three times larger than the British Expeditionary Force; receive his instructions; select a staff; get hold of the hang of the Dardanelles and of the nature of the whereabout of his new Force, and—bundle off. As was to be expected, in so much agitation, all sorts of things were overlooked.

A Brain Wave

Sir Ian spoke in detail of the operations that followed. "V Beach," he said, "had we but known it, was next door to impossible as a landing. Our evil genius had planned our ruin there, and yet, at the last hour, good angels came and saved us by sending into the naval minds the thought of how, by the gift of a wooden horse, Troy and all her citadels had fallen.

"Commander Unwin was the name of the hero who had the brain wave, and as he is miraculously still alive I can still take my hat off when I meet him. So it came about that Admiral Wemyss fixed up an old steelbuilt tramp steamer called the River Clyde to bear within her womb two battalions of infantry.

> "Not one of our men would have returned to tell the tale but for the River Clyde—sold now to the Spaniards by a Government of spendthrifts who could find millions for anything except sentiment."

Sir Ian spoke of the lack of reinforcements, and declared that it was easier to get butter out of a dog's mouth than troops out of the War Office—except, that was to say, for the Western Front.

In the end, concluded Sir Ian, the Higher Direction of the British at home proved less tenacious than the Turk. Then, sadly, the Army of the Dardanelles left their battlefields and their dead, and without having lost guns or trenches, sailed away into the night.

A SPRING SERMON

Notes of a Sermon Preached by the Rev. C. E. Darwent in Union Church, Tientsin, Sunday Evening, April 27.

Text: St. Matthew XXIV 32. "Now from the figtree learn her parable; when her branch is now become tender, and putteth forth its leaves, ye know that summer is nigh."

When the "pageant of summer" is over and the leaves begin to turn, and we know that autumn is here, and the harvest festival is due, it is almost impossible not to preach on the suggestions of the season, if we have any preaching instinct at all. I used to notice, that a favourite text with students was "We all do fade as a leaf." And there are so many texts that suit it, suggesting other harvests, not so welcome as the golden wheat. Spring, however, equally deserves our attention, though I do not think it gets it. I do not know that I have ever preached a spring sermon. So I ask you to-night to consider some aspects of the springtime. Perhaps spring deserves more attention here in Tientsin than in the south, in Shanghai for instance. Here in Tientsin spring, for one thing, is very short. There seems a ridiculously meagre interval between winter and summer. Those who have trees to transplant have to be quick about it, for the leaves are out before you know where you are, and transplanting is impossible. Then it is a more tough season than in the milder and more genial south. On Sunday, at nine o'clock in the evening, the thermometer stood at 70 Fahr. By midnight it was down to 47 Fahr. a drop indeed, very trying to tender plants. And we have dust storms with a cutting hard wind. It tries the vitals of us hard adults, and it can shrivel up the tender leaf. Any success in gardening in Tientsin is a triumph, while in Shanghai, April and May are so favourable to growth, owing to the damp warmth, or to the warm dampness, that one used almost to think that, if anyone planted a cane, a silver head would sprout on it, and save the expense of a visit to a Chinese dealer in canes. However, men value things according to the difficulty in getting them. Anything won in the face of difficulties is more enjoyed than anything [illegible]. A [illegible] in the Falkland Islands is the creator of more joy than all the bushels you can purchase for a reasonable sum in Shanghai market. So we are glad to see spring once more. And we can read some of the truest lines on the season by one of the best of our minor poets, Mr. Aubrey de Vere, with as much enjoyment as those who live in a region where spring knows not Gobi dust-storms;

"Who feels not, when the spring once more
Stepping o'er winter's grave forlorn
With winged feet, retreads the shore
Of widowed earth, his bosom burn?

As ordered flower succeeds to flower,
And May the ladder of her sweets
Ascends, advancing hour by hour
From scale to scale, what heart but beats?

Some Presence veiled, in fields and groves,
That mingles rapture with remorse,
Some buried joy beside us moves,
And thrills the soul with such discourse

As they, perchance, that wondering pair,
Who to Emmaus bent their way;
Hearing, heard not, like them our prayer
We make—"The night is near us; Stay."

The Charm of the Familiar.

"From the fig-tree learn her parable." In Palestine the figtree was one of the commonest and most useful of trees. The fig was not used to [illegible] as [illegible] are. I dare say most of us [illegible] figs without [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

CHINESE GOVERNMENT AND OPIUM

The Whole Country Full of It and the Trade Pushed Briskly: Can China Justify Herself before the Coming League of Nations Conference?

(CONTRIBUTED).

Time is running out and China must render an account to the nations of the world at the forthcoming Opium Conference of her lamentable opium recrudescence. The time is too short to allot blame. The world knows that the disruption in the South and West together with the maintenance of enormous armies in all parts of China is responsible for four-fifths of the present traffic. The world equally knows well that the opium battle which culminated in total victory in 1915 has to be fought over again under harder conditions. The fact is that it is "fight" not a comedy show, requiring definite and energetic action. The opposition is prodigious and is both personal and official. Not only are Civil and Military Governors determined to maintain their taxes and consequently production, but that daily the habit is fastening itself on thousands. Many provinces in 1922 and 1923 grew such an opium surplus for which markets could not be found, that the people have taken up the habit owing to the cheapness of the product. From all parts of China come reports of the freedom and openness of opium smoking. People smoke in railway carriages, on river steamers, in restaurants, and in the houses and yamens of officials and gentry without the least attempt at secrecy. The traffic is officially licensed, smoking dens and opium sale shops exist side by side with shops and stalls for the sale of food and household commodities, and officials of many different grades cannot be seen during opium smoking hours, or until midday. In fact travellers find it difficult to realize that the general and open use of opium is contrary to the law of the land or prohibited by the most severe legal penalties.

A Well Organized Trade.

The recent annual investigation by the International Anti-Opium Association of Peking, which embraces over a hundred personal reports from missionaries and other foreigners in every province in China, shows no diminution in this season's cultivation. The Southern provinces are now collecting a bumper opium harvest, whose output runs hundreds of tons must find markets. Every opium province has its monopolies, some are straightforward and others—by far the majority—are merely excessive taxes imposed by local militarists on poppy land, opium shops and smoking dens. The straightforward opium monopolies are wider in their scope, they are provincial affairs governed by published regulations and restrictions promulgated by the military and civil provincial Governors. The stringency of these regulations is highly efficient for the raising of the largest funds, and for preventing promiscuous dealings.

Take the most recent monopoly, that of Kiangsi. Its regulations consist of 28 Articles completely controlling import, transport, sales bureaux and smuggling. Opium is not permitted to be grown in the province, but must be imported from Szechuan and other provinces in order that the import tax may be secured. The whole province is divided into 14 sections each under the control of a sectional bureau whose duty will be to raise monthly a tax of $15,000, $12,000 and $8,000 respectively according to their classification as 1st, 2nd or 3rd class. The four importing bureaux are supplied with stamps, coloured grey, yellow, white and red respectively, so as to avoid encroachment on each other's area of trade. The opium import tax is heavy, the sectional bureaux tax is also heavy, and finally the dealers who pay heavily for their post are unrestricted in the price they ask from their purchasers. This monopoly is established by the Military Governor of the province and from the number of the tabulated offices and officials a very large monthly income must be anticipated.

A Clear Case.

This Governor Ts'ai Ch'eng-hsun has the record of being the first Governor to start the poppy recrudescence in 1917, and when Governor of Suiyuan made a fortune by supplying Peking with cheap opium.

A reasonable defence might be made for provincial monopolies if control and taxation aimed even in the smallest degree at restriction but they do not. Money is the end and money only. No consideration for the people or the destructive effect of opium upon the life of the nation exists. The Kiangsi Governor knows he is breaking all law and treaty, for in the preamble to his monopoly regulations he states "In order to avoid foreign interference a formal declaration of strict opium prohibition shall be made," and in the same preamble calls on officials of every grade military or civil to make the monopoly a success. The only commendation due to Governor T'sai is that he is open and straight with his destructive monopoly. Scores of others are doing more or less the same thing under the title of Suppression Bureaux, and that within a short distance of the Chinese Capital.

Chinese Government Uneasy.

The Chinese Government is undoubtedly perturbed by the coming League of Nations' Conference of the Powers having Far Eastern possessions. The programme suggested by Sir Malcon Delevingne for discussion will be stultified as far as the opium monopoly countries are concerned, unless China can stop production. The Hongkong Governor declared in 1923 that "no financial consideration would prevent total prohibition in the Colony if China would pari passu stop cultivation." The difficulties of preventing smuggling are almost insuperable. In Hongkong opium is sold at $14.50 per ounce, and in China it is as low as 35 cents. Whilst morally the traffic is indefensible in any Far Eastern possessions, yet if restriction leads to extensive underground methods of smuggling the results will be doubtful. China must stop cultivation. Can she do this? No and Yes. No! she cannot stop it in the South and West, where the bulk of her yearly 10,000 tons are being grown. These provinces have virtual autonomy and Peking mandates are disregarded, and they will continue to cultivate and traffic, until some power not at present operative makes it impossible. Yes! applies to the Northern provinces such as Anhui, Honan, Shensi, Kansu and Chihli. Here the Central Government is dominant, controls all official and civil appointments and has the power to enforce the law. Will she do it?

What Prohibition Means.

Recently the Ministries of Foreign Affairs, Interior, War and Police have formed an Opium Suppression Board in Peking before which the General Secretary of the Association was invited to discuss present conditions and suggest methods of restriction. Later the Association was asked to make recommendations in writing, which they did, and the main points emphasized were; first, that further investigation of poppy cultivation and opium traffic were unnecessary and would cause delay. Every one knows where it is grown and the quantities, and in the meantime farmers are planting for the Summer harvest. If, however, the Suppression Board decides to send Investigating Commissioners the Association urged that they should act independently of the Civil and Military Authorities, for there is conclusive evidence that in the past the investigators have not been permitted to investigate until the opium harvest had been reaped, and hence their reports are entirely misleading. Secondly the Association urged that methods for the prevention of opium smuggling be considered. It will avail little, if prohibition of cultivation be enforced in the North, and no means taken to prevent the surplus tons of opium entering from the South.

Thirdly the Association suggested the opening of "Curing Houses" in the Northern provinces, for with almost millions of addicts, it will be impossible to prevent smuggling, unless something is done to help the miserable sufferers. The Model Province of Shansi has a number of curing houses and 51,000 persons were treated therein during the last two years. Without these "Curing Houses" the labouring classes will suffer, whilst as formerly the official classes will be able to put by a store of opium sufficient to last for years.

The Test for China.

Finally the Association explained that the coming Opium Conference would be a test of China's sincerity. Would she prohibit, where she has the power to do so? The six Northern Provinces are under the control of the Central Government. Energetic action could clear these provinces in six months, and unless China does this, it will be futile for her to talk of the Southern provinces where she has no control. The crux of the whole eradication problem is the opium habit amongst officials. President, some Cabinet Ministers, Members of Parliament, Tuchuns, Governors Civil and Military, are known opium smokers. Every one knows it, and yet these men make the mandates and issue orders, which the public is expected to obey. During the last five years the opium habit is proportionately more apparent amongst the official classes than the peasants, and no reform can be permanent which does not commence at the top.

HELPING CHINA TO HELP HERSELF

BY "LEO"

The Chinese get more material benefit out of industrial development and by knowing how to conduct business than they do out of higher education, and this material benefit is given largely by the International Settlement and French Concession here, as it is within these areas that the Chinese make most money and at the same time learn how to do it.

Examples of this are that the Chinese are the largest land dealers in the Settlements, that they are owners of some of the largest shops such as Sincere's and Wing On's and others now buliding, also the Chinese bankers are conducting very successful banks in greater and greater numbers.

All this is being done within the Settlements and we foreigners benefit to a certain extent from these activities of the Chinese in that, although they compete with us, we still gain from the increase in volume of trade which results.

So it may be said that the Chinese are benefiting immensely from their use of the Settlements, so why not extend this beneficial educational influence by returning part of the various Boxer indemnities in the shape of a loan for developing the land around the Settlements and include therein all the land between the Railway and the Huangpu down to and including Woosung and the bank of the Yangtze up to the city of Paoshan—all the land out to the railway to the west of the Settlements—and a strip of land 2,000 ft. wide all down the right bank, Pootung side, of the Huangpu.

The average value of land per mow within the Settlements may be put at about Tls. 30,000 whereas the value of land at more than a few hundred yards from the present Settlement limits is not more than a few hundred taels per mow.

And this marked difference is yearly getting more impressive.

This suggestion, if adopted, would give Shanghai room to breathe which it can hardly do at present, as the congestion is so great.

As to the Administration of the extended area, this should be done by the Shanghai Municipal Council with Chinese representation on the Council.

The S. M. C. would be the supervisors of the loan, as the Boxer indemnity money could be put into Municipal debentures.

THE ex-Emperor, Hsuan Tung, has appointed Mr. R. F. Johnstone (his tutor) Supervisor of the Yu Chuan Mountain, a famous hill near the Imperial Gardens in Peking which is famous for its spring waters, with power to improve it as he sees fit, says the Chinese press.

IMPRESSIONS OF CHINA

BY GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY

To denounce another man's work and yet, to do it one's self; to question another man's integrity and yet to act as he has acted; to cry "Traitor," and yet to commit what was called a treasonable act, is the moral significance of the Sino-Russian Agreement. A thunderbolt, Rodney Gilbert has called it. But to Chinese it must be even a greater thunderbolt than to foreigners. For why did the Statesboy denounce his former friend and colleague? Why did he drive him from office? Why did his friends speak of the spending of Russian gold? Why did the police prevent the students from demonstrating? Why the bomb which injured some servants? Why the heroics and bombast, the influenza and martyrdom? Face what crimes are committed in thy name!

A Pamphlet

Denouncing the militarists of China is perhaps justified. It would be more justified if the denouncers would set themselves to constructive tasks, would train themselves to replace the militarists, would do service for their country. But to couple the Chinese militarists and foreign imperialists in one sentence, to say that one supports the other, to ask Chinese to rid the country of both military officials and foreigners, is the logic of ignorance. What are these ideas which the Communist Party of China is spreading throughout this country? Do they come from the mind of Chinese? Are they the teachings of Confucius or Mencius or Mog Ti? Are they in harmony with the character and needs of the Chinese people? Or are they not rather the unassimilated phrases of a German sociologist? The very form of the document resembles Karl Marx's Communist Manifesto, a work which deals with problems in no way facing China. The foreigner offers China his best: he brings his methods of production and distribution which teach the Chinese merchants and industrialists how to make things efficiently and speedily and less expensively. He brings here his physicians and teachers to strengthen the body and make virile the mind. He offers China an example of methods which some day will make China one of the great and strong countries of the earth. You reject these. You care nothing about a strong body and mind, a capacity for efficient labour, for development of your country, for means of communication, for the broadening and deepening of your rivers, for the improvement of your cities. You care nothing for the future of China. Your only interest is the present noise, the hurly-burly of excitement, the enthusiasm over the new, the emotional reaction to the unusual. If you dislike the militarists, if you dislike the position of your country, if you dislike foreigners, if you want any change at all, why not go to work to improve your country and to make it great instead of issuing pamphlets and poorly thought out literature on meaningless subjects.

Ku Hung-ming

They called him dead just as they called Sun Wen dead. Perhaps they would have him dead, for he is unlike the spineless men of his age, who knowing little and daring less, agree with whatever is. Sun Wen represents the extreme left in the thought of the revolution; Ku Hung-ming, the extreme right. He wears his queue probably not because he likes queues but as a protest against men rushing to cut theirs off to prove themselves patriots and progressive. Queue or no queue makes not the man. It depends largely on the stuff that is inside the skull the queue covers. It is said of him that when men were rebelling against the Manchus and were cutting their queues, when ragamuffins shouted for a Republic and sold their hair as well as their hearts, he rode through the streets of Peking in a ricsha displaying his tail that the world might see that his was still intact. One even said that he made his longer by the addition of a few stands of hair. One almost hopes that the story is true. For in it is a moral. The gentleman is neither impetuous nor false. He does not depend upon externals and showy acts to announce that he is a man. The story of his life tells his tale.

THE BOOK PAGE

BOOK NOTES AND NEWS

The idea adapted by Miss Elinor Glyn of forming a limited company to acquire the copyright in her works was anticipated by Mr. Fred M. White in his novel, "A Deal in Letters," published by Messrs. John Long.

None of the contents of Mr. Augustine Birrell's new volume of essays, "More Obiter Dicta," has appeared before in public print. Heinemann's are publishing this most welcome volume.

A bibliography of that wise and kindly doctor, Sir Thomas Browne, who wrote "Religio Medici," will be welcome. The great fame of one book has caused many people to think of him as a single book author, like "single speech Hamilton." As a matter of fact, he wrote much on many things, and for the purpose of this bibliography Mr. Geoffrey Keynes has tracked them all faithfully down. It is being published by the Cambridge University Press, and it will be found well embellished with facsimiles and portraits. Particularly there is a contemporary painting of Sir Thomas Browne and Dame Dorothy Browne.

The idea of a book which John Lane is to publish sprang from the beauty of the historic gates of Peking. It is written by Dr. Osvald Sirén, whom we already know for a work on "Essentials In Art." He speaks of the gates of Peking as characteristic elements in some of the finest views of the Chinese capital. Especially he dwells on their wonderful setting amid old buildings, fresh trees and decaying moats. Their decorative architectural character is brought out in a series of unusually good photographs.

A literary event of the quiet days which went before the Great War was the success of Mr. Horace Vachell's story, "Quinneys." It was equally successful as a play, and indeed Mr. Henry Ainley never did anything better than the butler in it. Some day the story of "Quinneys" was bound to have a sequel, and it is just appearing under the title, "Quinney's Adventures." It will let us renew our acquaintanceship with Joe and his wife Susan, and with the other old friends of the Soho-square establishment.

Mr. Peter E. Wright wrote a lively book about what happened "at the Supreme War Council" during the war. He has now written a variation on the old theme of the quest for the shirt of a happy man The shirt is required for the ailing son of an American super-millionaire and the episodes of the quest give occasion for comments on many phases of life. British statesmanship and American "materialism" are faithfully reviewed and society comes in for a buffeting.

The romance of engineering should make a good book, and Sir Francis Fox is a good man to write it. He is best known as the saviour of Winchester Cathedral, but he has also been intimately associated with most of the great engineering feats of the last half-century. He has written his memories of 'Sixty-Three Years of Engineering," and John Murray will publish them. He gives a full account of the way in which Winchester Cathedral, standing on apparently solid ground, was saved by the use of divers. The other two subjects which interest him are the dangers threatening St. Paul's and the possibilities of the Channel Tunnel.

That unusual book, "Lady Into Fox," was so unusual that it was bound to be parodied by somebody. It has been parodied by Mr. Christopher Ward, wherever he may be, with a volume entitled "Gentleman into Goose," which we shall have at once. This book is, we are told, "the exact and true account of Mr. Timothy Tester's quest, of Pebblehigh in Dorset, which at the wish and prayer of his wife was changed to a great grey gander. A humorous idea, but, after all, perhaps not so very novel!"

THE TEN MOST NOTABLE NEW BOOKS

In the recent Spring Announcement Number of the "Weekly Westminister," prizes were offered to the readers who selected the 10 most notable new books listed in the publishers' announcements appearing in that issue. The prize-winning list were to be those which most nearly corresponded with the popular choice, and this listt has proved to be as follows:—

Biography; Life of Olive Schreiner (S. C. Cronwright-Schreiner.)

History; The Secret of the Coup d'Etat

Art; Modern English Architecture (Charles Marriott.)

Education; Principles of Education (Prof. J. J. Findlay.)

Drama; St. Joan (G. B. Shaw.)

Fiction; The Dream (H. G. Wells.)

Essays; Essays (W. B. Yeats.)

Travel; In Quest of El Dorado Stephen Graham.)

Poetry; New Poems (W. H. Davies.)

Science; Old and New (Prof. J. Arthur Thomson.)

A feature of this competition even more interesting than the number of entries was the wide range of the voting. Competitors seemed to have studied the publishers' lists very carefully, and no book of any importance was overlooked. In some sections the choice was not so varied, and one or two great names attracted nearly all the votes to themselves—though even "St. Joan." which was by far the easiest winner of the ten, was by no means without rivals. But in each of the other sections at least a score of books received votes, and in some the figure was very much higher; under "History" there were over 40 candidates for the place.

The final result showed a very good list, including several books that will remain notable long after the Spring Season of 1924 has passed.

The first section—Biography—produced a very close contest, and in the end Morley Roberts' "W. H. Hudson: a Portrait" (Eveleigh Nash & Grayson), was beaten by only a few votes. The lists contained such other undeniably notable books as Earl Buxton's "General Botha" and Edmund Blunden's "Leigh Hunt."

In the History section "The Secret of the Coup d'Etat" led fairly easily, on a very scattered vote, though its rivals ranged from "The Cradle of Our Civilization." by Marion Newbigin. to J. Saxon Mills' "Mr. Lloyd George and the Great War."

In Art, too, "Modern Architecture" had a good majority over "The Necessity of Art," edited by Dr. Dearmer, with the "Rodin," published by Messrs. Benn, close behind.

In Education, Professor Findlay's book had an easy victory. though "The Sub-Normal School Child" and Belloc's "Economics for Helen" were well supported. In the Drama section, even so noteworthy a book as Eugene O'Neill's plays ("Beyond the Horizon" and "Gold") had no chance against "St. Joan."

In the same way, in the section devoted to fiction, Mr. H. G. Wells's "The Dream" received the lion's share of votes, with Fannie Hurst's "Lummox" and E. M. Forster's ("Passage to India" next up.

In the Essay section, C. E. Montague ("The Right Place") and Robert Lynd ("Peal of Bells") both challenged Mr. Yeats in vain.

"The Right Place" came close after Dr. McGovern's "To Lhasa in Disguise" for second place in the Travel section, where "In Quest of El Dorado" was an easy first.

Under the heading of Poetry there was a long struggle between the two books produced by Mr. Davies and published by Mr. Jonathan Cape, but towards the end Mr. Davies's new volume forged ahead, and "Best Poems of 1922" had to take second place, with "The Chilswell Book of Poetry" and "Green-Kirtled Spring" —a strange preponderance of anthologies—not far behind.

Finally, in the Science section, "Science Old and New" by Professor Thompson, romped home from an extraordinary large and varied field, including philosophy, medicine, anthropology, psychology, and education.

YOUTH AND ROMANCE

THE OLD DOMINION. By Mary Johnston. BY ORDER OF THE COMPANY. By Mary Johnston. Thornton, Butterworth Ld. 3/6 net each.

It was with something of a shock that I found, on picking up these reprints, that a quarter of a century has passed since I first read the first and not much less since I read the second. Upon that disconcerting discovery it was interesting to try whether the thrill I enjoyed,—it seemed but yesterday,—could be recaptured from a re-reading. Two important things seemed to be involved in the isue. Not Mary Johnston's claim to mame. That is surely, by now, put beyond doubt. But two things important to me seemed to hang upon the result of the test: my own taste in fiction and a possible clue to the discovery of an ingredient of fiction essential to lasting enjoyment. It seemed to me that here should be a test one does not often get the chance of. There are, of course, many books of fiction we read first 25 and even more years ago and still read. But then we have been reading them on and off during the whole of the period; Dickens, Merivale and one or two others. So that they have become old friends, usual and near, and no answers to the important questions of literary taste and the essential quality in fiction to lasting enjoyment may now be extracted from their comfortable perusal. Here, in Mary Johnston's "Old Dominion," seemed the opportunity of the real test. Here is a book I read once, all years ago. Would the old thrill return? And lo! It was so. It shook with the same force. Nay, more; I'll swear it shook the same youth,—that if I could have looked up from the reading into a mirror, I would have seen a crown of brown hair atop of an unlined, eager face.

But I could not look up until I came to the end and to the answers to my questions: that literary taste does not matter very much and that the only essentials in literature to permanent enjoyment are Youth and Romance.

No very great discovery? Maybe not; but very satisfying to me. Mary Johnston. I thank you a thousand times.

JOHN LOFTING.

A BOOK OF VERSE

"Queen Bess in Borrowed Plumes," and other poems. By Alice Masters Balean. John and Edward Bumpus Ld., 350 Oxford St. London.

Beneath a portrait of the authoress appears the announcement of her death on January 10, 1923, and this very daintily produced colume, privately printed, thus becomes more of an intimate book of remembrance for family and friends rather than one intended for a wider and perhaps more critical public. Many of the [illegible] have been reprinted from various magazines, and all of them reveal a talent for producing smooth flowing, graceful verse, each one an expression of some passing mood or fancy and characteristic of a quiet, gentle outlook upon life. There is a certain neatness and grace of expression about all the verses which is very pleasing and, if no note of great poetry has been struck, there are qualities about the work which distinguish it from mere versifying. It has character. and that of a charming personality.

NEW LIGHT ON SPAIN

"SPAIN TO-DAY." By Frank B. Deakin. The Labour Publishing Co., Ld. 7s. 6d.

The colour and romance of Spain, its rich past and mysterious links with the East, are a well-worn theme, but in this book we are given another picture in darker colours; for it is a detailed account of the inefficiency and coruption of the governments and official classes and of the apathy, due to much illiteracy, of the population, substantiated by statistics and numerous extracts from the Spanish Press. To these, the author, who was Press Attaché to the British Embassy in Spain, where he has spent the best part of his life, adds his own personal observation and experiences in an exceptionally original and interesting book.

In his view the stagnancy of that country is due to the curse of excessive politics, and he believes that adequate social reform cannot possibly be carried through without the introduction of good laws and of a good system of popular education in accordance with the needs and wishes of the people—a matter of years rather than of days or months. Hence, though most of the book was written before the military movement of last September overthrew the constitutional authorities and invested Gencral Primo de Rivers with a virtual dictatorship, he doubts, from a democratic point of view, and without discussing Fascism, the capacity of a Military Directorate for social reform and reconstruction.

POWDER

Its Use And Abuse

"STELLA NASH." By Ganpat. Blackwood. 6s.

"THE SAINT OF THE SPEEDWAY." By Ridgwell Cullum. Palmer. 7s. 6d.

"OUTLAWED." By Robswood Cooke. Hodder and Stoughton. 7s. 6d.

"THE ROAD TO MONTEREY." By G. W. Ogden. Hodder and Stoughton. 7s. 6d.

There is powder in the air. I suppose the public taste, already recovering from its satiety after four years of blood and death, really does impel this absorption of the popular novelist in men who shoot. The amount of gunwork in this little batch of novels would require a biggish computation. A squad of "greasers" armed to the teeth, adorns Mr. Ogden's dust-cover: Mr. Cooke faces us with Jacobite Highlanders and Cumberland's redcoats at the charge; while "Stella Nash" opens with a stomach wound and fatal hæmorrhage.

"Ganpat"—whom I suspect to be a lady, if only from her Stella's pervading assumption that woman has perception and man mere observation—alone of these writers pretends to the gnomic. This carries us nowhere; and disfigures what might have been a fairly pretty descriptive style. As it is, she has given us a wearying mixture of the sensational, the sentimental and the pretentious, which even the glamour of the inevitable East does not redeem: for the glamour shares in the general dilution. O sancta simplicitas! "Ganpat" really has some sense of humour and some verisimilitude in dialogue, if she would but avoid this overstrain.

Curiosities of Dialect.

Mr. Cullum is a hearty figure, with a following in his particular line; and his admirers will not be disappointed by "The Saint of the Speedway." What chiefly worries me is his complex geography, his dialect, and his wholly superfluous introduction of the supernatural. His portrayal of cities and manners in the far North, where gold men and oilmen prospect, is startling enough; but it does hold the attention in a way, he has a genuine interest in character. This is a very mild example of the dialect, chosen because the speaker is a Commissioner, a government "big man."

"There's no such darn vessel registered at Boston. And there's no owner yearning to claim anything with a name like the 'Limpet.' That doesn't leave me guessing. There's such a thing as insurance. In a while, maybe, we'll be getting word from some underwriting house; then the fur 'll fly, and someone 'll be squealing in the courts."

There is a good deal of promiscuous loosing off of guns, and a melodramatic secret society of white-robed figures, a modern Ku-Klux-Klan, that enlivens the countryside with judicial murder and arson, but that I take for a necessary part of the game. Mr. Cullum is substantial and human; but in emotional description he can lapse into stilted American cliches.

Two Famous Rebellions.

"Outlawed" shows that the '45 has not lost its appeal. In sober fact it was a sorry, bloody, treacherous affair; but it inspired "Waverley" and "Waverley" has gone on inspiring. . . . Mr. Cook gives us the real thing; no mere tale, but the "Memoirs of Charles Bethune of Whitley" etc. He lacks the essentials of a historical or romantic novelist, and his 18th century English and his Highland colloquies are alike unconvincing. This is a story of adventure, of hairbreadth escapes and incredible feats of arms, but nothing more.

Mr. Ogden takes us from the 1740's to the 1840's, from Culloden to California. His theme is a local rebellion against the tyranny of the Mexican dons, on the eve of the American invasion. He alone of these four writers has a natural and occosionally felicitous style. His expenditure of powder and shot is well up to the average.—"Daily News."

TIBETAN DRAMA

Plays which Last for Three Days

"Three Tibetan Mystery Plays" is the title of a new book translated from the French by H. I. Woolf and published by Messrs. Routledge. These are, it is believed, the first plays of the kind that have been fully rendered into English, and it is remarkable that they should have come to us through the industry of a Frenchman. The drama is the property of the monks, laymen occasionally helping in the female parts, and this gives it its semi-religious and didactic character. There is no set stage and no scenery. The play is acted in the open air, in what the translator calls an enclosure, though it seems that the fence is composed of the crowd and of the tents or other shelter for notables. It consists of narrator and dialogue, the narrator opening with a short recital of the previous history, rather after the fashion of the opening speech in many of the extant Greek tragedies. But his part does not stop there. At intervals between the dialogues he comes on to carry the action forward, or else this is done by the actors themselves. The actors frequently read their parts, and the play lasts for two or three days.

Actors' Latitude.

We are, however, not to suppose that the text before us represents the drama as played. The printed book is, in fact, little more than a skeleton; for long periods are occupied with the mute pantomime, while the actors, who specialize in particular parts, are by no means bound by the written word, but, on the contrary, use it with a great deal of freedom, putting in much of their own, so that each actor gives his own individual version. It may be remarked in parenthesis that this freedom of treatment seems to be peculiar to the Asiatic genius, for we find it also in the highly developed Indian art of music. Europe regards the text as sacred; it is a crime to take liberties with the text of Hamlet or with a Beethoven symphony. Asia prefers to introduce the personality of the performers, regarding the performance of the literal text as tending to lifelessness. This freedom of treatment naturally increases the length of the play, which is further assisted by being sung, often to the accompaniment of dances.

Most Popular Plays.

The three plays here presented have been well chosen, since they exhibit three distinct styles, though only the last can strictly be called a "mystery" play. The first and most popular is written round the Buddhist theme of the supreme virtue of charity. The Prince, who is unable to resist any demand for alms, gives away a precious magic jewel. For this fault he is banished to the Mount of the Demons, and on the way he parts with all he can call his own—even his children and his wife. The latter, however, is returned to him, for the beggar turns out to be the god Indra, who wishes to test him. The second play is rather of the nature of a fairy tale, in which one is led to suspect the influence of Arabia, or at least the Western Asia, since we are brought into the atmosphere of fairies, genies, and scarves that enable the wearer to fly. The third play is more characteristically Buddhist, and is perhaps of the three the most national. There is nothing in it that suggests outside influence. The heroine is almost a religious maniac. She is continually dwelling on the vanity of human life and the supreme comfort of religion, and, having left, first her husband's and then her father's home, retires to a monastery, and finally to the desert, where she is left in contemplation.

THE WOMAN'S PAGE

A LOVESOME THING

"I Saw a Garden With Peonies, and a Tinkling Pagoda"—Amy Lowell.

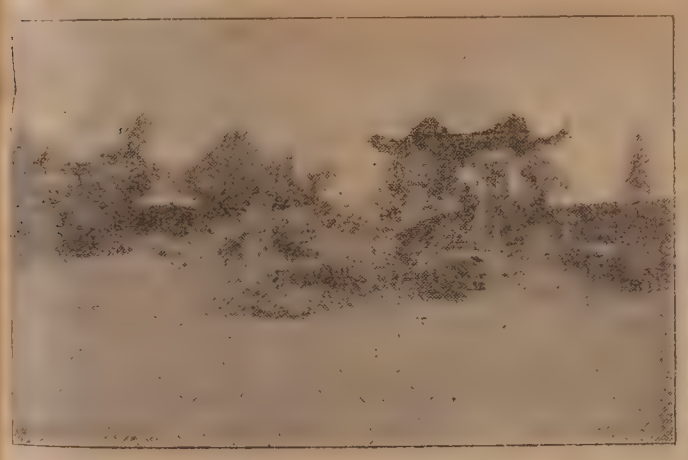
BY ELIZABETH PEPYS.

A garden is a wonderful partnership entered into between oneself and Nature, a most rewarding partnership, but one which must be fairly administered or else you are both losers. One of the successful collaborators with Nature in Shanghai is Lady Turner. "I give my garden its head," she laughed, "more perhaps than I ought to, much more than my gardener or my tidy friends approve, but I like to see what it will do with a certain amount of freedom."

Perhaps this is the secret of a happy garden. Surely it is one of its ingredients. At all events, as one passes under the porte-cochère covered with the green of the wisteria vine, past the gay beds of flame and white sweet-william which border the drive and frame the rose bed, through a gateway pierced in the shrubbery, a refreshingly rustic vista unrolls. The garden was originally the oblong which is the water buffalo were then grazing. It is hard to believe, as one's glance sweeps round the cherry tree, the Chinese ashes, the juniper and cryptomeria, the irregular silhouette of the poplars at the south and the willows which outline the other side. Seven years seems a tiny period to have achieved so much in forestry.

But have I given the impression of a rectangular garden? If so I am no truthful reporter, for the lines are skilfully broken by tree-planting, which is too landscapy to have been quite as unstudied as it now appears. Best of all in the further, southwestern corner, beyond the pagoda summer house which tops a little mound in that same direction, there is "the way out for the eye," which is so desirable. Here the questing glance may look beyond the confines of the garden, past a little rustic fence into the uncultivated country, and this long view gives a sense of liberation and freedom from constraint which is the equivalent of two changes of scene and one rest cure.

WISTERIA ARCH AND CIRCULAR DRIVE

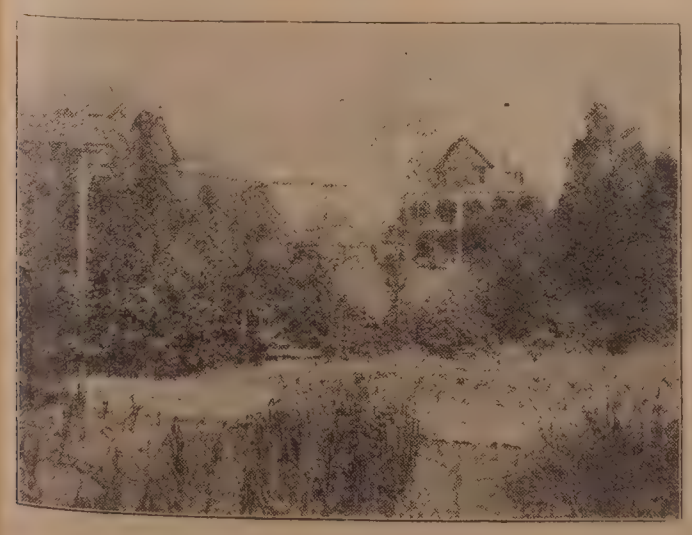


SUMMER HOUSE IN THE GARDEN

As for the actual flowers—the shaded walk is primarily a spring garden, with its early iris and coy April blooms. And what a rapid succession of the seasons as there is here. Three plantings if not more, for spring, for the intensely hot weather, and for autumn are the least to be expected. Then following the paved walk further one comes upon the the kitchen garden behind an informal screen of trees, where succulent cabbage, racy onions and blushing strawberries, not to mention the aerial sweet peas, "on tip-toe for a flight" are found. We leave this part of the garden through a fragrant arch of red and white rambler roses and come towards the summer house, where daffodils have been shedding their spring sunshine. The garden wall at the west is covered with ramblers and in the beds stocks, poppies, snap dragon, larkspur, and viscaria show up most prominently now. Later will come the hollyhocks, then the sunflowers for the mid-summer, and last the cosmos and chrysanthemums.

To the left, as one faces the house, in front of the greenhouse is a colonnade of ramblers, with connecting chains, which will be festooned with roses by next season. Next season! That is the slogan of every ardent gardner. This guild is the most optimistic, ambitious, dauntless of all bodies. To-day may be good, but to-morrow is always to be better. Seed catalogues bloom and blossom when read with the eyes of faith, no problems of soil or situation are impossible when a real nature lover attacks them.

"And be your own gardner," says Lady Turner, "you lose half your flowers and nine-tenths of the fun unless you really dig among posies yourself."



RAMBLER ROSE ARCHWAY IN THE GARDEN.

only orthodox garden according to the architects of Shanghai. Indeed, seven years ago, this charming spot was field, plain field, without a flower or tree to distinguish it from the field outside where the

SHANGHAI STYLE INTERPRETATIONS

How Paris Modes Are Transplanted.

BY ELIZABETH PEPYS.

"Teaching by seeing" is a sound educational maxim these days and what more delightful demonstration of the proper modes for the summer can there be than to visit a Garden Party with an eye seeking out illustrations of the dictums sent on from Paris. Shanghai is an excellent place for such a fashion show, since its women visit Europe, England and the United States frequently and many of them constantly receive models from home.

One of the features which stood out at the B.W.A. Garden Party of Tuesday was the matching cape, or the scarf which continues the colour scheme of the costumes. The perfect weather, warm sunshine and cool breeze, made capes appropriate as well as picturesque. The present fad for having a separate wrap for every outfit may be an extravagance, but it surely an effective luxury. Shanghai is delightfully gay in its colourings. One does not realize what a difference these bits of colour make until one visits a city where dull uniformity prevails. What would we not have given to have seen one of the daring flame coloured frocks or that vivid orange at some of New England's restrained lawn fetes!

Flowered frocks in transparent materials were particularly favoured in this gathering. Made with fairly full skirts, deftly draped, flounces or ruffles disposing of the additional material they seemed highly fitting for such an occasion. Some jaunty little coatees were seen, adding a chic note. Despite the general pillar-box effect there were many indications that the bouffant mode is slowly creeping in, and for more uses than that of "period costumes."

THE LOST BLEND

Standing one day in the bar room
I was thirsty and had the blues
And my fingers handled idly
The bottles of different hues.

I know not what I was mixing—
Something stronger than near-beer—
But its various elements blended
Like the sound of a rousing cheer.

The boys said it was a winner,
And wanted to have some more,
But when I tried to re-shake it,
It wasn't the same as before.

I have sampled every bottle,
Tried combinations in vain,
But I fear that only in dreamland
I shall strike that blend again.

WOMEN AS FARMERS

In Western Canada

In Canada it is not considered enough for the child of a farmer to pick up agriculture by helping on the parental farm. A course at one of the nine Agricultural Colleges of the Dominion is often taken to impress on the young mind the importance of agriculture as a science. This course may vary from four weeks to four years, which is the length of the degree course, the sucessful student emerging with the letters B.S.A. (Bachelor Science, Agriculture) after his or her name. The women who have this degree are few and far between, because, although there are hundreds of girl students in every Agricultural College in Canada, they study mainly the domestic, side, and occasionally departments, such as poultry work, dairy work, that fall to the lot of the farmer's wife.

A British Quartette.

A short course in agriculture, however, was recently taken by the four British farmer girls, Mildred White, Ivy Townsend, Emma Absolon, and Joan Moore, who won the scholarships offered by Sir Henry Thornton, president of the Canadian National Railways, and their sojourn at Manitoba Agricultural College was by no means the least enjoyable part of their five months in Canada. "Animal husbandry," or care of live stock, as we should designate it, was their main study, but "field husbandry" ran it close. Little Joan Moore, a Leicestershire girl, though only 13, was in no way behind her companions of 17, 18, and 19, and impressed the college professors with her knowledge of farming matters generally.

THE JUNE BRIDE

Since her return to England she has won a silver medal for cow-judging at the Dairy Show, and is now foreman on her father's farm near Longborough. She attributes her success to her Canadian training.

In the college the day began at seven, when the bell awakened them; breakfast was at 7.30, and consisted of fruit, porridge, and their Canadian breakfast dishes. Then came the excitement of the mail from home, and after that there was time allotted to all students to make their beds and do their rooms. At nine their class began, lasting till eleven either practical work in the poultry yard, dairy, live-stock sheds, carpenters bench, or theoretical study in the class-room, entomology, botany, and even sociology, for all these come within the scope of the farmer's work. There is a Professor of English at the college, which, by the way, is part of Manitoba University, for the Canadian view is that the farmer is the life-blood of Canada and he cannot be too well educated.

Plots on the Prairie.

At eleven the students were free to enjoy the swimming pool, and the English girls were among the boldest divers and swimmers. At twelve the midday meal was taken in the large dining-hall, amid a babel of tongues and crowd of eager young people. Classes began at 2 p.m., and again the afternoon was spent in farming pursuits, perhaps on the experimental plots on the prairie, perhaps haymaking, or perhaps learning to drive a tractor. After this the swimming pool called again, and it was not considered harmful to bathe twice a day; everybody does it in Canada, apparently with no ill effects. After the six o'clock evening meal the students were free to amuse themselves according to choice, and often a merry party started for a film theatre in Winnipeg. The young people are trusted, and so long as they are back by ten o'clock there is plenty of freedom.

The Vacation School.

In the vacation school they are of all ages, from boys and girls in their teens to men and women of 30 or 40, though it is more usual for the older women to take the home economics course.

On Saturdays the students do their own laundry, for which all facilities are provided, and in the afternoon there is generally an outing of some kind. Such courses at the Canadian Agricultural Colleges are extraordinarily inexpensive, practically only the cost of board being charged, and they do much to promote the scientific farming by which Canada has become the leading agricultural country of the world.

A POSTER PARTY

Children in Fancy Dress.

Sometimes it is difficult to think out fresh and charming designs for children's fancy dress, and one sees a surfeit of peasants and pierrots. An idea which has been found to work very well is that of the "poster party." All town children are familiar with certain well-known figures in what has been called the poor man's picture gallery—the advertisement hoardings, which brighten our streets. And the little ones love dressing up as the prettiest and quaintest of these posters, while, from the parent's point of view, the cheapness and ease with which most of the costumes may be contrived will be a recommendation.

From the Advertisement Hoardings.

For kiddies still at the stage of pretending to be fairies there are many delightful characters—the fairy who drives the swans that advertise the matches, the green Puck, also of match fame, the dancing, gauzy elves of the night-lights, the queer tiny man who proclaims that "Zog is an extra hand." A brother and sister may be the "cocoa nibs" whose names are just now the subject of competition, or the Sunkist raisin boy and girl. "Everyday" clothes may be worn by these, as by the small girl who personates Mary having "a little lamb, with lots of H.P. sauce," and by the bearer of the huge strawberry, which may be realistically made without much trouble. If there is a kilt in the family the small boy may appear as the "puir wee laddie" deprived of his Oxo, or as the bonny golden-headed one who "tickles the world's palate."

A Wide Choice.

The Player's cigarettes Jack Tar may be "done" by the owner of a sailor suit. Other easily represented characters are Sir Kreemy Knut of the toffee tins, the "shipper" of sardines and salmon in his oilskins, the Oxo motorist with his face comically plastered, and the little nigger in white who drives off the big orange, while pyjama rig is all that is wanted for the cherry optimist afloat on the Bovril bottle and the crying little boy who has spilt the liver salts. Johnny Walker, the Quaker of the oats, and Sunny Jim need more elaborate fancy dress. Characters for older girls are the gallant black-and-white nurse of "Ours," the pretty Kodak fiend in the striped frock, and the "keep that school-girl complexion" young woman.

Breaking the Ice.

On the top left-hand corner of the invitation cards should be painted a bright little thumb-nail sketch of a billsticker. After the first dance the game of identifying the advertisements may be played on the book tea principle. The very little ones should not take part in this, and some ring game may be organized for them while the elder children enter their guesses on their cards.

This party proves a great success where boys and girls, many of whom do not know one another, are to be entertained. The fun of identifying well-known figures, and laughing over the representation of their idiosyncrasies, soon breaks the ice, and, if well organized, the thing "goes" from start to finish.

Startling Effect of a Little Truth in an After-dinner Speech

WU PEI-FU AND BRITISH BOXER INDEMNITY

His Thanks to Great Britain: Money Most Usefully to Be Spent on Railways: China's Lack of Communications and Experts to Assist Industrial Development

Peking, June 5.

"As a private citizen of the Republic of China I desire to express my gratitude to the British Government and the British people for their friendly act in remitting some £11,000,000, being the unpaid balance of the Boxer Indemnity," said Marshal Wu Pei-fu to Reuter's special correspondent at Loyang on June 4.

Asked his opinion regarding the disposal of these funds, Marshal Wu said: "There is no doubt that the funds should be used in such a way in China as to promote harmony and to further Sino-British interests. The Chinese and British Governments should now endeavour to discuss and decide upon the ways and means to carry out this object. I hear that there is a growing feeling among Britons in China in favour of allocating a large portion of the funds for railway construction. Curious to say, British views coincide with mine. What China wants to-day are communications, facilities and experts to develop Chinese industries. If these funds are used for railway construction, that plan will exactly meet China's wants and additional railways will promote and increase British commerce in China."

A Monument to Friendship

"First let me enumerate briefly the many advantages that would arise from this scheme. The railways would form a great monument of Sino-British relations for as long as the railways lasted, and they would be everlasting. Secondly, the railways when constructed would open up provinces where there are immence resources, and these resources would be transported to supply the wants of the world. Thirdly, the profits of the railways should be applied to the education of young Chinese. Union issued an official decision that Thus the masses would benefit. Fourthly, with increased railway communications developing our great resources, our economic and political conditions would be placed on a sounder footing, giving an impetus to general progress throughout the country which, in its turn, would have a favourable effect as regards not only peace in the Far East but also world-wide peace.

The Pernicious Pin-prick

"I want to say through you to the world that China with her big population and unlimited resources must in the future take a more prominent part in contributing to the peace of the world than she has ever done before. I only wish that our foreign friends knew more of the methods of Government of our great sages and statesmen, men like Yao, Shun, the great Yu and Confucius, who says that within the four seas all men are brethren.

"I am surprised that some of the English newspapers in China continue all sorts of pin-pricking with reference to such cases as the Fengtai incident. Pin-pricking does no good to anybody, particularly when it relates to questions between nation and nation.

Death for Opium-Dealing

"Save for the Opium War the relations of Britain and China have always been extremely friendly, and Britain now holds that the sale of opium in China is morally indefensible. Before you go I wish to say one word more. In the provinces under my jurisdiction I have made a death penalty for anyone found to be in possession of four ounces of white pills or opium. I am determined to rid the country of this evil. I hope that in time to come the other provincial authorities will follow me in this."—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE "Eastern Times" reports that an important meeting of the Peking Communist Association was held in Peking on Friday afternoon last to lodge protests against the action of the Peking Government in placing some 60 students under observation and in censoring the vernacular press and other printed matter as the result of the recent bomb outrage in Dr. Wellington Koo's house.

TROOPS FROM KIANGSI IN CHEKIANG

Retreating from Fukien and in Search of New Abode: Authorities Secret

FROM A CORRESPONDENT.

Hangchow, June 8.

It is reported that 5,000 defeated soldiers arrived at Changshan, Chê., some days ago. Changshan is on the borders of the Kiangsi and Chêkiang Provinces, being about 45 li from the boundary, and 90 li from Yushan in Kiangsi. The soldiers are said to be Chuang Tsz-ping's men who ran short of rations and ammunition, got defeated, and retreated to Changshan, Chè., from Fukien. Chuang Tsz-ping was in command of two army corps in Amoy. Yesterday, army officers proceeded from Zahkow up the Chientang River to Changshan by hydroplane to investigate. Newspapers are forbidden to publish any news relating to this affair as the authorities do not wish it to be known. Last night troops in Hangchow City were seen to be busy in making preparations at 9.30 p.m. carrying provisions and military stores. This is significant, as unless troops will be moving, soldiers are never seen working at this time of the day.

It is rumoured that a British man-of-war may be expected in Hangchow. She, no doubt, will come up the Hangchow Bay, and anchor on the Chientang River by the City, or may proceed as far as Lingpu, as one British man-of-war did a few decades ago.

AN appeal for a distribution of the funds to be remitted from the Boxer Indemnity by the Powers, is made in a telegram from the Kiangsi Provincial Assembly to the Central Government. That province feels that as the money to meet the Boxer payments is collected from all the provinces, it should be turned back to them as an endowment or reserve educational fund. This would tend to give everyone in China an equal opportunity in education, as would not be the case were it to go to one in-[illegible]tion.

GERMAN-CHINESE NEGOTIATIONS

Agreement Said to Have Been Initialled Bringing Big Sums to Peking

VIOLENT OPPOSITION OF SENATE

Peking, June 5.

The Senate received the reports of the Ministers in a hostile manner. Strong opposition developed on the question of the submission of the Sino-German Agreement to Parliament. The Premier was informed that, if he signed the agreement before Parliament approved it, such action would be a violation of the Constitution. The Premier pointed out that Parliament had not been given such a privilege in the case of the Sino-Russian Agreement. A heated discussion ensued.

The Senate finally adopted a motion to call another meeting on Tuesday, at which the Cabinet will be required to give fuller information. Parliamentary circles are of opinion that the Senate's action will delay signature of the agreement, which was imminent.

The Agreement Initialled.

June 6.

The opposition of the Senate undoubtedly surprised the Government, as arrangements had been made to sign the agreement immediately after the report had been submitted in Parliament. A special meeting of the Cabinet was held at 10 o'clock last night in order to determine the course of action. The feeling of the members of the Cabinet was that Parliament was not within its rights in demanding the submission of the agreement before its signing. The meeting, therefore, resolved to go ahead without delay and the representatives of the Ministry of Finance and of the German Bank initialled the agreement at 11 o'clock. Signed copies of the agreement were formally exchanged between the Waichiaopu and the German Legation at noon to-day.

The agreement covers all outstanding Sino-German questions, including the German war indemnity, the restoration of German private property in China, the settlement of German loans and bonds and the rehabilitation of the Deutsch-Asiatische Bank.

Both sides have agreed to withhold publication.

As regards the Reorganization Loan, according to unofficial reports, Germany will hand over to the Chinese Legation in London drawn bonds and coupons to the value of $9,000,000, which the Legation will present for payment to banks, which hold the salt reserve of some $15,000,000, the balance of which will remain in the banks to meet liabilities on reorganization bonds held by other nationaities.

It is understood that the Government have already received advances from Chinese banks on this agreement thus tiding over Dragon Festival.

June 7.

The Premier, Mr. Sun Pao-chi, Dr. Wellington Koo and the Minister of Finance, Mr. Wang Koh-ming, yesterday afternoon reported the signing of the Sino-German agreement to the President.

The Chinese and German officials decline to discuss the agreement and the obvious intention is to maintain strict secrecy for the time being. The reason for this may lie in the explanation, which the Premier, Mr. Sun Pao-chi, gave to Parliament, when asking that the report regarding the German Reorganization loan and bonds should be held strictly confidential, namely that the matter was being discussed between Germany and other Powers.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE RUSSO-CHINESE AGREEMENT

Extraordinary Secrecy of Its Conclusion: A Further Conference to Sit on Debateable Points: China's Diplomatic Victory Yet to be Proved

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Peking, June 3.

Bewilderment predominated when the first news of China's recognition of Russia was announced on Saturday. The negotiations prior to the signing of the agreement, declarations, and so forth, were so secretly carried on that even the Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs was unaware of what was happening. He was called [illegible] to the ceremony, and appeared without the regulation morning coat, being oblivious of the occasion. His apology was a tribute to the backstairs methods with which the Koo-Karakhan conversations have been invested. Secret diplomacy has never had such arch-champions as the signatories of Saturday's agreement.

And what is the result of all this palaver? Merely the Wang-Karakhan agreement re-shuffled, with a "t" crossed here and "i" dotted there. Dr. Wellington Koo has scored nothing over his predecessor Dr. C. T. Wang according to whether his sense of humour is stronger than his ruffled feelings.

It is emphasized that China was able to obtain in the new agreement a repudiation of post-Tsarist Russian treaties with third parties in the clause whereby she agreed herself to cancel all treaties with third parties which affected Russia's sovereignty or interests. This addition, to a layman, merely crosses the "t" of reciprocity which is inherent in such a document as has just been signed by Messrs. Wellington Koo and Leon Karakhan.

Soviets Grip on Mongolia.

As to the absence of such a definite point in the Wang-Karakhan understanding caused by [illegible] which were prejudicial to China's [illegible] course refers to Russia's irregular proceedings in Outer Mongolia, but the acknowledgment of China's sovereignty in that region is implicit in the understanding, and will undoubtedly be placed in an unmistakable light in the treaty that is to be negotiated.

In this connexion it is contended that China has secured a clearer statement of Russia's intention of withdrawing her troops from Outer Mongolia by the substitution of the word "questions" for "conditions" in the following clause:

"The Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics [illegible] the withdrawal of the troops of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics from Outer Mongolia—[illegible] the time limit for the withdrawal of such troops and the measures to be adopted in the interests of the safety of the frontiers—will be settled by the Conference provided in Article 2 of the present Agreement, it will effect the complete withdrawal of all the troops of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics from Outer Mongolia."

It is difficult to appreciate the importance that is now being attached to the change, seeing that the "questions" or "conditions" are left over to the treaty-makers, and that, in the phraseology of the agreement, they are synonymous terms. In the Chinese text, it would not be surprising to hear that the character is identical with that used in the Wang-Karakhan text. At any rate it is known that when the draft was considered it was a point whether "terms" or "conditions" should be used, as both were rendered alike in the Chinese. And as the "terms," "questions" or "conditions" are named in the [illegible] general principles, why quibble about the matter of reference to the Conference?

Russian Property in China.

Annexed to the agreement on general principles are several declarations, one at least of which is considered to be a distinct advance on the original agreement. It refers to the transference of the real estate and movable property of the Russian Orthodox Mission. Instead of reverting to Russia, as was provided for in the Note between Dr. Wang and Mr. Karakhan,

"The question of the transfer or other [illegible] disposal of same will be jointly determined at the Conference provided in Article II of the Agreement on General Principles in accordance with the internal laws and regulations existing in China regarding property holding in the inland."

This was one of the questions which Dr. Wang was asked to make [illegible] he made certain, I am given to understand, that the transfer would be in accordance with Chinese law prohibiting foreigners from owning land in the interior. If this is so, then even in this respect China has gained nothing over the Wang-Karakhan instrument.

Twixt Cup and Lip.

Now that Dr. Wellington Koo has put his name and that of China to recognition of Russia, what is to be the outcome? The Conference will not begin work seriously for several months. The heat of summer is given as the excuse for the delay in coming down to "brass tacks." It is an admission that the fashioning of a treaty will be a long-drawn-out process. Judging by the experience in England the Conference will not find its way as strewn with roses as the ceremony attendant on according Russia recognition. In the meantime the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics is in possession of considerable power over its enemies, the White Russians in China, and is in a position to proceed against some of them in the Chinese courts. China is eager to curry favour with the Soviet, and would have to counte[illegible] the prosecution of certain Whites by the [illegible] Reds. It is [illegible] to imagine the [illegible] would be [illegible] which were [illegible] would be the misappropriation of Boxer Indemnity moneys rightly belonging to the government of the Russian people by the representatives of an ousted government! That would be a contretemps indeed—not only for the White Russians but for China as well. There are some people with a legal turn of mind who argue that the Soviet is in possession of extraterritorial rights until the signing of the treaty embodying the general principles and declarations; but on that point the writer does not dare to express an opinion. But if that were the case, and the Union cared to take advantage of such a technical point, China would have stirred up a pretty kettle of fish by recognizing the Soviet.

Flirting with Chang Tso-lin.

It appears that the conversations between the Minister of Foreign Affairs and the Soviet envoy have extended over a month. On behalf of Mr. Karakhan, who was skilfully misleading the public up to May 22, it is contended that the negotiations only took shape last Monday, six days before the signing of the agreement.

Many people would like to know what impelled the negotiations to take such a decided turn toward mutual satisfaction. A reasonable answer would be—Mukden. Ever since March 14 Mr. Karakhan has been flirting with Chang Tso-lin. And he has made no particular secret about it. On his part, the Manchurian warlord has allowed it to be understood that as head of the Independent Three Eastern Provinces he is perfectly willing to sign an agreement similar to the Wang-Karakhan draft. After the hitch ten weeks ago, Marshal Chang invited Karakhan to Mukden, but for some reason or other another envoy went to the Manchurian capital. It is said that Chang, while eager to sign an undertaking with Moscow, was not to be put off with a co-signatory of lesser importance than the Soviet representative in Peking. Evidently, Karakhan, or Moscow, thought better of his flirtation, or, what is more tenable considered that his bluff had worked or gone far enough; while Wellington Koo, who cannot have viewed the overtures in any happy mood, was only too anxious to compose China's differences with Russia after China's militarists had expressed themselves so strongly in favour of the renewal of relations on the terms settled by Dr. Wang and Mr. Karakhan—terms which Dr. Koo and his colleagues had rejected.

Karakhan Eager to Get Russian Legation

Peking, June 7.

Views were exchanged between the Diplomatic Corps and the Waichiaopu concerning the Russian Legation. It is understood that the Diplomatic Corps will discuss the [illegible] meeting [illegible] Tuesday.

[illegible] to obtain [illegible] to take over the [illegible] Russia's Pacific service.

Soviet to Become an Active Power in the Far East: Trade Opportunities

Moscow, June 8.

The Premier, M. Rykoff, in an interview said that the Russo-Chinese agreement would make the Soviet an active power in the Far East and would open up unlimited opportunities of trade. The earlier draft agreement was not signed owing to pressure on the Chinese Government from France and America, but public opinion in China realized the urgent need of the agreement. The document recently signed differed from its predecessors inasmuch as the Soviet had avoided all clauses likely to humiliate Eastern peoples. Mr. Rykoff added that it would soon be illustrated whether Japan would show equal indifference to foreign pressure.—Reuter.

Chang Tso-lin's Refusal to Participate in Karakhan Agreement

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Peking, June 11.

I understand that Marshal Chang Tso-lin has issued a statement saying that he will not recognize the Russo-Chinese agreement.

This means that he will prevent Bolshevik action in the Chinese Eastern Railway zone in fulfilment of any agreement with the Peking Government.

Marshal Chang has always intended to settle the status of the railway himself. The Bolsheviks used him as a lever against the Peking Government, but this flirtation has now reacted against them, for no agreement concerning the Chinese Eastern Railway is applicable without his concurrence.

Special Arrangement to Be Signed.

Reuter's Peking correspondent says that the Harbin Chief of Police, in an order published in a local paper, asserts that until a special arrangement between Marshal Chang Tso-lin and the Soviets is signed, the affairs of the Chinese Eastern Railway and its employees must remain unaltered. The order goes on to say that any person guilty of wilfully dismissing or replacing employees of the Chinese Eastern Railway will be severely punished. The Chief of Police then instructs subordinates to watch responsible officials of the C.E.R. lest they leave their posts and go abroad, and also to watch regarding their dismissal by anybody.—Renter's Pacific Service.

Attitude of Diplomatic Body Regarding Custody of Russian Legation

Peking, June 11.

Replying to a Note from the Waichiaopu, dated June 9, concerning the Russian Legation, M. Oudendijk, Netherlands Minister and acting Doyen of the Diplomatic Body, this afternoon acknowledges receipt of the Note and quotes it as saying that, according to a Note from the Diplomatic Body on October 4, 1920, the Ministers entrusted the custody of the Russian Legation to Prince Koudacheff, while in a Note dated January 11, 1921, they said that, in view of Prince Koudacheff's departure from Peking, custody of the Legation had been handed over to the Netherlands Minister until the arrival in Peking of a representative of a recognized Russian Government. The Waichiaopu remarks that these Notes were only acknowledged and as China has now recognized the Soviet Government the Waichiaopu is of the opinion that the Russian Legation, as well as the articles appertenant thereto, should be returned to the representative of the Soviet Government, in accordance with the agreement which China has recently concluded with the latter.

The reply goes on: "Finally the Waichiaopu requests me to bring the matter to the attention of interested resident Ministers and to reply. I laid Your Excellency's Note before the representatives of the signatory Powers of the Protocol of 1901. The said representatives considered the Note and they feel impelled to draw your attention to the following two facts:—(1) that the Note of October 4, 1920, stated that by virtue of the conventional status of the Diplomatic Quarter the representatives of the signatory Powers assumed the responsibility for guarding the Russian Legation until the re-establishment of a Russian representative recognized by the Powers, and (2) that the Chinese Government, when informed of this measure, declared that it would not be responsible to any party whatsoever for the safeguarding of the Russian Legation.

"The Waichiaopu will understand from the foregoing," the reply states in conclusion, "that the foreign representatives concerned can under the existing circumstances only consider the question of handing over the former Russian Legation if a request in that connexion should be addressed to them by the diplomatic representative duly accredited to the Chinese Government by the Russian Government."

M. Oudendijk explains that the Protocol representatives designated him their intermediary in this matter.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Likely to Increase Friction Between Mukden and Loyang: Those Romanoff Notes

Peking, June 12.

The Harbin report with regard to Marshal Chang Tso-lin's attitude on the Sino-Russian agreement has caused much interest in Peking in view of former reports to the contrary.

Unofficial reports from Mukden state that Marshal Chang insists on getting control of Outer Mongolia. He is urging the Soviet to agree to accept Romanoff notes, which he acquired before their depreciation, at gold value.

The situation is thought likely to increase the tension between Marshals Wu Pei-fu and Chang Tso-lin. It is also believed that it will weaken the Sino-Russian agreement, which is certainly not strengthened by Notes which the Japanese Legation has sent to M. Karakhan and the Waichiaopu, insisting that Japan's acquired privileges and interests in the Chinese Eastern Railway shall not be affected by the agreement. The text of these notes has not been divulged, but it is understood that the "acquired privileges" relate to the through traffic between the Chinese Eastern Railway and the South Manchurian Railway, while the "interests" include Y.10,000,000, which the Chinese Eastern Railway owes for materials supplied.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

[A traveller reaching Shanghai yesterday stated that the Romanoff notes, which Marshal Chang says he acquired at gold value, have appreciated 300 per cent. during the last few days.]

CUSTOMS REVISION

All Powers Concerned Decline to Partake in Conference

Peking, June 11.

All Powers concerned have now declined to participate in the preliminary Tariff Conference proposed by China, mostly on the ground that the time was inopportune.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

LINCHENG AND MIXED COURT

Peking, June 7.

The Diplomatic Corps sent Notes to the Waichiaopu on June 5 (1) containing affidavits on the Lincheng claims and (2) regarding the rendition of the Shanghai Mixed Court. The latter is described as conciliatory in character.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

ACCORDING to the "Shenpao" the Ministry of Foreign Affairs has invited suggestions from all parts of the country as to the disposal of "White" Russians living here, in order to decide what steps shall be taken to deport them.

A PREMIER WHO MAY NOT RESIGN

Mr. Sun Pao-chi's Unhappy Lot Between Militarists and Politicians

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT

Peking, June 4.

It would be interesting to know just how many times Sun Pao-chi has tried to resign the Premiership. It seems to be a case of crossing the t's of his as mah-jongg; but when his friends take him seriously at the game that Confucius was supposed to play, they refuse to pay him the same compliment when it comes to resignation of the second most responsible office in the land.

That the Premier is serious himself there is not the slightest doubt. He was beckoned out of the calm backwater of his Customs appointment much against his inclination: and his disgust with the turbulent waters of office intensifies the deeper he gets into them. And as the Minister of Finance, Wang Koh-ming, hasn't extended much help, his lot is altogether unenviable.

During the last week the capital has been full of rumours and reports that he had resigned again. The capital has also been full of counter-rumours and counter-reports that he had done nothing of the sort. They fought each other in the local papers, and now it has been established beyond a peradventure that after a gallant effort to extricate himself from the cares of the Premiership, Mr. Sun has again resigned himself to the withdrawal of his resignation.

The Premier has more worries than probably any other Premier in any other country. On one side he has the militarists to contend with; on the other, the politicians. And what militarists, what politicians! When the militarists are not at war the politicians are; while the higher-ups and lower-downs are in running the nation's affairs without taking him into consideration. The Tientsin negotiations [illegible] German bonds question [illegible]

No Rest for Premiers.

It is said that the Cabinet put very strong pressure on the Prime Minister to induce him to withdraw his latest resignation. Dr. Wellington Koo is stated to have been the most insistent in his arguments with Mr. Sun. Probably the Minister of Foreign Affairs reminded the Premier that the Cabinet had attained a very strong position as a result of the signing of the Sino-Russian draft of general principles. There is no doubt about this, no government action of recent times has gained such complete support from people, politicians, and militarists. There is something uncanny, as a matter of fact, about such unanimity from such contrary factions, and Mr. Sun deserves a rest on his see-saw for being the head of a government that put it through.

But there is no rest for modern Chinese Premiers. The M. P.'s have already sounded a complaint that Wellington Koo did not submit his understanding with M. Karakhan to Parliament for approval. They are also intent on having unto themselves the dispensation of the whole of the patronage contained in Ministerial appointments, right down to the humblest clerk. They seem to disapprove on principle of anything Mr. Sun does or might be doing or is in a position to do.

MARSHALS Wu Pei-fu and Hsiao Yao-nan, as well as the Tuchun of Honan, have telegraphed to the Ministry of Communications urging that immediate action be taken to repair the Peking-Hankow Railway bridge over the Yellow River as the present structure is unsafe and is a danger to the lives of the public.

MARSHAL Chi Shieh-yuan, the Nanking Tuchun, has recommended the appointment of Mr. Sun Fa-chu, former Governor of Shansi, as Civil Governor of Kiangsi (states the Chinese press). Gen. Wang Yu, Commissioner of Defence in Southern Anhui, has been recommended for the post of Tuli. This [illegible] our report of several days ago to the effect that the Government had decided to meet the request of Marshals Chi and Wu Pei-fu and dismiss Gen. Tsai Ting-kai from office.

THE HOUSEWIFE'S BUDGET

June 9.

MR. Philip Snowden, is entitled to consider himself a lucky fellow. Seventeen years ago he published a book entitled "A Socialist's Budget" in which he sketched with a free hand the kind of Budget he would propose, if and when he became Chancellor of the Exchequer. At that time it is likely that most of his readers thought he had as much chance of ever bringing in his ideal budget as he had of becoming a Living Buddha in Tibet. But the impossible happened as it has a way of doing for some people. Mr. Snowden not only became Chancellor of the Exchequer but, owing to the excellent administration of his predecessor in office, he found himself heir to a surplus of £48,329,000. Like one of the chosen people he entered into possession of cities that he builded not and reaped fields on which he had bestowed no labour. And so he immediatly set to work to transform the insubstantial pageant of his dream into a positive reality.

The Budget which he introduced into the house of Commons on April 29 has been called a "Housewife's Budget." It took one step towards the realization of that dream of radical reformers, "a free breakfast table." The duty on sugar was reduced from two-pence three-farthings to one penny-farthing per pound. Tea, coffee and cocoa duties were cut in half, (tea from 8d. to 4d. per pound). The entertainments tax was abolished on all payments up to 6d. and reduced on payments up to 1/3d. Cheaper food and cheaper recreation; a fairy godmother at the treasury could hardly have been kinder to a certain section of the tax-paying public. There is no doubt that these reductions will make the budget popular though we are also sure that Mr. Snowden would have introduced them equally readily had they been likely to have the contrary effect. He is embodying the convictions of a lifetime in his first legislative effort. That it will probably win votes for his party is doubtless gratifying to its author, but we do not think that was the primary reason for his action. It may be more than a coincidence that one of the first moves of the Labour party after the introduction of this "Housewife's Budget" was a proposal to reduce the legal age at which women are entitled to vote to twenty-one years. If this were carried into effect, it would give women a preponderating voice in the affairs of the state and for, perhaps, the first time in history a great Empire would be actually under petticoat government. We do not think this is likely to happen—yet, but the Labour party believes that it can count on the women's vote to a greater extent than either of the parties in opposition; it would not be wonderful, therefore, if they attempted to legislate so as to increase the number of women voters on the parliamentary roll.

The budget will be welcomed not only for the actual relief it gives in taxation, but it will be hailed as an earnest of the Government's intention to reduce, by every means that may legitimately be used, the H.C.L., that bogey that haunts the mind of the householder nowadays. People do not resent having to pay a high price for the necessaries of life if they are convinced that the occasion justifies the sum asked for. It is the suspicion that there is something artificial and unfair about the present exaggerated cost of most things that provokes them to wrath. It is the sense of being "done;" of being at the mercy of a house-builders' ring, or a railway combine, or a coal-merchants' association. A hidden hand pulling unseen strings that somehow evolves a combination of circumstances inimical to the interests of the general public and against which it is impossible to struggle. This conviction, even if it be unfounded, begets in the mind of the common man a dull resentment against some person or persons unknown that finds vent sometimes in unexpected action at the polls, simply because there is no other medium through which it can express itself.

A Court of Inquiry to consider the question of wages in the coal-mining areas of Great Britain has been sitting at Home for some time. The court found that the miners were underpaid; but the masters were able to show that, taking the industry as a whole, there were no excessive profits and, indeed, no margin whereby wages might be raised. One correspondent wrote to the papers pointing out that in 1913 the average price of a ton of coal was seventeen shillings and sixpence; now it is forty-one shillings. He wanted to know what had become of all this vast increase. The Under-Secretary for Mines wrote to the Coal-Merchants Federation asking for some information in this direction and received in reply a statement in which the Secretary pathetically complains that "the merchants are disappointed at finding captious criticism in place of the appreciation to which they felt themselves entitled." They did not produce the figures asked for because that would have been giving away trade information, but this attitude of aloofness, too often adopted by the great corporations, does more to alienate public sympathy than any criticism levelled against them by trade union speakers.

CHINA'S LEADERS AND BRITAIN

June 10.

FOR so many moons has Great Britain been a sort of whipping post in China for all the misdemeanours real or imaginary of other nationalities, the fons et origo in Young China's eyes of all their misfortunes, that the compliments reported on two successive days from two such outstanding figures as Marshal Chang Tso-lin and Marshal Wu Pei-fu are slightly bewildering. The latter in an interview with Reuter's correspondent desires, "as a private citizen, to express his gratitude to the British Government and people for their friendly act in remitting some £11,000,000 being the unpaid balance of the Boxer Indemnity; while Marshal Chang unexpectedly arrives at the British Consulate in Mukden on the King's Birthday to take a leading part in the celebrations of the day. In describing these events as slightly bewildering we would not be thought guilty of discourteous flippancy. It is easily imagined that Marshal Chang's visit was paid with all ceremony that the occasion demanded, all the gracefulness of which high Chinese officials are master; and it is clear that he specially desired to show friendliness, in which spirit his attention is heartily reciprocated. It recalls the days when meetings could take place between Chinese and British officials for other purposes than the exchange of notes—the pin-pricks which many others besides Marshal Wu Pei-fu most cordially deplore.

It is interesting to see that Marshal Wu advocates spending the Boxer Indemnity on railway construction in China, saying that his views entirely coincide in this matter with those of certain British subjects who have pressed this idea. He says:

What China wants to-day are communications, facilities and experts to develop Chinese industries. If these funds are used for railway construction, that plan will exactly meet China's wants and additional railways will promote and increase British commerce in China. The railways would form a great monument of Sino-British relations for as long as the railways lasted, and they would be everlasting. They would further open up secluded provinces, develop resources and contribute funds for the education of Young Chinese. Our readers may remember that this suggestion was first put forward through the columns of the "North-China Daily News" by Sir Robert Ho Tung about a year ago. He specially mentioned the completion of the Canton-Hankow railway as a most desirable object, and dwelt on the fact that, whereas the Indemnity money if devoted primarily to education would never be more than the endowment it was at the outset, by being used for railways would achieve a double purpose and might contribute to education indefinitely. At the present moment the British Government, we are told, is at work on a scheme for the allocation of the Boxer money, and we are glad to see that Mr. Ramsay MacDonald has resisted a suggestion that the granting of it should be made dependent on the amendment of the Trademark Law. The latter is in no sense to be condoned. But we have no hesitation in saying that that question should be kept entirely distinct from the remission of the Boxer Indemnity. It is to be hoped that Marshal Wu's suggestion may be known at Home in time to be properly considered before the British Government's scheme is published.

But would Young China see in the use of this money for railway construction an infringement of sovereign rights? The question leads us on to Marshal Wu's remarks about pin-pricking.

"I want to say through you to the world (he tells the correspondent) that China with her big population and unlimited resources must in the future take a more prominent part in contributing to the peace of the world than she has ever done before.

"I am surprised that some of the English newspapers in China continue all sorts of pin-pricking with reference to such cases as the Fengtai incident. Pin-pricking does no good to anybody, particularly when it relates to questions between nation and nation.

We cordially agree. But the apparent implication that foreign newspapers alone are guilty in the matter cannot quite pass unchallenged. Inasmuch as the Fengtai incident is about to be brought to trial, we do not wish to comment further on it than to say this, that a foreigner was seriously knocked about, in such circumstances as clearly to justify an inquiry; that no attempt was made to fix the responsibility and that the Waichiaopu, when questioned by the British Minister, gave his an entirely false account of the supposed trial of the allegedly guilty man; and that the British Government was obliged to cable out instructions for strong pressure to be exerted in order to get the most ordinary dictates of justice fulfilled. Can Marshal Wu fairly say that it showed unreasonableness on the part of English newspapers in China to complain, especially remembering the large number of unrequited outrages of which foreigners of all nationalities have been victims in China during the past two or three years? The point must be pressed both because of the powerful position which Marshal Wu holds and because of his own character and reputation. By every account he is a man of high integrity and sense of justice. Admitting that there are things in the foreign treaties obnoxious to China which her national pride justifies her desiring to abolish, the maltreatment of foreigners outside areas protected by their own police or men-of-war is a matter entirely beyond treaties, invólving merely the question of the ordinary usage of civilized countries. The unvaried series of protests and evasions which have characterized dealings between Chinese and foreigners in recent years are infinitely disheartening and distasteful. But when the latter are continually being despoiled, kidnapped and even slain, and there is no evidence of any attempt by China's rulers to bring the guilty to justice, it cannot be wondered at that other foreigners complain. To do so is not rightly to be call pin-pricking. When the cause is removed, we can assure Marshal Wu that the complaints will very quickly cease.

THE GAMBLING IN LANGKATS

June 11.

ALTHOUGH the June settlement day is still a fortnight or more away, it is already evident that it will be of a particularly grievous nature. For several months past heavy gambling has been going on in Langkats—perhaps with special reference to the Shanghai Exploration and Development Co. of the three component companies—and the shares have been pushed up from 11 to as high, we believe, as 36. All this without a shadow of justification and simply by the circulation of rumours of fabulous mines possessed by the Exploration Co. In actual fact we believe the Company has what should ultimately prove a good coal mine. But its output is still a long way from justifying the boom in shares; were the coal produced, the means of shipping it away are still deficient; and finally, the Exploration Co. owes some seven lakhs to the Loan Co., which it must first liquidate out of profits, and is, moreover, about to announce a new issue of capital, which will tend still further to reduce its dividend-paying capacity. All these facts are common property, the gamblers cannot plead ignorance of them, but still the gamble has gone on. Twice the buyers have been carried, in the December and March settlements, at interest as high as 35 per cent. per annum. Now the evil day can be postponed no more. Those who have sold short stand to make enormous sums—on paper. But their chances of realizing their profits are small. As usual the shares are slumping even more rapidly than they rose. One more chapter has to be added to the already too lengthy tale of wild unprincipled gambling for which the Shanghai stock exchange market is unfortunately notorious.

We shall probably be told that we can do no good by calling public attention to this gamble and may indeed only make the settlement harder. The answer to this is, first that we do not believe anything published or unpublished can make the settlement worse than it is likely to be; and secondly that it is high time there were an end of glossing things over, of winking at outrageous gambling until a crisis arrives and then of combining to stave it off and to assist those concerned in it somehow to pull through, to take a breathing space and then to begin all over again on something else; and if Shanghai is to realize the destiny so clearly marked out for it as the commercial, industrial and financial centre of the Far East, a strong effort must be made to render impossible these intermittent orgies of speculation. It is an astounding, an almost inconceivable thing, that we can hear to-day of this man being two lakhs down and somebody else even more, and on the morrow, they appear in their usual haunts as smiling as ever, their luxurious mode of life "moults no feather" and in a few months or less they will be heard of as gambling again as wildly as ever, though it is common knowledge that in all but name they are utterly bankrupt. If they were publicly bankrupted and forced to remove themselves to other regions, it would be an infinite gain for the legitimate commerce and industry of Shanghai and their creditors would certainly be no worse off than they are already.

There is further an urgent need that the whole system of stock exchange dealing should be radically revised. An attempt was made at this after the rubber boom, and, in particular, a good deal was heard of new forms of contract designed to show whether a broker was dealing for a third party or merely jobbing. But the repentance of 1910 has come to naught. And reform to be effective must go a good deal deeper than the shape or colour of contracts. What is principally needed is that operators, dealing in futures, should be compelled to put up a margin. Settlement days also should not be so far apart: in London, we believe, they have to take place every ten days. And lastly it is much to be desired that a broker should have to register his transactions in order to put a limit on the operations of men of no substance. Such measures, it will be said, would restrict business to such a degree that there would not be enough to go round. That is precisely the object in view. If the tone of the market is to be wholesome, if trade is to be protected from the violent intermittent shocks to which the gamblers' operation's expose it, the dealings of the stock exchange ought to be brought back to the limits of legitimate business. The big banks, vitally interested as they are in the trade of Shanghai, have the power to enforce these reforms and it is earnestly to be wished that they would use it.

TOWNS AND THEIR CHARACTER

June 11.

IN a recent article in the London "Spectator" the writer draws attention to the way in which many modern towns are planned, or rather are not planned, for it would appear as if they had been allowed to grow up without any sense of order or thought for the future welfare of their inhabitants. "Where there's smoke there's brass (money)" says a Lancashire proverb and there we have in a

...ntrasts the attitude that many ... take ... regarded as places in which all sorts of inconveniences in the way of dirt and disorder can be put up with so long as wages are good and work is regular. It must not be thought, however, that the inhabitants expect to spend the whole of their lives in such surroundings. Those at any rate who are of a sober, industrious, saving nature have vague notions of the time when they will be able to retire and live in a cottage in the country. To them the town is a sort of temporary abode only to be used for the purposes of laying by a competence for old age, or else a place to stay in until a better job offers elsewhere. This is the traditional frame of mind of dwellers in Shanghai and to it many of the evils from which we suffer are due—not least among ... Hongkew creek to which attention is drawn to-day.

Professor Adshead in his book "Town Planning and Town Development" has some severe things to say about the modern industrial towns. "The smoke," he says, "can be endured with stoicism as a temporary evil and so two or three generations have passed their lives in such places as Burnley, Wigan, St. Helens, and the Five Towns, because the men who made the towns never faced the fact that they were going to live in them, but believed themselves only tented and encamped. The miner has no notion, like the peasant, of settling on the land, and of building; he is hasty, is satisfied with a cubicle, a gin-palace and a chapel, and this makes his town." The professor then goes on to add that "all the manufacturing towns of to-day are practically miners' towns."

Now considering that the dream of a cottage in the country very rarely comes true and often when it does the result is so disappointing that a hurried removal is made back to the old town, we ought to get the idea firmly fixed in our minds that towns are not places that ought to be built up in any sort of fashion to cope merely with present necessities and conditions but rather as an arrangement of streets, houses and public buildings that will have about them an air of permanence and an appearance of beauty.

Surely the advance of modern science ought to enable us to make our towns and cities in whatever country we may live more beautiful than we do at present. The Greeks were able to erect the magnificent Parthenon: we with the rich harvest of mathematical research at disposal for the most part construct drab rows of jerry-building. It is not to be forgotten that the appearance of a town has its effect upon the character of its inhabitants, and the dreary, standardized, cheap-looking town will cause the people who live in it to have a hard task to live a clean life. Many students of industrial life will go so far as to say that makeshift towns make makeshift inhabitants, and see a connexion ... and a distaste ... and contain beautiful public buildings ... and leaning over the counters of its saloons will steadily diminish.

PRUNES AND PRISMS

June 12.

ENOUGH, we think readers will agree, has been written on "Dress at Henli"—"Old Correspondent" sufficiently criticized or championed, the "creatures" adequately castigated or comforted. Not since the ever-famous controversy on lap-dogs and lapping has there been so spirited a discussion; and in passing, to refute those who believe that the editor deliberately invents letters in order to excite replies and fill his columns for nothing, let us once again state that no letter we publish is ever solicited nor is any member of the staff allowed to contribute a "letter to the editor"; these correspondence columns are an open forum in which readers are as far as possible allowed to say what they like. It might further be stated that the greatest care is taken to preserve anonymity where that is desired, and unless a writer gives himself away, no one else will do so.

As in every other controversy there is, of course, much to be said on both sides of the subject started by "Old Correspondent's" letter. If it be read in the most extreme reactionary sense—and in justice to the writer, we do not think it ought to be—there is much in it with which one may well disagree. Personally we do not think women look as well in knickerbockers as in frocks: but if they choose to don them for sporting purposes there appears no reason why they should not do so. And if they like to row in bathing-dresses, by all means let them, though, from personal experience, one might think they would have wanted something thicker between themselves and the seat. Twenty-five years ago the young ladies of the Gaiety chorus sang a song about

> Oh fie, cigarette; oh sly cigarette
> Why do you teach me to teach me to love you so,
> When I have to pretend that I don't, you know?

—which fairly reflected a general attitude towards feminine smokers that seems now as extinct as the dodo. Mixed bathing has only been tolerated during the past few years. Would anyone seriously argue that this delightful practice is harmful to morals and behaviour and ought to be given up? As for everyday fashions of dress, the present writer has no hesitation in saying that he likes open-necked blouses (or whatever the correct term is), short skirts and bare arms; they appear in every way healthier and better than the buttoned-up habilaments of the feminine friends of his youth and he hopes that ladies will have the sense not to let fashion rob them of these pleasant styles.

Yet we think that most of those who rushed to the "creatures'" defence, missed the real point of "Old Correspondent's" letter. It was touched on by a Chinese reader, but he misunderstood what was meant by the objection raised to girls in bathing dresses "rubbing shoulders with natives." If the mere contact with Chinese were what "Old Correspondent" disliked, then the girls might have worn sealskin jackets instead of bathing dresses and the criticism would have been the same. But no such discourtesy towards Chinese was intended. The whole point was that the bathing-dresses, promiscuously worn along the towing path and not expressly for bathing, would lead the Chinese rustic either to think that the wearers thereof were no better than they should be, or, more probably, to acquire a low idea of the general behaviour of Western women. The average Chinese is not yet within reasonable distance of ... His attitude towards and classi... of women is quite ... become wives and mothers and are theoretically, if not physically, as much secluded as the charges of a Spanish duenna; and there are those who become something else. And when he ponders on the liberties assumed by some Western women nowadays unrebuked, applying to them his own scale of valuation, he not unnaturally begins to imagine all sorts of things that are not.

It may be said that there are so many things about the West which the East can never understand, and vice versâ, that one more or less does not matter and that anyway it does not affect us what the Chinese rustic thinks. But surely it is a great mistake to argue in that way and especially as regards women, towards whom we justly hold that the Western attitude is nobler and more reverential than the Eastern. To take an extreme case; it used to be the practice in India and we think Hongkong, and may be still, to forbid entrance to any British members of a certain class once not mentioned in polite society. The reason is obvious. But apart altogether from questions of women's dress, it is felt by many people that we foreigners in China are not nearly as careful about our behaviour as we ought to be and that, from stock exchange gambling on the heads-I-win-tails-you-lose principle at the one end to kicking a ricsha coolie at the other, we are guilty of many laxities which give the Chinese a wrong and harmful idea of foreign ways and lower foreign prestige in their eyes. We are, in China, an outpost of Western civilization: in some ways it is inferior to Eastern standards, in others it is immeasurably superior; and surely it behoves us all to remember that we supply the gauge whereby our respective countries will be judged. For nobody is quicker than a Chinese to pick out the man who lives up to the best standards of his own nation and to respect him accordingly.

TARIFF CONFERENCE

June 13.

IF Reuter's report that the tariff revision conference is not to take place is correct; and there is every reason to believe that it is, China has again misplayed. For at the Washington Conference all the Powers present had agreed to such a conference and it would have been held in Peking, had not those over-clever men in the Waichiaopu and the over-zealous supporters of sovereignty in the provinces not forced even the best friends of China to lose faith in her ability to live up to a treaty obligation. The Tariff Conference assumes that, old contractual relations having been lived up to, the Powers agree to make new contracts in the expectation that they will be lived up to also. But immediately after the Washington Conference China began to break treaty obligations and long standing customs.

The levying of illegal taxation in the provinces, loyal and disloyal, and the arguments used by those favouring these taxes, could only serve to convince foreigners that not even the elements of contractual relations were understood by China's rulers. One famous educator, for instance, suggested that Kiangsu need not abide by a treaty between China and a foreign Power, such a treaty being limited to the relations between the national government and that Power. That sort of sophistry does not even go down with the unknowing. It does not smack of ignorance. It is not the result of ignorance. It is an isolated example of continuous and clearly thought out insincerity and is based upon an assumption that because the foreigners no longer use gunboats to enforce their rights, anyone may trample on them. Unfortunately for China these men forget that China has a long way to go before all the clauses in all the treaties to which she objects are changed and that they can only be changed by mutual consent. Considerable gains came to China as a result of the war and the attendant elimination of Germany and Russia from the family of nations. But it may be a very long time before a similar accident will bring to China such great gains in her effort to gain equality with the Powers, an equality to which she would be entitled by her size and population, were it not for just such circumstances as the inveterate habit of "doing one in the eye" when the occasion offers.

Would it not then appear to be logical for China to make a case for herself, to be so just, upright and efficient in her dealings that no excuse could be found for not doing as she asked? That would appear logical. Yet it does not seem to present itself to the Chinese as a suitable solution of the problem.

THE LIBERTY OF THE BOLSHEVIST

June 13.

THERE are some words which appear to have the power of driving those who use them demented. When we say that at the word "imperialism" anybody of Soviet tendencies at once loses whatever reason he may still have in him, it is, of course, open for him to retort that the word "Bolshevism" has the same effect on its antagonists. Against this, nobody yet has exactly defined "imperialism," while on the contrary the world sees in Russia itself the clearest example of what Bolshevism means. When, therefore, Mr. Karakhan invites the professors and students of Peking University, as he is reported on another page to-day to have been doing last Saturday, to contemplate the blessed freedom in which his country is supposed to be basking, the said professors and students have a mass of facts by which to test the reality of the alluring picture Mr. Karakhan draws of liberty under a Bolshevist Government.

It is, of course, the great glory of Bolshevism, on which it never tires of pluming itself, that it has thrown off the tyranny of Tsarism. We have no wish to defend the Tsarist régime: it was no doubt guilty of much misgovernment and political oppression. But at least, so long as men and women refrained from political intrigue, they were free to live their own lives, free to trade as they pleased, to enjoy the fruits of their labours, to practise the religion which is so deeply a part of the Russian nature. None of these things is allowed by Bolshevist standards of freedom. The bed of Procrustes was not more ferociously rigid than the Communist scale of measurement to which all Russians must be lopped or stretched. For example: during the last months of his life, Lenin clearly perceived the impracticability of Communism, at least from the economic point of view, and private trading had been permitted once more to raise its head. With Lenin dead, the extremists who have replaced him in government discover that private trading is the enemy of the State and, although apparently it cannot be forbidden altogether, we have lately been told of special taxation designed to cripple private initiative and restrict all advantage to State commerce and industry. Again, as already said, Russians are deeply and instinctively religious. The Bolshevists, finding in religion a rival to their own supremacy, have stripped the churches bare, persecuted and imprisoned the priests, and preached atheism in the schools. Finally, because the Russian is not to be robbed of his beliefs, the Soviet has formed a Red church and, in order to give it prestige with the multitude, has invented the lie that Archbishop Tikhon, the great apostle of the Orthodox Church in Russia, has joined their revolutionary priesthood. Even the law courts must administer law according to Red ideas or not at all. At the end of last month, seventeen judges, magistrates and others of the Supreme Court in Petrograd were sentenced to death for blackmail, extortion, illegal release of prisoners and accepting bribes from houses of ill-fame. At once the central executive of the Soviet telegraphed from Moscow ordering these sentences to be suspended.

That the Soviet budget this year shows a deficit of gold roubles 400,000,000 is further evidence of the fruits of freedom which may be commended to the notice of the Peking University. Also, the fact that Moscow voluntarily promised so long ago as in 1919 to give back Mongolia to China and as yet has not shown the faintest sign of keeping its promise proves that, whatever else Bolshevist freedom implies, it certainly includes complete liberty to be forsworn. Finally, the professors and students of Peking may bethink them that, among all the victims of the Russian Revolution, nobody has suffered more than the intelligentsia, the people of their own class. Just as in the French Revolution, the moderate middle classes of the Gironde were the peculiar object of the fury of the extremist Mountain, so in Russia it has been even more fatal to be a member of the bourgeoisie than a prince or peer. In a word, Bolshevism, which prides itself on liberty, is the greatest tyranny that the world has seen. To-day it seeks to stir up the intellectuals of China against the world. How long will it be before it calls upon the proletariat to turn upon the professors?

THE REVOLUTION IN FRANCE

June 14.

THE circumstances in which President Millerand has resigned office are so extraordinary as almost to justify the word revolution. Other Presidents have resigned from personal dissatisfaction with their position—M. Casimir Périer for instance, during the stormy days of the Dreyfus affair. But history affords no precedent for the head of the State being literally forced out of office by a strike in parliament and it is a most dangerous one to have established. As the ex-President said in the message read to the Chamber of Deputies on June 10, it is an utterly unconstitutional proceeding "which makes the President a plaything in the hands of the majority in Parliament." The ease with which Governments are overthrown has often been regretted as a weakness of French political life. If now it must be added that Presidents are to be pushed in and out of office as easily as Premiers, the resulting instability of French policy both at home and abroad cannot but tend to be most disconcerting.

To be just, we have yet to hear the Socialist side of the quarrel. It will be remembered that the elections held in the second week of May, left the Chamber nearly divided into equal masses of Right and Left with the people on the borderline holding the scales. When they decided to stand in with the Socialists, the latter's majority was assured. The composition of the new Chamber proved that there was at any rate something in M. Poincaré's policy which the country disliked and there is little doubt that that something was the financial decree laws which he had forced through the last Parliament and under which Government may decree any departmental economy it pleases or any taxation without consulting the Chamber. That the ex-President is believed to have supported M. Poincaré in this measure, that at different times he has been accused of departing from the aloofness and impartiality which should characterize a President, to aid and abet the strong-willed Premier, is, perhaps, only part of his offence in Socialist eyes. It is not to be forgotten that M. Millerand, who first took office as Minister of Commerce under the late M. Waldeck-Rousseau in 1899, started his political career as a Socialist, Like every other member of the tribe who has attained to high office, M. Briand, Sir John Burns, Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, he has found that the actual responsibility of government requires the revision of doctrinaire ideas. And the Socialists have determined to be revenged on him. M. Herriot, the Socialist Mayor of Lyons, absolutely declined to take office. M. Marsal did so merely as a matter of form. The ex-President's dignified appeal to the Chamber to respect the constitution was read in icy silence; and the deputies immediately passed a resolution that they could accept no Government which was "a negation of the rights of Parliament."

What now will happen is a matter of conjecture. M. Herriot, we are told, in the certain expectation of being invited to form a Ministry, is at work on a programme which embraces the immediate suppression of the decree laws, and the re-establishment of the match monopoly, both of which were passed by the Poincaré Government, and also a general amnesty, except for evaders of military service and traitors. It further proposes the suppression of the Embassy at the Vatican, the application of the law regarding religious congregations, and the reduction of military service by organization of the nation for defensive purposes.

M. Herriot, after describing his fiscal proposals and pro-Labour tendencies, favours strengthening and extending the rôle of the League of Nations, the Hague Tribunal and the International Labour Office, and resumption of normal relations with Russia. He unconditionally accepts the Dawes report.

Obviously there is much material here of a highly inflammable order. That M. Herriot will endeavour to make peace with Russia is a foregone conclusion: twice he tried to get M. Poincaré's Government to support his schemes for trade resumption. Now he will have a free hand for his own ideas and, as France has greater claims on Russia than any other country, her chances of satisfaction are proportionately smaller. As regards relations with the Vatican, the Socialists in France are traditionally anti-clerical. But much has happened since the Dreyfus affair and it seems a pity to revive old fends. As for the decree laws one cannot but think that that question is largely regulated by the necessity of keeping up the value of the franc. It is interesting to see that M. Herriot "does not believe in the possibility of evacuating the Ruhr." We wonder how many Frenchmen do.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Lest They Forget!

While there is no doubt that travel in Soviet Russia, so far as non-Russians are concerned, has greatly been facilitated during the last two years, so much so that it now is possible to undertake the journey to London by the trans-Siberian route without excessive inconvenience, the Soviet authorities are by no means inclined to permit any foreigner to travel in Russia without his credentials being submitted to the closest scrutiny. We have every reason to believe that even now, five-and-a-half years after the armistice and four years after the overthrow of the last serious opposition to Soviet rule, it is impossible for any foreigner wishing to travel in Russia to do so, if at any time since the Revolution he was concerned, directly or indirectly, in any operations or expedition against Soviet Russia. For example; there are in China at the present time quite a few ex-members of the French and Knox's Missions to Siberia in 1919-20. Most, if not all of them are known to Soviet agents in Shanghai, who have intimated in terms not to be misunderstood that it were quite useless for any ex-member of the Missions we have named to apply for a visa for travel by the trans-Siberian route. That is carrying matters much too far. Most of those who were engaged in the anti-Soviet forces were there without any option of staying away and it is difficult to understand why the Soviet authorities, even if imbued with their first quality hatred, should carry it to such unreasonable ends. If France and Britain took reciprocal measures—though it is almost without the bounds of possibility—the Russians would feel a much-aggrieved people, and would be quick to let the world know it. Their present attitude is more than a little obscure; maybe they are afraid of forgetting.

Truth After Dinner

Nobody, we feel sure, regrets more than Sir James Jamieson himself any discourtesy which Mr. Chu Chao-hsin may have found in his plain speaking at the British and Chinese Corporation dinner in London, as reported by our correspondent in another column. But at the same time we believe that there is a very general feeling in Shanghai that, as one reader put it to us, "it was time somebody told the truth" and satisfaction that it was so distinguished a member of the Consular service as Sir James Jamieson who had the courage to tell it. The Chinese Chargé d'Affaires in London is undoubtedly a very pleasant and popular gentleman. No one would willingly hurt his feelings or be discourteous to the representative of a friendly Power. But the plain fact of the matter is that either he is singularly misinformed from Peking as to the state of affairs in this country, or he has been so long out of it that he has entirely forgotten what it is like. Whatever the explanation, his public utterances invariably wear the appearance of unblushing propaganda and perhaps we may say without offence that no member of the Diplomatic Corps more fully realizes Sir Henry Wootton's famous definition of an Ambassador as "an honest man sent abroad to lie for his country." At one time, as readers may recollect, we tried to offer a corrective for some of the fairy-tales which Mr. Chu was continually being put up in London to disseminate, but the task became too great and inasmuch as both London and provincial papers have latterly been giving increasing attention to China and showing a welcome understanding of the facts, there is the less to be done from this end. This new enlightenment will, we trust, enable Home readers who take any interest in China to realize that though Sir James Jamieson's language may have been strong, his vision was as unclouded as ever.

The Exclusion Law

For the sake of general relationships of Japan and America and especially with a view to the possibility of amendment of the American Exclusion Act, it is to be hoped that the Japanese Press will keep its head and neither give prominence, still less support to the talk of an American boycott. The incident reported to-day in the Imperial Hotel at Tokio need not be taken too seriously. It was probably most unpleasant for the dancers, but need not rank as of international moment. But a boycott would be very different. The Japanese, who themselves have some experience of it, know very well that it is the last weapon to use against a proud people with no mitigating result against the enormous harm it does. To employ it in respect of the Exclusion Act would ruin all chance of modification. We publish to-day the Japanese Government's protest against the law: it is a fine and dignified Note and its arguments are unanswerable. In addition to this, there is a very strong feeling in the best of the American press and public against the law and, although there appears no means of stopping it from coming into operation on July 1, we may be sure that the earliest possible steps will be taken to remove the obnoxious discrimination. The United States Senate is not distinguished for its helpfulness in respect of the American Government's international affairs; and in the present instance it has committed the country to a piece of combined discourtesy and injustice which all patriotic Americans resent. Nothing can more help the latter in obtaining a remedy than a continuance of the dignified attitude Japan has hitherto maintained.

The Cup that Cheers

It is a little hard on innocent tea-drinkers who are hoping for a penny or two off the tax on tea, says a writer in the "Daily Mail," to have doctors saying that it would be better for the community if the tax were increased instead of being reduced.

How the homely brown tea-pot swells with pride at hearing itself called inebriating. How it will boast to the Toby beer jug and the claret decanter and tell them they are not the only intoxicants. Before a bragging tea-pot—proud to be considered a demoralising nerve-destroyer—the tantalus stand will shake in its polished oak shoes. Why are doctors so down on tea? Are they haunted by memories of their student days, in rooms where the landlady gave them an inky black poison that had stood stewing at the side of the fire for hours on end?

Evidently a doctor on his busy rounds meets every pernicious form of tea-drinking that exists—tea that is too strong, tea that is not properly made, tea that has stood for hours. Worst of all, he sees mutton chops, beef-steaks, pork being eaten to an accompaniment of many cups of tea like treacle. He then hears a rumour that tea may be cheaper, and at once waxes both alarmed and eloquent.

There is indeed nothing much more nauseating than a cup of Indian or Ceylon tea made as it usually is in England—alike bitter in mouth and biting to the belly. But the remedy is simple: Drink China tea and palate and digestion are safe. It must be confessed than even China tea can be made very badly. The average house boy has no conception of how to do it: he takes water that has been simmering on the hob since morning and never properly boiled at that. But with water freshly brought to the boil from cold, the teapot warmed first and also the cup, China tea is a drink for Elysium. It is recorded that Dr. Johnson thought nothing of drinking twenty cups of tea. This is the secret: It was all from China in those days.

Mr. Wells' New Heaven

Mr. H. G. Wells is as confirmed a dealer in futures as any broker could be. His volumes project unprepared mortals into Utopia with surprising ease and facility, and yet none of us who enjoy the romances feel ourselves much nearer the lands of idealism on that account. His latest (at least we think it is his latest, although at this distance it is difficult to be sure) novel has a new angle and in "The Dream" one of the Utopians, by name Sarnac, travels backwards two thousand years through the agency of a dream, to the life he led in the twentieth century "Age of Confusion," as Harry Mortimer Smith, the son of a small green-grocer.

Through his detailed recital we are seen as the Utopians see us. Poor perplexed little Harry with his love affair and his religious struggles is unbelievably grotesque to them. Even the university gentleman, the one who splashes his cold bath about instead of having it, is grotesque too. The auditors sit about and exclaim at intervals "How impossible!" or "Can such things be so?" in a manner which we find it difficult not to take personally at times. It would be rather irritating to have the realization of our all-but universal dishonesty, discomfort, discontent forced home upon us were it not for the comforting assurance it implies that in two thousand years human nature will have been made perfect, and that men and women will no longer hurt themselves and one another.

The optimistic moral is a little too distant for immediate encouragement. Mr. Wells has drawn us a strictly up-to-date Heaven, but after all it hasn't quite the same consoling ring possessed by some of the old fashioned beliefs sniffed at so scornfully by our far-away posterity.

Up-to-date Opportunism

Some of the amateur wireless enthusiasts in Argentina consider that it is an ill wave-length that brings no good. They have discovered a system whereby they can operate their sets to both pleasure and profit. It seems that the masters of vessels en route to Buenos Aires are continually sending wireless messages to their agents announcing probable hour of arrival, etc. These messages are received and delivered by the postal authorities who, according to "The Times of Argentina," are frequently far from prompt in effecting delivery. Knowing of this defection, some of the amateur enthusiasts are taking stock of the messages coming from steamers and have hit upon the plan of beating the Post Office in delivering them. The system adopted by the amateur is to telephone the agent of a vessel on the way, advising that he has picked up a message which he will hand over immediately on payment at 20 cents a word. In many cases, it is stated, the agents have agreed to the proposition and have received legitimate information three or four hours before the news was received through official channels, and as three or four hours in the life of a steamer is often a great thing, it is obvious that the payment made to the unofficial receiver of the message is usually money very well spent. It is, however, more than probable that the Post Office will strongly resent this system of poaching on what it may consider its exclusive preserves, and it would not be surprising to hear that some of the private owners of receiving sets are in for a warm time. In any case, this poaching should have the effect of accelerating the official service.

The Soochow Creek

It will be noted with satisfaction that, according to letters published on another page, addressed by the Chinese General Chamber of Commerce to the corresponding foreign body, the Soochow Creek at last is to be dredged. The agitation has been long drawn out and until now has had not the slightest result. Foreigners, notably the Whangpoo Conservancy Board, many times have expressed their willingness to do the work, even without charge to the Chinese, but always the latter have raised a cry that sovereign rights were endangered and so the creek has gone from bad to worse. Under extreme pressure, the Chinese undertook to do the work, despite the fact that they find it so difficult to secure the funds required for any public purpose. It is understood that the Governor of the province presented the responsible men with an ultimatum to the effect that, as they had said they could and would do the work, and that they could find the money, they must do something definite by a fixed date. They failed and it is said that he gave them an extension of time, but the extended date also passed without any sign that the work would be put in hand. However, something appears to have frightened those who direct affairs on the creek, for on February 22 they gave the outline of a scheme for collecting the money and on May 24 they announced that they had obtained sufficient funds. Survey work was to commence on June 1 and it is to be hoped that neither too much time nor money will be wasted on this, but that actual dredging operations will be started as soon as possible. That alone will not be sufficient, for once the creek is cleared—and one may be pardoned for expressing some scepticism that the work will be done properly—it must be kept in a navigable state. If there is to be a clean-up to last for six months or a year, those who have given the money as well might have kept it in their pockets.

The Missionary

It is always relaxing to listen to the opinions of the new-comer to China, whose assumptions of facts are so rarely even an approximation of correctness. For instance, the writer of a gratuitous attack on the foreign missionary in China in our correspondence column cannot have any conception of he excellent work done by missionaries in this country and of the high regard in which they are held by the Chinese. The accident of an occasional missionary captured by bandits or pirates in this unfortunate period of China's history can but be another comment of their worthiness. For, instead of living lives of ease and comfort, as the correspondent would suggest, they labour in the interior where life can be neither salubrious nor sweet and where the foreigner is always in danger of being misunderstood by those desiring to make trouble. Chinese scholars of anti-Christian tendencies have paid rare tribute within recent years to the foreign missionary, whose work has kept education in China alive in a period when the Government has been unable to pay teachers in Chinese schools their salaries for months. Practically all the work done in connexion with health education, with the possible exception of that organized in Harbin by Dr. Wu Lien-teh, is under the guidance of foreign missionaries. To suggest that the Chinese are unappreciative of these services is to misunderstand the situation in China. Perhaps the writer of the attack on the missionaries might allow himself a little time to investigate the situation and to study conditions in China before he offers so stirring an appeal to the Chinese bandit to murder foreigners working beneficially to the masses of China. He might read a better book on China than the American "Mercury," a new publication edited by two humorists, H. C. Mencken and George Jean Nathan, the apogee of the precocious in American parlordom.

China's Chaotic Currency

The opinion more than once has been expressed—and frequently by people of consequence—that it is not altogether to be regretted that certain provinces of China in one way or another have broken away from allegiance to Peking, and, if memory serves aright, one eminent person propounded the view that never would there be real peace until each of the provinces had secured independence and then had joined in an alliance to protect one another in case of encroachments from outside. That, however, is getting into the region of higher politics, with which this note is not concerned. Yet there have been frequent examples of lost provinces instituting reforms that never could be hoped for from Peking. What could be more puzzling to a newly-arrived business man, or indeed, more worrying to one long established in business here, than the fluctuating taels and dollars and the discounts on bank-notes enforced in every city? It would be interesting for a man to travel through 20 or 30 cities, starting from here with a $5 Bank of China Shanghai note, change it at the next stop for a note of that city and continue the process until he returned and then reckon up how much his last $5 Government note had cost him. Weights and measures are equally puzzling and seem to vary in every shop into which one goes. There is no indication that Peking ever has considered the possibility of standardizing weights and measures, but the Mongolian Government, worried to distraction by the confliction of the many Chinese scales, made the worse by the use in places of Russian systems, now has abolished both Russian and Chinese systems and ordered the general use of a new standardized system, which, according to an account on the financial page of this issue, approximates closely to the metric. Would that Peking would follow such an example, especially with its coinage.

NEWS FROM THE OUTPORTS

THE GREAT FIGHT FOR KUEILIN

36 Days of Siege and Continual Bombardment: Many Civilians Killed but City Holding Out Well: The Struggle of North and South for Kuangsi

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

It will be noticed that there is a long gap between the first and second parts of this report. We can only conjecture what has happened in the interval, but Marshal Lu Yung-ting, who is trying to win Kuangsi for the North has held his own through 36 days of siege and even pressed back the Southern forces though he cannot clear them altogether.

Kueilin, Si., April 11.

Two well equipped and ably-led armies face each other and contend for the mastery of the ancient provincial, capital.

To-day the army of Marshal Lu-Yung-ting, the Pacificator of Kuangsi, and the troops of General Shen Hung-ying are drawing close to each other in the eastern corner of the province, each intent to be the master of the city of Kueilin, where at present the troops of Marshal Lu are mustered.

Marshal Lu passed through the city of Kueilin some weeks ago on his way to Hunan to unite forces against the Kuangtung government and to secure necessary ammunition for the proposed campaign.

Less than a week ago the Marshal returned to the city and at once the deferred New Year's celebrations which had been awaiting his arrival were entered into with more than ordinary fervour. Night after night the streets were packed with men and women watching the parades. Festivities were still in progress when the word was whispered round that trouble was brewing.

General Shen Hung-ying, it was reported, had turned over to the southern government and had accepted a commission from Dr. Sun Yat-sen to subdue to province of Kuangsi and bring it under the southern sway. It was also stated that funds and ammunition had been provided for the campaign and that hostilities were to begin at once, and that Kueilin would be the first place of attack.

The Assault Begins.

Soon messengers brought the word that Shen's troops stationed at Kuangyang and also at Pingloh were on the march towards Kueilin. This report did not cause any commotion for, as a rule, hostilities are slow in reaching a climax. Only a few days elapsed, however, when fighting broke out in the south between Shen's troops and the forces under General Han Ts'ai-feng, Marshal Lu's main support. Simultaneously fighting began on the northern front. Shen's forces from Kuangyang had reached the main road connecting Hunan and Kuangsi, had defeated a small detachment of Marshal Lu's men stationed at Tsuenchow and had cut communications between the two provinces. The troops continued their march on Kueilin taking the places en route without serious opposition as Marshal Lu's outposts fell back without fighting rather than risk the outcome of meeting superior numerical forces. To-day at three o'clock the oncoming troops could be seen approaching in the distance, and it was not long before fighting began.

Marshal Lu had a trusted detachment stationed on the rocky bluffs overlooking the city outside of the north gate and these soon let the approaching troops know that their advance was to be seriously contested. The city gates were closed and heavily guarded while soldiers were stationed at irregular intervals along the city wall. It was not long before the sharp crack of rifles and the occasional sputter of machine guns told the city that the reported contest was in progress. This was to be no small scuffle between opposing military factions for the purpose of gaining better camping grounds, but representatives of the northern and southern Governments, Peking and Canton, were now meeting each other and the issue was whether the Southern Confederacy or the Northern Government should be dominant in Kuangsi. Well trained forces, splendidly equipped and ably led were facing each other, each determined to battle for the mastery and emerge victorious.

The city people are not perturbed. All the stores are open and "Business as usual" seems to be the motto. Small vendors are going about the streets calling their wares, schools are not closed and mission work is being carried on as usual, though the services are often punctuated by the sound of heavy firing and the victorious shouts of the soldiers stationed on the city wall.

Sleep Rudely Disturbed.

April 12.

People living in the northern part of the city did not get their accustomed rest last night. The night was made hideous by the continuous firing which at times reached a pitch of intensity not soothing to the nerves. The whiz of bullets was heard overhead and sent a shudder through the hearts of householders as they crashed through tile and timber in their onward flight.

Big guns came into action to-day, the attacking forces throwing three-inch shells into the city. One of these fell inside the Baptist Mission compound in close proximity to the girls' school. It did little damage, however, as it did not explode and was picked up by one of the inmates and put to soak in a water vat. Another shell fell near the Chamber of Commerce and while the shell when picked up was emptied of its contents, it did not appear to have done much harm. The Marshal's yamên was also visited by one of these potent messengers, but is simply regarded as a souvenir. There is no excitment in the city, the people believing that the Marshal has the situation in hand and has sufficient numbers at his command to hold out against all odds. Both sides seem determined to fight to a finish. All the outposts, save those stationed on the bluffs outside the north gate, have now been recalled into the city. The troops fighting on the southern front entered the city through the south gate at nine o'clock this morning. It caused a flutter of excitement. The streets were thronged with people anxious to ascertain what this movement meant. The gates were heavily guarded with soldiers and the wall was packed with officers and men. As soon as the last soldier had stepped inside the huge city gates were swung and closed and again barred against invasion.

Attack Vigorous But Fruitless.

Fighting continued throughout the entire day. On two occasions the opposing forces fought desperately for the mastery of the hills outside of the north gate. These hills overlook the city and are in close proximity to the city wall. On these Marshal Lu's men could be seen running here and there and with machine-gun and rifle fire beating back Shen's men who tried to ascend the slope. After repeated failures the troops then began to encircle the city and the heaviest fighting moved around to the west gate. The graves and rocky boulders on this side of the city formed splendid hiding places for the troops and a perfect fusilade of bullets came whistling into the city. Many civilians were killed or wounded and the roofs of many houses to-night have air holes made by the flying missiles.

There seems to be no appreciable change in the situation. Marshal Lu though suffering from rheumatism in the ankles visits his men daily and encourages them to hold out. Reinforcements are expected to be on the way, but even if they do not arrive it is a serious question whether the opposing forces can force their way into the city against the present resistance.

Kueilin, Apr. 16.

As far as a civilian can view the situation there seems to be but little change in conditions although the city has been beseiged for six day and continuous fighting day and night has been in progress. Both sides seem determined to win and each is doing its best.

Outside of the north gate Marshal Lu has forces under command of his own son stationed on the top of Lao-Yin mountain. This rocky bluff is near the walls and commands a view of the entire city and from its craggy heights the entire city could be shelled. This bluff has been the scene of many a fierce onsault during the last two days, but Lu's flag still flies and the enemy has been driven back with great loss of life every time he attempted to scale the heights.

A Hail of Bullets

On Sunday the fighting veered round to the west gate. A perfect hail of bullets came over the wall, and just as heavy a shower fell outside. The opposing forces hid behind the graves and rocks and from their hiding places picked the men on the wall. Big guns were placed in position on the city wall and while a brisk fusilade was kept up from the wall the west gate was opened and a detachment of troops were sent out to drive the enemy from their hiding places. Bullets fell in rapid succession all over the city and quite a few civilians have been killed or wounded, while walking the streets or even sitting in their own homes. About 80 soldiers have been wounded and are being attended at the local Red Cross, assisted by the foreign doctors. The loss of life outside is not known but it must be much more than has been caused inside the city.

On Monday the southern part of the city was enveloped. Here the houses formed hiding places for the opposing forces. All day long desultary firing was kept up all along the line, but darkness had scarcely settled down before with startling suddenness a terrific bombardment began on three sides of the city. north, west and south. Rifles screeched on every side, and machine guns chattered their notes of death. Something was taking place. Frightened women could be heard screaming for fear, and as the roofs of the houses began to be punctured with bullets and tiles flow here and there people living in lofts fled for safety to the downstair quarters. The forces without were trying to scale the wall and judging from the amount of firing and the savage yells that now and then rent the air, the enemy must have paid dearly for the fruitless attempt.

Yesterday, (Tuesday) was spent much the same as former days. Rifles sounded here and there all along the wall, while answering shots told that the enemy was watchful. Now and then a stretcher bearing a wounded soldier to the Red Cross base or one who had been killed to some secluded spot told plainly that all the shooting was not at random. Towards evening the electric light situated outside the city wall ceased to function and big shells began to scream as they sped across the city and burst in thunderous tones as they reached their objective. This was followed by an uncanny silence until late in the night when again along the north three murderous attacks were made upon the city. Lao-Yin (Old Man) Mountain came in for another tussle but on all fronts the lines held and the attackers were driven off with loss of life.

At 8.30 this morning the city was aroused to a pitch of excitement by the sudden sound of heavy firing outside of the north gate. Immediately all eyes were turned toward the hills to the north of the city which are occupied by the city soldiers. All was activity. On the pinnacle of the Old Man Mountain the dark forms of the soldiers were silhouetted along the northern sky-line, while by the aid of glasses soldiers could be seen taking up their positions along the various ridges that skirt that part of the city. Rifles chattered in endless succession while little jets of smoke rising from the mountain summits followed by the thunderous roar of the old cannon, and a large field gun that had been taken out for service, told that an important battle was in progress.

For several weeks past certain hill-tops near the northern part of the city have been occupied by enemy troops, and their near presence has endangered the city and they have been a source of anxiety to the military leaders who are holding this place. Quite a few soldiers and civilians have been killed or wounded by the sniping from those heights and so it was decided to storm the hills and take these positions. Five thousand dollars was offered to the storming party to accomplish the dangerous task.

The attack was timed to take place at midnight, but the torrential rains prevented the orders from being carried out, and the attack was postponed until this morning. Three hundred troops were selected to form the storming brigade, and in the early morning hours these unobserved took up their positions near the rocky base of some hills near by ready for the signal to advance. Each soldier wore a small strip of red, white, and grey cotton on his arm to distinguish him from the others, and when the big guns began to roar these picked men ran out from their places of concealment and rushed forward to the attack, while the artillery on the mountain tops covered the advancing troops and opened the way for them to advance. The tide of war ebbed and flowed. Gains were made by the city soldiers and then lost in a counter attack. The big guns boomed forth encouragment, while the enemy artillery snapped defiance and death, but cheered on by their comrades on the hill-tops the city soldiers rallied and once more dashed forward, and while many fell in the charge the troops gained their objectives and managed to hold them.

A Commanding Position.

The fighting lasted for about three hours and when it slackened in intensity the city soldiers were in possession of five new hill-tops; strategic heights, (among which was Kuan-Yin Mountain) from which commanding position the enemy soldiers have been working much havoc, and hindering the easy movement of the city troops. The Kuan-Yin temple which is situated at the base of the mountain also fell into the hands of Marshal Lu's troops. In the recesses of the temple was found a small munition factory. A number of mechanics were captured, and some bullet-making machinery and 2,000 rounds of ammunition also felll into the hands of the victorious troops. The new hills captured also give the city soldiers control of the path leading to the arsenal in which it is believed is stored considerable quantities of ammunition and other war material. This will be a tremendous asset to Marshal Lu as during the intense fighting of the past 35 days since the city has been besieged large quantities of ammunition have been used and the reserve stock drawn on heavily. A bullet factory has recently been opened in the old Law Academy where 400 bullets are turned out daily and this aided by to-day's captures will assist materially in the defence of the city.

The casualties are not yet fully known, but some 20 wounded have been carried to the Red Cross and are now being treated by the foreign surgeons there.

War Prisoners Executed

May 16.

It is reported that some of the prisoners who were captured yesterday were later led bound out of the old West Gate and beheaded on the green near the Hero Monument. Some state that the men were accused of robbing in the villages, while others claim that the soldiers who captured them insisted their prisoners should be executed as the enemy forces are accused of putting to death some of the men who fell into their hands and the murdered men's companions who have risked their lives in the defence of the city now seek revenge.

This evening it was reported that detachments of enemy soldiers were seen crossing the river this afternoon from the east to the west side, both above and below the city, and it is conjectured that they are planning an offensive, perhaps with the hope of regaining the positions which they lost yesterday.

Insistent rumours of reinforcements nearing the city are still rife, and even the names of the commanders, the number of the men, and the geographical position of each company are clearly given. At times even the guns of the oncoming troops are supposed to be heard, but as yet none have arrived, and no authentic information is really at hand as to just when or from which corner help will arrive. It seems to be clear that fighting is being carried on on a large scale throughout the country within a day or two's march of the city, but the contour of the surrounding territory and the density of the high commanding bluffs that line every pathway leading to the city make it most difficult for the relieving forces to make much headway.

Passes Strongly Held

All the passes are held by small squads of enemy soldiers well supplied with ammunition and machine guns and these spit defiance in the face of the troops who are attempting to get through: neither side too strong enough to run the risk of a costly offensive. The soldiers stationed within the city make [illegible] sional sorties out of the gates and by dint of hard fighting, and with the loss of numbers killed and wounded manage to drive the enemy back, but they are not strong enough to turn the defeat into a rout and they do not dare pursue the retreating troops too far away from the city lest their own rear be cut off. Consequently the conquering troops have scarcely sounded the call to return before the scattered outside forces are pecking away at their rear. The forces that surround the city quite outnumber the troops within, but they have not sufficient strength to take the city by storm.

The City Still Holds

Throughout the 36 days of the siege every known military tactic has been resorted to, but has failed. The defending positions have been bombarded; the city has been shelled; the wall dynamited. Attempts have been made to burn the gates, to scale the walls, to fire the city, but every device has failed and every attack has been beaten off with great loss of life, and to-day the military situation seems to be much the same as it was when the siege began. Neither side seem to be war-weary. Each are determined to fight to the bitter end.

The troops of the various commanders are placed in windening circles about the city for many miles around. Many of the troops that formerly made up the attacking divisions have now been withdrawn and sent further afield to join the passes and guarded the approaches to the city. Thus these forces have managed to keep the relieving columns back. The relief divisions have not been strong enough to break through the cordon and the pass-defenders cannot spare sufficient forces to send back and make a determined attack on the city. Each are holding the other at bay, but neither have sufficient strength to turn the tide of battle. A deadlock seems almost to have been reached, and now who can hold out the longest may emerge victor in the present struggle.

Both sides are busy manufacturing ammunition as each believes that cartridges are more effective than conferences. It may be that eventually the issue will be determined by the amount of munitions, rather than the number of men; not by brains, but bullets.

THE MISSIONARIES IN KUEILIN

Mr. Cunningham Stated to Have Been Killed: Other Foreigners Safe

Peking, June 7.

The fate of the score or so of British and American missionaries in the beleagured city of Kueilin appears still to be uncertain. As late as May 25, according to a Consular report received to-day from Changsha, Kueilin was still closely invested and no news had been received from Bishop Holden or any of the other British missionaries in the city. Chinese reports state that two American missionaries have been killed and that the whole population is in the last stages of famine, the daily rice ration for each person having been limited to four ounces. The suburbs and neighbourhood of the city are said to have been laid waste by Gen. Shen Hung-ying's troops and the outlook is gloomy.

On May 27, the consular report states, two British missionaries, the Rev. J. R. Wilson and the Rev. A. J. W. Mackay, arriving in Yingchow, set out for Kueilin with the object of trying to get some information regarding the foreigners in the city. Meanwhile large bodies of Hunanese troops have been drafted to the Kuangsi border.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Hankow, June 11.

The Hengchow correspondent of the "Central China Post" telegraphs: "Kueilin reports that Mr. J. R. Cunningham, of the Christian and Missionary Alliance, has been killed, but the other foreigners are safe."—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE PEKING WALL ASSAULT CASE

Mr. Campbell's Convincing Evidence and Stringent Cross-examination: An Absurdity of Chinese Law: Medical Examination at Long-delayed Trial

Peking, June 9.

All three of the assault charges preferred against the ex-soldier Li Yi-yuan were disposed of at the Tahsing Magistrate's Court to-day. In each case it was announced that the verdict would be made public within a week.

This morning was devoted to the hearing of the cases in which the complainants were Mr. Pomeroy, an American citizen, and Mr. Castellani, an Italian, and official observers from the respective Legations concerned were present. Mr. Shou Lu-yuan, who had been specially sent from the Local Court for the hearing of the case, acted as Judge and he was assisted by the Tahsing Magistrate, Mr. Chung Show-lung. Mr. Tsoong Lung represented the Waichiaopu.

When the case arising out of the assault upon Mr. Campbell, a British merchant, was called on at three o'clock this afternoon, Mr. H. I. Prideaux-Brune, of the British Legation, took his seat on the Bench as British official observer. Mr. Campbell was asked to come forward to give his evidence and, after answering queries as to his age, occupation and place of abode, he proceeded to tell the story of the assault.

He said that on April 13 he went on to the city wall at 11.15 a.m. to take a walk before tiffin. A soldier already on the wall was standing so that it was impossible to pass him and he made some remark. Mr. Campbell remarked that he did not know Chinese and therefore could not tell the Court what the soldier said. The man made a louder remark and witness turned around and told him to go down off the wall and not be foolish. As Mr. Campbell was turning away the soldier struck him in the face with his fist, smashing the pipe Mr. Campbell had in his mouth.

Eager to Fight.

"So," Mr. Campbell proceeded, "I hit him on the head and knocked him down. He then turned around and hit me on top of the head with a bag of coppers, so I hit him again and knocked him against the wall. He came back again and hit me, cutting my jaw and raising a lump. He was eager to fight and I continued to defend myself, though I could have done very much more. He was trying to kick me and before anything further occurred two policemen from the Legation Quarter came up and the man was arrested. As far as I am concerned, it was quite unexpected that he should attack me and naturally I retaliated, endeavouring to keep him from doing me more harm than necessary. He was armed and I was not."

Through an interpreter, Mr. Campbell was questioned at some length by the Court. He was asked first of all whether he could understand Chinese and he repeated that he could not understand the language. "Then," he was asked, "if you cannot understand Chinese why did you say in your affidavit that the Chinese spoke in a loud voice insulting words?"

Mr. Campbell replied that the man's manner was insulting and, borrowing one of the soldiers on duty in the Court, gave a demonstration of the defendant's actions.

The Court: So the fact is that he was standing in the road and you passed by him and then he followed you?

Mr. Campbell: He was standing so that I could not pass by without moving him. He was trying to take the whole road up.

Did you bear any mark of injury?—Yes. A lump on the jaw and an abrasion. These were not very serious. I also broke a finger and have not been able to use it since.

Mr. Campbell was told that, according to Chinese law, as he had given evidence of injury he would have to be examined by a Court expert. He replied that within half an hour of the occurrence he had himself examined by the British Legation Doctor and he understood that the Doctor's certificate would be available if necessary.

The Court: According to Chinese law, if there was any injury, even if it was examined elsewhere, the Court has still to examine it.

Mr. Campbell: It is too late now. If the Court had been held immediately afterwards, there might have been something to see.

The Court still insisted upon an examination, although Mr. Campbell protested that there was now no sign whatsoever of the injuries, and an official came forward and inspected Mr. Campbell's face and finger. The announcement was then made that, although the Court expert's opinion was that there had been some injury, still the Doctor's certificate must be produced. Mr. Campbell said that he thought the certificate was at the British Legation and could be produced all right.

A Case of Self-Defence.

The Court then proceeded to cross-examine Mr. Campbell in regard to his contention that he acted in self-defence. He said that the man struck him three times and he struck the man three or four times.

The Court: Assuming it was an act of self-defence, the force seems unnecessary.

Mr. Campbell: I think the answer to that is that the man was still willing to go on fighting.

How do you know that he was still willing to go on fighting?—Because he was still standing up. The last blow I struck was just before the policemen came up and I hit him on the nose.

Even when he stood up, could you not have called a policeman to stop him?—There was no policeman on the wall. As soon as a policeman came the fight stopped and the business was over. That was all I wanted.

Then during the fighting you and the soldier were the only persons there?—There was an American soldier who saw it from the start.

This is the first time you have said that?—I believe it is in my affidavit.

With what did you strike the Chinese?—My fist.

You did not use any stick?—I never carry a stick.

The injury evidenced by the blood on his clothes was caused by your fist alone?—Yes. When I hit him on the nose.

Did you strike him in any other place?—No. He kicked me.

Mr. Campbell was then asked whether he thought he could recognize the soldier if he saw him. He replied that he thought he could and was then asked to retire into a waiting room while Li Yi-yuan was brought into the Court. Looking unkempt and dishevelled, the defendant was then marched in between two soldiers. After he had been lengthily harangued by the Judge and had answered numerous questions, the Court directed that Mr. Campbell should be brought in again.

Defendant Identified.

In answer to the query whether he could point out the Chinese with whom he fought, he indicated Li Yi-yuan without hesitating.

The Court: According to the defendant's statement you were in a ricsha and you stepped in the way and did not allow him to go up on the wall.

Mr. Campbell: Where was the ricsha? Rickshas are not allowed on the wall.

Did you tell him he was not allowed to go on the wall?—I did not. I cannot speak Chinese. I did not at that time know that he was not allowed on the wall, as I am a stranger to Peking.

Mr. Campbell then retired again and a lengthy argument between the Court and the defendant ensued. In the course of it the latter denied that he was ever on the wall and it was pointed out to him that the statements he was now making differed materially from his previous evidence.

The Court then announced that its verdict in all three cases would be given in the course of a week and Li Yi-yuan, still vigorously protesting, was led outside.

The defence put up in connexion with the cases heard this morning was that the assaults were accidental.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

CHINESE DUG-OUTS TO ESCAPE BANDITS

Extraordinary Defences Found in Shensi with Moat and Drawbridge

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Peking, June 6.

Travellers in the interior do not need to be told that very many Chinese live in caves. Cave dwellers are to be found in Honan and Shensi provinces and right across to the Tibetan border. In these provinces many of the people are forced by economic necessity to dig into the hillsides for their homes, and it is no uncommon sight to see a projecting cliff burrowed right through, affording hearth and home for a family and shelter for its chattels and livestock.

According to a recent traveller in Shensi, Mr. O. J. Todd, Engineer Representative of the Famine Relief Commission, it appears that the impoverished Chinese in some of the Weipeh villages are now living underground on the plains. The habitations he saw were complete dug-outs, with some of the features of the old baronial castles of England, such as a moat and a drawbridge. It is by reason of these latter features that one is inclined to the belief that Mr. Todd holds, that the people are going underground to escape the bandits.

The photograph shows the entrance to one of these dug-outs. It is made of mud and straw, and is at least 15 feet deep. One has to descend almost perpendicularly, and if one happened not to be a friend of the family, the consequences might be disastrous, for in the cavernous depths is either a well or some other Chinese version of a moat, over which the inmates of the dugout place a bridge for their own convenience and withdraw it for the inconvenience of bandits and other obnoxious folk.

Passages lead off in three directions, and these form the habitations of several families, as well as of their worldly possessions, stock, provender, tools, and the like.

SAKHALIEN OIL AND RECOGNITION OF RUSSIA BY JAPAN

Two Questions Intimately Allied: Japan's Prime Need of Oil: An American Syndicate's Concession Complicating Issues

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Peking, June 9, 1924.

Now that China has recognized Russia, the possibilities of recognition by Japan are being canvassed. Mr. Karakhan and Mr. Yoshizawa are both possessed of plenipotentiary powers with which to negotiate such an understanding, and with that end in view have participated in conversations almost every other day for the last few weeks. However, almost as much secrecy about these conversations is maintained as about the conversations between Dr. Wellington Koo and Mr. Karakhan. Recognition will not be so easy to reach as it was between China and Russia. For one thing, what [illegible] public opinion in China was on the side of Wellington Koo, whereas in Japan, particularly among the military classes, the idea of recognizing the Soviet is still about as palatable as it is in the United States.

One question which has to be decided before even recognition can be accorded is Sakhalien. The status of the northern half of that island cannot be left to a post-recognition conference. It is of immediate consequence to Japan, the particular "principle" and sine qua non of recognition. The other issues—old treaties, debts, fishery rights, and the rest—may easily be reconciled into general principles, as they are problems that have to be worked out. Fishery rights, for example, are not so urgent a subject as sometimes made out to be, seeing that an amicable arrangement with Vladivostok at any rate is now in force and will continue until next year. The other questions are more or less those that are now confronting Britain.

Northern Sakhalien was occupied for a few more guarantees than [illegible] Japan would lose its case. When Joffe came to the Far East two years ago, the writer asked him if Russia would sell its share of Sakhalien. It was a point blank question, to which a straightforward reply was not to be expected. "I can only say that we are a realist government," was all he said, but even this was sufficient to show that Russia was prepared at that time to talk business. It has been said since then that Joffe did talk business in Tokio, but the time was not then ripe for Japan to make an effort to adjust the peculiar situation in Sakhalien, and the issue remained apparently insoluble. (Incidentally, Joffe parted with his best bargaining point when he made Japan a present of the fishery rights for another year as soon as he landed in the country). Now any such talk could not be straight business, for the ratification of the Sinclair contract by Moscow has thrown a cog into the machinery which will take all the wits of Mr. Karakhan and Mr. Yoshizawa to extricate with honour to both sides. Yet the problem has to be settled one way or the other before recognition can be mentioned.

The Sinclair Concession.

The Sinclair contract was ratified on August 28, 1923. It gives the Sinclair Oil Company exploitation rights over Northern Sakhalien territory north of the 51st parallel, the 52nd parallel being the dividing line between Northern and Southern Sakhalien. The company can go on drilling for oil for five years, and then it must restrict itself to a thousand square versts, which is to be the extent of a 36-years concession. In connexion with the preliminary exploitation, the company has the right to build ports, establish lines of communication, and erect electric light plants. It will be gathered that when the concession has been delimited, the Sinclair company will have secured the richest oil reserves in the island, and that the next comers will have to be content with the second best.

Now Japan is short of oil, and in want of it as no other country is at the present time. It constitutes for her as important a raw material as iron and steel, and therefore Northern Sakhalien is almost as important an economic base for Japan as South Manchuria. Japan's urgent necessity for oil was aggravated by the earthquake losses at the Yokosuka base. Sakhalien has this now-precious commodity in abundance. Seepages have been found all over the northern part of the island, and experts are of the opinion that the reserves are tremendous. By the irony of fate, Southern Sakhalien is not supposed to hold any oil at all.

In these circumstances it is not surprising that Japan could not wait either to buy or lease the territory, or to make some other definite arrangement, before liquidating the guarantee. A company called the Hokushinkai was formed by all the leading financial interests in Japan, including the Mitsubishi, the Mitsui, the Susuki, the Kuhara, and the Nihon-Sekiyu, for the purpose of starting drilling operations. It was capitalized at Yen 3,000,000 and according to some reports was to receive a yearly subsidy of Yen 600,000 from the Department of Navy. It is known that the company's geologists have been prospecting in Northern Sakhalien for some time, and it is stated that drilling has actually started.

By the ejection of the Sinclair company's geologists in February, the contract under which they sought to enter Northern Sakhalien is automatically extended. The five-year period will date from the time when the company starts operations in the island itself, and so will the period of the concession.

Playing America on Japan.

Why did Russia tie itself up with such a contract? There were apparently two or three reasons. The contract was signed at a time when anti-Japanese feeling was rampant throughout the country, particularly in the Far Eastern Republic of Siberia, which first negotiated the agreement. It was also part of the sinister campaign of playing off nation against nation—in this case, America against Japan. It was thought that the United States would eventually come to the rescue of the Sinclair company in the event of Japan refusing permission to the company's engineers to start work. It was also hoped that recognition of Russia would be influenced by the signing of the contract, and this hope was expressed in the clause which provides for the annulment of the contract if the United States did not recognize Moscow within five years of the date of ratification. All hope of American diplomatic interference, if there was ever any hope, was lost when the Sinclair company became involved in the political scandals now raging in Washington.

Russia is now faced with the dilemma of bargaining somebody else's concession for recognition, for the only concession worth having according to Japan's immediate point of view is the oil in Saghalien. It will be interesting to see if the Soviet can tear up its own as well as Tsarist agreements; it would be in keeping with the necessities of the case to a "realist" government if it did so.

WRESTLING WITH CHINA'S EMPEROR

A Visit to Photograph a Medical Curiosity and an Afternoon with the Son of Heaven

FROM OUR HAICHOW CORRESPONDENT.

Shade of Kang Hsi! Bones of Chien Lung! Corpse of the Emperor Dowager!

The Son of Heaven has been wrestling with barbarians. The royal hands have been locked in rigid grip with the fingers of the Foreign Devil.

But cheer up, ye departed great ones, for the royal scion won the match. And think ye not for one moment that the last of the royal line engaged in this sport by arrangement. It happened in the natural display of his hospitality, and—but let us tell the story from the beginning.

Many old residents in China have heard of the Emperor's Mannikin, charts of which, more or less accurate, are widely distributed throughout China. A medical man in Peking was anxious to get a photograph of this mannikin and after some negotiations it was arranged that a visit should be made to the Forbidden City's innermost sanctuary where the mannikin could be inspected and photographed. At the moment of starting, on the afternoon of June 2, an old friend of the doctor turned up and it was in a party of five that the visit was made. For the benefit of the lay reader, let me explain that the Emperor's mannikin is the official guide and chart to the custom of "needling" which is perhaps the most universal panacea in China today.

The Cure by Needling.

Have you a headache? A few needles stuck artistically through the skin of the temple and forehead—and the headache is cured. Is your heart beating feebly? A rusty bodkin thrust deep on each side of the larynx, and the heart is greatly stimulated. Have you a shaking attack of malaria? Some embroidery needles in the calf of your leg will bring quiet and calm—and so ad infinitum. And this celebrated mannikin shows where, and the direction in which, needles may be thrust.

Perhaps the greatest surprise of the visitors was the lack of the throngs of eunuchs and attendants which are inseparable from our mental picture of Chinese palaces. There were no more than ordinarily found in a small yamên or home of a wealthy merchant. Especially was it noticed that all the personal attendants of the Emperor were mere boys of 14 or 15 years of age.

The Emperor met his visitors without the least trace of stiffness. He is said to speak English to some extent but before strangers is a little diffident and prefers to speak through his interpreter or tutor. He is about 20 years of age, rather thin, but, as was proved later, quite muscular. Interest will naturally centre more on the Emperor than on his aged mannikin, but as this visit was primarily for the photographing of the latter, the mannikin must have first place on the stage.

The Mannikin.

The first mannikin shown to the visitors was disappearing. It was a wooden model, badly proportioned and it was recognized as having been photographed some time ago. Strange to say the Emperor himself did not know of the existence of another, but when he inquired of his attendants they scurried away and soon the object of the visit was before them. It is brass or bronze, about three feet in height and several photographs were taken. It is covered with tiny lines and on these lines at intervals are dots to indicate the spots at which needles may be stuck. So much for the mannikin.

How the Son of Heaven spends his days will be of considerable interest. Several bicycles were seen and it was explained that he gets on these a large part of his exercise and amusement. High doorsills and stone pavements have been built up with earthern approaches so that he can ride through without stopping.

Clocks and Music Boxes.

The two things that are most in evidence in the Emperor's quarters are clocks and music boxes. Of clocks there are a dozen or more, many of interesting design. One of the music-boxes was of a type much in vogue 30 years ago, the "canned music" being carried on wooden cylinders studded with small steel pins. The Emperor loves to go from one to another, winding them up and listening to their weird emissions.

The Emperor seems happy and cheerful. We wonder if he has ever been told that a century and a half age provinces, states and kingdoms waited breathlessly on the pen of his illustrious ancestor Chien Lung. We wonder if he dreams of that mighty band that welded half of Asia into a single empire. Perhaps he has been told that the great Chien Lung himself spent a full quarter of a century, after ascending the throne, in the quiet and seclusion of a student and then suddenly emerged into an activity and vigour that made him one of the greatest monarchs in history. Perhaps the young Emperor, the Prisoner of the Republic, is dreaming of the future! Who knows what that will bring forth.

Emperor's Skill in Wrestling.

Hand wrestling is a popular sport in China and without any formalities the Emperor was soon showing that he has a fine physique. The opponents stand opposite each other, about four feet apart. Each man's feet must be kept close together. Right hands are locked and each tries to pull or push the other from his footing. The first man forced to move his foot loses. Several men in the party were far heavier than the Emperor but he was not once scored against.

In the city famous for its rugs it was naturally to be expected that the palace of the Emperor would be furnished with in rugs numerable. Imagine the feelings of the visitors to find the Emperor's room floored only with linoleum—of the kitchen variety!

The Emperor so manifestly enjoyed his callers that the party remained with him the whole of the afternoon. It is hard to guess which side was more delighted: the visitors who enjoyed an opportunity rarely available or the Emperor who is easily at the head of the "shutins" of the world.

ASIA AND THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

Chinese Charge in London Calling for Fuller Asiatic Representation

London, June 7.

Addressing Chinese and Asiatic students at Christ-church College, Oxford, Mr. Chu Chao-hsin, the Chinese Chargé d'Affaires, dwelt on the under-representation of Asia on the Council of the League of Nations.

Mr. Chu urged that the Council should be made up with substantial reference to the numbers of people comprised in the nations belonging to the League. It was essential, he said, that Asia should be very thoroughly represented, because it might have to speak with no uncertain voice on many vast issues raised from time to time. Nearly all problems of first-class importance germinated in the Far East, where many great issues were springing from the meeting of world civilizations, marking the dawn of new and sometimes conflicting ideals. The League, Mr. Chu declared, should be sufficiently authoritative, catholic and world-wide, to deal with all of them.—Reuter.

THE POOR POLICEMAN OF PEKING

His Months of Unpaid Salary Yet Behaving Remarkably Well: How to Pay Him?

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Peking, June 5.

Anybody who was in Peking at the time of the spring war of 1922, when Wu Pei-fu and Chang Tso-lin were battling within ten miles of the capital, will sympathize with the demand of the police here for their pay, arrears and all. It is not usual to notice the police until danger is in the air, just as Tommy Atkins, according to Rudyard Kiping, is appreciated only when we have something very urgent for him to do; and in Peking we are little different from the general run of people in this respect. Even old hands were amazed at the excellent moral of the Peking police during those disturbing times in 1922, when we whose lot it was to stay in the capital were in no little danger from the scattered army of Manchurian soldiery who were routed almost within sight of the city wall. When it was all over we played the band for the local policeman, and the strains should still be in our ears as we listen to the tale of his impoverishment.

The House Tax.

Like the teachers and the civil servants in the capital, the policeman has been without pay for several months, and the problem has become so acute that the authorities, in view of the necessity of keeping him in good humour, have proposed the levying of a tax on the Peking people with which to discharge their obligations to him. It was at first called a police tax and under that name received the approval of the Cabinet. But a hue and cry had been brewing among the Pekingese, and the name was hastily changed to "house tax" when it seemed evident that there was to be some opposition to the impost. Even the new name did not prevent the storm from breaking. It was a dog all the same. Indignation meetings were called, and all sorts of organizations, the most vociferous of which was Parliament, protested against any further levy on the people.

Where are the Proper Funds?

The people are not personally opposed to the claims of the police. On the contrary they support them, and that is really half the reason for the protest. They object to the filching of money in the name of the police, and they ask what has become of the money that is definitely earmarked for them out of the Octroi, the Stamp Tax, and the Wine and Tobacco Administration. Most of the money that should go to the police now goes to General Feng Yu-hsiang for the upkeep of his national forces. To maintain these men, the Peking policeman has to go without his pay, and in consequence is in wretched straits—so wretched in fact that the wonder to the foreigner is that he can be so loyal and, it must be said, so argumentative.

The householders in Peking doubt very much if this impost is really intended for the police. They have an idea that it will disappear en route to its intended channel as mysteriously as other revenue. There are many precedents for this habit on the part of Revenue, so one cannot accuse the householders here of unjust suspicion.

A Voluntary Collection.

At any rate, opposition to the house tax is as stubborn as ever, and the police authorities have now hit on another plan which they hope will extract the necessary dollars from the Pekingese. It is another change of name, this time to our old frind "voluntary subscription." A campaign has been organized to educate the people into a more tractable mood, but in spite of lachrymatory handbills headed "Help the Poor Policeman," the householders are referring the campaigners to the next street without the least sign of apologetic snuffling. The drive was supposed to start on June 1, the date of the proposed enforcement of the tax, but it does not appear as if the really poor policeman will be any the richer as a result thereof, although he might be as a result of the four million dollars or so that the Finance Minister has been able to collect to tide him over the Dragon Boat Festival. Everybody, whether a newcomer or a witness to those 1922 days, hopes so.

MR. BARTON'S CAPTURE BY BANDITS

Further details are published in the "Central China Post" of Mr. J. A. Barton's hold up by bandits on the Han, the first intimation of which appeared in the "North-China Daily News" at the close of last month. It will be remembered that Mr. Barton was on a business trip at the time in the interests of Messrs. Butterfield & Swire's sugar department.

Apparently the hold up was a premeditated affair, of which the native officials had some knowledge, as the captain of the police boats convoying the junks along with Mr. Barton's boat informed him that in the event of trouble he was to hide himself as well as he could among some sails stowed forward.

A Night Attack.

The attack itself took place at midnight on May 24, whilst the convoy was anchored at a small town called Pengtaukang. Here the boats were strung along the river bank, with the police boats at the end which did not lend itself to protection at all as events eventually proved.

When all had been made snug for the night the attack started. The bandits drifted down-stream in sampans and boarded the first boats of the convoy, firing with their Mausers and automatics and smashing everything within reach. All the bandits were well armed, those who did not carry revolvers had murderous long knives stuck in their belt. Nearly all carried an axe as part of his armament, and many were disguised with false beards. They worked well together by a system of whistles from a commander who kept out of sight. Pandemonium reigned. The police boats tried to open fire with their guns, but found that owing to the position they had taken up they were simply landing their shots in their convoy so gave it up after the third attempt.

Interpreter's Brave Action.

During the turmoil which was going on Mr. Barton's boat cut her moorings and tried to drift downstream out of the trouble, but being observed was made to heave to by rifle fire coming from both banks of the river. A boarding party put off in sampans and ransacked the boat. At first they were for shooting Mr. Barton on the spot, but his interpreter bravely stepped in and informed the gang that he was a poor missionary, the shooting of whom would not do them the least good. Here a discussion arose among them to which Mr. Barton had to sit and listen as to the outcome of his ultimate fate. However, the bandits decided to spare him and proceeded with their search for money. The amount found not being up to expectations, the question of killing both Mr. Barton and his interpreter was again broached, but it was eventually settled that the boat would be allowed to proceed provided nothing was said of the matter. In the meantime several of Mr. Barton's personal belongings had been taken, his typewriter smashed, and the wood-work of the boat badly knocked about.

Official Action Lacking.

Arriving at Anlu the matter was at once reported to the official there. He was full of sympathy and said he would despatch soldiers to deal with the matter. Whether they were sent is problematical, for by the latest news to hand no move up to that time had been made.

Some of the bandits were captured and taken to Anlu where they were beheaded, but this was owing to a pure bit of luck and not through any move from official sources. A party of soldiers happened to be returning from Fancheng when they came across a sampan load of the bandits. Fire was opened on them; four are said to have been killed and the remaining six captured. These were the ones the Anlu official had beheaded.

AN important law has been passed by the Ministry of Interior, forbidding males to marry until they are 16.

"FOR I AM A PIRATE KING"

Audacity of Modern Pirate: Loan Demanded of Sir R. Ho-Tung: Otherwise...

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Hongkong, May 31.

With almost a showman's passion for publicity, Wong Ng, a pirate king of South China's troubled waters, has revealed himself with a rattle of swords to be as audacious and enterprising as any of the filibusters of old. There is a Gilbertian touch in his latest move.

Wong first came into the limelight two months ago, when, with a band of lusty followers, he spirited away with a coolness which is worthy of better things, a ferry launch, the "Kwongshun," which plies between Hongkong and Shamshuipo, a Chinese district on the mainland of Kowloon. The pirates kidnapped the crew and passengers and Shanghaied them on a lonely beach near Macao. Wong added to his notoriety by writing letters to relatives of the kidnapped passengers, demanding ransoms for their release.

Apparently, Wong has fallen on evil days. Piracy as a flourishing business some months ago has received a slump and Wong is feeling the pinch. And the pirate king needs a loan. In a letter addressed to Sir Robert Ho Tung, Wong politely asked for a loan of $2,000 which, on the oath of a pirate, he promises to repay.

Wong's letter was addressed through the post to "Mr. Ho Tung, Local," and was delivered to his Peak residence. Sir Robert and Lady Ho Tung being absent at Wembley, the family opened the letter. This mysterious letter bore a Hongkong two-cents stamp and was evidently posted in the Colony. In order to obviate any error that may be made in its delivery, the author had written in pencil, the following instruction to the postman:—

To be delivered to Ho Tung's house on the upper levels.

The letter was duly opened by members of Sir Robert's household and, translated, reads in effect:—

Our band of brothers have formulated a plan of action. But because of lack of funds we are unable to proceed. Therefore, it is for this special reason that we solicit a loan of $2,000 in Hongkong notes. When our objective is achieved "children and mother" (i.e. interest and principal), will be repaid and on no account will we break our promise. Please send this sum to the "Great Eastern Hotel" in an ordinary envelope and addressed to my name. There is no need for registration as it will mean a lot of trouble for the messenger receiving it. You are given three days from the day of receiving this letter to reply. Otherwise. . . .

The seal of Wong Ng.

Wong's signature is decorated with a rambling coat of arms and together with the notepaper used are identical to those addressed to the victims' relatives of the ferry piracy. As in the previous instance, the pirate chief did not append his signature but used a chop. Wong's promise to repay the loan is given added emphasis by the fact that the phrase contained in the letter is underscored in black ink. There is no effort in the least, either to conceal his identity or the source of his stronghold.

Wong jumped into fame with one of the most daring coups in the black history of pirates in South China. As far as is known Wong did not resort to murder, but for several days perplexed the authorities when the ferry boat could not be found. It was eventually recovered, but in a dilapidated state.

For his audacity, Wong Ng deserves better than a mere lopping off of the head. As a North China brigand, a two gun man of the Blue Express, his exploits may have gained him a generalship

WHAT CHINA WOULD DO WITH BRITISH SHARE OF BOXER INDEMNITY

Institute of Science the Principal Aim: Facilities of Study of English Literature and Arts Throughout China: Peking University Chancellor's Memorandum to British M.P.'s

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

London, May 13.

Dr. Tsai Yuan-pei, Chancellor of the National University of Peking, has issued the following memorandum to Members of Parliament interested in the proposed remission of the Boxer Indemnity:—

To those who are interested in the question of the allocation of the Boxer Indemnity Fund (writes Dr. Yuan) I beg to submit the following proposals:

(1) The principal portion of the fund is to be utilized for the establishment of a great and inspiring Science Institute. It will consist of two departments: one to contain mechanical models and diagrams, illustrating the different stages of development of the physical and chemical sciences, and illustrating the different stages of the evolutional processes of the industrial arts, the other to contain natural history specimens, showing the genus and species of flora and fauna—leading up to anthoropology.

(2) A portion of the fund is to be utilized for subsidizing any well-known universities or technical colleges in China for the express purpose of starting or extending certain special faculties or departments of sciences and technology; such as biology, textiles, engineering, chemistry, medicine, agriculture and forestry, etc.

(3) A portion of the fund is to be utilized for establishing within some of our national universities facilities for the study of the science, art and literature of Great Britain. Foundation funds will be provided for (a) professorships, (b) purchase of English books on literature and art, and (c) scholarships for research students.

(4) A portion of the fund is to be utilized as a foundation fund for sending teachers and graduates of the universities and technical colleges in China to the universities and technical colleges in Great Britain.

Opportunities for British Students in China.

(5) A small portion of the fund is to be utilized for sending scholars from Great Britain to China to study Chinese literature and philosophy, etc.

(6) A small portion of the fund is to be utilized for purchasing Chinese objects d'art, to be exhibited in museums of Great Britain on condition that the former unworthy ones be removed.

(7) A portion of the fund is to be utilized for the exchange of professors between Great Britain and China, namely for providing: (a) distinguished scholars of Great Britain to lecture in the Chinese universities and colleges: (b) distinguished scholars of China to lecture in the universities of Great Britain on Chinese literature, philosophy and art or any other subjects appreciated by the British people.

Explanatory Note: The remission of the Boxer Indemnity Fund by any nation to China is generally appreciated by her people as an act of generous good will to their country. Her educationalists propose, by the carrying out of the above-mentioned proposals, especially the first one, to have, thereby, a permanent memorial of the great friendly deed of Great Britain. It will be set up in order to create a spirit of reference for science and industrial arts—becoming, when properly equipped with laboratories and other faculties, a great centre of research and reference. As in the present circumstances, it seems very difficult for China herself to provide such an essential, Great Britain, in co-operating with her to satisfy this urgent need of her education, will render to that country a great service: and thus earn her lasting gratitude.

Before I left China I served, for a time, as the Chairman of the Committee of the National Association for the Advancement of Education, that met in conference in Tsinan (Shantung) and elsewhere, in which among other questions, that of the Boxer Indemnity was carefully considered. As a result, the Association, thoroughly representative of all parts of China, unanimously maintained the following points:

(1) That China can, and ought to, undertake her own primary and secondary education; and what is needed for that purpose is, therefore, regarded as the ordinary fund to be raised by her national and provincial authorities.

(2) That the return of the Boxer Indemnity Fund by any nation should be regarded as a special fund, and be set aside for a special purpose.

(3) That the Boxer Indemnity Fund remitted by Great Britain should, if possible, mainly be utilized for the great object of providing facilities in the studies of science, pure and applied.

Of the seven proposals above-mentioned, the first one was strongly advocated by the said Committee, and the third and fourth were also their original suggestions, but have now been worked out in detail.

Furthermore, what I have presented is not merely my personal view, but also represents a consensus of opinion in China. Such opinion, I am confident, will be taken carefully into consideration by all who are interested in this question.

BOMBSHELL FOR TSINGTAO OFFICIALS

Salaries Down 20 Per Cent: New Governor's Latest Dispensation

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Tsingtao, June 1.

In order to reduce expenditure to a minimum in this year's budget, the Administration has from to-day reduced the salary of all officials who until yesterday drew a $100 and over a month. This reduction is one of no less than 20 per cent. When one takes into consideration the fact that when the Kao En-hung Administration assumed charge of this territory, the salaries of officials were fixed at 50 per cent. less than the sums earned by the former officials, one at once realizes the magnitude of the saving effected in the item of wages alone. For example, the former Director of General Affairs drew $600 a month, whereas when Mr. T. C. Kuo replaced him, his income was fixed at $300. Now comes this reduction of 20 per cent., bringing Mr. Kuo's salary down to $240, representing a saving of $360 a month, or $4,320 annually. Multiply this saving by a score of officials and one at once appreciates the magnitude of the scope of the economy axe.

Milking the Property

Under the old régime, there were several officials noted for their appetite for squeeze. One, a general and an adviser on military matters, whom the Governor referred to as "General Nuisance," always managed to get hold of a house when he had made up his mind to get it—and for nothing! "General Nuisance" wanted a house at the foot of Observatory Hill and in order to secure it, he organized an "Educational Commission" headed by himself. The "Commission" asked for an appropriation of property, and upon being requested to point out the one which it desired, "General Nuisance" asked for the house in question and obtained it. He next organized a "Public Library" and a house was secured in the same process. When Governor Kao took charge of the Administration, he ascertained the manner in which "General Nuisance" obtained the two houses, and requested that worthy to disgorge. The Governor dissolved the "Educational Commission" and decreed that no "Public Library" could be privately owned.

MARSHAL CHANG AND KING'S BIRTHDAY

Attendance at British Consul's Reception and Leads Cheers for His Majesty

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Mukden, June 5.

On the occasion of His Majesty's birthday, a formal reception was held at the residence of Mr. H. Porter, H. M. Acting Consul-General, at noon. A notable assembly filled the reception rooms and hall and gathered into animated groups, the attire of the foreign consul and officers throwing into prominence the variegated uniforms of the Chinese officials.

The staffs from the business houses attended and interest was considerably heightened by the arrival in person of Marshal Chang Tso-lin, who stepped gravely out of an attended closed car and, after being welcomed, made a brief address. He then delighted the assembly by calling for three cheers for His Majesty and, after this, the National Anthem was sung. This gives us satisfaction here to recall that the Marshal has not visited the Consulate for two years. After this demonstration of cordiality three cheers were given in honour of the distinguished visitor.

We are informed that two ladies presented themselves unaware of the masculine sanctity which prevailed: they are to be congratulated on having prevailed without a hostess.

The departure of Marshal Chang was followed by a general dispersal.

HOW TO KEEP WARM IN CHINA

Stoves Almost to Be Carried in the Pocket: Missionary's Story of His Life

We have been favoured, says the "Dewsbury Recorder," by Mr. J. T. Auty, of Northgate, Dewsbury, with the glimpse of a very chatty letter written to him by his friend, the Rev. A. J. McKay, a Wesleyan missioner, of Yungchowfu, China.

In my brief span of life I have been in various places and sampled several kinds of life, but this life is the best I have struck yet. Interest increases as the weeks go by, and I would not change places with anyone. I am pleased to say I am keeping in the best of health, and trying to keep warm these cold days. Thank goodness, the Chinese winters are not long, and by the time you get this letter we shall be on the brink of the warm weather. During the cold days our devices for keeping warm in chapel are rather peculiar. Down the two aisles of the chapel there is a big wooden tray with an iron bottom in, at the bottom of which a charcoal fire is burning. This only warms those in the immediate vicinity. Several of our members carry their own charcoal fires with them in receptacles which are called Chioh Lo. These are small wooden boxes with handles, in the bottom of which is an earthenware pot in which the fire burns. You can carry these about in any position.

Some are so made that you can use them for a seat, and thus your "fundamentals" are nicely warmed. Many of our women carry them under their Chinese jackets, and to see them walking along with these things under their jackets gives one the idea that they are tremendously fat. We usually have one in the pulpit for the preacher to use during the service, and we find these portable warmers very handy and useful. For instance, when travelling round our circuit and using a sedan chair, it is no joke sitting in the chair when the day is very cold, so we have one of these Chioh Lo and start off with a little fire inside, and it is replenished by our boy at every inn we call at; so you have a fire always going on in the winter.

A Typical Day.

Here is a typical day out of my life. Rise 7-30; breakfast 8 o'clock, after which I go to the school and take morning prayers with the boys. From 9 o'clock to 11 I have my Chinese teacher, and together we work at the language. This teacher is a well-educated young man of about 22 years of age. We just saved his life during the late war in this province, and now he is living with us on our compound, teaching me the language for $10 a month. At 11 p.m. we have a break for a quarter of an hour, during which time we have a cup of Chinese tea and a few biscuits. Then private study till mid-day meal at 12-30. From 2 o'clock to 3-30 I am engaged in the school. Tea at 3-30, then tennis till dusk. Dinner at 6-30, a smoke and chat, then study again at 7-30. On Mondays at 9 o'clock and Fridays at the same time, our Chinese doctor comes to my study for a smoke and a chat. From 9 to 10 p.m. we discuss every matter under the sun in Chinese; then, after that, for half an hour we read an English book together—a book which will help him in his preaching, for he occasionally preaches in the chapel. On Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday evenings, at 8-30 p.m., my Chinese teacher comes along, and for an hour and a half we discuss the Chinese Classics together, and work on in that way. At 11 p.m. we have a break for a final cup of tea; then we adjourn again to our books. By that time I think I have earned a rest from Chinese, so I do a little English reading—Chinese history or English biography. Twelve or 12-30 usually finds me wending my way to bed, tired after the day's work.

North and South.

The recent war which was waged round the capital of this province has fizzled out, and I hope we are in for a spell of peace for the sake of the country people. It was only a drawing-room kind of war—very few men were killed—the chief sufferers were the poor, peace-abiding citizens. The whole trouble can be traced to the antagonism between the South and the North, the former represented by Dr. Sun Yat-sen, a hot-headed fanatic who hopes some day to be President of the Republic; the latter represented by Wu Pei-fu, the Northern General. The latter desires to make this province a buffer State between the North and South, whereas Sun Yat-sen has desires on Peking.

Then, again, the brigand problem is very acute. Most of these brigands are ex-soldiers who have been disbanded and who are too idle to work. I am of the opinion that until China gets back to a monarchial form of government things will stop as they are. Well, and how is good old Dewsbury looking nowadays? I wish I could accompany you to the Test matches with South Africa. I shall follow the games in the papers and thus keep in touch with home sport. I am very happy in my work, and enjoy everything as it comes along. For life in its fullest, give me China every time. How are you getting on at Centenary? Who is your minister now?

PEKING'S FRANTIC FINANCES

Disbursements Totalling $472,194 Charged Against Octroi's Revenue of $200,000

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Peking, June 7.

At a recent meeting of the Anglo-American Association, Sir Francis Aglen remarked facetiously that the Peking Octroi was reminding Peking residents that the Capital is not a treaty port. He might have added that that was because it was reminding us of its own existence, for the activity of the Administration, or the inactivity, has taken new form since Hsueh To-pi was made Superintendent, on July 6, 1923.

So much new life has he introduced into the administration that revenue is jumping up every month. In 1914 the actual receipts were $996,937, in 1923, $2,698,163. The latter figure was about half a million dollars over the official estimate, and $330,301 over the total for the previous year. With revenue showing such an upward trend, the Octroi is now of increasing importance to a government which is as hard-up as China's, and there has been no lack of flies round the pot. As a matter of fact, the jump in the revenue, vigorous thought it has been, has not been so high as the charges that have been placed upon it.

From 1918 to 1919, all the proceeds from the Octroi were remitted to the Ministry of Finance. In the following year the Superintendent was directed to allocate a monthly sum of $100,000 toward the expenses of the President's Office, and this was followed by smaller charges until the amount to be paid out was much above that coming in. Then Gen. Feng Yu-hsiang entered his name on the books, for a cool hundred thousand with which to face the monthly pay roll of his troops; and in conformity with the rule that the last shall be first, was given a prior claim on the funds.

Four Pounds Won't Pay Five.

This is how a monthly revenue of about $200,000 should be disbursed according to the book-keeping system devised by the Government: Gen. Feng Yu-hsiang's troops, $100,000; Chinese Students $25,000; Primary and Middle Shoools in Peking, $35,000; President's Office, $100,000; Judicial Reforms, $2,194.50; Ministry of War, $30,000; Sinking Fund for the Redemption of Treasury Notes, $100,000; Ministry of Finance, $30,000; Ministry of Justice, $50,000. Total, $472,194.50. Even in China, $472,194.50 won't go into about $200,000, so Justice comes last, and other charges higher up the list, which is in the order of priority, make up the "also rans."

Mr. Hsueh is doing his best to meet all these claimants: he is not only collecting more money, but trying to eliminate "squeeze." According to the last number of the sheet which circulates among the staff of the Administration, various employees have been discharged from the service for taking "squeeze." The services of one humble employee are dispensed with for appropriating 14 coppers, which looks as if the new administration is thorough at any rate.

CHINESE IDEAS OF WESTERN ART

Wuchang Art Students' Venus: Queen of Beauty Not in Her Cyprian Shade

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Wuchang, Hup., June 6.

The Wuchang Arts School has been giving a three days' exhibition of paintings and drawings. This school has about 70 students, and their main study is the imitation of Western art, in both water-colours and oils. The exhibition was opened by a representative of the Tuchun, whose likeness on an oil-portrait appeared among the exhibits. Students from many of the other Wuchang schools were admitted by complimentary tickets, and a good crowd patronized the show for three days.

As a foreigner, somewhat interested in art, I was curious to go and see this exhibition. One was not optimistic; yet there were hopes of something better than the worst. It was interesting to go, and to find whether fears or hopes would be realized. The very worst fears, however, were palpably materialized on the walls. Yet, the hopes were not altogether wanting. It would ill become one to poke fun where one was treated with every respect, or to callously condemn where criticism was frankly invited. But, to speak the truth without fear or favour, it appears that the Chinese had better not attempt at present to copy Western art, but to stick to their own delightful composition.

Pink, Yellow and Green.

On entering the first room, where the work of the teachers was on show, the first picture that caught one's eye was the well-known portrait of Napoleon, "The Last Phase." Somehow, the Napoleonic nose had become bent into a distinctly Jewish nasal organ, and that haunting look of disappointed ambition had become transformed into a sodden look of debauchery. Near to this was a canvas upon half of which appeared the Venus of Milo, well enough reproduced so far as form goes, but painted upon a stark pink background. The other half of the same picture was occupied by a deep unltramarine vase, in which were arranged flowers of vivid red, pink, and yellow.

Several pieces of local landscape appeared done in water-colours and quite easy to recognize. But unfortunately, all the colours were laid on too violently. The green rice-fields were too verdant, the flowers were too blue and too pink, the skies were too heliotrope. One was reminded of the reply which Turner made to the lady who declared that she had never seen such colours in the sky as he put into his sunsets. "Don't you wish you could, Madam?" was the artist's reply. But in this case, the lady might well have answered, "No, I certainly don't." Yet, in a corner, probably the least noticed of all the pictures in the room, was a water-colour of a Chinese beggar-woman. There was hardly any colour, except the plain blue of the dress. Somehow, the painter had managed to put into the eyes a look of hopeless misery. If it were not accident, it were genius.

In another room, were hung the exhibits of the scholars. The best of these were water—colour scrolls, done in the dainty Chinese fashion. They portrayed just leaves on twining branches, houses and boats and fish and hills. This is a form of art in which the Chinese are second to none. Over the rest, it were well to draw a veil.

CANTON telegrams to the Chinese press (via Peking), are to the effect that his associates have urged Dr. Sun Yat-sen to take a complete rest and to retire from public life. They propose to establish an Administrative Council, of which Gens. Chen Chiung-ming (who is still said to be Dr. Sun's bitterest enemy), Tan Yen-kai (former Governor of Hunan, who is chief secretary in Dr. Sun's Generalissimo's yamen, and the Commander of the Yunnanese troops in Kuangtung, Yang Hsi-min, will be the chief members. Gens. Hu Han-ming and Hsu Tsung-chih (Dr. Sun's lieutenants) oppose peace with Gen. Chen, and the latter has also announced his willingness to negotiate peace with Dr. Sun's party provided that Gens. Hu and Hsu are dismissed from office forthwith.

TRAFFIC IN OPIUM AND DRUGS

London Society's Branch of International Anti-Opium Association

Peking, June 3.

In connexion with the London Society, which co-operates with the International Anti-Opium Association, Peking, a representative board has recently been formed consisting of nearly 50 members of Parliament and experts on the opium question. The preliminary meeting was presided over by Sir John Jordan, K.C.B., and the following resolutions were submitted:—

1.—The Board, after reading the statement made to the Imperial Conference on behalf of the India Office, is unable to accept it as in agreement with the Hague International Opium Convention, the intention of which was to restrict the trade in opium and its use to the exact limits of medical and scientific requirements.

It can accept no other view of India's trade in opium and morphia than the strict limitation of both, whether for home or foreign use, to these requirements, nor should either be exported except in conformity with the intention of the Hague Convention, and the recommendations of the League of Nations.

Consequently the Board considers that the time has now arrived at which the supply, as at present, by India of opium to the Governments of the Federated Malay States, Ceylon, British North Borneo, Dutch East Indies, Hongkong and Cochin China should cease.

2.—The Board urges upon the League of Nations, the necessity: (a) Of inviting the Government of the Argentine and other coco producing countries to cease the promiscuous export of the leaves to chemical firms. (b) Of encouraging the production and use of effective but non-addictive drugs in places of cocaine, and that, meanwhile, the production of cocaine should be confined to accredited medical agencies.

3.—In the present lamentable condition of the drug problem in China—the militarists compelling the peasants to grow poppy, and vast quantities of narcotics being smuggled into the country—this Board expresses its sympathy with the National Christian Council of China, the Peking Anti-Opium Association, and all similar bodies that are resolutely fighting the narcotic plague.

4.—The Board respectfully urges upon those Members of Parliament who consent to join it, to form themselves into a Parliamentary Committee with a view to watching the progress of events and taking Parliamentary action.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

$500,000 CONSIGNMENT OF OPIUM

Escorted Across Hunan by Troops: Northerners Enrolling Yunnanese Deserters

From Our Own Correspondent.

Kanchow, Ki., May 30.

A short time ago there arrived in this city the unusually large consignment of 150 piculs of opium, worth, it is stated, $3,000 or more per picul. It travelled all the way from the province of Kweichow, and was escorted across Hunan by a lien of soldiers, who brought it safely to its destination. Government troops evidently have multifarious duties to perform, and the protection of this opium caravan from the law, as well as from the lawless, was one of those paradoxical missions upon which the resourceful soldier is able to embark, to the wonder of the wise, and the indifference of the foolish.

The local Electric Light Department has departed for the present to rather odd circumstances. It sold its plant, now inadequate for the wants of the city, to a country market place, and shipped it there. It purchased another plant, and brought it to the riverside on a special lighter. The plant, which was towed up by a launch, was unloaded at the jetty, about three chains from the door of the premises where it was to be housed. The generator, which is said to be capable of supplying 10,000 volts, was safely deposited on the steps at the river-side. A wire hauser was attached to it, and a double-handled, single-barrel winch was employed to coax the generator up the slope to its appointed place. They have been hauling on that winch now for two months, and the generator has moved a chain and a half. It has still the balance to go; but, as there is a corner to round, it seems as if a deadlock has been reached. In the meantime the city is waiting for its light, and the engineers are being paid their comparatively high salaries for waiting upon the stubborn generator; and, altogether, the company is not very happy.

There are a good many local incidents with the soldiers on the streets. Petty tyrannies over merchants, and non-payment, or only partial payment for goods is common. The city is less at ease than formerly. The Northern army is enrolling a good many Yunnanese troops, who have surrendered at the borders. It is said that a brigade of Yunnanese deserters is being formed in the southeast of the province.

Fifty Persons Drowned

There have been floods in the district the last 10 days, but the crops have not suffered very much. A boat-load of traders from the Kiangkeo market, riding down on the flood, struck the bank at Mao-dien, 30 li from here, and over 50 persons were drowned in a few moments.

TIBETAN BORDER COMMISSIONER GOING

Gen. Chen Hsia-lin's Departure Regretted by All: Wise Administrator

From Our Own Correspondent.

Yachow, Sze., May 26.

Chen Hsia-lin has tendered his resignation as Commissioner of the Tibetan Marches and it has been accepted by the military authorities in Szechuan. He gives as his reason for doing so the long tenure of his office and the desirability of a change.

Chen has been on the Border for 10 years and has often expressed a desire to return to his native province of Hunan. At last permission has been granted and he now returns with his Hunan officers and their families by way of Kansu and north China. Gen. Chen prefers this long arduous northerly route to that of a more direct way by Yunnan and the coast or Szechuan and the Yangtze.

The Szechuan soldiers in Chen's army will hand over their rifles to the military in the province—his Hunan soldiers and officers are allowed to take their arms with them. What Chen Hsia-lin will do in his native Hunan remains to be seen. He is still not an old man—only 53—and has tremendous energy and ability. That he will retire into inactivity is hardly possible and we here on the Tibetan frontier who have been grateful for his wise, able administration, will follow with great interest the future of this brave Chinese General.

In Yachow his name is highly spoken of and merchants and gentry would gladly appreciate his return to office. Chen, however, has determined to retire and is now waiting to hand over his office to Sen Tao-yin.

An official proclamation has been issued by the Generalissimo's headquarters in Canton to the effect that Gen. Chen Chung-ming has sent two delegates to Canton to meet Dr. Sun Yat-sen to discuss peace terms.

CAPTAIN D'OISY IN MUKDEN

Entertained by Marshal Chang Tso-lin and Members of the French Community

The arrival of Capt. d'Oisy, after such a thrilling descent at Kiangwan, was naturally calculated to quicken the interest and expectation of Mukden to a considerable degree, and on Sunday last divers reports were scattered abroad proclaiming the imminence of his arrival, which greatly exercised the imagination to account for his delay. By 11.30 a.m. on Monday, however, an enormous crowd had thronged the aerodrome grounds to pay due homage to the Frenchman and to witness an incident in one of the most remarkable and intrepid flights in port-war times.

There were tens of thousands of Chinese, processions of school children, cadets, and ecclesiastical notabilities. Chinese student fliers and airmen waited eagerly to catch first glimpse of the famous aviator. Capt. d'Oisy' arrival was finally signalized by a liberal volley of crackers, which were fired when the plane had flown straight in from the west, passed the hangars, and had turned south to face the wind. A perfect landing was then made in the centre of the grounds.

Gen. Chang Hsiao-liang, the Director of Aviation, leading his young son, went immediately towards the machine, accompanied by Col. Yao, Chief of Staff, as it taxied in. In a few moments the hero and his mechanic were pulling off their substantial leather clothing and were being congratulated by the young General and an enthusiastic crowd of foreign and Chinese spectators. After numerous introductions, Capt. d'Oisy was escorted to the hangar, where all present were invited to drink the very good health of the visitor. This happy and vivacious procedure was earnestly performed while a Chinese band played the Marseillaise. Shortly after this welcome preliminary Capt. d'Oisy was taken off by the General and his Staff to be received by Marshal Chang Tso-lin, who congratulated him on his achievement and sympathized with him over the regrettable spill at Kiangwan.

Although the Frenchman's time was limited and he appeared to be somewhat tired by the flight, he accepted heartily the invitation of M. Pulet to partake of tiffin, and after an hour's sleep sat down at M. Pulet's table, at which the whole French community were present; also Capt. Mackenzie, the popular colonial instructor. Mme. Pulet sat next to Capt. d'Oisy, and the event was interesting in that M. Pulet and Capt. d'Oisy were war-time colleagues. M. Pulet having signed Capt. d'Oisy's brevet to authorize his graduation as a pilot. It will be remembered that M. Pulet flew from Paris to Saigon in a twin Caudron of 80 h.p., with Le Rhone engine.

Marshal Chang Tso-lin cordially entertained the airman at dinner at 7.30 p.m. and invitations were also extended to the French residents of Mukden. Congratulatory speeches were made and numerous presents were bestowed on the gallant flier. Sgt. Vesin, the mechanic of the machine, was busy during these festivities in overhauling the plane, and is to be congratulated upon his efforts in ensuring that the engine is always in good trim. His work has been splendid throughout. As a very early start was contemplated next morning, the entertainment was not prolonged, and the airman returned to M. Pulet's residence about 10.30 p.m.

Every assistance had been given by the Chinese officials, and at 4 a.m. Capt. d'Oisy, Gen. Chang Hsiao-liang, and a few French visitors sat down to a hasty "petit dejeuner" at the Club on the aviation ground. Ten priests from in and around Mukden were on the ground to see the departure, and a small black kitten (or gollywog) was tendered by Mme. Pulet and tied to the front strut as a mascot. By this time Capt. d'Oisy was dressed and had clambered in; Sgt. Vesin then swung the propeller, "contact" was called, and the motor instantly roared into life. While the motor still hummed away, Sgt. Vesin took his seat and "good-byes" were shouted; then, at 5 a.m. sharp, Capt. d'Oisy waved away the chocks and the machine taxied out to the west side of the aerodrome. Turning to the east, he quickly opened up, took off, and flew straight over the hangars, dipping his right wing in farewell as he went over and waving to the little knot below, who cheered as he disappeared to the south-east. Two Caudron machines, one piloted by a Chinese and the other by M. Pulet, who had as passenger the young General, also took off and quickly followed the Frenchman, who was now steering S. E. in the direction of Antung.

Although we were not favoured with a longer stay, the flight can be looked upon as a signal event in the history of this famous town, and we trust that the conditions which obtained during the trip from Peking, via Peitaiho, will again be encountered on the next stage of the flight.

Captain d'Oisy, who arrived escorted by three Army aeroplanes, which had been sent to meet him, was greeted, upon alighting, by Gen. Yasumitsu and Gen. Hadano, the Chief and Assistant Chief of the Military Aviation Board respectively, as well as by deafening cheers from the crowds, which included school-children with French and Japanese flags.

After luncheon Captain d'Oisy proceeded to Tokio where he faces a week's round of elaborately planned public and private entertainments in his honour.

Captain d'Oisy's daring feat evoked tremendous enthusiasm on every side, which paid a generous tribute to his endurance and courage.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

The "North-China Daily News" made records in the newspaper world in China on Saturday morning, when it despatched 10 copies of that day's edition to Amoy in care of the American aviators. This is, we rather believe, the first instance in the history of journalism in China that aeroplanes have carried the day's paper. The fortunate few in Amoy who will get one of these issues, will be able to read of the departure of the aviators long before the regular delivery of press reports notifies them of the birdmen's arrival in Shanghai, three days previously.

HONAN'S TAXATION SCHEME

Moiety of Customs Duty to be Paid at Ports of Entry: Rest Inland:

From Our Own Correspondent.

Kueiteh, Ho., June 7.

In view of the continued financial stringency and the seeming impossibility of finding anything else to tax, the Provincial Treasurer must be congratulated upon having at last thought of a means to increase the revenue, thongh he modestly gives the credit elsewhere. Proclamations are now out to the effect that in future merchants importing goods into the country are to pay half the Customs duty only at the port of entry. They are to get a receipt to show they have paid these dues and then when their goods are brought up country to the place where they are to be sold, the merchants are to produce this Customs receipt and pay the other half of the Customs duty. The same applies to goods for export. It is stated that Kiangsu has adopted this plan and the Civil Governor has given permission for it to be used here. Paying half the Customs duty locally will do away with all these other little taxes on goods which the merchants have to pay at present.

Pity the Poor Merchants.

The one great objection one sees to the above, especially from the people's point of view, is that the Customs authorities have perhaps not been consulted and given their consent to this marvellous little scheme. But naturally if they should be so unreasonable as still to require full Customs duty to be paid at the port of entry that will not be the fault of the Provincial officials!—and the merchants will still have to pay the extra half up country. The proclamation states that this method of taxation will stimulate native trade.

Disorderly Military Departed.

With thankful hearts the people have seen Gen. Wang Wei with his troops of the 24th Division move away at last. The soldiers were some months behind in their pay and had been threatening mutiny for several weeks previous to their departure, to the great alarm of the people, many of whom had removed themselves to Kaifeng and other places for refuge. The men were paid up, however, at least in part, and finally moved off in peace to their new stations on the King-Han Railway, north of the Yellow River.

The new military commander in charge of the Kueiteh District is Lui Huan-chen, one time an officer in the 3rd Division. He is a man of 40 or thereabout and gives promise of being able and energetic. The new troops are a part of the 1st Mixed Brigade under Col. Huo and seem to be very well behaved. May they continue to be so.

Three of the newly arrived soldiers are in the Canadian Mission Hospital down with typhus. They must have brought this with them, of course, as they have only been here a few days. It is to be hoped there will not be an epidemic of this dread disease.

The First Russian Refugee.

A young Russian refugee turned up here on Tuesday last; the first we have seen here so far. He was a young fellow of about 20 with practically no knowledge of Chinese or English and claimed to be making his way on foot from Shanghai to Peking. One is certainly sorry for these poor fellows and willing to help them out, but it is a very bad thing for foreign prestige to have them wandering around the country begging their way from place to place. Presumably Trotsky and the proletariat of Russia would be with us heart and soul if we left these poor unfortunates to starve to death.

The Crops.

The wheat and barley harvest is now over and the weather has kept very fine for the ingathering. Owing to the former drought there is not much more than half a crop this year, but even so the price of wheat has gone down during the last three weeks from $2 a "teo" to about $1.50.

The autumn crops have got a good start and a little shower of rain on Tuesday evening last was very acceptable, but the farmers would like to see more.

SOVIET AND CHINESE INTELLECTUALS

Karakhan's Speech in Peking University: Attempt to Stir up Discord in China

Exception may be taken to the following report on the ground that it assists the spread of Bolshevik propaganda. On the other hand we may be sure the Chinese papers of Peking will give the speech every publicity and it is important to know what the Soviet representatives are doing to stir up discord in China.

FROM ROSTA NEWS AGENCY.

Peking, June 9.

A big meeting was held on Saturday, 7th instant, at 1 p.m., at the University Hall, under Mr. Chiang Mon-lin's, the Acting Rector's chairmanship, to celebrate the signing of the Russo-Chinese Agreement. Mr. L. M. Karakhan, who was accompanied by a few members of the Soviet Mission, was enthusiastically greeted upon his appearance on the platform. The Soviet Plenipotentiary Representative's speech, addressed to the students of the National University, was to the following effect:

"To-day you are celebrating the resumption of mutual relations between the Chinese people and the people of the Soviet Union. I wish to congratulate you on this day, and tell you—the future hope of China—that yours is no small part in the efforts which led to the completion of the Russo-Chinese Agreement.

The Soviet's Battle.

"Of course, you all know what this Agreement is, you have probably read it; so that I need not talk about it to-day. What I wish to say now is something about the unwritten part of the Agreement, but one which is perhaps more valuable and precious and which both you and we keep in our hearts. Indeed, when you insisted and demanded that relations be restored with the Union even without the Agreement being necessarily signed; it was because you realized that the crux of the matter was not in the articles of a treaty, but in the establishment of friendship with the Union of our Revolutionary Republics. Well did you realize that the Union had, for five long years, battled against world Imperialism, that it had won this battle and is now stretching out its hand of friendship and succour to the Chinese people, which has many years yet before it of strenuous and, eventually, bloody struggle for national freedom and liberation from Imperialism.

Proof of Bolshevik's Goodwill.

"As you know, the Agreement which we have signed is not, as it usually happens, the outcome of a struggle: it is but a manifestation of our goodwill, our respect for the Chinese people, the redemption—in fact—of our own promises. Such an Agreement China will not be able to sign so easily with any other Power, unless she does after a tenacious struggle. The greatest woe and misfortune of the Chinese people, that which makes it suffer and keeps your great nation in a position of almost a semi-colonial country—let me be frank with you—are the treaties which exist between China and the Imperialistic foreign Powers. These treaties have fettered your national liberty, happiness and welfare. The happiest event for your people will be to throw off these chains and conquer the same national freedom and independence as were achieved by the peoples of the Soviet Republics.

"Now, how ought the struggle to be carried on? You, who are but one part of the Chinese people, cannot do it by yourselves, though I do know that every one of you is ready to die, if necessary, for the happiness of your people. Your task is to make the great majority of the Chinese people understand your own conception of your people's welfare.

Drive Out Imperialism.

"You must, each of you, open the people's eyes on the Imperialistic treaties that stifle it, and in this respect you have an excellent arm in your hands in the shape of the Agreement just concluded; you must explain and compare it with those that are a bond upon the Chinese people. You must explain that the Agreement signed with the Soviet Union as an example of such treaties as China must strive to complete with all countries.

"We have driven Imperialism out of our country, but only then shall we be satisfied when there will not be a single oppressed nation in the world. When you will be strong enough to start the battle against the Imperialism, which is oppressing your country, you may be assured of the sympathies with your cause of the people of the Union.

"Long live the brotherhood of the peoples of China and the Union! Long live China, independent and free from Imperialism!"

RUSSIAN CHURCH PROPERTY

Soviet Claims on it in China: Private Property Not State: Archbishop's Protest

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Peking, June 6.

Except for a reminder from the Russo-Asiatic Bank of the provisions in the Washington treaties relating to the Chinese Eastern Railway, the first protest against the Koo-Karakhan agreement comes from Archbishop Innocent of the Russian Orthdox Mission in Peking. The venerable prelate is making known his troubles all over the city and has protested to the foreign Legations against the clause in the Sino-Russian understanding which provides that the property of the Russian Church in Peking and at Patachu, near Peking, shall be transferred "as soon as the government of the U. S. S. R. will designate a Chinese person or organization, in accordance with the laws and regulations existing in China regarding property holding in the interior."

The basis of this transfer, says the Archishop, with truth, is an understanding between the two parties to the agreement that the property belongs to the Russian Government, whereas the fact continues, is that the rightful owner is the Mission itself. Presumably, the contention of the Soviet is that a mission that had such close affiliations with the State and as the Russian Ecclesiastical Mission—close enough to have acted as diplomatic agent for Russia in the early days of its intercourse with China—cannot have private holdings in Peking. But the Archbishop has prepared a statement which he says he is prepared to back up by documentary proof and which argues the ownership to be vested in the Mission as a private party. There does not seem to be any reason to doubt this contention, for the Archbishop says he is able to to establish that after the burning of the Mission during the Boxer outbreak, the property was rebuilt out of money provided by the Mission, and not by the Russian Government, and that the ownership is vested in the Mission as a missionarary enterprise.

But the Archbishop is not likely to get much sympathy from the Soviet Government, which has already a record for its antipathy to religious organizations, and the Chinese, in engaging themselves rather rudely to "clear" the property of its occupants, does not betray the same friendliness that once characterized the relations between Imperial China and the Russian Ecclesiatical Mission.

CAPTIVE OFFICERS OF THE YIHYANG MARU

Further Efforts to Obtain Their Release: Still at Tunghsinhsien

Peking, June 9.

Gen. Yang Sen has established his headquarters at Chêngtu, and has formally assumed the post of Tuli, while Gen. Teng Hsi-hao, the Civil Governor of Szechuan, has left Chêngtu for Chienyang to inspect his troops.

No later information has been received by the Japanese Legation regarding the two captured Japanese officers, who are supposed to be still at Tunghsinhsien. Gen. Tang Chi-yao has been asked to exert his influence towards securing the release of the officers by the Japanese Consul at Yunnanfu. Gen. Tang has telegraphed to two of his Generals in Kueichow, one at Pichiehhsien and the other at Tsunyi, instructing them to do what they can in the matter.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

ANHUI FARMERS AND OPIUM SUPPRESSION

$500,000 Loss Through Uprooting of Poppy by Tuli Ma: 13 Bandit Heads

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Pochow, An., May 25.

In my last letter I referred regretfully to the fact that an exceedingly full opium crop was rapidly maturing and it was reported that place was to be visited by Governor Ma. Though it seemed but a report, a week ago to-day he arrived here from Pengpu by boat and his visit has been very effective. I understand that the poppies have been uprooted all over the county. I know they have in three different directions where I have been or heard about. I should not be surprised if this means a loss of half a million dollars to the farmers—this is what they would doubtless have realized on, say, three months' sales. This seems hard on the poor farmers, but I am glad that there is yet some semblance of authority "in spots" in China. It is stated that the hsien official was arrested and handcuffed, but that with "much money" he purchased his liberty. Four deputies sent here by Governor Ma are reported to have been taken handcuffed to Pengpu.

The Governor also seems to have lent his hand somewhat against banditry in the community. Yesterday morning 13 men were executed down by the river. Their hideous heads now decorate the walls by the various gates. These felons were said to have had the appearance of common country people.

An old friend at Yungcheng at whose foodshop I have taken meals for a good many years told me recently that after the tall grain is well grown the robbers will probably be worse than ever. It is now to be hoped they will have less inducement to come to Pochow county as the opium is destroyed and these 13 heads are exhibited here.

I passed through Kueitehfu two days ago and they were just exchanging troops, one party going and another coming in. The citizens had to pay the retiring body $6,000, so report says, to prevent a threatened loot.

There has been plenty of rain that has wonderfully improved the wheat prospects. Farmers are deeply grateful for this as it prevents what at one time seemed likely to be famine conditions.

CHANGSHA'S DAY OF SHAME

Students' Plea Not to Be Laughed at: Anxious News from Kuangsi

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Changsha, June 3.

The first anniversary of June 1 passed off with a very sorry sort of demonstration. The schoolboys are able to isolate ricsha coolies, and being able in practice to deal with them individually can order them at any time to stop work. The one noticeable feature of the "Changsha day of shame" was the absence of ricshas. I heard of a procession of some of the coolies carrying little white flags.

I also received one somewhat lengthy declaration from one of the city schools beseeching me not to laugh at any of the scholars whom I might meet weeping at the spot of shame.

The Kuangsi news we have is causing a flutter in the inner circles. After a lengthy stay in the city, the generals have all departed except Gen. Liu who is in command at this centre. There was no formal meeting with decisions communicated to the public. Of course, there were plenty of actual meetings of the military leaders in which every aspect of the attitude that should be taken up towards Wu Pei-fu was discussed. Outwardly, the Constitution under which Hunan is being governed is its own constitution, and its "independence" has not been fully revoked. No proclamations from any officials outside the province appear on any of the city boarding.

In regard to Kueilin, one of the provincial deputies has been officially sent by Gen. Chao to attempt to stay hostilities there. Should he fail, troops are being drafted to the southern border of the province. Gen. Ma Chi, himself a Kuangsi man, left for Yungchowfu last week.

The King's Birthday.

The King's birthday kept fine until afternoon so that all who could go to pay their respects to the Consul were enabled to do so comfortably; but between three and four it became wet. Although the river has not been exceptionally high, there has been an exceptional number of rainy days. As we have been reading in the daily papers of drought in many places, we ourselves have been wishing for a bit more sun.

YANGTZE SHIP ASHORE

M.-V. Pingan in Trouble near Chungchow

Ichang, June 6.

The motor-ship Ping An has gone on the rocks near Chungchow, and it is feared that she will be a total wreck.

The B. & S. str. Wanhsien, which was badly holed on her first trip up this season, was safely brought down to Ichang. It was found possible to repair her here by using a cofferdam.

Last year the military at Wanhsien instituted a tax of $2 a bale on cotton yarn to be paid by the shipping companies. There being no way of escape, they paid, knowing well enough that they would not be allowed to run their ships if they did not. This year the Chungking military officials are trying to impose a similar tax, but of $1 a bale, to be paid by the shippers.

The latter, however, are not willing to pay, and have wired to Ichang to stop shipping cargo. The result is that most of the ships are taking little but oil. The Shuhun came down last trip practically empty.

It is said that the Japanese ships are having difficulty in getting coal at Wanhsien and Chungking.

The King's Birthday was the occasion of a gathering of most of the foreign residents and several of the Chinese officials at the British Consulate, where Mr. Eastes dispensed the wherewithal to drink his Majesty's health.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

WEDDING

Clark-Jelvakova

A pretty wedding took place at St. Mark's Church, Wuhu, on May 9, when Mr. W. E. Clark, the popular Harbour Master at the port, was married to Miss Olgan Jelvakova, late of Hankow, and Tomsk, Siberia. The Rev. Vincent H. Gowen officiated.

The bride, who looked very charming in an elegant dress of white liberty silk, with veil to match, trimmed with artificial orange blossoms, was given away by Mr. R. Luff.

Miss May Clark, the bridegroom's youngest daughter, acted as a bridesmaid, and looked very pretty garbed in white silk, and carrying bunches of red roses, the gift of friends.

The weather was anything but propitious, but notwithstanding the little church was crowded by the local community who turned up in force to wish the happy pair "good luck."

The Consular ceremony took place on the previous day before the British Consul at Nanking.

The numerous silver and other presents included a handsome silver flower bowl, suitably inscribed, presented by the foreign and native Customs staff at Wuhu.

The Chinese staff, who generously subscribed towards the presents, provided a very liberal cracker display.

THE wedding of Miss Doreen Holmes, daughter of Mr. E. Hamilton Holmes, British Consul-General at Yokohama, to Lt. L. King, R.N., will take place on June 24 at St. Paul's Church, Knightsbridge, London. Miss Wright, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. T. Wright, who will arrive in London with her mother early in June, will be bridesmaid. The wedding reception will be held at the Forum Club, Grosvenor Place, of which both Mrs. Holmes and Miss Holmes are members. Many invitations will be issued to Japan friends in England to the wedding and reception.

FINE NEW HOSPITAL AT HUCHOW

Up-to-date Equipment at Cost of $200,000: Best in East China Out of Shanghai

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Huchow, Chê., June 4.

To-day marked the opening of the new plant of the Huchow Union Hospital. The plant includes hospital, out-patient buildings and power house. A building for the Chinese staff is already started. This plant which was constructed and equipped with every modern convenience throughout at a cost of nearly $200,000 is considered by competent men to be the finest hospital building in Chêkiang and Kiangsu provinces aside from Shanghai. In fact it would be hard to find one better in all China with the exception of Peking.

The main building is a very magnificent structure, fire proof construction, having wards amd rooms for 100 patients It contains a well equipped operating pavilion, laundry and kitchen. The latter attracts particular attention with its white tiled sinks and stoves. Modern bathrooms are generously supplied for wards and private rooms. Cold and hot water are in use in all the buildings.

The main building is connected by a covered passage way to the dispensary building which is a classical looking building in its style of architecture. It resembles a small Carnegie Library with its pillars and rounded balcony over the entrance.

Appropriate exercises were held in the Out-Patient Department when about 200 of the leading gentry, educators and preachers assembled. Many congratulatory scrolls were sent by noted men throughout the province and were hung around the inner balconies. Music was furnished by the band of the orphanage from a near-by town, by representatives of the School of Mothercraft and students from the Virginia School.

The main address was given by Dr. J. V. Latimer who for many years was connected with the Baptist work here. He traced the early history of medical work, mentioned the coming of Dr. Eubank of the Baptist Mission and later representatives of the Southern Methodist Mission including Dr. J. B. Fearn of Shanghai and later of Dr. Manget, Dr. C. D. Leach and Dr. Oscar Nelson who are all three now on the staff.

Appropriate remarks were made by the military and civil heads of the city, a message was read from the governor of the province, a ringing speech was made by the head of the Chamber of Commerce who seemed to find hope that through such an up-to-date plant manufacturers may be induced to come to Huchow. He closed by saying that this splendid institution may act like medicine through the assimilation of which all ills may be driven out.

The Chairman of the meeting, Rev. E. J. Pilley, reminded all of the splendid work of Dr. Sen of the staff and of Mr. Chang for so many years the efficient manager.

Many speakers spoke of the splendid co-operation that has existed between the various bodies that have made possible this achievement. The buildings have been put up by the Rockerfeller Board, the Southern Methodist Mission, and the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society. The land was in great part the gift of the local gentry who are represented equally with the two missions on the Board of the Hospital.

D'ANNUNZIO, who is said to have been one cause for Eleanora Duse's long retirement from the stage, addressed the following telegram to Sr. Mussolini on hearing of her death:—"Eleanora Duse's tragic destiny could not have been fulfilled in a more tragic manner. Far from Italy the most Italian of hearts has ceased to beat. I beg you that the adored remains be restored to Italy at the expense of the State. I am sure that the sorrow which I feel is felt by all Italians." Mussolini's reply revealed that a year ago the Italian Government offered Eleanora Duse a pension in order that she might not be forced to leave Italy again, but the pension was refused.

JAPANESE CABINET RESIGNS

Three Principal Parties Too Evenly Balanced: Who Will Carry on?

Tokio, June 6.

With the Imperial wedding festivities completed, attention is reverting to politics and the Cabinet changes which, according to unanimous opinion, are imminent.

While nothing official is available, statements claiming to be reliable declare that Viscount Kiyoura has determined that, the purpose of his Ministry having been completed, he will resign not later than June 10, and perhaps earlier. It is understood that this determination has been taken in spite of the attempts of a section of the Cabinet to win over sufficient support to maintain the Ministry. These have apparently failed in spite of the Government party, the Seiyuhonto, that the Ministry should meet the Diet and announce its policies, which have not yet been made public, thereafter deciding whether it should stand or fall.

[illegible] manœuvring since the elections has been as usual complicated. With the three principal parties so evenly balanced any combination considered a possibility and rumours of different combinations and splits have been rife. A fairly constant and confident prediction, however, is that Baron Kato, of the Kenseikai, will succeed Viscount Kiyoura as Premier, but whether the Cabinet will be purely a party one or a coalition remains to be seen.

Kenseikai	155
Seiyuhonto	119
Seiyukai	101
Kakushin Club	29
Business men	[illegible]
Chusei Club (which is a new combination of neutrals)	39
Absolute neutrals	13

Tokio, June 7.

An extraordinary Cabinet meeting is being held this afternoon for the final adjustment of business, after which it is confidently expected that their resignation will be tendered.

Later.

Immediately after the meeting of the Cabinet to-day the Premier went to the Palace and tendered the resignation of the Cabinet.

Later.

The Court Chamberlain, Prince Tokugawa, by order of the Regent, went to Kioto this evening to consult the Genro, Prince Saionji, who is too ill to come to Tokio. This, according to custom, will delay the appointment of a successor to the Premiership two or three days.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Tokio, June 8.

Baron Matsui, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, has been created member of the House of Peers.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Viscount Kato Instructed to Form a Cabinet

Tokio, June 9.

According to general expectation, the Regent to-day summoned Viscount Kato, the Kenseikai leader, and instructed him to form a Cabinet. Viscount Kato accepted.

Interest now centres on whether he will select Cabinet Ministers from his own supporters or call on the co-operation of the Seiyukai and the Kakushin Club. Prior to Viscount Kiyoura's resignation, Viscount Kato was in constant conference with Mr. Takahashi and Mr. Inukai, the leaders of the Seiyukai and the Kakushin Club respectively, which lends colour to the belief that the next Government will be a coalition. It is further believed that the Kenseikai itself [illegible]

Later.

After leaving the Palace, Viscount Kato visited Mr. Takahashi, the leader of the Seiyukai, and Mr. Inukai, the leader of the Kokushin Club, for consultation about the new Cabinet.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, June 9.

With reference to the formation of a new Cabinet under the Premiership of Viscount Kato, M. Karakhan stated that with the formation of the Kato Cabinet, the Russo-Japanese negotiations would no doubt make rapid progress and that it was with this expectation that he would gladly accord a welcome to the Kato Cabinet.—Eastern News Agency.

Conference of Party Leaders with a View to Forming a Coalition

Tokio, June 10.

Welcoming the selection of Viscount Kato as the next Prime Minister, this morning's newspapers practically unanimously exhort him to lay aside party preferences and establish a really strong three-party Ministry in order to effect proper handling of foreign and domestic problems. At the same time they warn the parties against their ancient feuds and dissensions.

The party leaders are at present holding conferences to explore the possibility of forming a coalition. The difficulty is said to be the question of allocation of portfolios amongst the parties.

Baron Shidehara, the former Ambassador to the United States, is most prominently mentioned for the Foreign Office, and Admiral Takarabe for the Ministry of the Navy, while it is understood that General Ugaki will remain Minister of War.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Personnel of Viscount Kato's New Ministry Now Announced

Tokio, June 10.

The personnel of the Kato Cabinet has been definitely decided upon as follows:—

Premier, Viscount Kato.
Home Affairs, Mr. Reijiro Wakatsuki.
Finance, Mr. Yuko Hamaguchi.
Navy, Admiral Takeshi Takarabe.
War, Lieut.-Gen. Ugaki.
Foreign Affairs, Baron Kijuro Shidehara.
Agriculture and Commerce, Mr. Korekiyo Takahashi.
Communications, Mr. Takeshi Inukai.
Justice, Mr. Sennosuke Yokota.
Education, Mr. Ryohei Okada.
Railways, Dr. Mitsugi Sengoku.

It has been decided that the installation ceremony will take place in the Imperial Palace to-morrow morning.—Eastern News Agency.

Tokio, June 10.

It is noteworthy that Mr. Takahashi and Mr. Inukai, the leaders of the Seiyukai and the Kakushin Club respectively, are content with less important portfolios in the Japanese Cabinet. The new Minister of Justice is also a member of the Seiyukai, while the Minister of Education is a peer.

Inauguration of the new Government takes place to-morrow morning.

New Cabinet's Warm Welcome

June 11.

The Cabinet, which is being installed at the Palace this afternoon, is greeted with satisfaction by all shades of political and financial opinion, though occasionally the customary objection to a coalition is raised. Public opinion especially welcomes the inclusion of Mr. Inukai and Mr. Takahashi, to the latter of whom a notable tribute is paid for his having abandoned the claims he might have made as ex-Premier and accepting a post of lesser importance.

The "Jiji" says: "If the formation of the Ministry reflects the solidarity of the three parties, there is reason to hope that the spirit of co-operation manifested will enable the carrying out with resolution of domestic and foreign policies."

The "Kokumin" declares that to former Ministry has ever so well represented the will of the people and it looks to the future with confidence.

The "Miyako" expects much from [illegible]

The "Hochi" points out the tremendous power wielded by the Cabinet and the majority in the Diet and hopes that that power will be exercised with discretion.

Viscount Goto's Optimism.

Viscount Goto declares that the Cabinet is ideal. The promptness with which it was formed testifies to the unity and harmony pervading the three parties. He says that the men elected represent the highest type of statesmanship and Japan may be congratulated on her new Government.

Later.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs, Baron Shidehara, who made a statement to the press to-day, admitted that very difficult problems confronted him and that more difficult problems were, perhaps, coming. However, his policy would not be Machiavellian or aggressive, but along the path of justice and peace.

He said that he was not afraid to seek to realize the mission of the Empire by observing the lofty spirit revealed in the treaties of Versailles and of Washington.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

SILKWORM INDUSTRY IN JAPAN

A Government Subsidy Applied For

Tokio, May 31.

Silkworm-rearers of Japan are now in conference, and to-day adopted a resolution to apply to the Government for a subsidy of Y. 10,000,000 to resuscitate the industry, which, it is claimed, suffered a severe set-back after last September's disaster, and is still further threatened by the untoward developments in Japanese-American relations as the outcome of the Immigration legislation by the American Congress.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

LABOUR REFORMS BY TSINGTAO GOVERNOR

Limited Hours and Wage Scale: Large Haul of Smuggled Arms and Opium

Tsingtao, June 5.

The Governor, Mr. Kao En-hung, has promulgated a set of regulations governing relations between employers and employees. They provide that employers seeking labour must state the number of working hours and the wage scale: in a case of misunderstanding there shall be peaceful adjustment of all disputes and no violence: before a labourer can be discharged proper warning must be given and his wages must be paid to the date of his dismissal: no labourer must be punished by his employer but be handed over to the police: any employer guilty of harsh treatment of an employee shall be tried and punished.

Plans are maturing for the establishment of a University here. The Bismarck Barracks are suggested as suitable for the purpose and are being renovated. They will afford accommodation for several thousand students.

Arrangements are being made to hold a Child Welfare Week, commencing on June 19, which will include a baby show.

There have been several arrests of opium smugglers recently. The latest captures were made on successive days on the Kiao-Tsi Railway. A waiter in a dining-car was found in possession of two packets of opium, containing 160 ounces, and the next day 60 ounces were found in a basket carried by a woman passenger.

A large haul of arms and ammunition has been made by the harbour police. Their attention was directed to a godown from which large boxes were being removed. The police examined the boxes and found them to contain several hundred rifles and thousands of rounds of ammunition. The owner of the garage and his employees, who are all Japanese, have been handed over to their Consular authorities.

The Governor has taken up the matter of establishing a through freight service between the Kiao-Tsi and Tientsin-Pukow Railways. Some alterations in the station platforms and railway yards at Tsinan will be necessary. It is reported that the Ministry of Communications approves the proposal.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE rate for the collection of fees at the United States Consulate-General has been re-established for the current month as follows:—U. S. $1 equals Mexican $1.95, U. S. $2 equal Mexican $3.90, U. S. $2.50 equal Mexican $4.88, U. S. $5 equal Mexican $9.75, U. S. $7 equal Mexican $13.65, U. S. $9 equal Mexican $17.55, U. S. $10 equal Mexican $19.50.

THE NEW PRIME MINISTER OF JAPAN

A Sketch of Viscount Kato: The Business World of Japan Comes into Its Own in the Work of Government

BY OUR TOKIO CORRESPONDENT.

Born of an old Samurai family named Hattori, in Nagoya in 1860, Viscount Kato, the new premier, is now 62 years of age. He is closely connected with the Iwasaki family—whose three firms, the Mitsu Bussan, the Mitsu Bishi and the Mitsu Gomei are world wide—having married the eldest daughter of the house. The Iwasakis are the Rothschilds of Japan. Viscount Kato's name is best known to foreigners in connexion with the revision of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance in the concluding of which he played a major part, and in connexion with the much-discussed Twenty-One Demands which he, when Foreign Minister in the Okuma Cabinet, presented to China in 1915.

The significance in the appointment of Viscount Kato to guide the Japanese ship of state lies in the fact that, through him, the financial and business interests of the Empire have now stepped into a position in which, if they do not have full control of the affairs of the nation, they certainly occupy a position of immense advantage and are on a par with the clan chieftains who, hitherto, have had the biggest say in the political life of Japan. Family and clan connexions are of paramount importance in Japan still, as may well be imagined when it is remembered that all life in Japan, political, social, commercial, hinges on the family system and these connexions completely eclipse party affiliations. Viscount Kato's alliance with the rich Iwasaki family by marriage, one can safely say, is bound to increase the influence of the commercial and business element of the country in the nation's affairs. It is still premature to try to pierce the future, but the indications are that the commercial barons and merchant princes of the Empire are well on the way to unseat the clan chieftains. The battle between these elements has been pronounced and protracted, and the appointment of Viscount Kato can be regarded as a signal victory of a new order over the old that did yeoman service in the past, but that the nation thinks has now outgrown its usefulness.

The nation has already begun to call the Kato Cabinet the "Iwasaki Ministry." Baron Shidehara, for several years Japan's representative at Washington, who is now Foreign Minister in Viscount Kato's official family, is also closely connected with the Iwasaki interests, for Baron Shidehara, like his chief, married a daughter of the Rothschilds of Japan. Thus the Premier of Japan and his Foreign Minister are brothers-in-law—for the first time in the country's history.

Statesman of British Type.

The new Premier is a statesman of the British type and his fond boast is that "next to a Japanese I would rather be an English gentleman." Viscount Kato rounded out his education in England and was Japan's representative at the Court of St. James for many years.

After he had graduated from the Tokio Imperial University, young Hattori (the name Kato was assumed after he was adopted by the Iwasaki family) joined the Nippon Yusen Kaisha as a clerk. His worth was soon recognized by the late Mr. Kotaro Iwasaki, father of Baron Iwasaki, the present head of the world-wide Iwasaki interests. He adopted the young man into his family, gave him his daughter in marriage and launched him on a diplomatic career by finding him a place in the Finance Ministry. Promotion came swiftly. He was soon made head of the Foreign Office commercial bureau, became private secretary to the late Marquis Okuma who—shrewd judge of people—held the young man in the highest esteem, and was appointed Minister Plenipotentiary to the Court of St. James.

The present Premier held a Cabinet portfolio for the first time in 1900 when he was made Foreign Minister in the fourth Ministry organized by the late Prince Ito, known as the father of Japan's constitution. Mr. Kato was then in his forties and enjoys the distinction of being the youngest Foreign Minister that Japan has yet had.

Business in Diplomacy.

He has held the portfolio of Foreign Affairs four times since, and brought into the administration of his department a brusque and businesslike manner. Diplomats abroad are said to have complained that the Foreign Minister treated them as though they were subordinate clerks in the Foreign Office.

For many years Kato enjoyed immense popularity. The first rebuff he met was in 1906 when he refused to consent to the nationalization of the railways of the country. He was accused of catering to the interests of the Iwasakis and preferring the interests of the family with which he was connected by marriage to those of the Empire, and, although no evidence was produced to support the charge, the outcry against him was so vehement that he was forced to resign.

He then went into the newspaper business and purchased the "Tokio Nichi Nichi" ("Tokio Daily News") which was then under different proprietorship to what it is now. The Iwasakis supported him in his journalistic venture, but it proved only a flash in the pan.

After a period of comparative obscurity, he was offered the Ambassadorship to Great Britain where he had been before as Minister Plenipotentiary. He readily accepted, declaring that nothing pleased him more at the time than to go "to my second home."

The Twenty-one Demands.

When the European War broke out, Marquis Okuma was Premier and made Viscount Kato his Foreign Minister. It was then that the famous Twenty-One Demands were presented to China. A scandal in connexion with the general elections held while the Okuma Cabinet was in power led to the fall of that Ministry. Marquis Okuma, on resigning, recommended to the Throne Viscount Kato as his successor. The clan chieftains and the Elder Statesmen, however, disagreed with the recommendation and Field-Marshal Terauchi, during whose régime Japan played a lone and ill-starred rôle in Siberia, stepped into the shoes of Marquis Okuma.

For several 10 years after this Viscount Kato kept out of the Government, but was very active as an Opposition politician.

Kato was made a baron in connexion with the revision of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance and a Viscount in relation to the recent war. He is a fluent, but careful, specially when discussing politics. His language is the quintessence of politeness, but he can use sarcasm with sufficient effect to make an adversary squirm. Viscount Kato is committed to giving the manhood of Japan the franchise.

If the appointment of Viscount Kato means the disruption of the balance of power held by the various clans; and the growing consciousness that Japan's future really lies in the hands of her bankers, merchants and economists rather than in those of the military hierarchy, then the appointment is not merely a step forward, but an augury of good. It is also the beginning of the end of the absolute control that the Genro (Elder Statesmen) have for so long wielded, and ushers in the dawn of responsible, party government.

"TROUBLE-MAKERS will be arrested and shot without hope of pardon." Thus reads a proclamation by Marshal Hsiao Yao-man at Hankow with reference to the agitation there over the affairs of the Electic Light and Waterworks Co. The Marshal says that those who wish to complain of the alleged irregularities of the company must do so through the proper legal channels. Any other demonstration of disfavour is a capital crime!

A Reuter's message dated Peking the 5th instant, states that the plans being made for the establishment of a British School in Peking are proceeding satisfactorily. A prospectus giving full particulars about the school will be issued later and in the meantime parents who have prospective pupils are asked to communicate with Miss Leach, former Austro-Hungarian Legation. If the response warrants it, a kindergarten class will be formed.

CHINA'S TWENTY YEARS' OCCUPATION OF THE TIBETAN BORDER

The Jealousies of Two Rival Generals: Lives and Property Sacrificed: A Melancholy Review

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tachienlu, April 30.

The Chinese administration on the Tibetan frontier shows every symptom of a serious and immediate collapse. Wu Pei-fu, we are informed, has appointed Liu Hsiang as Border Commissioner. When Liu Hsiang, if he ever does so, will take up his position on the frontier is still a very remote proposition. The road from Tachienlu to the outside world has now been closed to the general public for six long weeks; when it will open is still somewhat uncertain. Chen Hsia-lin with 10,000 men and Liu I-chiu with 20,000 men have placed themselves right across this part of China and are playing a very keen game of "Somebody to move and win." In the meantime, mails, trade, and commerce are entirely suspended and the merchants are anxiously waiting to see what will be the final outcome of the present struggle.

That the merchants, Tibetan and Chinese, have no interest in the present dispute is certain, it being a purely personal affair between Chen and Liu: an old border animosity and a present geographic difference. If Versailles would only function, the present dispute might be amicably settled. Chen wants this and Liu wants that and as in all Chinese affairs a compromise will ultimately be arranged. Our only grievance is the dislocation of the mail service and the abnormal rise in the price of eggs. Apparently the altitude seriously affects the hens and we almost entirely depend on our supply of eggs from the outside world.

An Insane Quarrel.

The absolute insanity of the present struggle also impresses us: why thousands of men should be carelessly used and their lives jeopardized simply to settle the difference of two opposing generals can only be answered by the innocent, unassuming term, China. The difference between these two generals goes back some time, perhaps to 1916, and apparently they are still very unwilling to let bygones be bygones and shake hands as friends. It is somewhat difficult to understand but not difficult to visualize—on one side of a pass 9,000 feet high lies Chen's army and on the other Liu's army and for now nearly two months these two old border warriors will yield not one single point in spirit, temper, or attitude. China, Szechuan, the Border, may go to Timbuctoo till this present personal grievance is settled. We cannot understand why Yang Sen, Wu Pei-fu, and Tsao Kun should allow the present struggle to continue.

Chen Hsia-lin, Border Commissioner.

The Opium Prize.

The other generals throughout the province have enough to do to look after themselves so take very little interest in border affairs. The frontier position is not very lucrative and is almost entirely dependent on Tibetan imports and exports and opium grown along the border. They say that $100,000 can be collected from opium along the Chino-Tibetan frontier. Whoever controls the revenue from opium produced by the Lolos controls the largest market in China. The Lolos grow it abundantly and sell it to the Chinese. Liu I-chiu has his keen eye on this means of revenue and since his army needs an occasional remuneration, he is quite prepared foolishly to sacrifice thousands of young lives to get it. If these two generals with their armies would devote their skill and energy to exterminating this mephitic haunt of destruction they would go down in history as men who had served their day and generation. But? Unfortunately extermination is not the watchword but appropriation. In China nothing becomes gold quicker than opium and the Chinese army will uphold the ancient traditions of the Celestial Empire if paid in either substance. The quarrel between Liu and Chen becomes exceedingly intricate and has a personal, political, and financial bearing, and the word army may lie at the root.

China's Hold on the Border.

Eastern Tibet without a Chinese army gives us an opportunity to review afresh the whole frontier situation. China has occupied Eastern Tibet with a military force for nearly 20 years and what has she accomplished? We might say the influence of the occupation in Eastern Tibet has been purely negative: politically this is probably true; morally and financially, the influence of the Chinese army of occupation has been by no means of a negative quantity or quality.

Politically, there is no question at issue. A Chinese Imperial Amban was murdered near Batang and as a punishment for this crime China annexed Eastern Tibet. That is the simple and whole question in a nutshell. Before the subjugation Eastern Tibet leaned constantly and heavily towards China, and since, as far as we can see, has continued to do so. The sympathies of Eastern Tibet, including the three classes of the people, lama, nomad, merchant, are strongly with China and we believe will continue to remain so. On this part of the Chinese border nothing is more true that the expression "Distance lends enchantment to the view." Peking is a long way from Eastern Tibet and by the laws of heredity the Tibetans have inherited a holy and wholesome fear of anything and everything that emanates from that sacred capital.

The Lamas Pro-Chinese.

The great lamaseries with their thousands of lamas are openly friendly to China. Litang, Kanze, and Derge are all important and opulent centres and no doubt would be prepared to defend China's rights with their lives. Those lamaistic rendezvous, are too significant and too wealthy to run the risk of incurring the displeasure of China. Self preservation is an important question and perhaps dominates every other where the lama's skin is concerned. Politically therefore there is no tremendous issue involved and who rules Eastern Tibet is quite unimportant so long as there is peace and harmony. The lama has few interests outside his temple; the nomad's one concern is grass outside his tent; the merchant's one anxiety is a plentiful supply of good Chinese tea. Temple, tent, and tea will cover a multitude of sins and will, we believe, insure the peace and quietness of Eastern Tibet.

Financially, Eastern Tibet, in the broker's language is "No go." Chinese generals have come and gone and so has Chinese silver. From a Chinese standpoint there is absolutely nothing but desolation and ruin to be seen throughout Eastern Tibet.

A Wicked Destruction.

Take one single instance. Fourteen years ago two French engineers constructed a very handsome suspension bridge across the Yalong. It cost China the round sum of Tls. 150,000 and M. Keruel and M. Aufrey two years' strenuous and dangerous work. Two Chinese generals had a difference of opinion—a question of ability—one got the start for Tachienlu and so that the other might not overtake him he sent Keruel's beautiful suspension bridge to the bottom of the Yalong. We talk about the Scotchman's experience in London: the end of this expensive bridge was rather more sudden.

Take another instance. Batang is 18 stages beyond Tachienlu. Thirteen high passes, with heights ranging from 14,000 to 18,000 feet, have to be crossed. The journey between this city and Batang is perhaps one of the most arduous in the whole of Asia. Along this dangerous road H. E. Chao built a palatial rest house every 30 li (ten Engllish miles). With the exception of one or two, these handsome rest houses have been demolished. The journey between this city and Batang is now impossible and the road to that town in the heart of Asia is now viâ Yunnan and Talifu.

Temples, lamaseries and settlements have all suffered and largely, very largely, because one Chinese general had a grievance with another. Take one more instance. Eastern Tibet is now an armed camp. Where did all the modern rifles come from? On one occasion 2,000 of Yuan Chang-hen's soldiers were surrounded, disarmed and sent back to Tachienlu. Similar incidents have now been going on for over 10 years. Financially, if China were not so wealthy she would bend or break under the burden.

The army of occupation has steadily retarded every Chinese commercial enterprise. Under the old régime, merchants from north China lived peacefully in every part of the interior. This is now impossible and these hardy Shensi merchants have had to abandon much of their trade in Eastern Tibet. Along the north Lhasa road those frugal Shensi merchants still carry on a very lucrative trade in musk, furs and tea; along the old Amban road to Lhasa the north China merchants have practically given up trade.

Mixed Marriages and Bandits.

Morally, the army of occupation has created a very peculiar situation. During the past 15 years between 5,000 and 10,000 Chinese soldiers have occupied different strategic points throughout Eastern Tibet and most if not all have been powerfully obsessed by the beauty and charm of Tibetan girls. Marriages between Chinese soldiers and Tibetan women became very common and to-day Eastern Tibet has a population leaning both ways. Troops have been frequently moved about and so have those poor Tibetan women. The American and French missionaries throughout Eastern Tibet have done and are doing a good work among those boys and girls. The Chinese troops move on; the women and children are left behind. The soldier goes off at his country's call to fight Liu I-chiu or anybody and leaves his off-spring to the tender care of Providence. The children grow up as we see them around us to-day, 12, 14, 16 years old; some become lamas, others act as interpreters to the different armies, and the majority, sad to say, become brigands. No country claims them and no parents control them and as they must live they select one of those three occupations.

Thus the army of occupation has produced in Eastern Tibet a peculiar situation for which it takes entirely no responsibility. China has enough problems at the present moment without embarrassing herself with any more and the thousands of boys and girls can just grow—well, anyhow. Unfortunately anything growing by itself has a natural tendency to grow wild and but for the absorbing power of the lamaseries the situation would be more difficult than it is.

EFFORTS TO STEM ANTI-FOREIGNISM IN WUCHANG

Student Peace Delegation Going to Japan

From Our Own Correspondent.

Wuchang, Hup., June 6.

An incident which occurred a few days ago in Hankow shows how easily a mere spark may fan into a blaze the present anti-foreign feeling. The affair began with four coolies, resting on the steps in front of a Japanese trading depôt in the native city. They may have been spitting; they may have been gambling; or they may have been simply slumbering in the sunshine, after the way of coolies who are tired. Anyway, they were not ornamental, and one of the Japanese merchants stepped out and asked them to move on. The coolies refused to budge, whereupon the Japanese kicked one of them. The coolies in return fell upon their enemy and began to beat him, when his partner ran out to his assistance. Naturally, a crowd began to collect who were all angry with the Japanese, and the latter are said to have produced knives and begun to lay about them, wounding three of the Chinese. By this time the crowd numbered two or three hundred and they surrounded the shop, in which the two Japanese had taken refuge. A small body of 20 police who had collected were quite unable to cope with the numbers. In the end, a company of soldiers appeared, who dispersed the mob, arresting about a score of them. The three wounded Chinese were carried off to hospital.

It is pleasing to hear that, in more responsible circles, some effort is being made to bring about a better state of international feeling. A deputation of students from most of the leading centres of North China is about to be sent to Japan on a friendly visit. They will visit Tokio and other big centres, and will be received on terms of friendship by many of their Japanese fellow-students. No better means could be thought of for trying to promote international friendship, and if the Chinese delegates come back to their homes with good impressions of their neighbours, this may be the beginning of a better state of affairs. The eight leading government schools of Wuchang have been asked to select one delegate each for this tour, and one teacher to accompany them.

MISSIONARIES WOUNDED IN CHANGSHA

Peking, June 10.

A Consular report from Changsha of yesterday's date says that during factional fighting at Shenchowfu, Western Hunan, two American missionaries, Messrs. George R. Snyder and Carl H. Beck of the Reformed Church of the United States Mission, were each wounded by a bullet in the left arm. —Reuter's Pacific Service.

Two women bandits are said to be rampant at Shiuchichuan, outside Puanganmen. Armed with swords and dressed in short coats with their heads veiled in blue cloth they have recently been committing robberies. Both are said to be quite young.

PANCHAN LAMA AT LANCHOW

Trouble with His Temporal Peer Real Motive for Peking Journey?

From Our Own Correspondent.

Lanchowfu, Kansu, May 28.

There is considerable flutter in official circles in Lanchow over the expected arrival of the Panchan Living Buddha. It will be known to those who take an interest in things Tibetan, that the Panchan Buddha is regarded as being on an equal rank, or possibly even higher in rank than the Dalai Lama. However, the Dalai Lama retains in his own hands the whole of the executive power, and the Panchan Buddha is regarded as too sacrosanct to meddle with human or mundane affairs, so that politically he is of small account for the moment. But it is perhaps worth remembering that 60 years ago, in Japan somewhat similar arrangement existed, whereby the Emperor delegated all real authority to the Shogun. And that by a master stroke the Shogun's power was overthrown, and the Emperor became all powerful.

In a like manner, it is within the bounds of possibility that the Panchan Buddha will "find his representative, the Dalai Lama, is managing worldly affairs unworthily, and come forward himself to the deliverance of mankind." It is known that the Panchan Buddha had some trouble with the Dalai Lama in Llasa, and started off for Urga, the capital of Outer Mongolia. The Chinese authorities, however, persuaded him to travel via Peking, and he is expected in Lanchow next week. Mr. Tong, brother of the Governor here, has been sent from Peking to meet him here. What the prime motive of this is, it is hard to say. It may merely be honour to an exalted guest, or it may be the Chinese wish a counterpoise to the so-called pro-British activities of the Dalai Lama.

Arrogance of Dalai Lama.

The people here remember with some apprehension the visit of the Dalai Lama some years ago—the hauteur and arrogance of his entourage, and the devastation they wrought by eating the best of everything, and paying nothing. As he passed, all had to kneel on the ground,—even the great Viceroy, who went out to meet him in his chair, had to get out and kneel, and had no notice taken of him. The Dalai Lama swept by him as if he were a mere dog in the gutter. Those who did not kneel were promptly beaten, and the indignities put upon the people are not easily forgotten.

Motor-road for Kansu.

Mr. Tong, the Governor's brother aforementioned, is also to look into the practicability of the proposed motor-road across the mountains to Sianfu. Many of us fear that the present Government will make a bungle of this undertaking, which properly constructed, would cost $8,000,000. But poorly made, we have no doubt that every summer flood will make it impassable, and it will stand as a monument to the colossal lack of thoroughness of the Chinese official. We believe a motor-road could be run from Lanchow via Ningsin to the railhead at Paotou, at far lass expense and with far fewer gradients and with far less risk washouts. Can the Central Government not insist on a careful examination of the two routes?

Lanchow, June 9.

The Panchan Lama arrived here this afternoon.—From Our own Correspondent.

Allegations of the most revolting cruelty have been made against Governor Ma Fuhsiang, of Kashgar, by the Tuchun of Sinkiang, Gen. Yang Tseng-hsin, in a telegram to the Central Government, according to Chung Mei Service. Gen. Ma is accused by the Tuchun of cutting off the hands and feet of eight local people to show his authority. Gen. Yang says Ma calls himself "Pahsia," which means emperor, a title not permitted under the Republic, and making such an act one of a traitor and unpardonable. Gen. Yang concludes with the information that he has sent officers in investigate the charges against the Governor and, unless he abolishes his title, he will resort to military force in dealing with him, so that the border may be restored to peace once again.

AMERICAN AVIATORS IN HONGKONG

Bad Weather After Amoy and Arrival Just Ahead of a Threatening Typhoon

Amoy, June 7.

The American aviators landed at the Island Ping Fong at 11.20 a.m. for fuel and food. They left again for Amoy at 1.49 p.m., arriving at Amoy at 4.30 p.m.

Lieut. Smith reports that the weather was very good and the trip excellent. He says that it is the second good day since they left the United States.

The aviators intend to leave Amoy at about 9 o'clock to-morrow morning, if the weather allows it. A typhoon has been reported about 200 miles south of Hongkong; however, neither its intensity nor direction is known. The weather at Amoy is clear and the aeroplanes are running.

June 8.

The three American aeroplanes left Amoy for Hongkong at 9.17 this morning. The weather was excellent.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

The Arrival in Hongkong

Hongkong, June 8.

The American fliers arrived at 12.30 p.m.

Lieut. Smith told Reuter's correspondent that they had encountered bad weather half-way from Amoy. Rain and fog lasted for an hour. Otherwise the weather was very good. The airmen made a perfect landing.

A typhoon was threatening in the vicinity last night. It had blown over this morning, but the rain is continuous and dark and lowering clouds are making the visibility bad. The sea is choppy. The Standard Oil Company, which is in charge of all arrangements, has its preparations for the provisioning and service of the airmen complete. The airmen will probably call at Government House after their arrival.

Later.

The clouds lifted at 12.30 p.m. and the leader's aeroplane was sighted over the harbour approaching the landing area. It was closely followed, at a lower altitude, by the other two aeroplanes. Obviously they had difficulty in discerning the landing place, which was three miles from the Hongkong Island. The United States destroyer Paul Jones heliographed and eventually attracted the aeroplanes. The service lighter, which was moored at Laichikok Bay, fired a signal gun and the aviators steered to the bay with perfect grace. The aeroplane No. 2 was the first to alight.

The Governor's steam tender, with the Governor, the Colonial Secretary, the United States Consul-General and Mrs. Gale on board, steamed up to Lieut. Smith's mooring, while Mr. J. A. Shaw, the representative of the Standard Oil Company, visited each aeroplane successively, attending to them and rendering service, assisted by sailors from the Paul Jones, which was moored at the boundary of the landing area in case of emergency. One of the pinnaces from the Paul Jones took off the aviators to the service lighter, to which they were transferred and where they received the congratulations of the representatives of the American men and women.

Commodore Grace, the Head of the Naval Establishments, who came up aboard the Admiralty launch, asked: "Can I be of service to you?"

After that the aviators went on board the Paul Jones.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Hongkong, June 9.

Lieut. Smith is effecting a change in the pontoon of his plane. The Taikoo Dock Company and the British Admiralty are giving assistance in lifting the plane for the pontoon to be taken off. It is expected that the change will be completed in time for the departure of the aviators on Tuesday morning. —Reuter's Pacific Service.

Hongkong, June 9.

One of the American aviators, Lieut. Wade, this evening called on the Governor, who congratulated the flyers and wished them the best of luck.

June 10.

The American airmen left for Haiphong at 10.17 this morning.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

NORTHERN OCCUPATION OF HUNAN

Troop Movements Daily: Public Sale of Opium

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Siangtan, Hu., June 3.

There have been constant movements of troops here during the last few days, indicating that the Northern forces are to be stationed here. This seems quite probable, for Marshal Wu Pei-fu undoubtedly is strengthening his position in the province.

The other day I visited Hsianghsiang county on the road to Paoching and the west. According to Chinese estimates no fewer than 3,000 loads of opium have passed over this road to Siangtan this year. Inns and small shops along this road, and all roads of any consequence for that matter, display lamps and openly sell opium. My carrier stopped three times to smoke opium while on a journey of 60 li. One could see the young smoking everywhere—youths who had evidently just become addicts to the drug.

The Tong Shan Hsae Society has been most active in some country districts about Siangtan and Hsianghsiang recently. At a small town on a big highway, a three-day feast was held. Men, women, and children from 30 or 40 li around came to this celebration, which was simply a demonstration with a view to increasing the society's membership. Women, dressed in their best and powdered and painted and bejewelled, were much in evidence. One dollar and 60 cents was the fee for entrance and 1,000 cash the fee for the feast. Each day there were 40 tables of feasters. It is said that the great political background of this society is desire to reinstate the monarchy.

Celebrating Shame Day.

On June 1 the students in all the schools of Hsianghsiang had a celebration on the occasion of the great national disgrace day, and also in memory of one or two people killed by the Japanese in Changsha last June. Each school marched for hours about the city in double file. Every two scholars had the characters for shame pinned on their clothes and carried banners and flags. It all ended up by a play called "Enlightened." The general tenor of the affair did not seem to show forth much sorrow or shame. Indeed it seemed as though all were having great good time.

A case of awful cruelty came to the notice of the hospital here recently. A countryman was taken and cruelly beaten by soldiers. Afterwards heavy weights were put on his back. For hours he was left in a most awful condition. The poor fellow grabbed old pieces of crockery and tried to cut his throat. He was brought to the hospital by soldiers, whose story was that he was a bandit, but it turns out that the soldiers themselves were trying to get something out of him and took this cruel way to try to export his wealth from him. Becoming frightened at what they had done they brought the man to the hospital for treatment. Such cruelty is in keeping with the general lawlessness of the soldiers. They simply cannot seem to think that anyone but themselves have the right to liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

FOOT AND MOUTH DISEASE IN PEKING

Residents Warned to Boil all Milk Before Use

Peking, June 5.

The following notice is issued by the Administrative Commission of the Diplomatic Quarter:—

Owing to cases of foot and mouth disease having appeared amongst the cows of Peking, and one foreign resident having been infected, residents are reminded that it is absolutely necessary to boil all milk before use.

(Signed) W. H. Graham Aspland, Medical Officer of Health of the Diplomatic Quarter.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

TELEGRAMS from Tientsin indicate that Japanese residents of Tientsin are about to advocate a boycott of American goods.

JAPAN'S SURPLUS POPULATION

The Necessity for a Proper Outlet: Possibilities of Hokkaido

Tokio, June 3.

Finding a proper outlet for Japan's surplus and increasing population is one of the most serious problems that this country is faced with, according to the report of the Immigration Sub-committee of the new Imperial Economic Board, which has just submitted its recommendations to the major body for consideration.

Fully recognizing the importance of the problem, the sub-committee has drawn up a comprehensive list of suggestions, the execution of which is believed to be necessary, if a successful emigration policy is to be inaugurated, from the point of view of the administration and of the emigrants themselves.

Looking at the problem from a domestic view-point, the sub-committee recommends a more extensive emigration to the northern districts known as Hokkaido, which at present has a population of 2,400,000, whereas space can be found there for over 4,000,000.

But it is clearly indicated that little success would attend any efforts to people these districts, unless special attention is paid to the needs of settlers there, particularly in the matter of communications and banking facilities.

The Committe therefore recommends that communications between the mainland and Hokkaido should be speeded up and developed, that the railway system should be extended, either by Government enterprise or by subsidy to private concerns, and that railway freights should be reduced to the lowest practicable level.

At the same time the establishment of a special colonial bank is recommended.

For the settlers themselves, the authorities are urged to consider means of more favourable terms of settlement and to encourage the setting up of industrial guilds.

The lack of knowledge as to conditions and possibilities in Hokkaido among the Japanese people generally is pointed out, and those appointed to supervise emigration are recommended to make the districts better known by means of judicious propaganda.

Emigration to Other Countries.

The other aspect of emigration, namely to foreign countries, has also been taken into consideration by the Committee, which, however, in its report so far published, has not indicated any directions in which Japanese people might migrate, except to say that emigration should be encouraged to those countries where Japanese are acceptable, and after a proper diplomatic arrangement has been made.

Noteworthy among the recommendations made for the encouragement are the permanent exemption of the overseas settler from his military service and the advice that after a certain period of residence abroad the settler should seek to naturalize himself in the country where he is living.

Should the Government adopt these recommendations, it would mark a great change in the emigration policy Japan has hitherto followed.

Other recommendations put forward by the Committee include a sufficient grant to each emigrant so that he may properly establish himself, special training for the would-be emigrant, and the establishment of emigrants' homes with ample protection for those about to embark on a new life abroad.

June 4.

Three thousand immigrants approximately are to be sent to Brazil this year, according to an announcement by the Social Affairs Bureau of the Home Department.

Each intending settler will be subsidized with a grant of two hundred yen to cover travelling expenses.

At the same time every effort by means of a publicity campaign will be made to encourage migration to Hokkaido and Formosa.

For the purposes of this campaign the sum of Y.150,000 is reported to have been set aside.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

FATAL ACCIDENT AT KULING

Three Coolies Killed by the Collapse of a Bank

FROM A CORRESPONDENT.

Kuling, June 5.

We had a bad accident here two days ago. Coolies, at work digging a trench at the foot of a steep slope on the American School property, were involved; they were warned the day before that it was dangerous and that they should shore the bank up, but took no notice and the consequence was that about 9 a.m. the bank collapsed and three were killed outright and three injured.

The auditorium will soon be finished and then they will start the usual cinema shows.

LIU TSEN-HOU ON THE WARPATH AGAIN?

Reported Mutiny Among His Troops on Upper River

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Mienchow, Sze., May 24.

During the last few days there has been fighting in this neighbourhood. In the Chungkiang (Tongchuan region) there was trouble about a week ago. Last Thursday (the 21st) the troops who had come here a week or two previously, went off to Tongchuan. They started at four in the morning, and were expecting to fight in the afternoon. I am told that they were despatched thither as Kansu troops brought down by Liu Tsen-hou are discontented because they have received no pay and so are making trouble. I would not like to vouch for the truth of this, and would rather think that the bandits are the cause of this military activity. There is no doubt, however, that the Kansu soldiers are there.

Tongchuan is said to be full of coolie-soldiers, victims of the press gang. Some say it is only a local affair between tien and yang or den—petty quarrelling over local finances.

There are also a good many soldiers at Chungkiang. A general called at the mission house there on the 23rd with one of his staff who was a Canton man.

Up to the present the weather has been unusually cool for the time of year. Typhus is said to be prevalent.

CANTON ARSENAL DISPUTE

Mr. Eugene Chen's Reply to U. S. Legation's Statement

Hongkong, June 10.

Mr. Eugene Chen has issued the following statement in regard to the explanation of the American Legation on the matter of the Canton Arsenal plant:—

"If the American Legation would re-direct its attention to the communiqué, which was issued by my Government, it would see that the Arms Embargo Pact had been advisedly referred to as 'the so-called Arms Embargo Agreement' and that the communiqué concluded in a sense that the sale of arms and the plant by an American national in China would involve a breach of the pact by America, not as regards China, but only vis-à-vis other parties thereto. The suggestion that the pact is a self-denying ordinance is not in term of art in diplomacy."

Mr. Chen states that Dr. Sun Yat-sen wishes the matter settled on fair and just terms and that negotiations on this basis are proceeding with the vendors.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE Chinese press learns that Volunteer Corps have been established in Ningpo and the outlying districts in order to cope with the bandits who have been much too active of late, to the discomfort of peace-loving people. Representaties have come to Shanghai now to purchase arms for the Volunteers' use.

DEFEATED GENERALS OF SZECHUAN

Hsiong Keh-wu the Fallen in Kueichow: Country Distraught with Lawlessness

FROM A CORRESPONDENT.

Tsunyi, Kuei., May 28.

Tsunyi is a very important city just now as it is the headquarters of Hsiong Keh-wu, and his bedraggled armies. He was ill when he arrived here some weeks ago, but I believe he is getting better. They are recruiting fresh troops. But they have neither money nor ammunition, so I suppose they will soon be making a levy on the city. The new opium crop is just in, so they might try and get something from that source. But with the roads all closed to traffic, little trade is being done here.

Shih Ch'ing-yang also came along; but he has gone on to Kueiyang and I believe, expects to go on to meet Sun Yat-sen. He will ever remember his journey from Tsunyi to Kueiyang, because of an unexpected interview he had with robbers some 40 li from this city. He did not have a very big escort, and so was waylaid, and relieved of several revolvers, some money and personal effects. I hear that the goods are still safe, and can be recovered when negotiations are satisfactory.

We have a Yunnan army of riff raff here. They have burnt all the partitions, and moveable fittings of all the public buildings in which they have been quartered, for fuel. They have preyed on the people in the city, and the surrounding country, until they are a stench in the nostrils of the people. Some of the poor country people became desperate, and when more of these soldiers (?) came foraging about the farm they were attacked, and some killed. This of course stirred up the soldiers in the city, and they made a sally to attack these lawless people, and killed a number of them.

The people find the Szechuan soldiers much more civil and friendly than the Yunnan crowd, and it is hoped that Gen. Hsiong will do something to open up the roads to traffic. It would not be a difficult task. For the robbers in these parts vanish as soon as they smell powder from other than their own rifles.

There have been severe hail storms in the province this spring, but Tsunyi has escaped all damage, and the outlook for a good harvest is very promising.

FURTHER FIGHTING IN SZECHUAN

Dispute Over Distribution of Salt Gabelle Receipts

Chêngtu, May 24.

After some months of peace, following the capture of Chêngtu by General Yang Sen, to-day heavy fighting is reported at T'ungchuan between Gen. Yang Sen and Gen. T'ien Sung-yao.

The cause is reported to be a dispute concerning the distribution of Salt Gabelle moneys. For some weeks past the Szechuan Generals have had representatives stationed there to watch their interests. No more definite news is available yet. —Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE whole of the city of Manchester may now be described as a sanctuary for wild birds. No one may either take or kill a wild bird of any description at any time of the year within the boundaries of the city without laying himself open to the penalties which the Wild Birds' Protection Act imposes. The Order is the outcome of a desire on the part of many people to put an end locally, as far as possible, to the shooting of comparatively rare birds and to the systematic trapping of gold finches, linnets, larks, thrushes, and other songsters. The Parks Committee, sympathizing with this, determined some time ago to provide a number of sanctuaries for birds in the parks, and entered into a thorough examination of the matter with a number of local ornithologists, who appointed a small committee.

DEATH OF THE LIVING BUDDHA

Acknowledged Ruler of Outer Mongolia Despite Bolsheviks:. Who will Succeed?

FROM A CORRESPONDENT.

Urga, May 23.

The health of the Eighth (Resurrected) Living God, Djebtsung Damba Hutukhtu or Bodgdo Gheghen, has been daily getting worse until at last it was impossible for him to take any nourishment and he could get no relief from doctors or medicines.

Bogdo Gehen when he felt the end was near, sent for his confessor, Bogdo Khambo Hutukhtu, but the latter did not arrive in time. The Living God passed away at 4 a.m. on the morning of May 20. This is likely to prove to be an event of great moment to Mongolia; the late Living God was at one time the absolute and autocratic ruler of all the Mongols in Outer Mongolia; he successfully withstood Hsu Shucheng when the latter endeavoured to bribe the Princes into bartering away their autonomy. In spite of the change in Government and the accession to power of the Mongolian Young People's Party, the Living God was still the Spiritual Sovereign of the State and a power in the land. The Premier, Tsereng Dordji, visited the Bogdo on the 19th and it was seen that the end was near.

On receiving news of the death of the Living God several Ministers of the Government went to verify the fact and to see the corpse; no other persons were permitted to go near the corpse, not even the Under-Secretaries who accompanied the Ministers of the Government.

The corpse of the Living God is in the Dzung-Ordo (Eastern Palace) and is constantly and strictly guarded by Lamas. The house in which he died is surrounded by a Cord Barrier and no persons are permitted within.

Public Grief.

There is a continuous procession of his co-religionists around the court in which he died, expressing their grief by crying, praying and prostrating themselves in religious exercises of reverence. The road between Urga and the palace is crowded with people, mostly on foot, going to pay their respects to the dead, but none are permitted near the corpse. Foreigners are not permitted to go near the palace where the body lies and the taking of photographs is strictly forbidden.

The Government has decreed two weeks general mourning and all the Government Offices and Departments will be closed for three days; they have also assigned the sum of Tls. 3,000.00 towards the funeral arrangements which will take place after the body has been embalmed, this will take about two months. The Army and all Government Departments willl take part in the funeral procession.

The Future Government.

With the disposal of the effects of the deceased comes the practical question of the future state of Mongolia, that is, the form of the future Government; it is well-known that the Living Buddha was a monarch yet the Government was of Communistic nature. In any case the highest power in the land has now devolved upon the Mongolian People's Party. The final settlement of this question will be decided when the Upper Khuruldan (Mongolian Parliament) meets in the autumn.

It is uncertain what will happen to the body, in the past it has been the custom to embalm the past Hutukhtus and build for them a Palace where they sit in perpetual state, in some cases after embalmation a Stupa has been built around the body. In Urga there is already one instance of a past Hutukhtu who was embalmed and still sits in state in the Palace of the late Bogdo's deceased brother near the Customs House.

The late Hutukhtu left one son, during his life he tried to make the position of "Living God" hereditary but was not successful. What will happen to the son, who is about 11 years old, is very uncertain.

DISORDERLY SCENE IN TOKIO HOTEL

Japanese Roughs Demonstrating Against U.S. Exclusion Law: A Dangerous Moment

Tokio, June 7.

A demonstration, which has brought the anti-American feeling closer home to the foreign community than ever before, occurred at the Imperial Hotel, the nerve centre of foreign and Japanese social contact, when a band of 30 Japanese political ruffians to-night invaded the usual Saturday evening dance and broke up the affair by menacing speeches and gestures, punctuated by dances with drawn swords.

The speeches, which were reinforced by handbills, urged a boycott of all American goods, the deportation and future exclusion of Americans from Japan, and Japan to rise against foreigners.

Japanese friendly towards foreigners tried to interpret the affair not as directed against foreigners but as upbraiding Japanese who would associate with Americans at a time "when the motherland is insulted and endangered."

The demonstration was so menacing that the foreign women, of whom there were about 50 present, were compelled to leave the dance room. The men stayed, and for a time a fight was threatened.

The police did not interfere.

Among the witnesses of the demonstration were the American Chargé d'Affaires, Mr. Caffrey, and members of the Embassy staff.

The band were finally persuaded to withdraw from the scene by the more sober Japanese who were at the hotel.

June 8.

Though the inflamatory speeches and handbills are all purely anti-American, the representatives of the "Taikosha," which is composed of extreme political reactionaries who are prominent in all domestic disturbances, declare to the newspapers, that the demonstration, which was staged last night at the hotel by their employees, was directed not against the foreigners, but against the Japanese present "who seek pleasure while their country is faced with a grave crisis."

Later.

This afternoon at the Aoyama cemetery a public memorial service was held in honour of the man who committed suicide on May 31 on the site of the American Embassy. The service was attended to by many thousands of people who came in a continuous stream from one till four o'clock and paid their respects at the grave-side. Wreaths were offered by many prominent personages. The proceedings passed off quietly.

Later.

For the next three days the Buddhist priests will conduct in Tokio a campaign of protest against the Immigration Law. —Reuter's Pacific Service.

Japanese Boycott of American Films

Tokio, June 9.

As a protest against the enactment of the Japanese exclusion law, all the cinema-houses here have passed a resolution not to use American films as from July 1. It has also been decided that this resolution will be applied to all cinema-houses throughout the country. In the city of Sapporo, Hokkaido, the Young Men's Association there have already started their agitation not to see American films.

WORD has been received here that Mr. S. Sakurai, a local Japanese athlete, has just completed his walk between Nagasaki and Aomori, a distance of some 1,500 miles in 48 days. He walked a little more than 30 miles a day. It will be remembered that Mr. Sakurai participated in the international walking race in Shanghai last year, being placed eleventh. Mr. Sakurai gave over 50 lectures at important places along his route on walking in foreign style. This record-breaking walk for Japan took place under the auspices of the "Osaka Mainichi," which is interested in all kinds of sport.

JAPAN'S MILITARY RETRENCHMENT

Scheme of National Defence. Being Redrafted: Popularizing the Services

Tokio, May 31.

"Whatever the complexion of the Ministry that may come into power in succession to the present Government, it is the purpose of the military authorities to lay before it a recommendation that the system of national education should be thoroughly revised," says Gen. Yamanashi, the former Minister of War, writing in the columns of the "Kokumin."

"Japan," he explains, "has carried out her plan of military retrenchment in accordance with the post-Washington Conference demands and is now in process of re-drafting her scheme of national defence.

"There is nothing however, in the trend of world affairs to indicate the military retrenchment is anything but idle talk, and it would appear that the real reduction of military forces is not at the present time a practicable proposal.

"America," he says, "though democratic in her form of government, is extremely nationalistic in her actions. While some of her leaders are advocating further armament limitation and would like to see the military strength of the Powers curtailed, the advantage of citizen camps is not lost sight of, and efforts are being made to spread a knowledge of military principles among the people in general.

Education on Military Lines.

"Japan, too, should see to it that military retrenchment and the consequent loss of efficiency in one direction should find some compensation in another, and it is with that in view that the war department chiefs mean to push their idea of revising the national system of education along military lines."

It may be said to be this idea that has prompted the latest move both in military and in naval circles to "Popularize the services."

Opportunity has been taken of more than one occasion to make the army and the navy better known to the general public.

Navy Day Demonstration.

May 27, popularly called "Navy Day," being the anniversary of the Battle of the Japan Sea, was chosen by the army for a great military parade and tournament, to witness which a large body of representative students and members of the young men's associations were invited as special guests.

The Navy, too, invited a number of people to witness the destruction of the warship Tsugaru by bombing seaplanes and torpedoes off Yokosuka.

Early next month, the "Hochi" reports, it is proposed to take a party of representatives of the young men's associations for a naval criuse as far as the Bay of Ise, and while on board they will be spectators of specially staged naval manœuvres.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

EMBARGO ON LUXURIES IN JAPAN

Regulations to be Drafted to Limit Imports of This Nature

Tokio, May 31.

The Government has decided to place an embargo on the import of luxuries into Japan, and will within the next few days issue the necessary regulations by means of an urgent Imperial ordinance.

The scope and range of this new embargo is now under consideration, and until the regulations are finally drafted, the special articles which the import prohibition will cover cannot be ascertained.

The reason given for this emergency measure is the serious increase in the imports of pure luxuries, which it is claimed at present comprise nearly 60 per cent. of the country's whole import trade.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

FOLLOWING an examination, the Fengtien authorities have dismissed a large number of district magistrates on the grounds that they are unqualified for the positions.

SOUTHERN RHODESIA

SOUTHERN Rhodesia which was inaugurated as the youngest self governing Colony of the British Empire on October 1, 1923, and which had previously for 33 years been ably administered by the British South Africa Company possesses one of the finest climates in the world with long hours of sunshine, breezy temperate days and cool nights. For those who wish to take up farming or ranching in order to make the most they can of their capital, energy and technical knowledge, or for those who wish to retire from strenuous business or professional life and make a home, Rhodesia offers many advantages unequalled elsewhere. The business, social, sporting, educational and medical facilities bear favourable comparison with those of other countries. Native labour is plentiful and when properly managed is cheap and efficient. Taxation is light. Good land in healthy surroundings and amidst fine scenery is plentiful and not expensive.

Full information is obtainable on application to The Secretary, Southern Rhodesia Settlers' Board (attached to the Government of Southern Rhodesia), P. O. Box 372, Salisbury S., Rhodesia.

The giving of advice to prospective settlers will be facilitated if applicants will advise the Board in detail of their circumstances and the amount of capital they would be prepared to invest in a suitable venture.

The Hong-List of the Building Profession

". . . the work will, no doubt, become so well known as to be as ubiquitous as the Hong List. For there is information in it which no firm or individual who has ever had any connexion with land or building should be without, and much of it cannot be obtained from any other source. . . ."

CORRESPONDENCE

DRESS AT HENLI

To the Editor of the
"NORTH CHINA DAILY NEWS"

SIR,—There is not a word to be said against "An Old Correspondent's" letter, all right-thinking men and women have the same opinions. The woman of to-day is a disgrace to the world, for her sense of decency and modesty has left her.

Some time ago we were informed that the U.S.A. had passed a bill saying that women found smoking in public and men who encouraged them were to be arrested and heavily fined. If a rule to this effect were passed in Shanghai the police would have their hands full. Taking it from an aesthetic point of view it is disgusting, even profligate, to see a woman puffing away at a cigarette. As "An Old Correspondent" says there was a time when men stopped smoking in the presence of women, now they offer women cigarettes and look very astonished if they are refused—adding insult to injury.

Everywhere we see painted, half-naked, smoking, whisky-drinking women, many of them mothers, who do not even refrain in the presence of their children.

Yes, "Modern," women of the Stone Age had more decency. I agree with you that we should all go back, away from this craze of novelty, back to the time when women were modest, sweet and good.

All women should read Ruskin's "Lilies" or "Queen's Gardens," if they wish to know what womanhood really means, and all men too, so that they should realize what a good woman is, and not put up with flimsy paint and smoke.

I am, etc.,
GARGI DEVI.

Shanghai, June 5, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH CHINA DAILY NEWS"

SIR,—With reference to the unsexed woman question, Old Correspondent, judging by her letter, must be one who deliberately searches out so-called unconventionalities on purpose to read into them all that is vile. Whilst agreeing, on physiological grounds, with her remarks anent whisky and cocktails, I feel impelled to say that had I her type of mind I would find means to give it a thorough wash.

To follow out Old Correspondent's argument to its logical conclusion on the lines of "Sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander" it would appear that male rowing kit—sketchy singlet and very abbreviated drawers—is blatantly improper, and in future the participants in all races should be clad in all the horrors of civilized full-dress. Evening kit with stiff shirt has been suggested to me as a suitable garb (S.R.C. Committee please note).

Regarding the ladies in bathing costumes "rubbing shoulders with the natives going along the paths" I say nothing. "Oarsman" has, in his very restrained and reasonable expression of opinion, disposed of that matter in a way which calls forth my hearty approval, for it really was a bit too thick. But on one point I join issue both with him and with Old Correspondent.

I was myself at Henli; further, I was in a boat with ladies attired in bathing costumes—albeit they wore kimonos in addition, save on occasions when the latter would have seriously impeded their usefulness at the oars (I refer to racing and practice for racing), and I cannot discover the least sign of detriment to my morals. Indeed, I was agreeably surprised to find myself in the company of ladies so sensible as to suit their dress to the weather.

I suppose Old Correspondent would have had ladies remain in the house at the time [illegible] out of the question. Had they done that, they would have spent most of Sunday on the river, and the day would have been wasted for the rest of us. I've had some experience of [illegible] who will not in the present instance [illegible] to all the weather to defeat them.

Again, the point of opinion among modern youth [illegible] to the present day, when in a boat [illegible] and expects to be fed on chocolates the whole day, again personally at the [illegible] endeavours to spoil [illegible] see into the heart of that boy as [illegible] having a good time, but to [illegible] who join in the sport and get their share of the sun.

Finally, permit me to offer my congratulations upon your editorial comment of even date. To my mind it strikes the right note; the Mid-Victorian days are happily past, and the majority of educated men and women of to-day are far more wholesome-minded than some folks would have us believe.

I am, etc.,
IRISHMAN.

P.S. I too am a grass-widower, and I only wish I had the chance of taking my wife to Henli. It takes all sorts to make a world, doesn't it?

Shanghai, June 5, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH CHINA DAILY NEWS"

SIR,—I have watched with interest the articles pertaining to the "creatures" at the Henli Regatta.

It seems to be everyone's idea that these "creatures" dressed so either for notoriety or comfort. Has it not occurred to anyone that they dressed so to row or swim? Are girls to be compelled to give up these two very healthful and joyous sports just because some narrow-minded people choose to think that they dress in these costumes for other reasons? Everyone seems to have overlooked the fact that these "creatures" probably went to the Henli Regatta and dressed in these costumes just for the sport of rowing and swimming. If these sports are not approved of for girls, then it is up to the Rowing Club to eliminate the girl's races, for any oarsman can tell you that it would be impossible to row in a skirt.

A CREATURE.

Shanghai, June 5, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—As it seems there's no restriction to the flow of frenzied fiction
And the high-falutin diction that is poured out day by day
On the modern style of dressing, (which I do not mind confessing, Leaves but little to the guessing), I should like to say my say.

First; what is it that's so shocking in the clothes at which they're mocking?
Do the Ladies show much stocking? Are their dresses cut too low?
Is the sight of bare arms risky, apt to make our passions frisky
Like an overdose of whisky? Frankly I can't see it so.

Is a girl whose clothes are sporty quite inevitably naughty?
There's no need to do the haughty in a houseboat or canoe.
If a bathing costume's handy—why the girl looks fine and dandy
If her legs are not too bandy and it doesn't cling like glue.

No! On due consideration without heat or indignation
Let us give our approbation to the modern girl free-lance.
As for me, I'll go on spurning pious critics all-discerning,
Let them think (if they've the learning) "HONI SOIT QUI MAL Y PENSE."

I am, etc.,

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—As an active participant in the last Regatta held at Henli by the Rowing Club, and also a reader of your paper, I wish to comment upon the attitude of "Old Correspondent" and his, or her, supporters and their views.

Having had a share of the work and preparation of the Regatta, which, together with the generous support of the public, has made it one of the most successful in years, I think it a pity that the outstanding feature of discussion should be what it is, and that the principal effect of endeavour should be almost entirely neglected. While we are all entitled to our views, we should not make a personal exception to any particular phase of the [illegible] and its attendant [illegible] personally, the means of tending to detract from the general feeling of enjoyment and good-fellowship which has distinguished our Regatta, and to raise the age old question of sex appeal. Active [illegible] and sex have no connexion, [illegible] worn on active, and the subject should not have been brought up.

It would be well to remember that freedom of action is the privilege of the spectators who support our Regattas, and that no personal standards of correct dress, or otherwise, may be enforced, or tried to, by any other individual whose views may be to the contrary. If the personal sense of propriety of dress and decorum does not conform to another's ideas, it would be far better, in such a case, to entertain the objections privately, than to air them in the columns of a public press, where no possible chance would be missed to fully acquaint everyone with a condition which, personally, the writer did not recognize, and which also seems to have escaped the notice of the majority of the spectators and visitors, who have decent minds, and who are not on the look-out for such effects as "Old Correspondent" seems to have made an especial point of discovering.

If the efforts of the Rowing Club and the competitions and guests who have helped us so much by their assistance have had such small value as to be almost completely overshadowed by the ugly and suggestive points which have been raised, then sport and its attendant decent standards are of no possible beneficial effect, and we had better remain at home in Shanghai, which by the way, is equally surrounded by Gin, as well as Henli, on occasions.

Henli has always been, and still is, the scene of worthy and clean competition in sport, and as this is the sole purpose of the Regatta, I think it a pity that anyone should attempt to stigmatize it as a place where common conditions and effects are staged as the chief events and objects of interest, and which seems to have occupied so much of the attention of a few, perhaps queer-minded individuals. It is to be earnestly hoped for, that this abnormal, near-sighted, and distorted view will not be entertained by our public and friends, and that it will be realized and accepted that the conditions pointed out are universal, wherever men and women are to be found in each other's company, whether they wear bathing costumes at watering places, or the dress which is prescribed by society as the proper garb for display at social functions. Personally, I hold no brief for either.

I trust that the foregoing will tend to stop the discussion which can have no possible reforming effect upon the people who seem to have offended one individual, but which certainly will intimate to some that Henli, as the scene of the Club's Regattas, is not a nice or proper place to visit in the future. As I am quite in earnest, and feel very strongly in the matter, I have no objection to signing my name. Trusting that you will give this space in your paper,

I am, etc.,
F. W. SCHLOBOHM.

Shanghai, June 7, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Has too much of your valuable space already been taken with correspondence on the subject of "Dress at Henli"? If so, I should like to beg indulgence for being unable to refrain from adding my feeble "Hurrah" for those who have taken exception to the unfair and ill-directed remarks made by "Old Correspondent," and a few other voices from the "Dark Ages," through your columns.

It is possible that some of the inferences and allegations were justifiable. If there were any at the Henli Regatta whom the shoe happened to have fit, let him wear it. However, there were certainly a great many uncalled for allusions and insinuations directed at some who were undeserving of such blasphemy. Such slander will bear further and repeated refutation.

Isn't it lamentable that decent, respectable, broad-minded women and girls cannot take part in healthful sports and wear comfortable, practical clothes when doing so, without having some mentally warped "mud throwing artists" attempt to drag their character into the mire? It is indeed gratifying to see that the consensus of opinion among the "correspondents" is opposed to such narrow-minded prudery. It encourages one to believe that the time is not far distant when women shall have the same unquestioned privilege that men now enjoy of building up sound, healthy bodies through clean sports and of wearing suitable clothing when taking part in them. I'm sure that the S.R.C. is strongly in favour of encouraging women to take a more active part in athletics. Mutual participation in such beneficial sports as swimming and rowing is undeniably conducive to clean broad-mindedness and the betterment of mankind in many ways, both physical and mental.

Where can "Old Correspondent" have been hibernating for the past few years that she should suddenly emerge at Henli, from her "Rip Van Winkle" sleep, to discover that the world has progressed, and is wearing such shocking costumes as "knickers" and bathing suits. Surely Henli is no fit place for prurient prudes and other degenerates. They should return to the "tall and uncut" or to the questionable amusements through which they built up such perverted mentalities. I dare say, that if it were possible to relegate all such prudery back to the "Dark Ages," where it belongs, that we could rid the world of a good share of the undesirable things that exist to-day. Here's to the progressive "creatures" who are doing their share toward bringing that enlightened day closer.

Yours for fair play,
SINGLE STANDARD.

Shanghai, June 6, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Once again I would crave the indulgence of your valued columns to give expression to a few humble thoughts on this question.

First, I would plead for more tolerance in the writings of your correspondents. Too many of them, it seems to me, adopt the "high and mighty" standpoint in their thinking on this subject, and yet how very, very few of us have the right to cast stones.

"Gargi Devi," for instance, spoils the whole chance of his argument being favourably received by this distressing generalization at the very opening of his letter: "The woman of to-day is a disgrace to the world." After that statement I find it impossible to read your letter, "Gargi Devi," for your indignation has got the better of your sense of fairness.

Then the next letter, penned by "A Man." Here, again, readers are subjected to exaggeration and the use of misleading adjectives. Reading between the lines, one could quite conceivably imagine that his whole motive in writing was to give expression to a disappointment at the "unattractiveness and ill-formation" of the nudity (it was severely that) he saw, not at the fact of the "nudity" itself. If he so writes, it is easily understood, for we men will put up with a lot from a so-called "beautiful" girl, but when that superficial beauty of form is lacking, we are most exacting. Now, to be quite honest, quite a lot of the "nudity" was by no means unattractive or "ill-formed."

"Bachelor" ruins the hope of his judgment, being considered free from all prejudice and heat by generalizing all dancing as: "Swaying masses of perspiring flesh in sensuous contact." If he can see only that in dancing, can we possibly accept his opinion on this Henli question? And again, he refuses to discriminate between any of the couples who float by in a "transport of bliss" of a moonlight night. Surely not all couples on such occasions are a shock to one's sensibilities? And yet "Bachelor's" writing would make it appear so.

If evidence is required of the need for careful, unheated and tolerant writing on subjects of this sort, surely it is provided in this very case in the unqualified refutation which "Youth of 1924's" letter affords to the things which were said and implied of the "unsexed woman" by "An Old Correspondent." In view of what "Youth of 1924" says about the actual graces of this very lady, it would be only fitting if "An Old Correspondent" should hang her head in very shame for writing (unthinkingly, I hope) so basely of another. We yet need to have in mind: "Judge not, that ye be not be judged," and a continued remembrance of the parable of the beam and the mote.

My main purpose, though, in writing now is simply with a view to trying to dispel the entirely wrong impression which I think certain of the letters which have appeared in your columns are calculated to create in the minds of those of the public of Shanghai who are unacquainted with Henli. Henli is a delightful waterway where we oarsmen repair for our regattas and for the training incidental thereto. The benefits of this retreat, secluded from the bustle of city life, are not easily overestimated. To see the sun rise in the crisp morning air and touch with gold the dew-sparkled verdure of earth, and then to see, as it can be seen at Henli in a way denied the city-gazer's eyes, the

Pageantry of wondrous sunset,
Tinting crimson, skies of blue,
Whispering zephrs, scudding cloudlet.

Call of throstle, clear and true.

is to know the innate goodness and purity of Nature. During the regattas, these pleasures are shared with us by our gentle womenfolk, and who will say that Henli is not rendered the more attractive and beautiful just because of their presence? And some of them would share the pleasures that we men enjoy, in swimming and boating and generally lazing comfortably in the free air and unencompassed surroundings. To do so to the full, requires a freer attiring of the person, and it is here, just in this tiny little particular, that also something seems to have gone wrong, and a blot on the landscape raised. The beauty and joys and innocent pleasures of Henli have been side-tracked into a welter of sensuousness over the tiny point of wearing apparel. Well, it is all over now. Those who, unwittingly, gave cause for a little offence, will by this correspondence have had their attention drawn to it, and doubtless at the next regatta they will not be quite so unthinking.

But—and this is what all of us oarsmen would like to have remaining in the minds of the public, as a final impression from this unfortunate correspondence—Henli still remains an unblighted source of content and enjoyment to many men and women who take delight in contact with the open, and we may assure all those who go to Henli, with innocent intent, for that purpose, that they need have no fear of their enjoyment being marred by any unpleasantness, for if such unpleasantness does exist from any cause whatsoever, it may be a thousand times eclipsed by the knowledge that pre-eminently Henli exists for the association in chivalry and wholesome recreation of the men and women.

I am, etc.,
OARSMAN.

SIR,

Most just and learned editor,
I too am a competitor,
Your crowded columns with vain words to fill,
With lines which lack true scansion,
By contraction and expansion
Of feet, to make bad verses of doggerel.
May I these words now offer,
My sound opinion proffer.
With regard to all this scandal which has risen from Henli.
To those intent on showing
Their arms and limbs (while rowing),
To bulging eyes which wait prepared to see,
May I suggest the ballet,
The stage, or dancing "Palais"
But for goodness' sake don't tempt the poor Chinee.
He's of impressionable nature,
(I lack better nomenclature).
And is shocked by manners obviously free.
So if the weather's hotter,
Than when at home you potter,
A kimono I'm sure would cooler be.
And if it looks unsightly
And in figure far from sprightly,
Well imagine you're a dainty Japanee.
And to those who are complaining,
Of the modern woman's training
Just reflect on what you did in your young day,
And though it seems appalling,
How some women fill their calling,
Well.—you'd best just turn your head the other way.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Can you associate Innocence with those half-naked, painted women? The way in which some of your correspondents fling around this sacred word is not only absurd, but sacrilegious to those who have any delicacy of feeling.

To gaze on the nude figure of a wonderful statue, and to look at the exposed bodies of living women are two very different things. In the statue is Beauty in one of its most glorious aspects, the pure beauty of Art; while in these women, Beauty, if they possess any, is overshadowed by a love for display and a search for cheap admiration.

If these women dress as they do for the sake of Beauty or comfort, they are to be respected. But do they? The great majority do not. They are slaves to "Fashion." As Thoreau so pointedly put it, "the head-monkey at Paris puts on a traveller's cap, and all the monkeys in America do the same," plus the monkeys in Shanghai. Again he says "We worship not the Graces. . but Fashion." If Fashion dictate that sleeveless dresses should be worn, the womeen go sleeveless, if she decrees that necks must be hidden from sight, they go muffled. Last summer I heard someone complaining that she detested long skirts and yet she wore them. Why? She was afraid of Public Opinion. If Public Opinion went mad she had to go mad too. It is this craze for ridiculous novelty that will be our ruination.

Unless a woman has the unconcern and innocence of a child she has no right to expose her body, but the fact is that the woman who possesses that purity is too sensible and high-minded to do so, for she realizes that the physical form is a temple, a temple in which dwells "something" divine, and knowing this she will never desecrate that temple by exposing it to the profane and vulgar eye.

I am, etc.,
GARGI DEVI.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—You have allowed many to air their ideas, in prose and poetry, re "Dress at Henli." The consensus of opinion seems to be against the views expressed by "An Old Correspondent."

Of course she is a "prude." Of course she is wrong and her letter shows how evil her mind is—"thoroughly nasty" needing a course of "treatment to straighten out that warped mentality." The damsels, who disported themselves to the delighted eyes of so many at Henli, were merely showing how innocent they were. It is fine of them to give us such an action-lecture in favour of nature-study. They showed how they are going back to the conditions before Adam and Eve fell. The more brief their skirts and the tighter their bathing gear the nearer they are to the pristine purity of the race. Certainly they did not show the "outline of their figures" with any shameful intent. It was just a jolly, free, going back to nature, pure old nature. Let us all rid ourselves of the "discomfort and inconvenience" of clothes even though it cost more for paint and powder. Those who object are those who are farthest from that ideal purity—poor prudes! "Disciples of Satan" who want us to wear clothes! Satan made Adam and Eve do wrong to make them wear clothes. Now that we are getting back to pristine innocency he stirs up "An Old Correspondent" to utter "sugar-coated words" to get the damsel-angels to put their frocks on again.

The dear girls at Henli were as innocent as the little four-month-old girlie whose mother asks visitors to see her take a bath in her little bath-tub. See her kick and splash with glee! Free as nature itself!

And the lovely damsel, when the dances with a handsome man, held tight, is as pure as the morning dew, and her feeling is as innocent as when she, at two years, threw her arms about her mother's neck and pressing her fond cheek against her mother's, said, "I love you, Mother." Why object to that jolly, pure, clasping, warm, heart to heart dance? Only prudes will call it sensuous. It is as pure as lily kissing lily in the gentle summer breeze.

And when our young lady takes a drink of wine or—she is as free from ill intent as when she takes a glass of lemonade or water. When she smokes a cigarette it is done as innocently as when, three years old, she playfully sported a tooth-pick in imitation of Daddy's smoking. Why? The glass of wine and cigarettes are glorified by the beautiful painted lips, not the mouth polluted by these things.

No, the damsels are all right. May the time soon come when the women will wear no "trousers" even, when, like Eve, they run around the streets of Shanghai in Eve's original garb. It is so much cheaper, so much more free and "comfortable," and the men do not care. We are angels.

STATE CONTROL.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—I fear the writer of the leading article on the above subject is past hoping for: and I know that some of your readers will only be convinced by whatever coincides with their own interests. For the sake of the more innocent and fair-minded among your readers, however, it may be well to make a few comments.

If State Control is so undesirable, how is it there is such a tendency in that direction? Why is the number of Socialists increasing so rapidly?

I note from the "Municipal Gazette" that the Commissioner of Revenue estimates that whereas he will receive Tls. 900,000 from the Electricity Department, he will only receive Tls. 85,000 from the Tramway Co., Tls. 21,700 from the Waterworks, Tls. 6,000 from the Telephone Co., and Tls. 1,000 from the Gas Co. It is obvious that the shareholders in these companies must be pleased with your anti-Socialist articles: throwing sand in the eyes of the public prevents them appreciating the real situation.

Why did a Conservative Government dispossess all the blood-sucking water companies that preyed on the London populace; and establish the London Water Board? Why was the Port of London Authority established? Why was the office of the Public Trustee created? Why were the telephones taken over by the Post Office?

It is time there was more common honesty in dealing with these questions, and to abandon the usual journalistic claptrap about publicly owned concerns being wastefully managed. The fact is that whereas with public concerns the slightest mismanagement is magnified and proclaimed from the housetops, in a private concern the blunders are successfully hushed up: there is nobody interested in making them public. Here are a few instances of the economical (!) working of oil companies in China.

A huge tank was erected, but found to be in a wrong position, so that within four years a sort of canal had to be made, wherewithal to float the tank to a better location.

A large solid stone godown was erected, but also found to be inconveniently placed, so that within four years it was torn down and rebuilt on another position on the site.

Materials and machinery for new factory buildings were being rushed to a certain port before navigation ceased. Urgently required material was excluded by a large clumsy piece of machinery which would not be required till the very last, and indeed was not indispensible even then.

Forms of all kinds are printed only to be scrapped: or printed in disproportionate numbers. On one occasion so few were printed that they were used up immediately, and another lot had to be ordered. On another occasion a sufficiency was printed to last 500 years!

A married couple were sent over 1,000 miles inland, but within a few weeks were brought down river again and settled at another port.

Any blunders such as these in a public concern are megaphoned all over the world. Of course, oil profits are so enormous that nobody cares!

I venture to prophesy that in less than 10 years both the railways and coalmines of Great Britain will be nationalized: and the benefits will be so great that people will censure themselves for not having taken these steps before.

I am, etc.,
FABIAN.

BRITISH UNEMPLOYED

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—In your issue of to-day, under the caption of "Margarine and Music," there appears a contribution from your Trade Union correspondent.

Inter alia he writes, anent Free Libraries, as follows:—

> By filling in a form any special book will be bought for him to read, subject to the approval of the librarian, which is usually freely given. The living room of this unemployed man's house contained a shelf exclusively filled with new books lent from this library.

Are we to understand that the librarian of a Municipal Free Library is empowered to purchase, or even to approve the purchase by the Council's Library Committee, of any special book which any one or all of, possibly, 10,000 ratepayers may think fit to requisition?

Are we also to believe that any individual ratepayer may take out from the Library at any one time a number of books sufficient to "exclusively fill" his bookshelf? It is news to me that any one individual is able to take out at any one time more than two books—possibly three—but three books do not fill a bookshelf, unless Lilliputian.

If your Trade Union correspondent's other facts (?) are based on the same wobbly foundation as the foregoing I shall, in future, accept 'em at the selling rate of two bob to the tael.

I am, etc.,
SHADE OF CARNEGIE.

A PUBLIC DANGER

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Now the summer is again at hand, it is about time the public conscience was aroused against one of the greatest scandals of our so named model settlement; I refer to the Hongkew Creek and the unbelievable stench with which it is allowed to poison its whole neighbourhood. The stench which led to the culverting of the late Yang King Pang was as a mild odour compared with the one which the Hongkew Creek emits, and the smell of the Chinese City is, in comparison, like attar of roses. The district referred to is the one adjacent to the creek from the S.M.C. Electric Light Works to the Broadway Bridge and includes the public slaughter houses, the Sacred Heart Church, St. Francis Xavier's School, St. Luke's Hospital, and a very great number of dwelling houses.

The residents of that district have on numerous occasions complained to the Municipal Council Departments responsible, but apart from polite answers to the letters of complaint nothing whatsoever has been done.

This abomination flourishes within five minutes' walk from the Astor House, and I suggest, for your kind consideration, that you send one of your reporters round there about 8 o'clock in the morning to investigate, and that he tells your readers what he sees and smells. It would be a real service to the public if you would take up the matter in your powerful paper.

WHY REFUGEES CANNOT BE REPATRIATED

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—From all I have read concerning destitute Russians in China I gather one impression—they are a bore, a nuisance to all well-clad foreigners. To the latter category also belong the Russian profiteers of different nationalities who during the Great War and the following Revolution may have lost a little on the one side and gained a large fortune on the other without having taken active part in the war itself. They have come to Shanghai with well filled pockets, they belong to "society," their children are in the most expensive schools and they themselves are ashamed of speaking Russian—"you know how Russians are looked down upon!"—Well, to all such foreigners the Russian refugees, former soldiers who have fought many a battle since 1914, are merely beggars whom they very gladly would get rid of. After Soviet Russia's recognition by several Powers, a recognition from purely mercantile motives, the above mentioned foreigners find that time has come to repatriate the destitute Russians. To be repatriated means to come back to one's "patria"—fatherland. It would in this case be better to say "step-motherland" for every one who knows the real conditions in Russia also knows what fate awaits such repatriated.

I am a Scandinavian, have lived nearly all my life in Russia, have suffered together with its people and love the country as dearly as my own. It is only three months since I came from Vladivostok to this town and believe myself to know the Russian conditions better than people who have not lived in Russia or have only been there on a short visit.

I remember with what rage the Communists looked at Vladivostok from May 26, 1921, to October 20, 1922, during which period the Maritime Province was the only little white island in the red sea. And yet, the first time of their rule, they concealed their real nature. Before they entered they promised full forgiveness to all sinners, inducing them to remain in the mother country. They seemed really to have changed in the beginning, but it turned out to be only the old trick of theirs. I am not going to relate of their doings in economical, educational or religious matters, but will keep strictly to the question how they treat a defeated enemy.

A rather short time after their arrival the Bolsheviks found all their adversaries suffering from "homesickness." They were accordingly perforce sent "home." Some of them reached the place of their old homes where often nothing of it was left, some were "tried" during the voyage and put to death, and most of them had to make a stop in some coal mine where they worked chained to a wheelbarrow. All this I know from letters received by my friends from their relatives in this way repatriated. They were all promised a safe return home.

The refugee problem is a very difficult one to solve in a human way. I quite agree with the bored or rather shocked foreigner of Shanghai: this town is not the fit place for Russians to live in. They cannot find suitable work here and become demoralized from living on charity. But could not there in the whole world be found space enough for 50,000 Russians. Czecho-Slovakia alone provides for 3,000 Russian students hoping in future to benefit from their knowledge in some way or other. Russia is indeed a vast country rich beyond measure, but for the poor destitute Russians in China, this is of no use. In a not too distant future, I think, Russia will be able to show hospitality to some more than 50,000 foreigners who will be drawn to that country, not from fear of prison or death, but its richness.

I have no doubt that the Bolsheviks will promise a safe return to all refugees in China in the case of her demanding it. But who can believe in such promises being kept? I, at least, do not belong to optimists of this kind. Thanking you for the space in your paper,

I am, etc.,
A LOVER OF RUSSIA.

MISSIONARIES IN CHINA

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—The constant capture and ill-treatment of missionaries in China is ample indication of their being unwelcome guests and provides food for thought.

A writer well versed with the affairs of this country has pointed out that there is room for modification in the Western attitude to China on the social question. No Government as weak as China's should be asked to extend protection over its vast dominions to every foreign missionary who cares to engage himself in preaching ethical Bolshevism in any hsien, fu or chia he likes. When the missionary informs the Chinese that the worship of their ancestors and their devotion to their mothers-in-law are sins against the Holy Ghost, he should be prepared for trouble and when trouble comes his way, according to the tenets of his own faith, he should not claim the protection of foreign bayonets. The Powers should make this clear to all the missionary bodies.

It is really astonishing that there has not arisen in China a strong man with a political platform "plank" advocating the abolition of foreign religious missions in China. He could be sure of great support and might eventually effect other improvements that would lead to a more peaceful development of the country.

As there is a distinct dearth of preachers of the gospel in the West, but no lack of them in the East, one is inclined to the belief that the inducements to come here are more mercenary than meritorious. America has lately had a remarkable revival of enthusiasm for missionary work in China. Divines of all ages are offering. One explanation is that it is easier to live cheaply and comfortably in China than in the U.S.A., while there are large sums to be made by dealing in silks, jade curios, etc. According to the American "Mercury," and this is of local knowledge too, many missionaries have found the business of exporting Chinese goods to the U.S.A. so lucrative that they have retired from the Church altogether. For those who remain there is the consideration that no controversies about Fundamentalism ever penetrate to China to discredit them in the eyes of their flock. They remain, first and last, what religious teachers should be—unchallenged autocrats on the spiritual side. There is a lesson here for wilting churches. A living wage and an uncritical outlook are first essentials in the chancelleries of Paradise.

I am, etc.,
P. O. Q.

Shanghai, June 9, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Presumably P. O. Q. wishes to start another controversy, now that the Henli Dress is about worn to tatters. If that is not his purpose, can it be that he is another of the great army of non-thinkers, or is it merely a case of les fous se promènent là où les anges craignent le marché? One might think the latter supposition is correct, when the words in the third paragraph are changed so that "religious missions" reads "business firms."

P. O. Q. assumes that foreign missionaries alone "claim the protection of foreign bayonets.' If he will only peruse the records of protests for indignities, our objector, who seems so ignorant of the work of missions in China, if he has been in China long enough, will lose a large amount of face. And his ignorance of the work of missions is appalling! I am certain any of the workers of the National Christian Council will be more than glad to tell him that not all missionaries in China are ministers of the gospel who preach "ethical Bolshevism"; that practically all missions have definite age limits for new workers in the field, so the "divines of all ages," will not get here, despite Mr. P.O.Q's efforts to bring them; that few missions allow their members to deal in "silks, jade, curios,etc," and that when they do they are usually requested to resign (is it that P.O.Q. exports these same luxuries and is losing in competition with a former missionary?); that not all missionaries say if you worship your ancestors you sin against the Holy Ghost.

I have no doubt but that anyone at the offices of the Associated Mission Treasurers will be most happy to inform P.O.Q. concerning mission salaries in China as compared with clergy salaries in the West. And does not P.O.Q. know there are not a few missionaries in China who have honest incomes, which they possessed before coming to China? And has P.O.Q. ever aided any foreign mission or visited a mission station, or, is he the type of foreigner in China who says it is his prerogative and who delights in belabouring his neighbour's rischa coolie?

I am, etc.,
MISS I. O. NARY.

JEWISH TEACHING ON WORK

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—In his sermon headed "An Old Evil" published in your yesterday's isue, the Rev. Mr. A. N. Rowland, inter alia, said:—

> "We have largely outgrown the old Jewish belief that work is a curse."

Such a sweeping statement cannot stand the searchlight of criticism. From time immemorial the Jews have regarded work as the most indispensable thing to pursue. "Labour is a kingdom," runs an ancient Hebrew proverb. The Wise King in his Proverbs (22—29) was not less emphatic when he said, "Seest thou a man diligent in his business he shall stand before kings." The first uprising of labour against capital, the first overthrow against domineering force, was conducted by the Jews in Egypt. "Cursed be he," said Jeremiah, "that builds his house by unrighteousness, and his chambers by wrong; that useth his neighbour's service without wages, and giveth him not for his work." The Rabbis of old were themselves recruited from the artisan and labouring classes, and some of them even maintained that poverty is a means of purification. The Talmud lays great stress on work and declares, "He who does not teach his son a profession instigates him to become a thief." As a matter of fact there is no instance where work had been decried or regarded as a "curse." On the contrary, work was extolled as a virtue and as an adjunct to achieve higher aims and pursuits in life. The climax was reached when work was praised in the following flowery language in Tractate Baba Bathra, 11a:—

O strip a carcass in the street
And take your pay for labour sweet,
And say not "I am a priest or king,
And 'neath my honour's such a thing."

The foregoing will, I hope, suffice for the present to disprove the allegation that the old Jewish belief regarded work as a "curse."

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—In his sermon in the Union Church on the 1st instant and reported in your issue of the 9th, the Rev. Mr. Rowland told his intelligent flock "We have outgrown the old Jewish belief that work is a curse." Will the Rev. Mr. Rowland please tell me if his authority in propounding this doctrine before his audience is based on Biblical, Talmadistic or national basis?

I am, etc.,
M. Myers.

Shanghai, June 10, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—When I referred to "the old Jewish belief that work is a curse" I had in mind, of course, the words spoken to Adam in Genesis 3.17. "Cursed is the ground for thy sake; in toil thou shalt eat of it all the days of thy life." But lest this should be taken as an aspersion on the ideals of the Jewish people, I welcome Mr. Ezra's criticism and accept the correction. There is no doubt that the Jews have stood preeminently for the necessity and dignity of work. "Six days shalt thou labour" is a great law, and made a permanent tradition. Ben Sirach felt keenly the limitations imposed by a life of mechanical work, but he closes his famous passage on the subject in the 38th chapter of Ecclesiasticus with these fine words concerning the artisan: (They shall not sit on the seat of the judge, nor declare instruction and judgment. But they will maintain the fabric of the world. And in the handiwork of their craft is their prayer.

Delitsch quotes the following passage from the Talmud which bears upon the point. "When the Holy One, blessed be His Name, pronounced judgment upon Adam, at the words 'Thorns also and thistles shalt it bring forth to thee,' his tears fell, and he cried 'O Lord of the world, must the Ass and I eat out of one manger?' But when God continued 'In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread' he acquiesced. Here, as so often, common sense proved itself to be a window of the divine revelation.

A. N. Rowland.

STOCK EXCHANGE REFORM

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—All who wish to see an improvement in our business methods here will heartily congratulate you on your very able leader in to-day's issue, and will agree that radical changes are necessary in regard to dealings in stocks and shares. Would such methods as are in use here be allowed on the stock exchanges in Great Britain or America? When a man buys a stock or share on the London market he can ascertain for himself, from the lists published in the daily papers, the actual prices ruling on the Stock Exchange that day. Here a buyer or seller has no such guarantee. As you suggest, one cannot say whether a transaction has been done with a jobber or a broker.

Then, again, why cannot there be fortnightly settlements, as in London? The present system only encourages gambling. With daily or fortnightly settlements, as in New York and London, a good deal of gambling by men who are never able to meet their obligations when the market goes against them would be eliminated.

In writing thus, I wish to make it clear that I am, personally, quite disinterested. I never buy or sell a single share on the Shanghai market. All my share transactions are done in London with brokers on the London Stock Exchange. I speak feeling, however, because I have seen so many young men, with no experience whatever, gambling in shares of companies of which they have not the slightest knowledge, and who have lost all their money.

While on this subject I would like to call attention to the deplorable ignorance on the part of many investors here in regard to London stock and share quotations. Many people seem to think every share purchased in London involves the payment of income tax on dividends. This is not correct. There are many shares quoted on the London Stock Exchange which are suitable for investors abroad, as their dividends are not subject to payment of income tax, and many shares can be purchased which give a return of seven to nine per cent. These are shares in companies which are absolutely sound. Similarly, first charge bonds can be purchased which give a good annual return, free of income-tax. Anyhow, my experience, which covers many years, has been such that, under no circumstances, would I buy or sell a single share on the Shanghai market while present conditions continue.

Enclosing my card,

I am, etc.,
Ferro.

COCAINE AND CAFES CHANTANTS

To the Editor of the
"North China Daily News"

Sir,—I notice in to-day's Municipal Gazette that clause 13 of the licence conditions for Sing-Song houses reads: "That the use of morphia, cocaine, or other noxious drugs be not permitted on the premises."

Presumably such a clause also applies in the case of cafes catering to foreign trade.

If this be so, it would be interesting to know what, if any, measures those who run these "joints" take to observe the condition.

It is a fact familiar to those who know anything of the action of drugs that cocaine retards intoxication and in the interests of trade there is reason to suspect that the management of the resorts referred to, if they do not actually encourage the use of cocaine by the girls, at least tacitly encourage its use by taking no active steps to prohibit it.

The widespread addiction to "coke" on the part of the unfortunate women refugees is one of the saddest things I know.

While on the subject of cafes and Municipal regulations, can any of your readers explain how it is that out of all the cafes in Shanghai, a certain popular cafe in the French Concession systematically keeps open till all hours of the night, the early closing condition recently passed, notwithstanding?

I am, etc.,
Curious.

MUNICIPAL INVESTMENT BANK

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—On May 1 last the Shanghai Municipal Council invited applications for Tls. 500,000 6 per cent. Debentures at 97½, a portion, if not all, of which loan was allotted to members of the Municipal Investment Bank under Rule 5, who had made deposits between February 6 and May 5. Notices to this effect were sent out on various dates up to May 21.

A fortnight later, on June 4, the Council sanctioned a further issue of Tls. 1,000,000 6 per cent. Debentures, subscriptions for which were invited at 95. In view of the substantial increase in the amount of this second loan, following so rapidly on that allotted to the Bank depositors, one cannot but think the Council must have been aware of their financial requirements when they sanctioned the former issue at 97½, and it would appear somewhat harsh that the public who had deposited money in the Municipal Investment Bank should received allotments comparing so unfavourably with the loan appearing a few days later.

It is certainly discouraging to subscribers to the Bank, to look at these two issues made within one month, and to realize that in making their monthly deposits they incurred a loss of slightly over 2½ per cent. as compared with what their position would have been, had they held the money themselves, and invested it in the second loan.

The Council, of course, could reply that it is entirely optional to the public whether they make these deposits in the Bank or not. Nevertheless, the two issues following in such rapid succession, with the allotment to Bank depositors at the earlier and more unfavourable rate, in the interim, certainly offers some grounds for comment.

It might be construed that the Council, being aware that a considerable sum was in the Bank, and had to be satisfied by the issue of Debentures as at May 5, came out with a small issue on May 1 of Tls. 500,000 at 97½, knowing full well their requirements were greater, but that the total amount desired; i.e., Tls. 1,500,000 might not be obtained at this price. Having satisfied the Bank depositors, they immediately float another loan of Tls. 1,000,000 at 95, to attract the public whose money was not in the Bank, and to the detriment of the Bank depositors.

Thanking you for your space,

I am, etc.,
Fairplay.

Shanghai, June 10, 1924.

The story of how a big passenger junk, being towed by a motor-boat, successfully fought off two piratical attacks but succumbed to a third, appears in last week's Hongkong papers. The junk, which plies between Canton and Shiuhing, was being towed by a motor boat to the latter place on Monday, June 2. When off Tze Tung, the boats were attacked by a big gang of robbers who fired from both banks of the river. By offering strong resistance, the boats managed to get away, but were attacked again about an hour later by another gang. This time, also, the boats succeeded in making their escape. When near Shiutong, however, two launches were seen to approach and, by reason of the firing, it was early evident that this was a third piratical attacked. Those in the motor-boat quickly cut the tow rope and made off in an opposite direction, leaving those on the junk to their fate. Little resistance was offered and the pirates seized the junk. About $10,000 and a quantity of valuable cargo was stolen, whilst over 50 of the passengers were kidnapped and are now being held to ransom.

COMPANY MEETING

S. MOUTRIE & CO., LD.

Annual General Meeting

The twenty-fifth annual meeting of shareholders in S. Moutrie & Co., Ld., was held last Friday at the head office, 37 Nanking Road. Sir Edward Pearce presided, supported by Dr. W. J. Isenman, Messrs. A. E. Paine, J. H. Teesdale (directors) and W. S. Watson (assistant manager), 740 shares being represented. The notice convening the meeting was read.

The Chairman.—The report and accounts having been in your hands for some few days, I propose, with your permission, to take them as read. It is with much pleasure that your Board have another successful year's business to announce and that the result of the 12 months shows a balance standing at the credit of profit and loss account of $121,589.11, which sum includes a a carry forward from the previous year's working of $20,281.59, but less the $18,504 paid as an interim dividend of 6 per cent. last November. Subject to your approval, your board recommends, as stated in the report, the following allocations of the profits:—

A final dividend of 4 per cent absorbing	12,336.00
A bonus of $4 per share	24,672.00
To building reserve	35,000.00
To a superannuation fund	37,000.00
To carry forward to new account	12,581.11
	$121,589.11

During the year your board have been carefully considering the advisability of putting into operation a staff superannuation scheme in place of the usual annual bonus granted to our employees; and in view of the many years' service of a number of our staff, your board recommends that the scheme be made partially retrospective. Following therefore the lines of certain other public companies, it was decided by your board to recommend to the shareholders at this meeting an allocation to a superannuation fund of an amount of approximately 5 per cent. of each employee's salary since the commencement of his service with the company. This involves an amount of some $37,000, which your board now recommends be written off this year's profit and loss account rather than debit our reserves which it might legitimately have recommended. Future allocations will be as follows:—5 per cent. to be deducted from the salary of each employee and credited to the fund, the company to add an amount of 10 per cent. of salaries and credit the fund with interest at 6 per cent. per annum every six months. The scheme if adopted will give every satisfaction to the staff and your Directors feel that not only is it well merited but that it is also in the best interests of the company.

With regard to your building reserve account, this, with the recommended appropriation of $35,000, will stand at $175,000. I have to inform you that your Baikal Road property, mow 14.8.2.6, standing in the books at a cost of $46,842.59 is now being developed. Building operations were recently commenced, the plans having been gone into very carefully by Mr. Watson, who on his visit to America and England last year had the advantage of studying the most up to date pianoforte factories; his knowledge thus gained has been most beneficial to the company. The new factory, the architects being Messrs. Stewardson & Spence, should be completed by the end of the year. The total cost will be approximately Tls. 160,000. When completed we shall be able to dispose of our present factory on the North Honan Road. With the proceeds thus obtained and the amount standing at building reserve, we should have ample funds to meet the cost.

The Company's financial position will unquestionably, if I may say so, be received by you with much satisfaction. The year, recently completed, has as you know been one of general trade depression, but we have come through well and are in a stronger financial position than at the close of our previous 12 months' working. We have met successfully our extraordinary expenses. To move into these handsome new premises it has cost us something like $16,000 for loss in rent on our old premises, [illegible] fixtures, etc. We have written off nearly another $14,000 for loss in rent on our old premises at both Kuala Lumpur and Peking. Your Shanghai premises and both the branches just mentioned have been reconstructed into a modern standard, this being in keeping with the general progressiveness of the Company and your board are fully confident that it has been money well spent and will eventually result to the benefit of shareholders.

Stocks.—Our stock reserve of $50,000 remains untouched, and it will be noticed with satisfaction that your stocks have been reduced by some $14,000 and sundry debtors by $3,000.

Assets—Under this head you will notice that we have in fixed deposit $241,680.72 and cash in hand and on current account with the Hongkong & Shanghai Bank $62,987.17. As already stated therefore we have ample funds to meet all the requirements of the company.

Before sitting down I should like to express the board's appreciation of the excellent work carried out by the staff during the 12 months under review. It is, I need hardly say, due to their interests in the business and their loyal endeavours that we are able to-day to lay such a satisfactory report before you. I feel assured therefore that you will pass the inauguration of a superannuation fund involving an initial outlay of $37,000, which your board recommends for your acceptance at this meeting. I think, gentlemen, that I have covered all the points necessary to refer to, but should any shareholder wish to ask any questions, I will do my best to answer them.

No questions were asked and the following resolutions were carried unanimously:—

"That the report and accounts, as presented, be passed."—Proposed by Sir E. C. Pearce and seconded by Mr. J. H. Teesdale.

"That the appointment of Mr. J. H. Teesdale as director of the company be confirmed."—Proposed by Dr. W. J. Isenman and seconded by Mr. A. E. Paine.

"That Sir E. C. Pearce be re-elected a director of this company."—Proposed by Mr. J. H. Teesdale and seconded by Mr. A. E. Paine.

"That Messrs. Lowe, Bingham & Matthews be re-elected auditors to the company."—Proposed by Mr. A. C. Remedios and seconded by Mr. C. M. Bain.

meeting be held during the month of June, 1925."—Proposed by Sir E. C. Pearce and seconded by Dr. W. J. Isenman.

The Chairman announced that dividend warrants would be posted in the afternoon.

Mr. C. M. Bain said that on behalf of the shareholders he would like to express their appreciation of the very excellent report and he congratulated the Chairman and his co-directors.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Chinese Young Men's Christian Association, held on Tuesday, Dr. W. W. Yen (Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, who was formerly acting Premier and Minister of Foreign Affairs) and Dr. C. T. Wang (former Minister of Foreign Affairs and Director-General of Sino-Russian Affairs) were unanimously elected honorary presidents. Dr. Wang was formerly General Secretary of the National Committee of Y.M.C.A.'s in China as well as Chairman of the local Chinese "Y."

Under the English law a wife who has a spite against a deserting husband can keep him in prison for ever, since his ability in prison to provide for her is strictly limited and thus maintenance charges fall more and more in arrears. In a recent case in England a woman of Greek birth who had married an English soldier, but had been deserted by him, secured a maintenance order against him. He got in arrears, however, so the law proceeded to remove him from a position at the Wembley Exhibition where he had a chance of providing something for her and clapped him in prison, where he could earn nothing. The courts are powerless because they have no right to order that maintenance charges should be stopped out of wages, but the absurdity of the present position is obvious.

Silver.

The price came yesterday at 34 1/16d. ready and 34⅛d. forward, as against 35 1/16d. and 34⅜d. last week, showing a decline of ⅜d. and ¼d. on the respective prices. The London market has been generally quiet and steady, with the Continent still holding off. On Thursday India and China were reported as small sellers.

Bars in stock 2,691, including Silver Yen 10 lakhs. Stocks of Sycee and Dollars amount to Tls. 344 lakhs and $361½ lakhs, against Tls. 347½ lakhs and $335½ lakhs last week, and Tls. 200 lakhs and $260 lakhs on June 12, 1923.

Chinese Dollars are returning in large quantities from the Cocoon districts and the price went as low as 70.9875, but rose yesterday to 71.10.

Exchange.

Exchange closed off last week on Thursday, Friday being a holiday, with the official quotation at T.T. 3/3⅜d. On Saturday it opened at T.T. 3/3⅜d., where it remained until yesterday, when it dropped to 3/3¼d. On Thursday the market opened steady with sellers T.T. 3/3⅜d. ready and forward. Chinese bought small amounts during the day and the rate dropped slowly to 3/3⅜d. Quite late in the afternoon Chinese were buying freely. The rate quickly dropped and the market closed with the best sellers quoting 3/3 5/16d.

With the drop in silver the market opened uncertain yesterday with doubtful sellers of T.T. 3/3 5/16d. and Gold $71⅛, but soon steadied up and it closed at the tiffin interval with general sellers T.T. 3/3⅜d. and Gold $71⅜ ready and forward, with buyers ⅛d. and 1/8th of a cent higher. Buying quotations were 4 m/s L/C 3/4⅜d. and G.$73¼.

Chinese speculators' oversold position is reported as about £1,000,000; in Yen they are about square.

SHANGHAI MARKET REPORT

Fair Recovery of Business after the Holidays: Piece Goods Quite Brisk

June 14.

The local markets have recovered quickly from the long holiday and quite good business was done in piece goods, whilst cotton and yarn also showed more signs of life. The one line that was out of it was general produce, but this is the off season and nothing can be expected for about two months yet.

Piece Goods

Generally speaking, the tone of the market has shown a distinct improvement. The north has fallen away, principally owing to the poor condition of the crops there, consequent upon unfavourable weather. However, Hankow and all the Yangtze ports have been sending in good orders and dealers appear to be well satisfied with the prices. The demand from Ningpo also has improved. Clearances naturally were upset by the holidays, but they have been quite satisfactory since the return to business. Of course, there has been nothing to report from Manchester, owing to the intervention of Whitsun.

Cotton, Yarn, etc.

China Cotton.—The marked fall in American prices has not affected the local market very greatly. Business has been fairly brisk since the holidays and a fair demand from Szechuan has been noted. Stocks are short and an advance is expected. There is a bullish feeling at the moment. Yesterday's closing quotations on the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange were:—June, 47; July 46.95; August 46.45; September 43.45; October 40.70; November 40.05. Spot quotations:—Shensi, Tls. 46 to Tls. 47; Hankow, Tls. 45.50 to Tls. 46.50. There were no other varieties in the market.

Yarn.—This market also has shown up rather more briskly. Yesterday morning's closing quotations on the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange were:—June 178.50; July 176.90; August 174.80; September 172.80; October 168.80; November, 167.60.

Produce.

The position remains unchanged. All the markets are lifeless through a lack of demand and a shortage of supplies locally.

DUTCH OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT LOAN

London, June 11.

Messrs. Rothschild, on behalf of the Koninglijke Nederlansche Maatschappij tot Expoitatie van Petroleum-bronnen in Nederlandsch Indie, are offering to shareholders for subscription Florins 80,364,000 in shares of 1,000 florins each, and sub-shares of 100 florins each until June 30. The issue price is par. The issue will be devoted to an increase of the fleet and to business extensions in various countries.—Reuter.

A NEW DUTCH BANK

The Hague, June 12.

A new banking concern has been established at Amsterdam under the name of Vanderheydt's Bank. It is partly a continuation of the firm of Vanderheydt & Co., of Zandwoort. The capital is 1,000,000 florins, of which 20 per cent. is paid up. The new firm is closely associated with the Barmer Bankverein and the firm of Hugo Stinnes.—Reuter.

DUNLOP'S HUGE DEFICIENCY

London, June 6.

Among measures to wipe off a total deficiency of £11,250,000, the directors of Messrs. Dunlop, in a scheme submitted to the shareholders, suggest writing down the ordinary £1 shares to 6/8d., and reducing the C Preference shares to 15/-. Arrears of preference dividends will be satisfied by allocation of ordinary shares, and the nominal capital will be restored by the creation of 32,000,000 new ordinary shares of 6/8d.—Reuter.

AWARD IN BRITISH SHIPBUILDING DISPUTE

London, June 6.

The award of the industrial court in the shipbuilding dispute grants a general increase of 7/- a week over the prevailing rates, payable in two instalments on June 14 and September 20, with an additional 6d. a day for the men engaged in repair work at Southampton.

The national claim was for an advance of 10/- a week, and the Southampton strikers had advanced local claims.—Reuter.

JAPAN'S FOREIGN TRADE

Tokio, June 4.

Japan's foreign trade during May is officially stated to have reached the total of Y.400,308,000. While exports totalled Y.176,685,000 during the month, imports amounted to Y.223,623,000, showing an excess of the latter over the former to the amount of Y.46,938,000. Since the beginning of the present year imports have totalled Y.1,290,994,000, that is Y.629,172,000 more than exports.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

S. M. R. ENTERPRISES

According to the President of the South Manchurian Railway Company, the sum of about 45 million yen will be available for various enterprises during the fiscal year 1924-25. This amount, which compares with Y.26,500,000 for 1923-24, has been allocated as follows: Railways, 15 million yen; harbours, Y.3,500,000; mines, 3 million yen; ironworks, Y.7,500,000; electrical undertakings, 3 million yen; gasworks; Y.1,200,000; hotels, Y.1,500,000; local administration, Y.8,600,000; and miscellaneous work, Y2,200,000.

Meeting of Shareholders in the Shanghai Exploration & Development Co., Ld.

Meeting of Shareholders in the Shanghai Exploration & Development Co., Ld.

The report of the directors of this company Messrs. R. S. F. McBain, John Prentice, A. W. Burkill, A. J. Welch, and W. R. McBain for presentation at the fifth annual meeting of shareholders to be held at the office of the general agents, 1 The Bund, on Friday, June 20, at 4 p.m., states:—

The directors herewith beg to place before the shareholders a statement of accounts and balance sheet for the year ended December 31, 1923, and regret that they are so much later than last year owing to the sad death of our accountant at the mine, which occurred just at the time when the accounts were nearing completion.

The profit and loss account, after charging general agents' commission, directors' and auditors' fees and general expenses, shows a loss on the year's working of Tls. 63,083.82, which, added to the balance of Tls. 13,341.23 brought forward from 1922, makes a debit balance of Tls. 76,425.05. To this amount has been added the loss of Tls. 98,264.36, being balance of profit and loss account of the Mentoukou (Sino-British) Coal Mining Co., leaving a total debit balance of Tls. 174,689.41 to be carried forward.

Profit and loss account was opened as from July 1, 1923. The above result therefore represents only six months' working and during that period production was stopped for practically two months when the mine was shut down owing to danger of flooding. Since work was resumed production has progressed satisfactorily and at present about 500 tons of coal are being raised daily. The branch railway line from Mentoukou Station to the mine, referred to in our last annual report, was completed during the year and has since worked satisfactorily, all the coal despatched from the mine being carried over it.

Increase of capital.—Notice of an extraordinary meeting of the shareholders of the company to be held on Friday, June 20, immediately after the close of the annual general meeting, is enclosed (with the report), to which the attention of the shareholders is called.

Directors.—Mr. J. K. Tweed resigned his Directorship of the Company on his retiring from the East in May, 1923, and Mr. W. R. McBain was invited to take his place on the board. This appointment requires your confirmation. Mr. R. S. F. McBain, on his return to Shanghai, was invited to rejoin the board, and this appointment requires your confirmation. Mr. A. J. Welch retires by rotation, but, being eligible, offers himself for re-election.

Auditors.—Messrs. Lowe, Bingham & Matthews offer themselves for re-election.

YANGTSZE INSURANCE ASSOCIATION

At an extraordinary general meeting of the Yangtsze Insurance Association, held on Tuesday afternoon, the resolution recently passed, which provides for enlarging the scope of the Company's operations, was confirmed.

The resolution, the adoption of which was proposed by the Chairman (Mr. John Prentice) and seconded by Mr. Brodie A. Clarke, reads as follows:

That the company's memoradum of association be altered by substituting for the present clause 2 thereof a new clause to read as follows:—2.—The registered office of the association shall be situate at Shanghai in China.

And by adding to clause 3 thereof immediately after subparagraph (G) of of the said clause a new sub-paragraph to be lettered (H) and to read as follows, that is to say:—

(H)—To undertake and execute any trusts the undertaking whereof may seem desirable and also to undertake the office of and act as trustee, executor, administration, guardian, committee, agent, custodian, receiver, treasurer, registrar or auditor and to keep for any company, government, authority or body any register relating to any stocks, funds, shares or securities or to undertake any duties in relation to the registration of transfers, issue of certificates or otherwise and generally to transact all kinds of fiduciary business and either with or without remuneration and by re-lettering the present subparagraphs (H) to (S) inclusive of the said clause (I) (J) (K) (L) (M) (N) (O) (P) (Q) (R) (S) and (T) respectively."

NEW TRADE WEEKLY

"Capital and Trade"

We have received a copy of the first number of "Far Eastern Capital and Trade," a weekly journal dealing with financial, insurance, banking and shipping, as well as other industries, with a view to the dissemination of accurate commercial news. The new weekly is neatly compiled and printed and is well illustrated. It contains a number of interesting articles on a variety of subjects, including "The Protection of Trade Marks in China" (the first of a series by Mr. N. F. Allman), German Trade with China, the Tea Trade, Money and Exchange, Shanghai Markets, Machinery, Metals, etc. In the editorial notes it is stated that "Capital and Trade" is not attempting to compete with any other journal, but to help to develop the country's trade and to be the means of introducing reforms that will help trade in general. If succeeding issues are equal to the high standard of the first number, the new venture should prove highly successful. The head office of the paper is at No. 25 Jinkee Road.

TRADE IMPROVEMENT IN SZECHUAN

An important piece of news was received Tuesday to the effect that the military authorities had taken off the 1 per cent. import duty which they imposed, a few weeks ago, on all imports into the province, and which, combined with the other impositions which trade with Szechuan has to endure, had brought business to a standstill.

It is understood that Marshal Wu Pei-fu ordered removal of the tax, which was immediately followed by improved demand.

THE RUSSIAN SHIPS AT WOOSUNG

Bolshevik Intrigue and the Rumours of Sale: Vessels Now Brought Inside Huangpu: Sickness Rife and Men Landed for Treatment

It is evident that a good deal of misunderstanding exists with regard to the Russian ships at Woosung and the men on board, and available information indicates that this has been fostered by Bolshevik agents. The recently published letter protesting against the sale of the vessels is certainly open to suspicion. Even if rumours of the proposed sale of the vessels have any foundation in fact, it is obvious that no such sale can take place, or at least would be a very risky transaction, for the reason that those in charge of the ships have no title to sale. Meanwhile, the state of this strange armada of mendicants continues to present the authorities with a problem of extraordinary difficulty.

The Eldorado, which has been idling about Chinhai and Woosung for nearly a year now, recently moved off to Tsungming Island and is now reported to be moored in one of the creeks there, the suggestion being that this is preparatory to removing her machinery and breaking up the vessel. The other three vessels, the Monguvgay, Zaschitnik, and Okhotsk, have just been moved inside the Huangpu to a position opposite the Customs Station.

This move has been made through the initiative of Mr. V. Grosse, Co-Director of Russian Affairs, and was found to be absolutely necessary in view of the shocking state of affairs prevailing on board all three ships. They are very small, and, with some 600 men on board, sanitary conditions are indescribably bad. Consequently, a great deal of sickness has broken out, particularly stomach trouble and eye disease, and deaths are almost a daily occurrence.

Realizing that it was impossible to allow continuance of this state of affairs, Mr. Grosse made arrangements to have the vessels moved as already stated, and to send 200 men ashore to the Chinese Red Cross quarantine station on the Pootung side. Some of them, it is hoped, will land to-day, and their reception ashore will continue until all have had their immediate needs, and their sicknesses, attended to, this of course being the sole purpose for which permission to land has been given.

The League of Nations

The desperate state of these men raises anew the whole question of the repatriation of Russian refugees in China. It is most urgent that something definite be done to secure their final departure, either as emigrants or under a repatriation scheme. It will be remembered that last autumn Dr. Greig, of Kirin, came to Shanghai as the special representative of the League of Nations, charged with the duty of studying the condition of Russian refugees in China and of devising some final solution of their problem. As the result of Dr. Greig's work negotiations went forward between Dr. Nansen, on behalf of the League of Nations, and Moscow, but without avail. These have definitely broken down, the Soviet declining to give guarantees for the safe conduct of returning refugees or allow the intervention of a third party. Why they should assume this attitude is difficult to understand, since it is directly at variance with the policy they have pursued elsewhere. They were ready enough to allow a representative of the League to investigate conditions in the Don region and to arrange the repatriation of Russians who had taken refuge in the Balkans. Why, then, should they not similarly be ready to follow a similar policy in the Far East? Possibly, they regard with suspicion a situation on this side which has been complicated by an extraordinary amount of intrigue; but whatever their motive for refusing to co-operate with the League, it is to be hoped time will bring them to a more reasonable frame of mind.

The Emigration Outlet

In the meantime, what is to be done for these unfortunate people in our midst? The first and only remedy is that resort must be had to emigration. Here it becomes necessary to correct an impression which apparently has got abroad that Dr. Greig considers repatriation the only solution of the problem, a view with which he seems to have been credited in the American Red Cross report. The case is distinctly otherwise, Dr. Greig having made it perfectly plain that he considers emigration for a certain number of the refugees to be an absolute necessity. He has already done something towards sending a few of them to Canada. The first party of 35 Russians left Kobe on board the Empress of Russia on the 7th instant, special terms having been arranged by Dr. Greig on their behalf with the South Manchuria Railway, the Osaka Kisen Kaisha, and the Canadian Government and the C.P.R. Further efforts will be made to secure the departure of more families, and in selection special care will be taken to secure people able and willing to settle down on the land as cultivators.

Unfortunately, the expense attached to Canadian emigration on even a small scale must be enormous, G.$1,000 being the minimum cash requisite for sending away one family of five people, the Canadian authorities having stipulated that an emigrant family must be in possession of $700 on landing, to provide for their maintenance until they are able to earn for themselves. And unfortunately the financial side of the problem is no nearer solution than the political. Incidentally, it should be mentioned for the assurance of those who have interested themselves in the matter, that ever since his appointment as League delegate Dr. Greig has been working most energetically to secure a solution of the refugee problem, and neither he nor the League are to be blamed for the delay and lack of progress.

The Appeal to China

Once more we would urge that the Sino-Russian Agreement puts a new complexion on the matter so far as China is concerned, the way having been opened for negotiations for dealing with the problem on a comprehensive scale. A very large majority of the refugees are now willing to return to their own country, and China would be doing a service to all concerned if she would arrange with Moscow to take them back.

Russian Refugee Seamen's Protest

A strong note of bitterness runs through an ultimatum, signed by M. N. P. Patireff, and 88 other officers and men on the five Russian steamers at Woosung, which was sent to the "New Shanghai Life" regarding the action of their superiors in selling the vessels to outsiders. They stress the futility of their remaining in Shanghai while their leaders are, so they allege, betraying them by selling ships which belong to the Russian people, and express the intention of going back to Russia.

"We, the undersigned," runs part of the proclamation, "officers and soldiers, have become convinced of the futility and mistake of further sojourn abroad at a time when a new life is being introduced into Russia. We have learned of the sale of the str. Eldorado to Chinese speculators to be broken up, and we authorize Citizen N. P. Patiroff to make by every means in his power a decisive protest against further attempts to sell the remaining Russian ships."

The ultimatum goes on to point out that the Eldorado, the Monguvgay, Zaschitnik and Okhotsk all belong to the Russian Volunteer Fleet, and therefore to the Russian nation, so that no individuals or groups of military refugees have any right to sell them. They should be returned to the Russian people. That, they state, is the only honourable and straightforward course to take. The selling of them is dishonourable [illegible] Already they point out, anchor chains, fittings, and other equipment have been sold to outsiders. Their leaders had assured them that they would keep the ships safe for New Russia, while even then they were lulling their followers into a false sense of security, and conducting negotiations for the sale of the ships.

Then comes a note of hopelessness. "No matter what happens" they state, "or what sort of government may be in power in Russia, do you think the Russian people will even say 'thank you' to us?"

Leaders Selling Arms?

Developments now will be watched with interest. These ships have been something of a mystery since they came here some time ago and moored off Woosung. The general impression was that those on board them were "White" refugees, and at first sympathy was expressed for them. This sympathy evaporated when it became known they were openly selling arms to the Chinese. Then came whispers that the sympathies of these people were not altogether "White," and no one has really known what are their political opinions. When, however, both Great Britain and China recognized the Soviets their position became a somewhat difficult one, and something was bound to happen. What did happen was that one day the Eldorado slipped quietly away and it transpired she had been sold. If all the ships were sold, as seemed likely to happen, the men would be left in a most unhappy position, and thus this outbreak. Now it seems large numbers of the men, tired and weary, having lost all faith in their leaders and feeling that in some subtle way they had been betrayed, have decided to drop the waiting game and go back to Russia.

THE DREDGING OF SOOCHOW CREEK

The Money Required now Raised: A Promise to Begin Surveying Work Immediately

Two letters have been received by the Shanghai General Chamber of Commerce from the Chinese General Chamber of Commerce, in reply to inquiries made as to any steps taken by that body towards bringing about some improvement in the condition of the Soochow Creek. The Chairman of the Chinese General Chamber of Commerce has sanctioned publication of the letters, which follow:

Dear Sirs,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter regarding the congestion on Soochow Creek and requesting this Chamber to take any action possible in the matter. In reply I beg to state that the Creek is communicating with eight districts, as follows:—Shanghai, Paoshan, Chingpu, Taitsang, Chiading, Quinsan, Wukiang, etc. The people of these districts are suffering seriously from the congestion on the Creek, and they are unanimously willing to contribute towards the expense of dredging of the creek, in order to avoid the congestion.

This Chamber is now in consultation with the people of these eight districts regarding subscriptions towards the expenses for dredging and as soon as the contributions are fixed we will request the Chinese authorities to commence the work forthwith.

FAN CHIU-PA,
Chinese General Chamber of Commerce (Shanghai).

February 22.

Dear Sirs,—With reference to inquiries about the Soochow Creek contained in your letter of the 14th instant, we have the pleasure to inform you that so far as the contributions are concerned, the amount required for the conservancy of the lower part of the Soochow Creek has been successfully raised through the co-operative efforts of the public organizations of the eight districts concerned, as well as the commercial bodies of Shanghai. The date of June 1 has been fixed for carrying out the first part of the undertaking by surveying the Creek.

Yours faithfully,
K. S. ZEE,
Chinese General Chamber of Commerce (Shanghai).

May 24.

RUSSIAN CONSULATE AND SOVIET

We understand that there is no truth whatever in the report circulated on Tuesday by an evening paper to the effect that the Soviet had applied to the Chinese authorities, under the new Sino-Russian agreement, to take over the Russian Consulate in Shanghai.

WEDDING

Duncan-Findlay

Holy Trinity Cathedral was beautifully decorated with bamboo arches, white button daisies and white lilies for the marriage last Friday of Miss Isobelle McInroy Findlay, daughter of the late Mr. James Findlay, of Dundee, Scotland, and Mr. James Douglas Fletcher Duncan, son of Mr. William Duncan, of Banff, Scotland. The ceremony was performed by the Very Reverend Dean Symons.

The bride, who was given away by Mr. T. E. Wilson, looked charming in a gown of white crêpe de Chine, artistically draped at the side and caught with a true lovers' knot of orange blossoms and white heather. With this she wore a French silk crêpe hat, and carried a shower bouquet of pale and white carnations with streamers of asparagus fern and white ribbons nearly reaching the ground. Her bridesmaid, Miss Killick, wore a smart gown of old gold crêpe, with georgette sleeves banded with the crêpe to match. A russet-red rose at the waist matched the roses which trimmed her hat of golden fancy straw. Her bouquet was of yellow tea roses.

Mrs. T. E. Wilson, the matron of honour, wore a becoming gown of soft blue taffeta trimmed with lace and taffeta ruffles of the same shade about the neck and sleeves and set in groups panelling the skirt. Her hat was gold lace over blue silk to match, trimmed with a large gold tissue rose. She carried a bouquet with carnations

The bridegroom was accompanied by Mr. Bowrie as best man and Messrs Buckley, Reoch, and McKinnon acted as ushers.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Wilson, 74 Sinza Road, and was attended by many friends. The bridal couple received their friends under a floral bell, suspended from an arch of bamboo, rambler roses and daisies. Among the many beautiful gifts displayed was a handsome silver tea service and tray from the bridegroom's associates of the foreign staff of the Shanghai Electric Construction Co., Ld., and a dining room clock from the Singapore foreign staff of the same company. After the reception Mr. and Mrs. Duncan left for Hangchow on their honeymoon trip, the bride wearing a chic pongee costume and straw hat trimmed with a wreath of flowers.

FACTORY MURDER AND ROBBERY

Wednesday's Outrage by Gunmen: Watchman Killed and Coolie Wounded

An armed robbery which resulted in the murder of a Chinese watchman and the wounding of a coolie was carried out on premises occupied by the Shanghai Brick & Tile Co., 51 Ferry Road, at 7.55 p.m. on Wednesday evening.

The Chinese manager was sitting in his office paying a number of coolies their wages when the proceedings were interrupted by two men, one armed with a revolver, who demanded $1,000. Outside the door a third man, also armed with a revolver, was on guard. The manager told the two men inside that he had not such a sum there, and they demanded $500 instead. Meanwhile, five coolies who were in the room were made to keep quiet at the point of the gun.

While they were arguing there was the sound of a shot from outside and the two immediately grabbed some $70 in notes that was lying on the table and decamped. Before they left the room they fired two shots, one of which struck one of the coolies in the leg.

The shot that alarmed them was from the gun of the man on guard outside, who had fired at the Chinese watchman and shot him in the head. This man immediately collapsed and was taken to hospital where he died somewhere around midnight. As usual in these cases no arrests were made at the time, but the police are exerting their utmost efforts and have warned the Chapei police.

MR. A. H. George is now in charge of the Shipping Office at H.M. Consulate-General.

CATHOLIC GENERAL COUNCIL CLOSED

Thanksgiving Service Most Impressive in Annals of Catholic Church in China

The Catholic General Council of China, which opened on May 15, in the Church of St. Ignatius, Siccawei, was brought to a close on Thursday morning by a solemn thanksgiving ceremony.

From 8 a.m. a large crowd began to assemble in and about the Church, some interested in the solemn ceremony that was to take place, others eager to [illegible] the picturesque sight.

At 8.30 a.m. the ceremony commenced by an imposing procession of seminarists, clergy and bishops—these last numbering 52, the Delegate Apostolic included—marching solemnly through the broad square in front of the church, and thence to the sanctuary. All along the way were sightseers and the local police maintained excellent order among the crowd.

The bishops were ranged in the chancel in two parallel rows, some 40 within, and a dozen accommodated outside. Officials, secretaries and others connected with the Council were placed further on around the chancel rails.

Majesty and Piety

Punctually at 8.45 a.m., the service commenced, the Delegate Apostolic, Celso Costantini, Archbishop of Theodosia, officiating, assisted by the Deacon and Subdeacon, while two other deacons attended at the throne. The choir, composed of seminarists and the Siccawei College students, chanted successively the "Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus," and the Communion, the assembled bishops alternating at times, thus producing a combined impression of majesty and genuine piety. The service terminated at 9.30 a.m.

Following the solemn thanksgiving ceremony at the high altar, special psalms were chanted and prayers offered to God and the Virgin, in thanks for the successful issue Council. The "Veni Creator" was then chanted. In the course of his discourse, the Delegate said: "We rejoice at the happy closing of this General Council, the first held in China. Our aim, as well as that of the assembled bishops here present, has been to bring China to Christ, so that its vast millions may enjoy the full light of the Gospel, and thus walk in truth and goodness to the final goal of mankind."

Signing of the Council's Acts and Decrees

A public lector then invited all the bishops to sign the Council's acts and decrees. Hereupon each one advanced, conducted by the Master of Ceremonies, and signed on the altar all that had been discussed and approved for the welfare and progress of Christian life, formation of a native clergy, education of converts, propagation of the Gospel, methods of approaching non-Christians, philanthropic and press work. Copies of this document will be forwarded to Rome, and promulgated after all has been approved by the Holy See.

Solemn "Te Deum"

The Council was finally brought to a close by the solemn chanting of the "Te Deum," the Ambrosian hymn of praise and thanksgiving for God's benefits and the favours conferred on the Church. Acclamations were then called for, and delivered with powerful and unanimous voice by the assembled bishops. "Thanked be Christ, the Redeemer and Sovereign Lord; thanked be the Holy See, his Excellency the Delegate, the bishops and officials of the Council, and may all return in peace and happiness to their respective missions. May the Catholic Church in China increase in numbers, doctrine and Christian life, and may those that still sit in darkness enjoy soon the light of the Gospel and enter the true Fold of Christ."

The assembled bishops and clergy then returned in procession, and as they descended the steps in front of the Church porch, a cinema operator was remarked taking views of the imposing scene, one of the finest and most impressive ever witnessed in the annals of the Catholic Church in the Far East.

AMERICAN AVIATORS IN SHANGHAI

Shanghai Club Welcome: Lt. Wade on Terrible Pacific Crossing

At the Shanghai Club last Friday the British and other Shanghai residents assembled to congratulate the airmen. Promptly at noon Mr. Cunningham drove up to the entrance of the club, and four of the aviators, in the khaki unform of the American Army, stepped out. They continued inside and for a few minutes chatted with various aviators and ex-Service men and civilians. Mr. R. G. MacDonald, Chairman of the Club Committee, stepped forward and welcomed the fliers. He said: It is with great pleasure that we welcome to our midst these American fliers, men who have accomplished what has seemed to us in the past to have been impossible—the flight across the Pacific Ocean. These six men will go down to fame as the first to accomplish this feat. Going through hardships and difficulties, their skill and pluck brought them through situations which could baulk the bravest.- (Applause). Such a trip as theirs has not as yet ever been accomplished. It is our misfortune that they are leaving to-morrow, but I want each and every one of you to rise and drink with me to a safe return to their homeland" (Applause).

Then three cheers and a "tiger" rang through the building, after which some enthusiastic listener—he must also have been a flier, broke into: "For He's a jolly good fellow." Everybody broke into song. Three cheers and a "tiger" vociferously rang out again and cries of "Speech, speech!" re-echoed the length of the room.

"Easier to Cross Pacific Than Make a Speech"

It was with diffidence that Lt. Wade, forced to the platform through the bashfulness of his comrades, Lieuts. Harding, Nelson and Ogden (who received his commission in Shanghai) approached the throng. "Friends," he said, "for I am sure that I can call you such, I assure you that it is much simpler to cross the Pacific than it is to make a speech. We are fliers, not speech-makers. But on behalf of my fellows, I can assure you that we feel highly complimented on this marvellous reception that we received in Shanghai. It is a pleasure to be here among you and I wish that we could tarry with you, but this is impossible. We must be on our way. It is with sorrow that we learned that our fellow fliers, the British and Portuguese have had such misfortune and it is with pleasure that we learn that their immediate problems have been remedied or are being competently handled. We are glad to learn that the Vickers is near to him, and it is with hearty fellowship, that we leave, 'Cheerio, MacClaren.'"

The ceremony concluded, friends, both British and American, fraternized with the birdmen. An hour after they left to attend a tiffin party given by Mr. Cunningham, U.S. Consul-General, and Mrs. Cunningham, and later journeyed to Mr. and Mrs. Tucker's house in Hungjao Road for tea.

While in Japan the aviators were decorated by Prince Kuni with the medals of the Aviation Society of Japan.

Lt. Ogden's Promotion.

It is most interesting to note that the commissioned officers in the flight are responsible for Lieut. Ogden's commission. Last Friday afternoon they stated that, if ever a man was entitled to a commission it was their comrade. He had done Trojan work throughout the entire 7,500 miles from Seattle to Shanghai. As a matter of fact, recognizing the merits of their then subordinate, the officers cabled to the War Department that Sgt. Ogden was worth the commission. Acting upon their information, President Coolidge, who is Commander-in-chief of the American Army and Navy, signed the order, and as previously reported in the "North-China Daily News," Mr. J. P. Davis, American Executive Consul, carried out the formalities on Wednesday in the Astor House. The chiefs told the "North-China Daily News" representative that Lt. Ogden is one of the proudest men in the American Army and deservedly too.

THOSE LITTLE CHERUBS WHO SIT UP ALOFT

Pacific Snorters

In a reminiscient mood Lt. Wade referred to several of their experiences while on the long stage across the Pacific, in which they covered nearly 800 miles, the largest they have done since leaving on March 17. On this big "Chicago-off jump" the aviator stated that within a span of two hours, they experienced every kind of weather possible with the exception of tropical, and that would be asking too much—it rained, snowed, hailed, sleeted and the wind came up from a dead calm to a 60-mile gale and gave them great trouble. It was just this kind of weather with intense fog that brought Major Martin down. They did not officially know what exactly had gone wrong with his machine. All they heard were scraps of intelligence among the Japanese Islands, for they were ahead of him and he was trying to catch up, it will be recalled, and when they reached Paramushiru in the Kuriles group, they had not the faintest notion whether Major Martin was still on the journey or not.

While in the north they had to come down near Nazan, off the beaten path and, of course, found no preparations had been made for them. This being the first time that a plane had ever been seen in those waters, the natives were greatly surprised. Some of them could talk English and told the aviators that their less intelligent friends had called them the "Big Ducks."

Of the new equipment with which the planes have been provided, much of it is being used for the first time in a flight of this kind, it has not been found wanting and the birdmen express themselves favourably towards it, stating that in future this machinery will be applied to all Army planes. The ignition which was specially laboratory-constructed had turned out to be a perfect success, while the pump to force petrol into the cyclinders, also a new thing, has given them no trouble at all.

The Departure from Shanghai

The American aviators, Lieuts. Smith, Nelson, Wade, Arnold, Harding and Ogden, left Shanghai in the bright hours of Saturday morning, the first propeller blade being swung over at 6.48. Two minutes later two of the machines were in the air and another minute afterwards Lieut. Nelson rose with a farewell salute to Shanghai.

After Lieut. Smith arrived here, the entire six mechanics gave the machines a thorough overhaul and the last bit of work was done, as they thought, including replacement of the burnt-out manifold on the New Orleans. But not satisfied with this arrangement, another last look was given them and they found that one of the cams had become worn badly, it was egg-shaped. In a few moments, however, Lieut. Harding had made it right.

The aviators did not have any trouble in getting started, though it was a short while after the first men had got off before Lieuts. Nelson and Harding left the water. The pontoons have a wonderful attraction for the water and until the proper point of vibration has been reached, it is most difficult to get any loft—as a matter of fact this was the trouble with the Chicago in Kagoshima. The Boston, Lieut. Wade at the stick, was the first to rise, moving right off. He circled upward after a long run and then hovered round waiting for his fellows. Smith soon joined him and the two gradually worked upstream, accompanying Nelson, who was scooting along on the surface. When he got clear, all the machines circled over the Settlement, turned their noses toward the Yangtze and followed the broad expanse of muddy water for the open sea, then to the south.

Travelling Light.

Though the aviators felt that they would like to make the jump to Amoy in a single flight, they thought it best not to attempt it if they could do otherwise, for the added weight of gasolene meant just so much more wear and tear. So after consultation with the Navy, it was decided to come to water again at Ping Fong Island to replenish the tanks. The machines, though the one carried a gross load of 8,300 lb. when it got to Shanghai, travel as light as possible, and to cite an example, all the charts used up to date were discarded here.

Souvenir for American Club.

A charming souvenir by the visiting birdmen was left in Shanghai for the new American Club building, one of the massive propeller blades. The gift, however, will require the official sanction of Lieut. Lawton before it may be handed over to the committee.

It is also interesting to note that two of the visitors. Lieuts. Wade and Arnold, who are members of the Mystic Shrine, have been made honorary life members of the local organization, Nomad Oasis. Both were so busy while in Shanghai with repairs to motors and a few necessary social and official visits to make, that they could not attend a ceremony, but this will not be a bar to their affiliation locally.

In the party who got up at four o'clock to bid the fliers Godspeed were Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Cunningham, Mr. J. P. Davis, Mr. and Mrs. W. I. Eisler, a representative of this journal, while in another boat were several patriotic enthusiasts. Their universal expression was that it was well worth the journey of six miles to Black Point, to see what was indeed the best take-off in the annals of aviation in China.

It was the common sentiment of the combined six that Shanghai "looked better" to them than any port since they had left America; they hoped to return at their leisure, and they were so busy that the full measure of enjoyment could not be indulged in. Lieut. Nelson's terse phrase on Friday night when Gen. Li asked him to attend a Chinese dinner, characterizes their attitude—"It all was wonderful, it was great, it was the best of all, but I am so tired, we hop off in a few hours; I'm sorry, but I cannot."

This is their itinerary to date with dates of leaving—Seattle, April 6; Prince Rupert April 10; Sitka April 13; Seward April 15; Chignik April 19; Dutch Harbour May 3; Nazan May 8; Attu May 15; Nikolski May 17; Paramushiro May 19; Hitokappu May 21; Minato May 21; Tokio June 1; Kagoshima, June 4; and Shanghai June 7.

The "North-China Daily News," first in the field, handed the aviators 10 copies of the Saturday morning edition for distribution in Amoy, being the first journals carried by 'plane in China. The following despatch has been cabled by the local representative of the "Philadelphia Public Ledger" and the "New York Evening Post" to those organs:—"First newspapers ever carried in China by aeroplane, taken from Shanghai to Amoy by American world trip fliers. Took 10 copies 'North-China Daily News' of June 7 issue. Arriving same day."

MR. T. Z. KOO, associate general secretary of the National Committee, Y. M. C. A. in China, and secretary of the World's Students' Christian Federation, left on Friday by the French Mail steamer with his family for a two years' stay in Europe where he will travel in the interests of the Federation. He will go directly to Switzerland, the Federation's headquarters, after which he will go to Demark to spend the summer.

APROPOS of our Kueilin Correspondent's graphic description of the fighting in Kuangsi, we now learn that local Kuangsi residents are forming an association to raise funds for their unfortunate fellow-provincials whose relatives have been killed. Among the patrons of the association may be noticed the names of Gen. Tsen Chun-hsuan (the "Tiger Mandarin" and former Viceroy of Kuangtung and Kuangsi), Gen. Mo Yung-hsin (former Tuchun of Kuangtung) and Dr. Ma Chun-wu (former Civil Governor of the province).

THE Chapei Fire Brigade has addressed a letter to the Chief of Native Constabulary requesting him to instruct his subordinates in the police force to give the Brigade as much assistance as possible when fires break out. They complain that when an outbreak occurs the police never report such matters—and, when they do, it is always far too late to control the flames. Also they state the police never attempt to keep back the crowds at fires with the result that the firemen on duty are greatly hampered in their work. The Brigade finally states that the police seldom control traffic in the neighbourhood of a fire.

AMERICAN FLIERS' AID TO MACLAREN

Comdr. Abbott's Tale of How the Aeroplane Was Lent to Col. Broome

Lt.-Cdr. Abbott, Executive Officer of U. S. S. Peary, which has reached port after a stormy seven weeks in northern latitudes escorting the American world-fliers, in an interview with the "North-China Daily News" on Tuesday discussed the prospects of the British flier, Squadron Leader Maclaren, and recalled some of the difficulties encountered by the American aviators during the Pacific crossing. Lt.-Cdr. Abbott, it will be remembered, was right on the spot to offer Col. Broome, forward reconnaissance officer to Squadron Leader MacLaren, all facilities at his command when word arrived in the Japanese waters of the misfortune which had overtaken the British world flier.

Col. Broome, said Commander Abbott, was somewhat downhearted at first, but brightened immediately when he was told that every assistance would be extended to transport the new plane from Hakkodate to Burmese shores. It was just at the time that the American planes arrived in northern Japan, that news first reached there of the British aviator's difficulties and Lt. Smith, commanding the American planes after Major Martin's crash, got into immediate communication with Col. Broome and went with him to the Peary and insisted in no uncertain terms that if the American Navy was in a position to do so, it should forward the plane.

Commander Abbott at once acquiesced in the venture and promised to carry the crates containing the Vickers machine to Yokohama, which city was the farthest he was permitted to go under his orders. Permission to proceed further was at once applied for, and immediately given by Admiral Washington, commanding the Asiatic Fleet, to take the plane wherever the British aviator desired. Without delay it was despatched to Hongkong, being transferred to U. S. S. Preston and left there a week ago last Tuesday We should learn at any moment that Maclaren has taken over his machine. Unfortunately it is boxed up and will require probably two weeks of hard work to get it into working order.

Col. Broome, continued the officer, has stated that Maclaren will try the flight from Paramushiru to Attu, even though the weather conditions continue as bad or become even worse than the Americans found them, which is possible, for in the summer months fog may be experienced for two weeks at a stretch and often for 26 to 28 days in the month. Commander Abbott added that he could vouch for this, having surveyed the region several years ago.

Maclaren would have one advantage in the North, and that was the privilege to stop on Behring Island, Russian soil.

The flight from Attu to Paramushiru, westward, took the fliers more than 12 hours to make, it being over 800 miles, but it was not done in a single trial. Uncomfortable circumstances forced them to come down outside the harbour on the Island where they were immediately questioned by the Russians. Upon a reply that they had to make a forced landing, the local citizens promised to cable to their provincial headquarters, Petroplavsk. They were told to send the Americans on their way, but when this answer came the lieutenants had already gone. England had recognized the Soviet and hence a more favourable reception can be looked for and Maclaren would doubtless land there.

At one time Lieut. Wade's plane was so near the surface of the water that he was afraid that he would be swamped by surf. The snowstorm, severe as it was, caused the four to fly in column, and just above the breakers, for that was the only way in which they could distinguish the land from the sea—all else was a solid mass of snow, the air as well. They could not see the plane before them, nor could they hear the buzz of the motor.

MISSION BUILDINGS NOW OCCUPIED

New Premises Now Unifying Several Mission Boards: Local Management

The fine new Missions Building, in Yuenmingyuen Road, of which the foundation stone was laid hardly more than a year ago, is fast approaching completion and a number of societies are already ensconced in their airy and commodious quarters. The building, which was erected by the Mission Architects Bureau, under the special supervision of Mr. Charles A. Gunn, stands as an outward and visible sign of that underlying spirit existing among the various Protestant denominations working in China and will help to demonstrate to the Chinese, who often wonder at the multiplicity of the Christian sects, their fundamental brotherhood.

The need for such a building was felt as early as 1913, when the headquarters of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church (N.), situated at 18 Peking Road, came to be considered as a sort of clearing house for all missionaries in Shanghai. The China Continuation Committee (now merged in the National Christian Council), created in 1913 primarily for the sake of promoting closer co-operation among the Protestant denominations of China and furthering their common interests, approached the Presbyterian Board to see whether they were prepared to make these quarters a union, interdenominational affair. A member of the Presbyterian Church, Dr. Fred J. Tooker, and his sisters, when approached by the Committee, donated G.$150,000 to the Presbyterian Board for the erection of this building, as a memorial to their father, who was greatly interested in such work. Dr. Tooker himself was at that time in the Presbyterian Mission in Siangtan, Hunan, but was later obliged to leave China for health reasons. He has since returned and is now carrying on medical work at Kuling.

To show its sympathy with the project, the Presbyterian Board contributed its valuable property, as the agreement reads: to promote the principles of co-operation and the spirit of fellowship and accord among the Christian forces at work in China: to forward the unity of the Christian Church in China: to encourage the most harmonious and efficient co-ordination of the work of all missionary agencies, both among themselves and in relation to the Chinese Church: and to assist as far as possible in the equipment of the Christian forces in China to deal adequately with their task, both in the wide range of detail and as a whole; and especially to assist the movement of co-operation and co-ordination represented in the establishment and the activities of the China Continuation Committee.

The Laura Spellman Rockefeller Fund also contributed G.$120,000 to the building, of which only the first block has been built as yet. It is hoped later, as the need for larger accommodation becomes more pressing, to build a second block, similar to the present one, which will face Museum Road and be joined to the present office by a smaller, connecting building.

The Tenants.

At the present time the National Christian Council, an organization formed at the initiative of the China Continuation Committee to succeed the parent organization, and which, as its name indicates, provides opportunity for the Native Christian Church to take over control of its affairs as soon as it shall be able to carry on for itself, occupies the third floor of the Mission Building. Besides its administrative offices, there is a large committee room, waiting hall, and smaller offices for some of the organizations who have their offices in the building and who find it helpful to have their work in the immediate vicinity of [illegible] may do so.

The Girls' Christian Educational Association and the Boys' Christian Educational Association have offices on the fourth floor, together with the Daily Vacation Bible School and the Mission Architects. The China Medical Missionary Association, the China Council of the Presbyterian Board, the London Missionary Society and the American Bible Society have rooms on the fifth floor, and on the sixth floor the Methodist Episcopal Board of Foreign Mission has offices for both its men's and women's work. The Associated Mission Treasurers, handling the finances of the Presbyterian Boards, North and South, the American Baptist Society, the Methodist Board of Foreign Missions, the London Missionary Society, and the English Baptist Society, The American Bible Society and the National Bible Society of Scotland occupy offices on the ground floor and the Council on Health Education is also located there. One strictly Chinese inter-denomination organization, the Chinese Home Missionary Society, working mainly in Yunnan and Manchuria, also has headquarters in the building.

Local Management.

The management of the building, fixing of rentals and the like, is in the hands of a local committee appointed here and subject to the confirmation of the Presbyterian Board in New York. In the erection of the building this committee was represented by Dr. H. Fowler of the London Missionary Society, Mr. A. Q. Adamson of the National Committee of the Y.M.C.A., and Mr. M. P. Walker, treasurer of the American Church Mission, Dr. Fowler especially devoting a large amount of time to supervision of the work and rendering unstinted service.

As set forth in the articles of agreement, the building was erected primarily for the use of the China Continuation Committee (now the National Christian Council) and its successors, in order to enable it more effectively to carry on its work and in order that all of the agencies of the Chinese Church and of the missionary body of China in general, evangelistic, educational, medical, and literary work, denominational or interdenominational, may be brought into the closest and most harmonious association; and to promote so far as possible close and sympathetic relations between foreign missions and the Chinese Church.

The National Christian Council formerly occupied quarters in No. 5 Quinsan Gardens, as did also the China Christian Educational Associations, and the Council on Health Education was housed in No. 4 Quinsan Gardens. The Missionary Home has taken over No. 4 Quinsan Gardens and the China Bible Union is taking over the control of No. 5 Quinsan Gardens.

COMMUNITY CHURCH

Laying of Corner-stone of New Church Building in the Western District

One year ago Community Church made known its plans: "A Church for the Western District." On Sunday afternoon the corner-stone was laid for this church. In place of the regular afternoon service at the Navy Y.M.C.A., this service was on the new church site, on Avenue Petain and Rue Louis D'Four.

Many friends gathered with the members of the Church for this occasion. On the platform, with the Governing Board, were: Mr. E. S. Cunningham, U. S. Consul-General; Mr. Sidney Barton, H. M. Consul-General; Judge Milton D. Purdy; the Rev. A. N. Rowland, Pastor of Union Church; the Very Rev. Dean Symons, of the Cathedral; and Mr. T. I. Vaughan, of the Free Christian Church.

Dr. J. B. Fearn, Chairman of the Governing Board, presided. The hymn, "Faith of our Fathers," was sung by all following which the Rev. C. M. Drury, the pastor, led in the invocation. The American School Glee Club, under Miss [illegible] direction, rendered an anthem, accompanied, in a very pleasing manner. Dr. Fearn then introduced the speakers of the occasion who, he said, needed no introduction because of their close connection with the work since the beginning. The Rev. C. L. Hutchinson, early convener the history of the church up to date; Mr. A. Q. Adamson made a statement of the contributions of the society [illegible] "We are thankful who could not be present." Mr. J. H. Roots, who is also building the Church, laid the corner stone, and [illegible] the sharing of the [illegible]." Dr. J. B. Fearn pronounced the benediction.

As is characteristic of all Community Church gatherings the people lingered after the programme for a little sociability and Mr. Drury called attention to the fact that the door frames were all ready in place. This fact encourage the community to look forward to January 1, when the Church will be able to meet in its own church home though no one is unmindful of the generosity of the Columbia Country Club for the use of their commodious quarters for the past two years.

GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF INDO-CHINA

Interview with M. Merlin: His Visit to Japan: Commerce Not Politics the Aim

Having successfully completed his mission to Japan, M. Merlin, Governor-General of French Indo-China, and one of the most experienced colonial governors France possesses, is stopping in Shanghai with his wife, Madame Merlin, M. Chatel, his Chief of Staff, M. Jeanbrau, Director of Political Affairs in Indo-China, and his A.D.C., Capt. Bernard, are en route for Indo-China once more.

The French Consulate is decked with flags in his honour, as are most of Shanghai's French business houses, while the French Consul-General, M. Wilden, and the French community in Shanghai are royally entertaining him.

A "North-China Daily News" representative had an interesting chat with the distinguished gentleman at the French Consulate on Wednesday, during which M. Merlin emphatically denied that his visit to Japan was made from political motives. He stated that he went to Japan principally to investigate the possibilities of developing trade and commerce between Japan and Indo-China.

"My little tour throughout the East," he remarked with a twinkle in his eye, "has served to show people that such a place as Indo-China does exist. There are many who do not seem to realize it, or who know that we have such big towns as Saigon, Haiphong and Hanoi, and the possibilities Indo-China holds out for trade are not generally grasped. In Indo-China we have some 40,000,000 people and the trade that can be done between that Colony and other parts of China is immense."

Trade Envoys.

Brought back to his visit to Japan, M. Merlin again refuted the suggestion that his visit to that country had any political significance. He remarked that he had with him three gentlemen, respectively the chairmen of the Chambers of Commerce of Hanoi, Haiphong and Saigon, who were much interested in all they saw that appertained to industrial conditions in Japan, and they were all optimistic regarding the possibilities for trade that did exist between the French Colony and that country.

M. Merlin went on to say that other important reasons for his visit were to convey the congratulations of Indo-China to the Prince Regent and the Crown Princess of Japan on their recent betrothal, and to renew the sympathies expressed by France and Indo-China to the Japanese in the trials their country had undergone as a result of the Tokio earthquake.

"But chiefly," repeated M. Merlin, "we wanted to study labour conditions in Japan, and I myself had a sincere desire to form some personal views and ideas on the future of her commercial prospects and possibilities."

Wonderful Trade Possibilities.

"Certainly," he repeated emphatically in reply to our reporter's question, "I had no notion whatsoever of preparing a treaty between Japan and France. I grant you, if it is at all possible, Indo-China will modify tariff rates in regard to certain articles imported and exported from the Colony, but even that would have [illegible] to the French Government, for Indo-China possesses no fiscal autonomy."

Questioned as to what were his [illegible] of the result of his [illegible], the Governor-General replied with a repetition of his former statement: "I know, now, more clearly what are the possibilities of commercial relations between Japan and the French colony of Indo-China for the future."

M. Merlin reiterated the hope that his tour had done something towards letting people know that such a place as Indo-China existed. He remarked that he had been most enthusiastically received wherever he had gone, and he was grateful for all the kindness that had been shown him.

Social Engagements.

M. Merlin is residing at the house of the French Chief of Police, Captain Fiori, who is out of town at present.

On his arrival from Peking on Tuesday night M. Merlin was escorted to this house, which is in the French Concession, by mounted Sikh Police, and on Wednesday morning he paid his respects to the Chinese authorities at the Bureau of Foreign Affairs, and was received with every courtesy and manifestation of friendship. In the afternoon he received the Chinese authorities at his temporary house. On Wednesday evening the Governor-General of Indo-China was the principal guest at a reception given by M. Wilden, the French Consul-General, at the Consulate, and which was attended by the most distinguished members of Shanghai's French community, including M. Le Bris, President of the French Municipal Council, M. Fano, a member of the French Council, M. Bordelongue, Manager of the Banque Industrielle, M. Denay, Manager of the Banque d'Indo-Chine, Commander de Maubeuge, of the French warship Jules Ferry, Commander D'Arvieu, Chief of the Staff to the French Admiral, and many others.

As M. Merlin entered the Consulate Grounds he was met and saluted by a detachment of Annamite Police, and the band from the Jules Ferry struck up the "Marsellaise" as he entered the Consulate itself.

M. Wilden made a short speech, welcoming M. Merlin to Shanghai and congratulating him on the success of his mission to Japan, which they all felt convinced was for the good of France generally and Indo-China in particular. M. Merlin was, added the Consul-General, one of France's most distinguished colonial governors, and had, in fact, been governor of practically every colony France had. They appreciated his services to their country and were proud to have him in their midst.

M. Merlin, in reply, thanked M. Wilden for the kindness of his remarks, and the French public in Shanghai for the kindness of their reception of him. He sincerely hoped that the relations existing between French Indo-China and the rest of China would always be of the best.

THE NOISOME HONGKEW CREEK

Slumland and Smells: A Region Crying Aloud for Improvement; Night Boats at Work in Broad Day: Why Not Culvert and Make Another Avenue Edward VII?

The correspondent who writes today so feelingly about the disgraceful condition of Hongkew Creek is but reiterating a complaint and appeal which has reached us at fairly regular intervals from that insalubrious quarter of the Settlement. He says it is a scandal and an abomination, and we agree. Beauty has never yet been one of Shanghai's distinguishing characteristics, and away from the main roads with their imposing modern frontages, acres of slumland squalor may easily be discovered, but in all the Settlement there is nothing to compare with the area bordering the Hongkew Creek from the Broadway bridge to Yalu Road district. It is indeed an unlovely quarter, a welter of dilapidated Chinese shops and houses of all conceivable descriptions down to the mud-hut of the beggar with here and there a godown or the works of some industrial concern. In places, the banks of the creek have been substantially "bunded" and the road more or less roughly made up, but in others, this development seems to have stopped short, the banks being merely mud heaps.

The Appalling Smells.

The worst feature of all, of course, is the variety of bad and viciously aggressive smells which pervade the neighbourhood. For many years, this particular section of the creek has been a night-soil loading station, and this primitive method of disposing of sewage will unfortunately have to be continued until that halcyon period when the whole of the Settlement property is of sufficiently substantial character to admit of modern sanitation. The whole of the sewage of this neighbourhood has to be transported in boats, and there is no present alternative, but the Health authorities, or whoever is responsible, might perhaps consider the advisability of abolishing this loading station and having the waste matter loaded in a more convenient locality. And certainly a stop should be put to loading up as late as 9.30 in the morning, as was the case yesterday, for at that hour the section of the creek between Broadway and East Hanbury Road was reeking with offensive smells.

Why Not Culvert?

Apart from this nuisance, the district is so obviously a danger to health and a bar to development that the authorities might well survey the whole area with a view to sweeping reforms. It cannot be supposed that the place has been entirely overlooked, and very probably there are difficulties of finance and property rights which so far have effectually prevented the carrying out of any broad scheme of improvement, but such a scheme will have to come sooner or later, and it might as well be taken in hand now. One sees nowadays in all parts of the Settlement huge blocks of ancient and battered property in the hands of the house-breaker, making room for houses more in accordance with modern ideas of sanitation and hygiene, and it requires no great stretch of imagination to see that in the course of a few years the greater part of old, of very old, Shanghai will have passed through this much needed phase of improvement. Cannot a start be made with similar development of the Hongkew Creek area? There may be technical difficulties in the way, but it appears to the layman that a fine opportunity is afforded for sending the creek the way of the Yangkingpang and converting it into a second Avenue Edward VII.

A Grand Road to Get.

If the creek were culverted, the way would be open for a fine broad thoroughfare, linking up with the northern part of Dixwell Road. Already that section of the Settlement has undergone marked change for the better and its development is well forward, the condition of these two adjoining areas being a remarkable study in contrasts. The building of such a road would open up a valuable means of communication with the northern district and relieve the pressure on North Szechuen Road. The cost of it should more than be covered by the resultant increase in the value of property along the route, while the chief gain would be to the community in general through the removal of conditions which cannot be other than a menace to health.

Other creeks in this part of the Settlement have been culverted, with excellent results, but we understand that the culverting of the Hongkew Creek, whilst presenting no engineering difficulties, is less a practical proposition owing to its importance as a tidal waterway. It joins up with the Sawgin Creek which goes as far as the Kiangwan village and serves a number of smaller waterways. However, as the creek does not appear to be of excessive importance as a means of transport, and its culverting would constitute an improvement of first rate value, we see no reason why a scheme of this character should not be considered.

THE Chapei public organizations have addressed a very lengthy petition to the Civil Governor of Kiangsu, Mr. Han Kuo-chun, praying that he will take steps to prevent landlords from increasing rents at will, as, they state, in view of the high cost of living, such increases will cause the people to undergo great sufferings.

MERCANTILE TRAINING IN SHANGHAI

A College to Train Schoolboys to Fit Themselves for Commercial Work

Is the locally born boy given a fair chance when he leaves school and commences his business career? This is a question which has given many Shanghai parents a considerable amount of worry, and generally speaking it is true to say that the locally born boy has not the same chance as his brothers from England and America. Few business men in Shanghai will take the trouble to employ a boy, straight from school, in their offices, to train him and pay him and generally show him the way he should go. The minor details of office routine, which, in England, are given to the apprentices, are in this country handed over to Chinese assistants, and the bigger jobs go to the men with Home training. Consequently there are few niches in which the raw youth straight from school may be placed.

In view of these facts it is all the more interesting to learn that there is a scheme in view for the establishment of an institution in the Settlement where boys who have left school may obtain a practical commercial training such as would fit them peculiarly to the needs of Shanghai business men. There is no disputing the fact that most Shanghai-born boys look upon Shanghai as their home, and the country of their parents merely as a [illegible]y, misty sort of a place w[illegible] every few years they may go fo[illegible] a holiday. Consequently it is in Shanghai that most of their interests lie, and their knowledge of local conditions, combined with the training they would secure at such a college as proposed, would have qualifications which should make them more valuable to an employer than the man straight from Home, and to make them more sought after by the business men of China than they are to-day.

Utility in Both Ways.

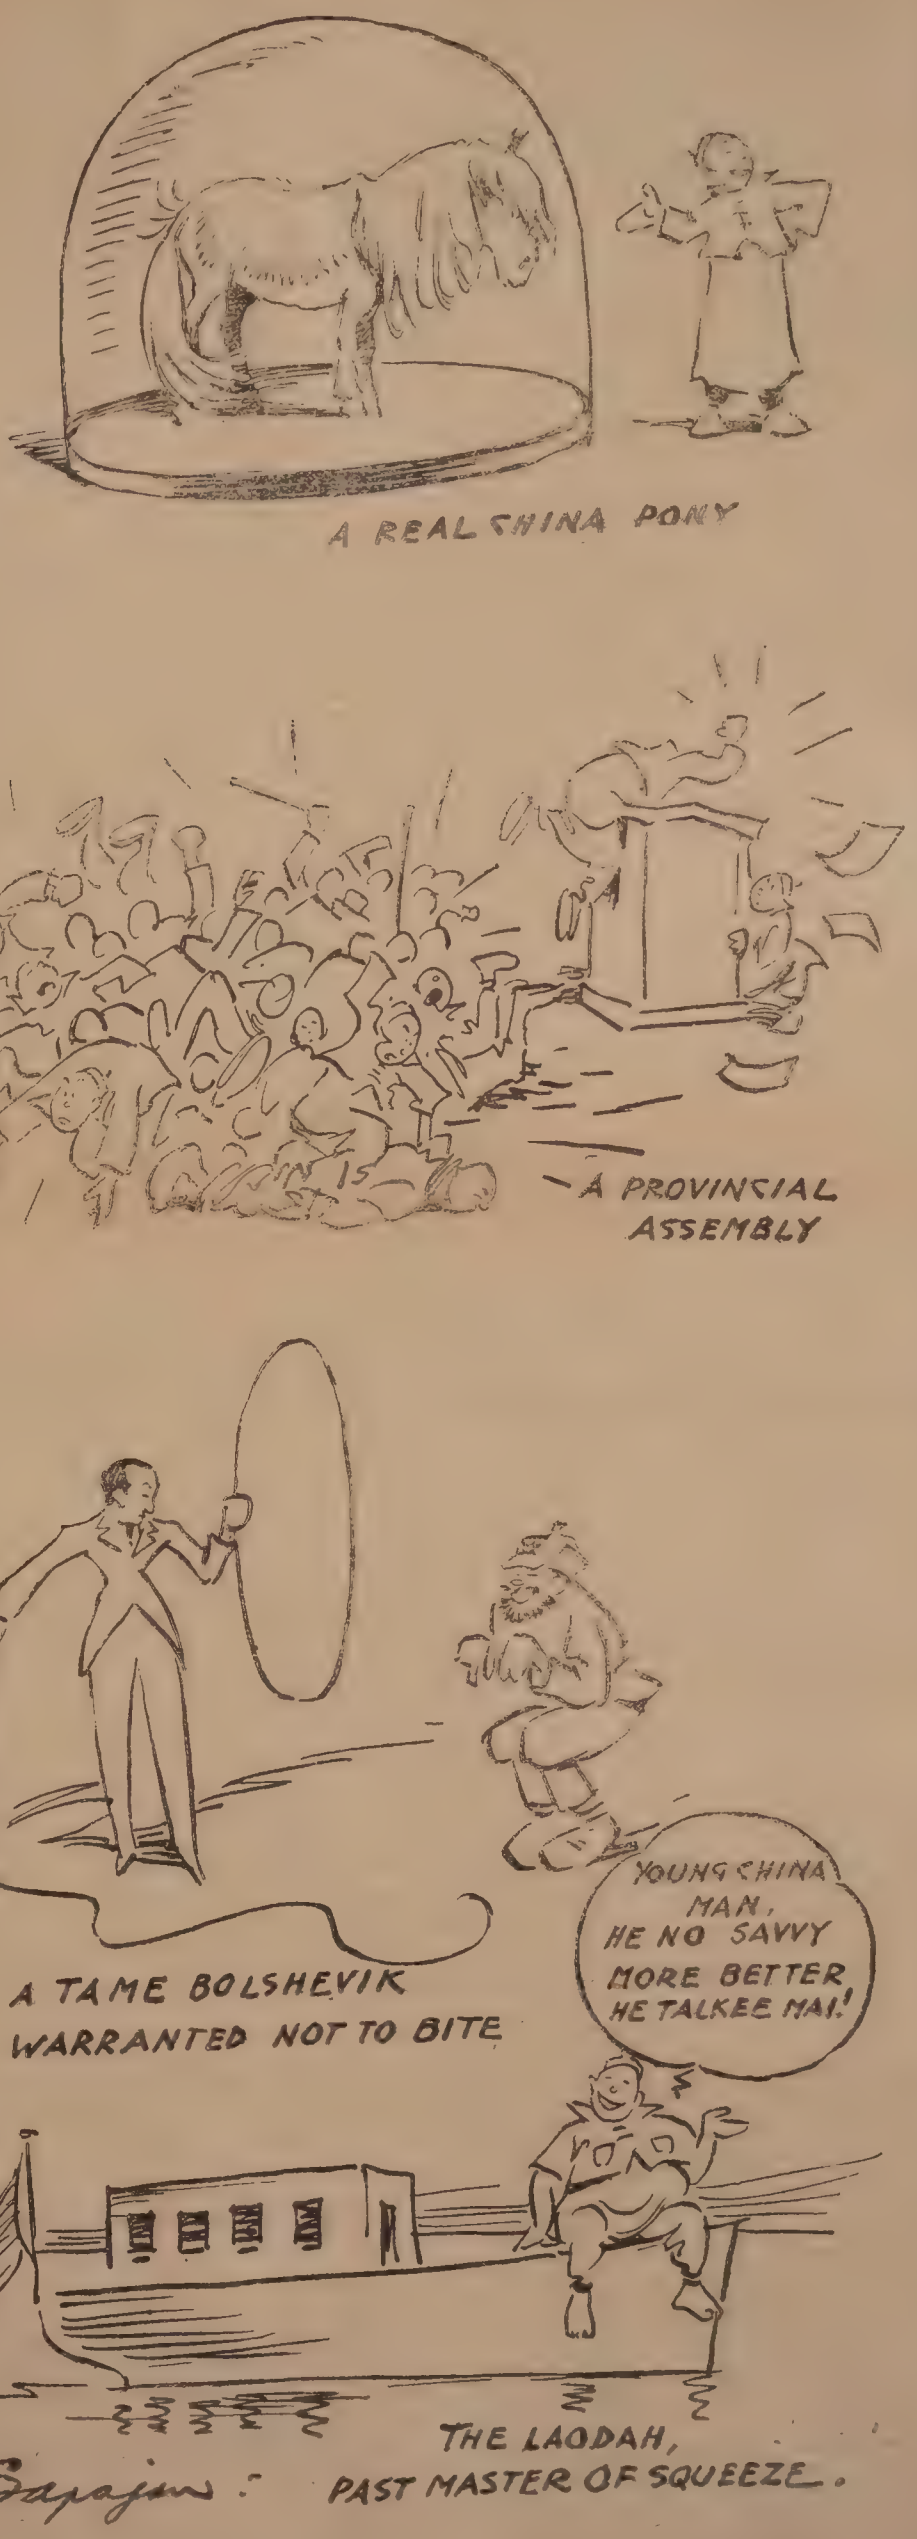
The originator of the scheme is Mr. C. V. Hutchison, a gentleman of considerable Far Eastern experience. He believes that the inauguration of such an institution would be of material benefit, not only to school boys, but also to persons of maturer age having no business qualifications, and wishing to obtain them. He points out, with regard to schoolboys, that after leaving school many lads do not get the opportunity of entering a mercantile house straight away, with the result that months are spent in idleness which may be of incalculable harm to the unfortunate youth. On the other hand, the institution he proposes would, in addition to serving as a training college, be at the disposal of any business house temporarily requiring part time service, and would thus enable the boy to gain both theoretical and practical experience, and possibly earn a little money all at the same time.

The course will include the practical routine conventional to all mercantile houses in the Far East. Here for instance are some of the kind of questions that a boy applying for a commercial position should be able to answer off-hand:

How many wharves are there in Shanghai?—Where are they situated?—How are they controlled?—What are public wharves?—What is the difference between a public and a private wharf?—How to function the duties in a wharf?—How to berth a steamer?—What is a Custom House?—How are the duties levied?—Why should certain goods be examined by Customs officials?—What is duty drawback?—How to obtain a drawback?—What does "E.C." mean?—What are the various classes of merchandise imported into China?—Which are the principal products of importation into China from England and America?—How to write Customs applications?

Needless to say other and more technical matters will be included in the course, the object being to give a boy a thorough grounding in knowledge, for which clerks in mercantile offices too often refer to Chinese. When the pupils graduate from the college they will be given a certificate of proficiency which should be recognized by all the leading firms of China.

TEN young men were graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine from the Nanyang Medical College, West Gate, at the "commencement exercises" held on Sunday afternoon.



SOME SUGGESTIONS FOR THE GREAT EXHIBITION WHICH THE CHINESE GOVERNMENT IS ARRANGING TO HOLD AT SHANGHAI

OBITUARY

Capt. J. C. H. Lane, M.C.

It was with feelings of very deep regret that his many friends in Shanghai learnt of the death of Capt. James Cecil Heauclerc Lane, M.C., of 8 Sloane Gardens, London, which occurred at the Paulun Hospital on Saturday morning last.

The late Capt. Lane was an officer of The Prince Consort's Own (The Rifle Brigade) and had served in France and India during the Great War, 1914-18. He was wounded three times in the early part of the war and was awarded the Military Cross, afterwards receiving a bar to the Cross for further gallantry. He had also been the recipient of the French Croix de Guerre. As the result of his wounds, Capt. Lane was constantly under medical attention and spent considerable time in hospitals both at Home and abroad. A month ago he left the hospital here, but three weeks later his condition necessitated his return there for a further operation, to which he unfortunately succumbed.

The funeral took place at Bubbling Well Cemetery on Monday afternoon, the service being read by the Rev. Father McDonald, of St. Joseph's Church. Amongst the mourners present were Miss Venn-Brown, Mrs. Alex Samson, Mrs. Forrest, Major-Johnson (representing the United Services Association), M[illegible]. R. P. [illegible] J. H. T[illegible], C. H. [illegible] Cromwell, S[illegible] H. [illegible].

There were several beautiful wreaths.

Mr. P. H. Hilborne

The funeral of the late Mr. P. H. Hilborne took place at Bubbling Well Cemetery on Tuesday in the presence of a large gathering of friends. The service at the graveside was conducted by the Rev. Père Baumert of St. Francis Xavier's Church. Many beautiful floral tokens were sent.

Mr. Hilborne came to China as a balloonist about 1909 and made some sensational ascents and parachute descents in most of the Southern Treaty Ports. Chinese breaking up his outfit causing him to abandon the profession, he journeyed to Shanghai and joined the Telephone Company in 1910 with whom he stayed until his death on Monday from pneumonia at the General Hospital, he having entered only the Thursday before. Mr. Hilborne was a man well liked, of a retiring disposition; his one hobby was dogs, these were his friends, he was always ready with good advice and assistance if anybody came to him with their dog troubles. He was also a correspondent on dogs with the Press. He was a member of the committee of the Dog Show last year and had entered dogs for the show to take place to-day.

Mrs. Ellis

The death has occurred, at 2A Yuyuen Road, of Mrs. Ellis, the mother of several well known Shanghai boys. The deceased lady, who was 56 years of age, apparently was in good health until Monday night, when, shortly after her return from a visit to friends, she suddenly collapsed and expired before the arrival of a doctor.

The funeral took place in the Bubbling Well Road Cemetery on Wednesday evening. There was a large attendance of friends and relatives, and the service was conducted by the Dean, the Rev. C. J. F. Symons. The following old friends of the family acted as pall-bearers: Messrs. H. M. Cumine, Wm. Brandt, W. Gifford, K. F. C. Roberts, G. R. Grove and Wilfred Madsen.

There were many beautiful floral tributes.

IN connexion with the Chinese agitation against improper films, Mr. Hsu Yuan, Commissioner of Foreign Affairs, has notified the Chinese General Chamber of Commerce that the Consular Body is taking steps to suppress moving pictures of this character. It is indeed time that the pistol dramas were suppressed at Chinese amusement resorts. It must be plain to the authorities that such pictures make law-breakers, especially when automatic pistols can apparently be had so easily.

A RUN ON CHINESE MERCHANTS' BANK

Suspension of Payment by Hongkong Head Office: Eight Lakhs Invested in Shanghai

What would, but for the control of the Municipal of the Police Force, have been a serious run on a local bank took place on Thursday, the concern affected being the Chinese Merchants' Bank, Ld., which has its head office in Hongkong and branches at the corner of Ningpo and Kiangse Roads and at 10 North Szechuen Road.

At 11 a.m., Mr. Tang, the assistant manager (who is now acting in place of his chief, who has gone to Hongkong), received a private cable from Hongkong stating that the head office was forced to suspend payment, but giving no reason for this action. At one o'clock in the afternoon an official cable was received from the head office ordering the suspension of payment in Shanghai until further notice. Up till 9 o'clock last night no further cables had been received.

At 12.30, the run began, some depositors also evidently having received private information from Hongkong. Up till 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon some 200 creditors rushed to the Ningpo Road branch and a similar number visited the North Szechuen Road branch and were told that no further payments would be made until further notice, which would be published when further instructions had been received from Hongkong. The police were called in, a Central Station detachment under Det.-Sub-Insp. R. M. Tinkler, and a Hongkew squad under Det.-Sub-Insp. R. W. Yorke, and made every possible attempt to persuade the crowds to disperse, allowing nobody to enter the premises, which were closed. There was no violence and but little disorderliness, although some depositors managed to get behind the counters. They were, however, cleared away by the police, and the staff were working last night, adjusting the accounts.

The Chinese Merchants' Bank is a British registered institution, with branches also in Canton and Saigon, The local depositors mostly are Cantonese and the amount of their deposits is estimated roughly at eight lakhs of dollars for the two local branches. Between 12.30 and 3 p.m. yesterday about $20,000 had been paid out by the Ningpo Road branch alone.

MARVELS OF MODERN ENGINEERING

Turbine Electric Drive: Liners that Reverse in 45 Sec.

The str. Archer, operated by the U. S. Shipping Board, which was in port last week, is the latest thing in marine engineering, being equipped with the steam-turbine electric drive. Ships so fitted are easy and economical to run, their fuel consumption being low. Officers of the Archer stated that though she had run over 150,000 miles, engine repairs had not cost them a cent.

The propeller is driven from a shaft 225 feet long, coupled directly to a motor 18 feet in diameter which generates 3,000 H. P. The steam-geared turbine which drives the motor has a motive power still greater—in the neighbourhood of 5,200 H. P. more, while the boilers are fired by 50 tons of fuel oil daily. Although superheated steam at a temperature of 750 degrees Fahrenheit is used, by the time it has passed through the narrow and short turbine, only a few feet long, it has lost most of its heat. It returns to the condensers as steam still at a temperature of 80 degrees Fahrenheit. Although at such a low temperature the steam does not condense as it passes through a vacuum, maintained to many atmospheres. Thus the work of the condensers is materially lightened.

A big point in favour of this type of ship construction, is the ease with which the vessel can be reversed, this operation requiring but 45 seconds, the turn of the propeller being reversed from full speed ahead to full speed astern in that time.

Another novelty is the oil feed to the furnaces. To each of the three boilers, capable of generating 215 lb. at cruising speed, is fed crude oil through a single aperture with a diameter of between 1/32 and 1/64 of an inch, but under a very high pressure. This stream is projected with such a velocity that it is vaporized immediately. Thirty tons of heavy oil issue from this minute orifice every 24 hours.

The governor on the turbine, state the officers, is fool proof, being double and if the first one fails to work, the emergency trips on with a crash that automatically stops further flow of steam to the blades. This governor functions so truely that should the propellor be completely lifted from the water it would not spin at a rate which would wreck the average engine. Instead it is immediately chokes down to the number of revolutions it was turning when in the water. After a storm in the North Atlantic in January they lost three of the blades, but the governor kept the same rate just as before, though the ship made 199 miles within 24 hours.

The Archer arrived in Shanghai nine days ahead of time, due mainly, the officers affirm, to the mechanical perfection of their equipment.

BAD DOLLARS FROM ANKING

Strong Protest from Shanghai Bankers' Association: Minting by Anhui Must Stop

We have received from the Shanghai Bankers' Association the following copies of telegrams sent by it to Anking (capital of Anhui) and Peking, in respect of the bad dollars turned out by the Anking Mint.

To the Anking Mint:—

We beg to notify you that we have been often told that the fineness containing in the dollars, marked the 8th year of the Republic, coined by you, is far below the fixed standard of the National Coinage Regulations. We did not deeply believe in these statements at first, because you are a Government Mint and will naturally observe the National Coinage Regulations. When the Foreign Banks and the Custom House analyzed your dollars, and definitely reported that your dollars were far below the standard fineness, and criticized them seriously, we took up the matter carefully by analyzing the dollars recently coined by you, and we obtained the same result. Besides this, we feel very doubtful how you still continue to coin during such a time, when the dollar rate continues to fall down. As it concerns the credit of the National Currency, and the welfare of the financial community, we wish you to cable us your explanation at once.

THE SHANGHAI BANKERS' ASSOCIATION
THE NATIVE BANK GUILD.

To the Ministry of Finance, Peking.

We beg to inform you that according to the regulations of the National Coinage, there is a fixed standard for fineness and weight. However, the dollars, marked with the 8th year of Chinese Republic, coined by the Anking Mint, after being analyzed, are far below the standard fineness. This matter has been seriously criticized by the foreign bankers and the Shanghai Customs House, and suggestion has been made that such coins should be made unacceptable. Thus their inferiority may affect the welfare of the financial community and continue to endanger society as a whole. It may be remembered that the matter in question was brought to your attention by the Joint Meeting of the Bankers' Associations held at Peking in April of this year. We therefore beg to ask you to carry out our former suggestion, that is, to withdraw the master-die from the Anking Mint and to stop minting at once. Awaiting your reply.

THE SHANGHAI BANKERS' ASSOCIATION
THE NATIVE BANK GUILD.

Mr. Gordon Medicott Vereker, of the British Legation, who accompanied Sir Ronald Macleay on his visit to Shanghai to open the "North-China" building, has been promoted to First Secretary. Mr. Vereker joined the Diplomatic Service in March, 1919. His promotion, therefore, has been extremely rapid.

LAW REPORTS

MR. HERBERT WEBB v. "CHINA PRESS"

Action for Alleged Wrongful Dismissal: Claim for $80,000 and Fare to New York

An action for damages for breach of contract, brought by Mr. Herbert Webb, late editor of the "China Press," against the proprietors of the paper, was begun in the U. S. Court last Friday before his Honour Judge Purdy.

Plaintiff's claim is under a five years' agreement, renewing a previous contract and dated April 26, 1921, whereby he was re-engaged as publisher and editor of the "China Press," and was to receive 10 per cent. of the actual revenue of the paper, a minimum of $18,000 a year being guaranteed. He was also to have six months' leave in 1923 or 1924, on full pay, with first class passage to New York, and return. Plaintiff claimed that he had at all times fully and faithfully performed the terms of the agreement, but alleged that on March 24 of this year he was wrongfully discharged, and defendants refused to permit him to continue the performance of his duties. His earnings under the 10 per cent. commission were averaging $2,100 per month, were increasing, and would have continued to increase had he remained with the paper until the termination of his agreement. Hence, he had suffered damages to the extent of $80,000, and this amount he now claimed, together with $2,200 steamer and railway fare to New York.

Mr. C. S. Franklin and Mr. H. D. Rodger appeared for plaintiff, and Mr. S. Fessenden and Mr. W. S. Fleming for defendants.

Mr. Franklin having briefly opened his case, plaintiff went into the witness box, and gave evidence that he was 49 years of age and had been 13 years in Shanghai. He had at all times been able, ready and willing to perform his contract, and had brought an action to force defendants to permit him to carry it out. For the past year, his average monthly income under the contract had been $2,100.

An Editor's Hours.

Mr. Fleming (cross-examining)—You don't claim that you have carried out the terms of your contract?—I claim that I have, to the best of my ability.

Did you write any editorials during 1923?—Occasionally, when I had something to write about.

Did you write as many as three during the whole of last year? Can you specify one, and tell us the subject of it?—I should have to refer to the file. I did write a series during the time of the Lincheng bandit outrage. But I was not an editorial writer. Another thing is that, as editor, I did not believe in strong editorials in a community such as that of Shanghai. I have written but few editorials during the time of my connexion with the paper.

Questioned as to his office hours, witness said that he usually went in at 3 or 3.30 in the afternoon and sometimes worked straight through until midnight, or he might go out to dinner at 8 o'clock. He had never missed a day at the office during 13 years, except on an occasion when he had an injury to his foot. At the time of the Lincheng affair he worked 15 hours a day for five weeks. Even when away from the office he was always attached to it in the sense that he gave instructions where he might be found if wanted. Witness denied that he was frequently absent during office hours, particularly after dinner.

Questioned as to his drinking habits, Mr. Webb admitted that he drank pretty regularly, but was not a heavy drinker and frequently did not take a drink until five or six o'clock in the evening.

Allegations of Neglect.

Was it not your practice to call for a whisky and soda immediately you entered the office?—It was not. I probably had two or three drinks during an afternoon.

Not four or five?—No.

Were you in the habit of shaking dice for drinks in the office? Did you not shake dice with visitors to the office, as well as members of the staff?—Not with visitors. I did with employees.

It was a daily occurrence?—No, only once in a while. I might join in when the boys were shaking. I found it better for a man to have a drink in the office, and get on with his work at the same time, rather than go out to a bar. Members of the Board of Directors knew that we had a bar in the office. A friend would drop in on business, or with a bit of news, and it was usual to bring out the bottle on such occasions.

Have you been a visitor to the road houses in Shanghai?—Yes.

The Crest?—Not for some time.

The Del Monte?—Yes, about four times since August last.

The Royal?—Yes, before it was closed.

You were at one or another of these places practically every night?—Perhaps four nights a week, after finishing work.

I suggest that you neglected your office duties and failed to keep proper hours because you were at these places when you should have been in the office?—Not at all. I never went to any of them until after midnight, and the staff knew where I was to be found if wanted.

You were spoken to about it and attempted to justify yourself by saying that you were able to get business in this way?—Not that I recall. Sopher did write telling me he thought I spent too much time at the Del Monte.

Would you call yourself a frequenter of these places?—I went pretty often, but only when I had finished work and went somewhere for relaxation.

What were your average monthly bills from all of these places?—$400 or $500. Occasionally a man may get let in for $150 or $200.

Would you call them respectable places?—Well, that is rather a severe question. They advertise very heavily.

Aren't they about on a par with the dance halls of the Middle West during the mining days?—I never knew anything about them.

The Question of Editorials.

Witness denied that when under the influence of liquor he had called into his office Jabin Hsu, a member of the staff and "a high class young man," to discuss Chinese politics with him until three or four in the morning. He had had frequent discussions with Mr. Hsu, who was very well informed on these matters, and who was just as keen on discussing them as he was. Mr. Webb further denied that, on some of these occasions, he had given Hsu assignments to Peking and other places, and next morning forgot all about the assignment and when spoken to cancelled them.

Isn't it a fact that the only editorial work you did for the "China Press" was done with a pair of scissors?—No. I was responsible for the policy of the paper, and it proved a success. The policy of the previous editor had caused trouble and failure.

The "China Press" was practically the only Shanghai paper without local editorials?—We had editorials, but avoided subjects likely to cause trouble in a mixed community such as that of Shanghai. If anybody attacked America, or American institutions, or misrepresented American policy, I was ready to take up the cudgels, the paper being, ostensibly, an American paper.

Was there one local editorial a week?—Oh yes.

Written by you?—Occasionally by me.

A Firm American Policy.

The Directors told you they wanted more editorials on Shanghai and Chinese affairs?—I was told they wanted "a firm 'American policy," but none of them were able to define what "a firm American policy was." It was my duty to get editorials, but not necessarily to write them.

Leader writers were engaged at considerable expense because you failed to perform your duties?—Not at all. The matter was discussed and it was agreed I could engage men to write editorials if I could not do them myself. The idea of "a firm American policy" was Mr. Sopher's, and he talked of writing editorials himself, but he was not an editor and he was not an American. Leading articles were contributed and I edited them. My business was to edit and supervise publication of the paper. I did not have to write a single editorial unless I wanted to.

As a matter of fact you had not the capacity?—Oh yes. I have written many editorials for the "China Press," and for larger papers at Home.

Do you know whether your circulation was rising or falling?—I used to see the monthly circulation statement. The circulation was hanging on. It was affected by the fact that business was bad and many American firms closed down. The circulation remained about the same during 1922 and 1923. In 1924, I was up because of the motor-car [illegible] we gave at the Automobile Show, but that sort of circulation you cannot hope to hold. Lately there have been but slight variations.

The Judge on Irrelevancies.

Re-examined by Mr. [illegible] witness said that during his 13 years' connexion with the paper he had only once been asked to write a leading article, and on that occasion the Director who asked for it sent him a letter of appreciation. His policy had been to avoid international friction such as might be caused by strong leading articles, and to make the paper a Shanghai paper. On one occasion he wrote a leader defending Judge Lobingier, who he considered had been viciously and unjustly attacked, and directly it appeared he got a letter from Mr. Fessenden (a member of the Board) telling him to stop it. His predecessor adopted a strong editorial policy during the war, and the result was that he had to leave, the paper lost circulation, prestige, and advertising, and became practically a wreck. Then witness started in and swung round to the neutral policy of America.

At this point, the Judge commented on the number of irrelevancies introduced into the case, and observed that there was nothing in the contract which stipulated that plaintiff had to write editorials. He was manager and publisher, and could engage writers.

The Canteen and Del Monte.

In answer to further questions, witness said that the office canteen was started in 1911, and the Directors knew full well about it. It was not unusual for the advertising manager to invite a customer to have a drink, and the chances were then that a man who came in with an order for 500 inches, would go away with a contract for 1,000 in his pocket.

Mr. Rodger continued his re-examination of plaintiff when the proceedings were resumed in the afternoon, and was told that the late Mr. Ezra, and Mr. A. J. Israel, who signed his agreement, knew of the existence of the canteen. No more drinking had been going on lately than at that time. Questioned with regard to the Del Monte, plaintiff said he considered it to be a respectable place.

Mr. Rodger—Have you ever seen prominent Shanghai people there with their wives?—Many.

Name a few of them. . . .

His Honour—It does not seem to me to be necessary that you should name them.

Mr. Rodger—Have you ever seen any of the Directors of the "China Press" there?—Yes, Mr. Fessenden, and Mr. Dollar and his wife.

And the Del Monte advertises in the "China Press"?—Yes.

Counsel was proceeding to put in a copy of the "China Press" containing a Del Monte advertisement when his Honour demurred.

Mr. Rodger—I am only putting it in because they say the Del Monte is not respectable.

His Honour—Plaintiff has said that it is.

Mr. Fessenden—Did I ever have a drink with you in your office while I was a Director of the paper?—Not while you were a Director, but at other times. I cannot quite recall when.

Mr. Fessenden—I have never been in your office in my life. Did you ever shake dice with Mr. Ezra?—No.

With Mr. Harold Dollar?—No. But on several occasions he had a drink with me, and I told him about the bar. All the Directors knew about it.

Mr. Fessenden—I never knew. Have you ever seen the editor of any other first class paper attending these cafés night after night?—Not that I recall.

Were any of the Directors present on occasions when you shook dice with the editorial staff?—I think not.

Mr. Rodger—When was the canteen closed?—In March of this year, by order of Mr. Sopher. Its closing had never before been suggested.

Counsel then read a letter addressed to plaintiff by Mr. Sopher, who pointed out that inconvenience was being caused through there being no one in attendance at the "China Press" to receive morning callers on editorial matters, and directing plaintiff to begin work at 9 a.m., adding that it would not be necessary for him to remain for night duty.

This order witness said he refused to obey, for the reason that news did not begin to come in before 3 o'clock, and until it did come in he could not do his work as editor.

This concluded the case for plaintiff.

The Defence Opened.

For the defence, Jabin Hsu, Chinese editor of the "China Press," was first called. He said he had observed that plaintiff generally arrived at the office about 5 o'clock in the afternoon and left between 7 and 8 o'clock, sometimes returning by midnight and sometimes not. Witness had seen most members of the staff drinking at the office canteen, and he had noticed plaintiff have four or five drinks in an afternoon. In his opinion, plaintiff drank to excess.

Mr. Franklin—It is not for a witness to give his opinion on "excessive drinking." In the eyes of a Prohibitionist, a single drink would be excessive.

Witness went on to say that he seldom saw plaintiff at his desk without a drink, and his average appeared to be one every half hour. He had seen Mr. Webb in the office under the influence of liquor, and there were occasions—about once a week—when he did not seem to be in a condition to give instructions. When witness went to consult him upon Chinese affairs and the policy of the paper, he sometimes said foolish things.

Mr. Franklin, cross-examining, suggested that witness must have spent a lot of his time in watching Mr. Webb, and he asked: Why were you so particular in watching the clock and the number of drinks served to him?

Witness—I thought he was a man with a wonderful capacity for liquor.

Were you asked to spy upon him and make a report?—Witness (indignantly)—I would not be such a person to do that sort of thing.

And your salary has now been raised?—Not yet.

What Constitutes Drunkenness?

Having said he had seen plaintiff drunk in the office, and being asked to define drunkenness, witness said: On one occasion he suggested that, if I would assist him in putting through a scheme he had devised for the unification of China, it might be possible for me to become President of the Republic. Now, a man who will suggest that must either be drunk or crazy.

Mr. Franklin was proceeding to question witness further on the subject of plaintiff's alleged drunkenness, when his Honour intervened with the remark that he thought Mr. Hsu had given a sufficiently intelligent explanation.

Counsel—Plaintiff has admitted that he had three or four drinks, but that number would not make a man drunk.

His Honour—It might, Mr. Franklin. Everything depends upon a man's condition. There are degrees of intoxication, and they begin with the first glass.

Witness admitted that he himself had occasionally had a drink at the canteen, and shaken dice. He added that on the night of the Dempsey-Carpentier fight, while they were waiting for news to come in, plaintiff consumed about a quart of whisky.

How do you know it was a quart?—Well, a quart will not go to more than about 20 drinks.

E. Livesay, the "China Press" printing foreman, said there had been occasions, "pretty frequent," when they were kept waiting for "copy" until Mr. Webb came in. They always got it when he did come. The paper was delayed, but no serious damage was done. He had seen plaintiff in the office under the influence of liquor, but would not say that he was "drunk."

The proceedings were adjourned until next morning.

Defendants' Allegations as to Habits of Plaintiff

The hearing was continued on Saturday.

Mr. Webb was again put into the witness box to be cross-examined regarding the letter he alleged he wrote to Mr. Sopher refusing to go to the office at nine o'clock in the morning.

Mr. Fleming:—I put it to you, you never wrote that letter?—I certainly did.

I put it to you, you have cooked up this letter for the purpose of this trial in order to show you had some excuse for not appearing at the office at nine o'clock in the morning?—I certainly did not.

Mr. Norman's Statement.

Mr. Harold Christopher Norman, business manager of the "China Press," then gave evidence. He stated that he joined the paper in January, 1924. He had known Webb all that time, and it very rarely happened that Webb went into the office in the morning, as his predecessor did. Mr. Webb drank consistently, and it often happened that when witness wanted to see him he was unable to do so because he was drinking in his office with friends. Whenever he went in there he was asked to have a whiskey soda, which, as a rule, he accepted and returned. On many occasions Webb had gone to the office for days together suffering from the effects of alcohol and totally unable to keep his mind to the business in hand. He had frequently seen him under the influence of drink in the office. Their discussions would usually, on Webb's part, lead round to women. For about three weeks a travelling showman in Shanghai on business here would go and sit in Webb's office every afternoon and drink whiskey and soda. He was certainly not with Webb on business of the company. Another travelling showman in Shanghai did the same thing, while the managers of cafés and cabarets, after finishing their business in witness's office, would go in and chat to Webb in his office. Between six o'clock in the evenings and dinner time witness would hear the sound of dice-shaking in Webb's room, though witness admitted that he had occasionally shaken dice with Webb himself. There was no general supervision over the acts of the editorial staff on Webb's part.

Questioned regarding the paper's circulation during Webb's editorship witness said the circulation of the paper was at its height in December, 1921. After that there was a heavy slump and they lost hundreds monthly. Then with the Lincheng outrage the circulation went up but when interest in that affair died down the circulation decreased steadily and was at its lowest when Webb was discharged February last: since then the circulation had improved.

Cross-examined by Mr. Rodger, witness said he had never had any trouble with Webb with the exception of one occasion when they had some slight difference. They had always been good office friends.

"I give my evidence with regret," added witness.

Mr. Rodger: I noticed that.

Mr. Norman's Position.

Mr. Rodger: When Mr. Sopher took charge of the paper he was going to dismiss both you and Mr. Webb, was he not?

Mr. Fessenden objected, but the objection was overruled.

Witness replied in the negative, but added: "He may have made the attempt for certain reasons."

Witness stated that Mr. Webb had threatened to "shoot Mr. Sopher full of lead."

Asked whether he took the threat seriously witness said, knowing Webb, it might have been serious, but admitted he had not warned the authorities, or warned Sopher himself. "I was not" he added "on the best terms with Mr. Sopher at the time."

Witness was then questioned regarding his salary, and Mr. Fessenden objected on the ground it was irrelevant.

Mr. Rodger, explaining to the Court the trend of the question, alleged that Mr. Norman was getting an extra $1,000 a month since Webb had left the paper, and that was why he was prepared to give evidence that day.

Witness denied the allegation. He stated that formerly he received 10 per cent. of profits and no salary. He had since signed an agreement accepting a flat salary instead of $30,000 per year, which actually worked out at a loss to himself.

The Office Canteen.

Mr. Arthur Sopher, who described himself as a French protected subject, said he was managing-director of the "China Press," and had been so since the middle of August, 1922. Witness said he had seen Webb drinking in the office and had once had a drink with him. On one occasion he had sent for Webb and he had gone to witness's office in a state which he would describe as pitiful. He was very drunk and could hardly stand on his legs. Witness had seen Webb in a state of "carry-over" on four or five occasions and on those occasions he could not talk coherently. There had been a canteen in the office and witness, when he took the paper over, decided it was a bad thing to have alcohol so close at hand for Webb, and so he ordered the bar to be closed. Regarding the paper's circulation witness said the circulation dropped steadily in 1923 excepting for a transitory improvement in September. When Webb was discharged in February the circulation improved steadily, till there was some 400 difference between the lowest point reached and to-day's circulation.

Mr. J. Harold Dollar, a director of the China Press, Inc., said he had spoken to Mr. Webb about the bar, and Mr. Webb replied that all the newspapers in the United States had bars for the benefit of the night reporters, etc., and advertisers.

The Sunday Supplement.

Mr. Sopher went back into the witness box.

Mr. Franklin, cross-examining.—You say you are a French protected subject. What is your nationality?

Witness: My father was British for a while and came from Mesopotamia, and where he was living he came under French protection. There was some doubt as to what nationality my father was, so when he died I took the same nationality as he did.

Questioned regarding the innovation of a pictorial section for the Sunday paper, Mr. Sopher said Webb had deliberately delayed the production of the section, and then produced a very bad one.

Questioned with regard to Mr. Webb's abilities, witness said he considered him a very mediocre editor.

The proceedings were adjourned until this morning.

An Editor's Responsibility.

Mr. Franklin at this stage produced a quantity of correspondence which had passed between Webb and Mr. Sopher as evidence showing the interference to which Mr. Webb had been subjected by Mr. Sopher in his duties. One of these referred to the reinstatement of an employee whom Mr. Webb had dismissed.

Mr. Fessenden objected to the production of these letters as having no bearing on the case.

Mr. Franklin contended that they plainly showed the interference to which Mr. Webb had been subjected. Under the terms of his contract he was in complete command, and fully vested with the right to engage or discharge those under him as he saw fit.

Mr. Fleming replied that such reasoning made the servant greater than the master, which was obviously illogical and absurd.

His Honour held that Mr. Webb was subject to the control of the Board of Directors. Investing him with the powers they had, they yet reserved to themselves the supreme right concerning such points as this.

After further argument the Judge confessed that he might possibly change his mind, but still agreed with Mr. Fessenden and Mr. Fleming.

Mr. Sopher Cross-Examined on His Editorship

The hearing was resumed on Monday.

Mr. Sopher, managing director of defendant company, underwent further cross-examination.

In reply to Mr. Franklin, witness said he considered himself editor-in-chief of the paper, though he admitted he had had to employ editorial writers.

Asked whether the pay of the editorial staff had been increased since his advent witness said to the best of his recollection it had not.

Mr. Franklin—Is it not true that the real reason you wanted Mr. Webb out was because you wanted his job?—Absolutely no.

Is it true you wanted Mr. Webb's salary?—I draw nothing whatever from the "China Press."

Are you a wealthy man, that you can afford to work for nothing?—I am working for my sister, at whose house I am living at present, and I am deriving an income from her.

I put it to you the reason Mr. Webb was discharged was because you wanted his job; that you needed the salary he was getting to make certain annual payments to the French Court, as ordered by the French Court in proceedings in which you went into bankruptcy?—Certainly not! Most emphatically no!

You do not deny there is such an order in the French Court?

Mr. Fleming objected to the question, and the objection was upheld.

Re-examined by Mr. Fessenden, witness said Webb's negligence had resulted in the firm's losing $400 or $500 per month for the last three years on wastage of waste-paper—a loss of about $5,000 altogether.

Further questioned witness stated that he considered Webb's conduct outside the office had lowered the paper's prestige immensely.

Small Town Stuff

A slight breeze arose between counsel when Mr. Fessenden attempted to put in a certain letter to the Judge.

Mr. Franklin objected strongly on the ground that it should have been put in the bill of particulars. "It's what I call 'small town stuff,'" said Mr. Franklin. "These letters are put in, well knowing they won't be admitted. It's the sort of thing you'd put up against a small town jury. They know they won't be admitted but they know you will have read them."

The Judge expressed the opinion that the term "small town stuff" should not have been used in that court.

The dispute proved, after argument, to be the result of a misunderstanding, Mr. Franklin being under the impression that Messrs. Fessenden and Fleming wished to put in certain letters only instead of the complete correspondence.

Mr. Fessenden stating they had all along been prepared to put the complete correspondence in, Mr. Franklin sat down pacified.

Mr. Arthur West, sports and cable editor of the "China Press," said it was Mr. Webb's habit to go to the office at three o'clock in the afternoons and stay there till dinner time. He would sometimes go back after dinner and sometimes not. Mr. Webb drank fairly steadily, mostly whiskey-and-sodas, both before dinner and after. After Sopher took over the paper there was a period when Mr. Webb did not drink so much. When Webb went to the office in the afternoons he read the local, Home and foreign papers and clipped from them. He clipped leaders and occasionally wrote them himself. By occasionally he meant three or four a month.

Plaintiff a "Hearst" Man.

Frequently the leaders were late and that held up the paper at nights. Apart from what witness had described he took no part in the actual routine of the paper, but dealt with the several outside matters, such as an editor had to do.

There was a dice box kept in the office which the editorial staff, editor included, used for rattling for drinks. The box was put into frequent use. Webb would often go back to the office at night talking slightly loosely, and a trifle the worse for drink, though witness had never seen him hopelessly drunk. He had often been "pretty well lit-up." Witness, describing the delays which occurred at night, said Mr. Webb was responsible. He would go into the office late at night and want to make changes which witness considered useless and silly, and these changes would mean delay. Mr. Webb was a "Hearst man," fond of huge headlines, etc., whereas witness was of a different school, with the result that they often had arguments.

Asked what were Mr. Webb's topics of conversation, witness said he talked about all sorts of things, newspaper work, sporting events, women—many things.

Mr. Fleming: To what extent did he talk of women?

Mr. Franklin: I object to that question as irrelevant.

Mr. Fleming contended it was to show the state of the man's mind, but the objection was upheld.

Visits to Cafes.

Witness went on to say that Webb was a great frequenter of cafés, which he used to visit on business nights. After Mr. Sopher came he did not go about so much.

Asked what were the cafés Mr. Webb would frequent, witness replied the Del Monte, the Crest, Mumm, the Wintergarden and a place called the Royal.

Mr. Fleming—What sort of a place is the Del Monte?

Mr. Franklin's objection to the question was overruled.

Witness replied that it was not a disreputable place, but it was not a place he would want his daughter to be seen in. Mumm was more or less the same type, but the other places were rather lower.

Cross-examined by Mr. Rodger, witness said that when Mr. Webb was not at the office at nights he would usually ring up, and he always let the office know where to find him if he was wanted.

Asked whether there were any advantages attached to the bar witness said there were. People would go round and have a drink, and let things out that gave them tips on news. Policemen used to go in there, and other people who could give them news.

Witness agreed he had seen Webb in such a condition as not to be able to carry on his work, though not often.

Allegation Against Mr. Norman.

Have you even seen any other executive of the staff drunk? asked Mr. Franklin.

Witness replied that he had seen Mr. Norman drunk in the office once. He was so drunk that he wrecked the office, smashed lights, put fire crackers in the stove, knocked over a chair and generally created pandemonium. Witness quieted him by threatening to call the police.

Further questioned witness said there was a good spirit among the staff when Mr. Webb was in charge.

Witness agreed that all the editorial staff when they were on late duty used to go to the Del Monte for supper. They were usually so hungry they could not sleep, and the Del Monte was the most respectable place open.

Witness further agreed that Mr. Webb had done well with the paper.

Re-examined by Mr. Fleming witness agreed he had never seen either the editor of the "North-China Daily News" or of the "Shanghai Times" at the Del Monte.

Cross-examined again, witness agreed that both these editors were married and had homes to go to, whereas Mr. Webb's family was not here.

The Court then adjourned for tiffin.

On resuming in the afternoon Mr. James L. Butts, also of the staff of the "China Press," was questioned regarding his newspaper experience, and said he was for three years reporter and feature writer on the "Chicago Daily News" and had experience on smaller American newspapers. He joined the "China Press" in April, 1917, as reporter, and became managing editor of the "Evening Star," which had since lapsed. The bar was in the "China Press" office when he joined the paper. Mr. Webb's attendance at the office was very regular and he seldom missed. If he was not at the office at night he always let them know where he could be had. He had never seen Mr. Webb under the influence of liquor to such an extent that he could not do his work properly. Occasionally he had seen other members of the staff drunk, but not often. He had seen Mr. Norman drunk when he wrecked the office. Mr. Webb kept in touch with the editorial department of the office and as far as witness could see he exercised proper superivision.

An Editor's Hours.

With regard to the order given to Mr. Webb to be at the office at 9 a.m. every day, witness thought it impracticable. An editor had to make his own hours as experience taught. Never in his experience had he known a morning newspaper editor keep the hours of 9—12 in the morning and 2—5 in the afternoon.

Cross-examined by Mr. Fleming witness said Mr. Webb would often take four or five drinks in the evening. He had shaken dice with Mr. Webb for drinks, and it was the custom of the staff to do so.

Mr. Fleming.—There was too much drinking at that office, was there not?—Well, the work got done. There was not too much drinking to interfere with the work.

Further questioned witness agreed that it was his custom to have two drinks at the office bar before going to dinner.

Mr. Fleming.—The standard was set by the editor, was it not?—Well, I would not say that.

You had him as a guide, did you not?—Well, no.

You all felt safe, didn't you, with the assurance you were not drinking as much as the editor?—Well, no.

Drinking and News-getting.

Do you think all this drinking did the paper any good?—I think so, yes, as far as news went.

Did the shaking of dice among the staff do the paper any good?—Well, it didn't do any harm, it was among themselves in the office.

Asked who ordered him to write a certain verse for the paper on the night of the Carpentier-Dempsey fight, witness replied Webb gave him the order.

Well, was it a good verse?—No, rotten. I am not a verse writer although I have written a jingle or two.

Did you not say it was the worst poem ever written?—Well I did, but I received many compliments on it round town.

Witness denied that Mr. Webb was quite drunk that night.

Would it have been published if it had ever passed through Mr. Webb's hands?—I don't know.

News Editor's Evidence.

Mr. Bert L. Kuhn, also of the "China Press," said he had been a newspaper man about 13 years. He was now news-editor of the "China Press."

Questioned regarding the bar Mr. Kuhn said he thought it a good idea. It served to keep the staff in the office instead of going out for a drink, and also by its use they were enabled to get all the police news. Also members of the fire department used it. American newspaper offices nearly always had them before prohibition, —and he believed they did now. "I never saw Mr. Webb drunk" said witness, "but of course I have my own definitions of drinking." Witness went on to say he had never seen Mr. Webb in such a state that he could not give coherent decisions on subjects of importance. He did not think it possible for a morning newspaper editor to adopt the 9-5 and 2-5 hours. He had seen Mr. Norman drunk on about three occasions.

As witness started to detail the incidents the Judge cut him short, remarking it was not necessary to "go fully into Mr. Norman's drunken escapades if there were any." Mr. Webb's visits to the various cafés mentioned had done the paper good from an advertising point of view, witness added.

Asked by Mr. Fessenden (cross-examining), how the drinking among the "China Press" staff compared with the drinking among the staffs of other papers, Mr. Kuhn answered "considerably less." He certainly did not think he and the rest of the staff would be discharged from any first-class American newspaper if they drank in that newspaper office as they did in the "China Press."

Witness stated that he himself would take about six drinks a day.

That Mental Strain.

Mr. Fessenden—A newspaper man requires a large amount of mental alertness, does he not?—Very much so.

And do you think six drinks a day would assist that alertness?

Witness replied that a newspaper man's hours and meals were irregular and the strain had the effect of lowering a man's vitality, so that drink would raise him a little.

Further questioned witness said he would advocate a bar for every newspaper office in Shanghai.

Mr. Fessenden: Then why not for law office or a business office? Would it be good for them too?—Well, I think it would. In fact I understand the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank has one.

Asked whether there was really a good deal too much drinking in the "China Press" office, witness replied he had only seen it on three occasions, and on each of these occasions the only drunken man was Mr. Norman. Mr. Webb was only present on one of these occasions, and then Mr. Norman was staggering about and clapping him on the back with the remark "Good old cobber, I'll stand by you, don't cry."

Mrs. Kuhn, also a journalist, said she had been on various papers in New York State and New York City, and was on the Paris edition of the "Chicago Tribune." She certainly joined the "China Press," after being on the "Evening Star," owing her connexion with the "China Press" she had never seen any one incapacitated through liquor. The bar had a good effect inasmuch as it kept the men from going to bars outside while it attracted business men and thereby kept them from [illegible] babbly, have done so otherwise. There was a wonderful esprit de corps when Mr. Webb was in charge. She had never seen Mr. Webb the worse for drink in the office.

Occasional Contributions.

Mr. Edward Percy Graham-Barrow, British subject and Headmaster of the Cathedral School for Boys, said he had been contributing to the "China Press" since 1911. He had never been into the office and seen Mr. Webb otherwise than normal.

Asked by Mr. Franklin who brought the dice box to the bar originally Mr. Graham-Barrow replied: "I am afraid I did."

Mr. Graham-Barrow also described the bar as beneficial, quoting similar reasons to those quoted by former witnesses. He had occasionally,—very occasionally,—gone into the office at nights and found members of the staff under the influence of drink.

Mr. Bruce Lockhart said he had never seen Mr. Webb under the influence of drink. Indeed, whenever witness was sending in long letters which he occasionally "inflicted on the public" Mr. Webb went through them most carefully, changing his English spelling into American and "generally taking out the news." All he had done could not possibly have been done had he not a clear head. He characterized the idea of Mr. Webb's being drunk as "absolutely ridiculous, absurd." As to the bar, it "was a most excellent institution,—most excellent." The Hongkong and Shanghai Bank had a bar, the police station, and other offices in Shanghai.

The hearing was adjourned till next morning.

Difference Between Bars and Canteens: Case Adjourned for Counsel's Argument

The evidence was completed on Tuesday.

Mr. Charles J. Laval, editor of the "Evening News," was the first witness called.

Questioned by Mr. Franklin (for plaintiff) as to the ownership of the "Evening News," witness replied: "That question does not seem pertinent to this case." Further questioned he agreed he had a proprietory interest in the paper. The "Evening News" was printed by the "China Press" from its birth till September last and during that time he saw Mr. Webb every day. Mr. Webb was, he agreed, a drinking man, but witness had never seen him drunk or incapacitated in any way through liquor. When witness was on the "China Press" Webb was his immediate superior, and he always seemed to witness to exercise proper supervision of his department. It was impossible for an editor to be governed by the same hours as a business man, or for Mr. Webb to do his work properly during the hours 9-12 and 2-5. It was essential that the editor should be present when the paper was "put to bed," which was any time after midnight. He had not noticed any change in Mr. Webb's ability as an editor, either mentally or physically, since 1921.

The Benefit of Bars.

Cross-examined by Mr. Fessenden, witness agreed there was a certain amount of drinking in the "China Press" office, and there were occasions when there was too much drinking, but these were very rare.

Asked whether he drank as much as the rest of the "China Press" staff when he was on the paper, witness replied: "Well, I drank my share." With regard to the benefits or otherwise of bars in newspaper offices generally, witness thought they would have their advantages in Shanghai, though in America public opinion would be against them. They had to accept the fact that newspapermen did drink, and a bar in the office prevented their going outside. Also it was helpful in getting in news.

Mr. Fessenden, putting a further question to witness in which he mentioned the word "bar," was interrupted by Mr. Rodger.

"Why!" asked that gentleman, "do you use that word bar? It's not a bar, it's a canteen."

The Judge wished to know the difference between a bar and a canteen. He supposed a bar had bar tenders, etc., while a canteen was where they kept drinks on the ice chest and members of the staff called for drinks and had them brought to their desks.

Mr. Fessenden failed to see the difference, since one called for drinks and signed a chit in each

Mr. Laval's contribution to the dispute was that in any case there was no bar with rails round.

Mr. Fessenden appeared to be unconvinced, but agreed to have the word altered to canteen.

Mr. C. E. P. Sutcliffe, nationality British, a printer in the "China Press," said he was night overseer at that office, and had been so since 1921. He had never seen Mr. Webb in such a condition that he could not do his work, and he had always exercised proper supervision over witness's department. Incidentally witness had been a printer since the age of 13 years, and was now 24.

Cross-examined by Mr. Fleming (for defendant), witness said he was engaged by Mr. Webb as assistant-overseer, though he agreed that since Mr. Livesey had taken over of nights, since August last, he had been employed chiefly proof-reading.

Mr. Norman Again.

Mr. Norman, re-examined, was asked to recall a conversation between himself and Mr. Graham Barrow at a Rotary tiffin some four weeks ago, in which Mr. Webb was mentioned. Mr. Graham Barrow, stated witness, had said that he wondered how Mr. Webb had continued for so long with drink, etc., and must come to an end some time. Asked by witness whether he would give evidence for the defence in this case he had said he would because the "China Press" had been very good to him. He also remarked that he had seen "poor old Herbert whooping it up" a good deal lately. Regarding the story told by Mr. West about witness's getting drunk and wrecking the office,—it was a half truth, which was worse than no statement at all.

Mr. Franklin interrupted at this pointed on the ground that the defence were impeaching their own witness, Mr. West.

Mr. Fessenden said he was bringing the matter up more to clear Mr. Norman than anything else. The story had been published in the press and in view of Mr. Norman's position he should be able to give an explanation.

The Judge held that by the rules of evidence he had to uphold the objection.

Mr. Fessenden.—But cannot the witness clear himself as a personal privilege?

The Judge: No, he cannot.

The case was adjourned till Monday morning, when counsels' arguments will be heard.

CHINESE CHILD ADOPTED BY AMERICAN COUPLE

But Is It Still a Alien? Question to Be Solved by Immigration Officials

An interesting question bearing on American immigration laws was raised at the U. S. Court on Tuesday when Judge Purdy granted the petition of two American citizens, a missionary and his wife, to adopt a Chinese child. They had been caring for the little waif for two years, it was stated, and rescued it from the streets.

Can this child enter the United States, to which country it is understood the parents intend returning shortly? Is this child an alien or is it a citizen of the United States? Could it be construed that the parents are attempting by subterfuge to evade the immigration Exclusion law?

The child is of Chinese parentage and according to Chinese law and custom remains a Chinese citizen. The American Congress passed the Chinese Exclusion Act 40 years ago and excepting students, travellers, merchants and those resident in America at the time of the passage of the law, no others have been permitted lawfully to enter.

We have been informed that the State Department refuses to accept naturalized Chinese (as this one appears to be) into the country and refuses to issue passports to them, but the courts hold that they become citizens by adoption under such procedure.

A similar case occurred over a year ago. Judge Lobingier issued the adoption papers—but the Consular authorities would not issue the necessary passports for the child, but did certify, as to the parent's nationality. The Judge told the parents to take the certificate and the child and enter the American borders. They went and nothing more has been heard of the matter.

Another question—What is the status of a Chinese woman married to an American citizen in China?

CAUGHT AT LAST

Skilful Burglar's Amazing Career of Crime

Smart work by the police brought to justice on Wednesday Tsu Chouling, who during the past year his entered the homes of numerous foreigners in the Western District in their absence and removed what he could.

The Bertillon system of the local police was used in identifying the criminal, for it was on three occasions during March and April that he left finger prints round the house into which he had broken. These were carefully gathered and it was found that the suspect, till recently at large, had been convicted previously on similar charges. Although this manner of identification could be only used in these specific instances, the accused's methods, particularly his manner of deadening the sound of the panes of glass he broke, convinced the police that he was the man wanted for all the burglaries. He very neatly pasted paper around the sections he cut and no sound resulted. Knowing who was wanted, the police sent Chinese detectives into his last known haunts and he was finally apprehended on May 25 and brought before the Court on the next day, when a remand was asked for.

Accused at length admitted that he was guilty on most of the charges. The total amount of property stolen amounted to $1,985, of which $774 has been recovered.

Sentence of five years' imprisonment was passed. Fifteen Shanghai residents were victimized by his depredations of including:—Sir Edward Pearce, 46 Hart Road, Mr. T. H. U. Aldridge 153 Sinza Road, Mr. Caudron, 140 Avenue Road, and Mr. Figge, 71 Kiaochow Road.

WILD SCENE AT U. S. CONSULATE

Drunken Sailor Who Assaulted Three Consuls Sent to Bilibid

Pleading guilty at the U. S. Court Thursday to a charge of assault and battery upon Mr. J. P. Davis, U. S. Executive Consul, Mr. J. E. Jacobs, American Assessor, Mr. C. I. Graham, Vice-Consul, and the U. S. Marshal, Mr. T. R. Porter, John Craig, unemployed seaman, was sentenced by Judge Purdy to three months' and 10 days' imprisonment.

Mr. Davis said prisoner got into the Consulate-General on Friday afternoon, which was a holiday, and began to make demands upon Mr. Graham and himself. As he was under the influence of liquor and did not leave when requested to do so, Mr. Davis suggested that the Marshal be sent for. When Mr. Porter arrived the man refused to go with him quietly and showed fight, so the Marshal left to get handcuffs and when he returned with these, prisoner ran amok, knocking down the Marshal, striking at Mr. Jacobs and biting Mr. Davis on the arm.

Mr. Faison (defending) called upon Dr. Dunn who testified to having examined the prisoner and finding scars of skull fracture and another scalp scar which might have affected the man's mentality, though he was apparently normal.

The Judge then questioned Craig, the latter stating that he was so much under the influence of liquor at the time of the assault that he did not remember anything about it. He also said he had been with the anti-aircraft division in France and had received his wounds there.

Passing sentence, the Judge said that while he could not condone the offence he wished to impose a sentence which would not be unduly harsh and which would bring the prisoner back to the States. He accordingly sentenced him to imprisonment in Bilibid for three months and 10 days, the last 30 days of the sentence to be carried out on board the transport returning to America.

CAPT. Reynolds, master of the Nemazee ship Frangestan, which was burnt out in the Red Sea recently, and sunk by a British submarine, has returned to Hongkong. At the official inquiry into this disaster it was found that the fire was caused by spontaneous combustion in a cargo of cotton.

HUSBAND'S ADVANCED THEORIES

Novel Plea that He Was Not Responsible for Wife's Debts Fails

When a husband pays over his monthly cheque regularly to his wife for housekeeping purposes he is not responsible for any household debts she may incur. This was the burden of the defence unsuccessfully pleaded, in a case which came before Judge Grain at H. M. Supreme Court on Thursday, Lane, Crawford & Co., Ld., and Dombey & Son claiming the sums of Tls. 329.75 and $63.2 respectively from R. F. Wrench, for household goods purchased on credit and not paid for. Mr. Tycho Wing prosecuted and Mr. Addis appeared for the defence.

Defendant, in evidence, stated that when his wife contracted these debts he was away from Shanghai. Every month regularly it was his custom to hand over his pay cheque for Tls. 450 to his wife, and with that he expected her to pay all the household expenses.

Mr. Tycho Wing submitted that a wife's debts were the husband's in a case of this sort.

Mr. Addis's argument was that the fact of marriage alone did not necessarily mean presumption of the husband's liability for a wife's debts. In this case they had evidence to show that the husband paid over his complete monthly pay cheque to his wife, and it was only reasonable to expect that with that money she would pay all the household expenses and not get into debt.

The Judge, giving judgment for plaintiff, stated that the law held that a wife living with her husband was deemed to have implied authority from him and directly on his behalf. The onus was on the husband to prove he was not liable, and there were various ways in which he could do this. He could show that he had given notice publicly that he was not liable for his wife's debts, or he could show that he had definitely drawn up an arrangement with his wife refusing to allow her further credit, and that the tradespeople were aware of this. But in this particular case none of these things has been shown or alleged, and he could see no other course than to give judgment against the husband, however much they might sympathize with him if his wife had been extravagant, although, he hastened to add, this had not necessarily been shown in this case.

THREE small cases were dealt with by Judge Grain in the British Supreme Court, on Tuesday. C. Maitland did not appear to answer a claim by Lee Tung for $106, balance due on a claim for furniture supplied and judgment was given for the amount claimed, with costs. On the application of Messrs. Moorhead, Halse and Robinson, an order was made for C. M. Castillo to vacate within two days a house now occupied by him, three months' rent being due. W. N. Lester not appearing in a case brought by Messrs. L. Moore & Co., though, as was stated, he had received a previous warning, a warrant was issued.

Wills' Disappointing Display Against Madden

New York, June 10.

In spite of an advantage of 28 lb. and a longer reach, Harry Wills, the negro heavyweight boxer who has been clamouring to fight Dempsey, was unable to do more than beat Bartley Madden on points in a 15-round contest last night.

Wills battered the white man all over the ring, but had not a sufficient punch to knock him out. Madden fought back pluckily and in several rounds gave the negro as good as he got. The spectators wildly cheered Madden at the end of the bout.—Reuter.

Municipal Gazette News

Excerpts from Minutes.

Fire at Holt's Wharf.—Further report by the Chief Officer of the Fire Brigade is submitted relative to the point raised by Capt. Dixon, that the Brigade attended unasked and suggesting a reduced fee. It is noted, however, that under the agreement with Messrs. Butterfield & Swire, the Brigade is required to attend all fires on their property with fees duly specified. It is decided, therefore, that no further action can be taken with regard to this matter.

At the same time, members consider that cases might arise where the scale charges for the Brigade services might exceed the amount of the damage caused by a small fire, and it is suggested that in such cases the charge be reduced to a sum sufficient to cover out-of-pocket expenses, to be made upon recommendation accordingly by the Chief Officer.

Sing Song Licences.—With reference to the minute of the last meeting, draft Licence Conditions are submitted and approved. The fees suggested are $10 a quarter for each house and a similar fee of $10 a quarter for each artiste, as against an annual house fee of $2, and a monthly licence fee of $10 in respect of each artiste, imposed by the French Council for establishments in the French Concession. After hearing the Commissioner of Revenue and the Prosecuting Solicitor, these fees are approved as are also the draft Licence Conditions. The Prosecuting Solicitor suggests that in their own interests a personal licence should be issued to each girl on the ground that otherwise they might be subjected to "squeeze" from the Landlord of the licensed house. Also that this system would be useful for the better identification of immoral and disorderly women seeking to secure refuge within the Sing Song houses from the closure disability they are experiencing as the result of the suppression of brothels. The Acting Commissioner of Police concurs with this view and after discussion the proposal is approved.

With regard to the house licence the Prosecuting Solicitor considers that this should be issued to the person in charge of the whole house who should be held responsible for the observance of its conditions. The Acting Commissioner of Police, however, states that the tenant or landlord of a house frequently does not reside on the premises or even in the Settlement, and that the various rooms are sub-let which would make it difficult to trace the holder of the Licence, if required. He suggests that the house licence should be issued to the mistresses of the girls who always live with them, and although in some instances this would mean that several licences would be issued in respect of one house it would be of material assistance for ensuring compliance with the Licence conditions. After discussion this proposal is recommended.

LONDON RAILWAYS STRIKE

Electrical Workers Demanding 10s. Weekly Increase and Minimum of £3: Government Promising to See that Essential Services Go on

London, June 5.

The possibility of an immediate strike of locomotive men is ruled out owing to a meeting of the locomotive delegates conference deciding to take a ballot in the event of the companies' reply being unsatisfactory.—Reuter.

London, June 6.

The chaos on the London electric railways owing to the strike of shopmen and workers at the power-stations was intensified to-day. The Central London Railway is closed owing to the shutting at midnight of the power-station supplying it. Fifty-five railway-stations are now closed. Six thousand of the uniformed staff are now out in sympathy with the strikers.

The railway managers have replied to the Locomotive Men's Society declining to re-open negotiations. Meanwhile the electrical trades union has instructed its members employed on the London underground railways to cease work, thus conferring a degree of official recognition on the present strike.

Mr. Tom Shaw, the Minister of Labour, replying to questions in the House of Commons, promised that the Government would give protection to willing workers and maintain the essential services in the event of the strike spreading. He declared that the Government declined to recognize anybody except a body capable of negotiating a settlement.

The object of the present strike is to secure an increase of 10/- a week with a minimum of £3, and consolidation of the existing war bonus of 16/6. The strikers also demand a guaranteed day and week and one week's holiday with pay.

Other Unions Joining

Later.

There are many indications that the Railway Strike has become more serious.

To-day, the Electoral Trades Union issued an official decision that they would join in the strike, and this is likely to be followed by three other Craftmen's Unions, which have shopmen on the Tubes, viz. vehicle builders, blacksmiths and engineers. These unions, after a meeting last night, announced that they merely waited the respective confirmation of their National Executives. The demands in these cases are an increase of 12 shillings a week, a week's holiday with pay, and settlement of the various shop questions.

The participation of these unions will mean a total cessation of the present modified services.

Central London Rlwy. Reopened

London, June 7.

The railway strike position is officially described as being slightly better. The Central London Railway has reopened, but the Hampstead line is closed. It is estimated that about 7,000 men are now on strike.

It is officially stated that the executive of the Amalgamated Engineering Union will not authorize a strike of its shopmen who are members of London electric railways, because a national claim by the Union for a wage advance for all railway shopmen is being negotiated. Thus the strike remains unofficial except as regards the Electrical Trades Union.

The executive of the Locomotive Engineers' Union, following the railway managers' refusal of their demands, have decided to ask for an immediate meeting with the managers before taking drastic action. It is therefore officially stated that there will be no stoppage on the main lines during Whitsun.—Reuter.

A Slight Improvement.

London, June 9.

An Underground Railway communiqué last night described the situation as slightly improved. Nine stations re-opened during the week-end and a little over half the normal service is operating.—Reuter.

Strike to be Continued.

London, June 9.

The railway strike position continues to improve. It is officially announced that, except for the Turnham Green-Richmond section, the whole Underground system is now working. Numbers of strikers have returned to duty, and it is expected that the stations now shut will be opened to-morrow.

Later.

A conference of delegates of the railway strike committee to-day decided to continue the strike.—Reuter.

Uniformed Staff Returning to Work but Power-house and Shop Men Obdurate

London, June 10.

The railway managers have agreed to meet the Locomotive Society's representatives on June 12. The latter in the meantime are delaying the ballot, which they threatened if the railway managers did not agree to meet them to discuss certain anomalies arising from the last strike settlement.

Later.

The railway strike situation is officially reported to be still improving. Although 39 stations are still closed, trains are operating on all lines. Fifteen hundred more of the uniformed staff have returned to work.

The difficulty now is to increase the output of the power-houses so as to increase the number of trains running.

Meanwhile the strike headquarters claim that the strike is extending to the Great Central Railway. The shopmen at Anerley and Nottingham are now out, and the shopmen and powerhouse men in the London Underground are solid. The effect will be felt very shortly because repairs to the rolling-stock are piling up.—Reuter.

Ultimatum from Management

London, June 11.

The London Underground Railways have warned the strikers to return to work before June 13; otherwise they will be dismissed and steps taken against them for striking without proper notice.

June 12.

The services of the Underground Railways did not show a material change yesterday and the public continue to experience much discomfort and overcrowding. There was a breakdown, which lasted for half-an-hour during the busiest hour in the morning, owing to overloading at the power station.

Thirtyfive stations are still closed and the prospect for improvement is far from bright, as the Electrical Trades Union last night decided, that as their demands for increased wages were not conceded, to extend the strike "in order to effect a speedy settlement."

The ultimatum to the strikers, which was signed by Baron Ashfield, the Managing Director of the London Underground Railways, says that in no circumstances will the companies meet the representatives of the strikers.

Mr. C. T. Cramp, the Secretary of the National Union of Railwaymen, who has just returned from the Continent, has issued a manifesto, which says the line that this is a fight between order and mob-law. He declines to placate or temporize "forces of anarchy" and declares that he will not compromise with the unofficial leaders of the strike. Mr. Cramp calls for courage to deal with "all these disruptive elements" and defines any refusal to go to work as blacklegging.—Reuter.

FRENCH POLITICAL CRISIS

Resignation of New Cabinet Following Failure to Cope with Left Parties' Opposition in Chamber and Senate: Animated and Uproarious Scenes

Paris, June 6.

A continuous stream of politicians has been coming and going to and from the Elysée throughout the day. The Socialists are busy designing ingenious formalae designed indirectly to raise the Presidential issue in the Chamber, since the rules of the House forbid a debate involving the President's person. Up to the present the President of the Chamber, M. Painlevé, has not accepted any of the formulae submitted.

Interest at present centres on the sudden departure for home of M. Steeg, the Governor of Algeria. M. Steeg is a Radical Senator and a personal friend of M. Millerand. He is regarded as a candidate for the Premiership.

June 7.

M. Francios Marsal has agreed to form a Cabinet.

M. Marshal was the Minister of Finance in M. Poincaré's Government and is a friend of M. Millerand. He will introduce the new Cabinet on June 10, when he will read the Presidential message to Parliament, stating M. Millerand's case. Afterwards a vote of confidence will be submitted, and, if rejected, as is considered probable, M. Millerand will resign. The President will therefore have vindicated his standpoint of only leaving his post on a clear vote of Parliament and not at the behest of one section of it.—Reuter.

The President's Message

Paris, June 8.

M. Marsal has virtually completed his stop-gap Cabinet, which includes M. Lefebvre du Prey as Minister of Foreign Affairs and M. Maginot as Minister of War. All the members belong to the bloc national and almost all were members of either M. Millerand's or M. Poincaré's Cabinets.

It is understood that the President's message to Parliament, a draft of which he communicated to the prospective members of the Cabinet this afternoon, declares that the new majority's determination to cut short his seven years' tenure of the Presidency amounts to a coup de force and violation of the Constitution. He asks Parliament to state by an unequivocal vote whether it sanctions such a dangerous precedent. He asserts that he has acted constitutionally throughout his Presidentship.

It is a foregone conclusion that the Chamber will vote against M. Millerand. It is expected that the new President will be elected by the National Assembly at Versailles on Friday and that M. Herriot's Cabinet will thereupon be formed.

Later.

The official list of the Marsal Cabinet confirms the previous message. M. Marsal takes the Premiership and the Finance portfolio. M. de Selves retains the Ministry of the Interior.—Reuter.

M. Millerand's Message to Parliament: A Review of His Policy

Paris, June 10.

According to a semi-official forecast of M. Millerand's message to Parliament, he will briefly review the events since his assumption of the Presidency. He will recall that he has invariably pursued a policy of social progress and agreement at home and abroad, and that all Cabinets to which he has entrusted the power have been coalition ones in which members of the Left participated. He will declare that his attitude has always been in conformity with his constitutional prerogative.

M. Millerand will point out that the new majority has made it impossible for the head of the State to exercise his mandate and the [illegible] as it is understood. He will [illegible] the [illegible] of the head of State in electoral [illegible] would result in creating a precedent fraught with incalculable consequences. In conclusion the President will state that Parliament alone can decide the question of the Presidency.—Reuter.

Paris, June 10.

The Chamber of Deputies to-day voted in favour of a Left resolution refusing to enter into relations with a Ministry which by its composition was a negation of the right of Parliament, and adjourning all discussion until a Government in conformity with the country's sovereign will presented itself before it.

The Cabinet immediately called at the Elysée and presented its resignation.

It was later officially announced that M. Millerand intended to resign the Presidency.

Later.

M. Millerand's message was read in the Chamber of Deputies this afternoon by M. François Marsal, the Premier, and in the Senate by M. Ratier, the Keeper of the Seals. In the course of the message the President stated that he had faithfully kept the solemn engagement he had made before the country. He refused to desert his post and called upon Parliament to respect the Constitution. "You will respect the Constitution. If you disregarded it, if it was intended henceforth that arbitrary action of the majority could compel the President of the Republic to resign for political reasons, the President of the Republic would be only a plaything in the hands of the parties. You will assist me to avert such a formidable danger. Dangerous counsellors are striving in party interests to secure that the new Parliament shall open with a revolutionary act. The Chamber will refuse to follow them. Faithful to its traditions, the Senate will wish to remain, as it has always been, in the gravest conjunctures, the defender of the Constitution."

The new Marsal Government made a declaration that it was only formed to enable Parliament to pronounce itself constitutionally and therefore submitted no programme. It asks Parliament to decide whether constitutional laws shall remain "intangible" above party politics, or whether it disapproves the principles laid down in the President's message, which are the basis of the Constitution. The Government appeals to the conscience and reason of Parliament, the proceedings in which should be held on clear issues, as the vote concerns the future régime and respect for legality, the guarantees of Republican institutions and the safeguards of public liberties.

Left Resolution Carried.

After an animated debate, during which the Communists stood and sang the "Internationale," the Chamber voted by 329 to 214 in favour of a Left resolution, unanimously adopted earlier in the day by the Left groups, declaring:—"The Chamber is resolved not to enter into relations with a Ministry which by its composition is a negation of the rights of Parliament. It refuses the unconstitutional debate to which it is invited, and has decided to adjourn all discussion until a Government, constituted in conformity with the country's sovereign will, presents itself before it."

The Senate by 154 votes to 144 passed a resolution adjourning debate on the interpellation of Senator Cheron, who was thus prevented from presenting the case for the President. The Senate then adjourned until to-morrow.

In the Chamber for a long time the deputies of the Left, according to a concerted plan, maintained a frigid silence. They were determined to treat the Government as non-existent. None but the Communists uttered a word until the ex-Minister, M. Reibel, in the course of an 80 minutes' speech deliberately chose provocative phrases with the object of drawing the Left from their shell. The atmosphere became more electric. The Communists greeted references to M. Millerand with shouts of "Renégat," and sang the "Internationale." Shortly afterwards a message was communicated to the Chamber that the Senate had adjourned pending the discussion in the Chamber. The Left deputies were unable to restrain their enthusiasm. They rose en bloc and cheered for several minutes, shouting "Vive le Senat!" Subsequently they relapsed into silence again and listened indifferently, taking no part in the debate. When the result of the division was announced, however, they again broke out into thundering cheers.

The Chamber then adjourned until to-morrow to hear "a communication from the Government," namely, the President's resignation.

President About to Resign.

An official announcement was made after the results of the sittings in the Chamber and Senate were known that M. Millerand intended to resign. The communiqué said that the Premier and the Cabinet called at the Elysée to inform the President of the events in the Chamber and Senate. M. Millerand thanked the Cabinet for the assistance they had given him in the defence of the Constitution. When the Cabinet tendered their resignation, M. Millerand replied that he had made up his own mind to resign the Presidency. He asked the Cabinet to continue its functions for the time being.

M. Millerand's Resignation

June 11.

President Millerand's letter, which merely announces his resignation, will be read in Parliament this afternoon. To-morrow the Left parties will choose a candidate for the presidential election, which will be held on Friday. The candidateships of M. Painlevé and M. Doumergue are now being contemplated.

M. François Marsal will lead the new President to the Elysée and resign. On Saturday M. Herriot will be charged to form a Cabinet, which probably will be presented to the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate on Monday or Tuesday.—Reuter.

M. Herriot Preparing His Cabinet

Paris, June 11.

President Millerand to-day despatched letters to the President of the Senate and to the President of the Chamber of Deputies announcing his resignation.

The moderate newspapers unanimously regret the departure of President Millerand. Some of them consider yesterday's proceedings a dangerous precedent.

The "Echo de Paris" declares that M. Herriot and his friends have struck the first blow against constitutional laws with the assistance of revolutionaries, and have opened the way for the greatest unreasonableness on the part of extremists and the worst capitulations by the Radical party. The "Figaro" says: "The Left have accomplished a revision of the Constitution."

On the other hand, the Left organs are rejoicing at the downfall of President Millerand, whom the "Humanite" describes as "one of the worst enemies of the proletariat."

The Chamber of Deputies and the Senate will meet jointly at Versailles at 2 o'clock on Friday afternoon to elect a new President.

M. Herriot is losing no time in settling down to his task. He is already preparing a new Cabinet for announcement immediatly a new President is elected, and is planning to adjourn the Chambers after a very brief debate, so as to enable him to get in contact with the Allied Governments. M. Herriot is hoping to go to London to see Mr. Ramsay MacDonald at the beginning of next week.—Reuter.

A UNITED IMPERIAL POLICY

The Dominions' Right to Sign Treaties Affecting the Whole Empire

London, June 6.

In the House of Commons to-day in the course of a debate initiated by Sir Edward Grigg (Liberal), who denounced the late Government for not inviting the Dominions to send separate plenipotentiaries to Lausanne with the result that the Lausanne Treaty was the only peace treaty not signed by the whole Empire, the Prime Minister said with regard to procedure in the future that the Government stood by the resolutions of the last Imperial Conference that the Dominions interested should be informed before treaty negotiations were opened and, where their interests were directly concerned, they should be represented. As far as he was concerned, the resolution would always be put into operation. It was his opinion that the time had come when we must consider what machinery would be required to conduct a united Imperial policy, particularly with regard to foreign affairs.—Reuter.

THE LAUSANNE TREATY

Canada's Acquiescence in British Government's Ratification

Ottawa, June 10.

In the Dominion House of Commons to-day a statement on the Government's attitude on the Lausanne Treaty was made by the Premier, Mr. Mackenzie King. He contended that the British Government's procedure in asking Canada to ratify a treaty imposing obligations on her when Canada was not invited to participate in the negotiations and was not directly among the signatories was a serious departure from the position of equality of status, adopted at Versailles and elsewhere. He pointed out, however, that the ending of the war with Turkey by the King signing the peace treaty was binding on the whole Empire, just as the declaration of war on Turkey was binding. The Premier, in conclusion, said that he believed that an Imperial Parliament was impossible and that an Imperial Council would be disruptive. He expressed the opinion that any steps to make clearer their full rights to self-government would conduce to the security and permanency of their allied nationhood within the Empire.

Mr. King said that legally and technically Canada would be bound by the ratification of the treaty, but her moral obligations under the treaty would be vastly different from those imposed by the Treaty of Versailles in view of the different manner in which the negotiations had been carried on.

Mr. Meighen, the leader of the Opposition, sharply criticized the Government for tacitly acquiescing in the course of the British Government.—Reuter's American Service.

BRITAIN AND TURKEY

A Complete Deadlock with Regard to Mosul

Constantinople, June 5.

The Mosul Conference has broken down. The Turks refused to agree to the terms of reference suggested by the British, under which the dispute would be submitted to the League of Nations. The Turks suggested further negotiations with a view to the selection of another arbitral tribunal.

Sir Percy Cox was given a farewell by the Turkish delegates. He departs from here almost immediately.—Reuter.

EXONERATION OF SIR MICHAEL O'DWYER

Swarajist Indignation: A Proposal to Pay the Costs and Damages

Simla, June 9.

Mr. C. R. Das, the Swarajist leader, to-day introduced a motion in the Legislative Assembly that the Assembly should express disappointment and indignation at "Mr. Justice McCardie's judgment exonerating Sir Michael O'Dwyer and General Dyer."

Mr. Neogy, presiding, ruled the motion out of order.

Mr. Das also sent in a resolution in favour of the payment of damages and costs in the O'Dwyer case from the Indian exchequer.—Reuter.

INDIA'S DEMAND FOR HOME RULE

Memorandum Claiming Right to Draft Own Constitution Like Other Dominions

London, June 11.

Mr. Sasteri, Mrs. Besant and Mr. Rangachariar and other Indian leaders are at present in London with the object of presenting a memorandum to the India Office demanding the establishment of Dominion Home Rule. It urges the despatch of a commission to India in the autumn with wide terms of reference, in order that the story of the American colonies and Ireland may not be repeated and the constitutional party destroyed, and claims that India should draft her own constitution similarly to the Dominions. The memorandum also insists that the Viceroy should conduct the Government with a Cabinet responsible to an Indian Legislature, but that he should provisionally retain the responsibility for the defence of the country and for foreign affairs, including relations with Indian Princes. The provincial governments should be autonomous and adequate provision should be made to protect minorities.—Reuter.

JUBALAND CEDED TO ITALY

A Long-Standing Cause of Friction Removed on Britain Abandoning Claim

London, June 10.

The long-standing diplomatic question between Britain and Italy with regard to the cession of territory in Africa, which has caused a little friction, has been virtually settled after a fortnight's negotiation between experts at a conference in London.

The matter in dispute concerned the cession of Jubaland, which is at present a part of Kenya Colony, for incorporation in Italian Somaliland. The question was bound up in the conditions laid down by Italy, when she joined in the war by the side of the Allies in 1915, the stipulation having then been made that, if Britain and France as a result of the war acquired territory in Africa, Italy should receive compensation, particularly in north-eastern Africa. An agreement with regard to the line of territory to be ceded was reached in 1920, but Britain made the arrangement dependent on a settlement of the future of the Dodecanese Islands in the Mediterranean, while the Italians made a counter-claim. The British have now abandoned their claim.

The tract ceded is 45,000 square miles in extent, and is largely desert. The principal port is Kismayu.—Reuter.

U. S. REPUBLICAN CONVENTION

Mr. Coolidge Sole Nominee: Democratic Candidate and Prohibition

Cleveland, Ohio, June 6.

President Coolidge's campaign manager states that Senator Johnson and Senator La Follette have withdrawn their candidatures from the Republican Convention, leaving the President the sole Republican nominee.—Reuter's American Service.

Cleveland, Ohio, June 9.

The eve of the Republican National Convention is in marked contrast to similar gatherings. The city is filled with politicians representing various States, but no banners are flying from the headquarters of rival candidates nor are pictures of them pasted in windows and other vantage points. The reason is that President Coolidge appears to be the only candidate and he is likely to be nominated, virtually by acclamation.

The only thrills likely to occur will be during the efforts to choose a Vice-President and to frame the planks of the party's platform, particularly in regard to the World Court, foreign debt and tariff, on which there is considerable divergency of opinion among the party leaders.

A number of names of possible Vice-Presidential candidates are mentioned, including those of General Charles G. Dawes, Mr. Herbert Hoover, Mr. Theodore Burton, and the Ambassador to Mexico, Mr. Charles Beecher Warren.—Reuter's American Service.

New York, June 9.

Considerable zest has been given to the political situation through a statement by Governor Smith of New York, the avowed Democratic candidate for the Presidency, on his stand on the "wet" or "dry", issue, which he made in response to an inquiry by the Self-Determination League.

Governor Smith said that he opposed saloons and "hard liquor," but favoured light wines and beer. He desired modification of the Volstead Law and challenged its definition of intoxicants.—Reuter's American Service.

Chairman's Eulogy of Pres. Coolidge: Unsurpassed in Honesty of Purpose

Cleveland, Ohio, June 10.

The Republican National Convention mustered at 11 o'clock this morning. Mr. Theodore Burton, a member of the House of Representatives, was elected temporary chairman. He delivered a "keynote" address praising President Coolidge as unsurpassed among the rulers of the earth in honesty of purpose, courage and high devotion to the welfare of his country. He declared: "By far the greater share of our citizenship looks to President Coolidge rather than Congress for leadership."

After recommending that the Republican Party should declare for American adhesion to the World Court with merely the Harding-Hughes reservations, Mr. Burton expressed regret that Congress had not heeded the President's wishes with regard to the immigration legislation. He advocated an educational campaign with regard to taxation, so that it should be generally realized that not all the burden of taxation fell on those who first paid their tax.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Presidential Platform Practically Completed

Cleveland, Ohio, June 11.

The platform to be submitted to the Republican Convention was virtually completed early this morning. It is asserted that it is entirely along the lines desired by President Coolidge. It is reported that in the executive session of the drafting committee no voice was raised against the plank favouring the United States joining the World Court under President Coolidge's terms.

The insurgent faction, led by Senator LaFollette, has submitted to the platform committee a substitute platform declaring that the paramount issue is to rescue Government and industry from the grip of private monopoly, pledging itself to a "house cleaning" of Government departments in Washington and proposing to reform railway, tax, tariff, banking and agricultural legislation, but it is not believed that this will be supported outside the insurgent ranks.

Later.

The drawing up of the Republican platform consumed more time than was anticipated. It was found advisable in the interests of harmony to devote a whole day to smoothing out disputed planks.

The document, as submitted to the Convention, begins with a tribute to the late President Harding. It declares that the country is fortunate because another fully equipped to be his successor stood forth on his death.

The platform favours adherence of the United States to the Permanent Court of International Justice, and endorses the Government's refusal to join the League of Nations and assume obligations under the Covenant of the League. It, however, upholds, as illustrations of what is possible in the direction of co-operative humanitarian efforts, the unofficial representation of the United States by General Dawes on the Reparations Commission and the convocation of the Washington Naval Conference.

After referring to the increase, menacing peace, in land and air forces abroad, the platform advocates the calling of a conference on the limitation of land forces, and the use of submarines and poison-gas, as proposed by President Coolidge, when, through the adoption of a permanent reparation plan, conditions in Europe make negotiations and co-operation opportune and possible.

A Tariff on Imports

The platform contains the usual Republican declarations in favour of a tariff on imports for the protection of labour. It also endorses the elastic provisions of the latest tariff law. It promises to place farmers on an equality with other United States industries. It specifically renounces in favour of a Federal system the co-operative marketing of foreign products. It declares for the creation of a commission to study the subject of tax reduction with a view to intelligent reformation of systems of taxation in conformity with sound economic principles.

Regarding foreign debts to the United States, the platform holds up as a model Britain's debt settlement, and declares that the great nations cannot recognize or admit the principle of repudiation.

The document then discusses the recent congressional investigations, frankly saying: "We demand speedy, fearless and impartial prosecution of all wrong-doers without regard to political affiliations, but we declare that no greater wrong can be committed against the people than to attempt to destroy their trust in the great body of public servants, thousands of whom are earnest and conscientious men."—Reuter's American Service.

Washington, June 12.

Senator Borah has declined the invitation to stand as Republican candidate for the Vice-Presidency.—Reuter's American Service.

U. S. NAVAL BILL

Final Passage Delayed Pending Motion for Reconsideration

Washington, June 5.

The Senate to-day passed the Bill, already adopted by the House of Representatives, authorizing the construction of eight scout-cruisers and the conversion of several coalburning battleships into oil-burners.—Reuter's American Service.

Washington, June 7.

Senator King has blocked the repassage of the Naval Bill authorizing the construction of eight scout-cruisers and the conversion of several coal-burning battleships into oil-burners.

The bill had passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, but Senator King's motion to re-consider the measure was pending and, owing to the adjournment of Congress to-day, the final passage of the bill was prevented.—Reuter.

TEAPOT DOME SCANDAL

Inquiry Committee's Strong Comment: $1,000,000 State Money for Worthless Claims

Washington, June 6.

The Walsh Investigation Committee has found that the Teapot Dome leases were negotiated secretly, that the Government in effect paid $1,000,000 for worthless claims in order to clear the way for Mr. Sinclair, and that the recommendations of the Navy experts were ignored.

The Committee further states that "the corrupt character of the loan of $100,000 to Mr. A. B. Fall, ex-Secretary of the Interior, by Mr. Doheny does not require comment" and condemns the Department of Justice for "negligence in failing to prosecute claims for the recovery of the California oil reserves obtained by the Standard Oil Company."

The finding also declares that the sending of marines to clear the Teapot Dome estate for Mr. Sinclair was "an outrageous use of the armed forces of the United States."—Reuter's American Service.

AMERICAN CONGRESS ADJOURNED

Pending Legislation Blocked by Partisan Strife: A Review of Work Done

Washington, June 8.

Congress adjourned sine die yesterday evening. The House of Representatives broke up peacefully, but the Senate's last hours were marked by partisan strife. The Republican Senator Spencer filibustered and prevented the adoption of the Walsh oil scandals report. The Democrat Senator King doomed the re-passage of the Naval Bill. The Democrat Senator Pittman killed other pending legislation by continuing to talk until the adjournment.

Meanwhile President Coolidge waited in a room in the Senate and signed 105 bills and resolutions.

A review of the work done in Congress shows the passage of the Soldiers' Bonus, Immigration and Tax Revision Laws, the Teapot Dome and Daugherty Inquiries and approval of American adhesion to a world court. Congress did not enact legislation to help the farmers or ratify the Lausanne Treaty. It delayed operation of the soldiers' bonus by not providing the necessary funds.—Reuter's American Service.

AMERICAN REPLY TO JAPANESE NOTE

Model of Courtesy and Tact

London, June 10.

The Diplomatic Correspondent of the "Daily Telegraph" understands that the American reply to the Japanese Note, which, it is believed, was handed to Mr. Hanihara, the Japanese Ambassador at Washington, yesterday, is a model of courtesy and tactfulness, and intended to assuage Japanese susceptibilities.—Reuter.

ITALIAN EMIGRANTS TO AMERICA

Several Hundreds Refused Admission to Canada and United States

Halifax, N.S., June 10.

One hundred and 50 Italian immigrants on board the Dante Alighieri have been refused admission into Canada and have sadly left for home.

Seven hundred Italians arrived at New York on the Dante Algihieri, and it was announced that they would not be allowed to land under the recent Supreme Court decision. Two hundred of them originally intended to land at Halifax, but were barred owing to lack of the necessary $1,200 each.—Reuter's American Service.

BY-ELECTION AT OXFORD

A Conservative Gain

London, June 5.

The Conservatives gained a seat at the Oxford by-election, which was contested by three Old Blues. The result of the voting was as follows:—

OBITUARY

Viscount Pirrie

London, June 8.

The death is announced of Viscount Pirrie, Chairman of Messrs. Harland and Wolff, Ld., at the age of 77. He died while on a voyage from Buenos Ayres to New York.—Reuter.

* The late Viscount Pirrie was born in Quebec on May 31, 1847, and was the son of Irish parents. He entered Messrs. Harland & Wolff's shipbuilding and engineering establishment in 1862 and became a partner in 1874. He was Lord Mayor of Balfast 1896-7, and High Sheriff of Co. Antrim in 1898 and Co. Down in 1899. In 1898 he was made the first Hon. Freeman of the City of Belfast. From March, 1918, to December, 1919, he was Controller-General of merchant shipbuilding. He was created a Baron in 1906 and Viscount in 1921. —Ed.

Sir H. M. Durand

London, June 10.

The death is announced of Sir Henry Mortimer Durand, G.C.M.G., K.C.S.I., K.C.I.E., P.C., at the age of 74.

Sir Mortimer Durand was the second son of the late Sir Henry Marion Durand, who as agent in Central India rendered highly valuable services during the Mutiny. He entered the Bengal Civil Service in 1873, and was political secrtary to Earl Roberts during the Kabul Campaign in 1879. He became subsequently Foreign Secretary in India, Head of the Mission to the Ameer of Afghanistan in 1893, Minister to Teheran, and later Ambassador at Madrid and Washington.—Reuter.

The Hague, June 11.

The death is announced of Jonkheer Doctor A. F. de Savoriu Lohman, former Minister of the Interior, Judge of the Hague Permanent Arbitration Court, one of the arbitrators of the Anglo-American North American fisheries dispute and a member of the Council of the Carnegie Foundation.—Reuter.

THE CAUSE AND CURE OF CANCER

Interesting Experiments by Canadian Doctor with Remarkable Success

Philadelphia, June 9.

The "Philadelphia North American" publishes an article claiming that Dr. R. G. Glover of Toronto has discovered the cause of cancer and also the treatment of the disease, which, though still in the experimental stage, is producing remarkable results.

Dr. Glover has established that cancer is due to a micro-organism. He has isolated the germ and proved by the Koch cycle laboratory test its part as a causative factor.

It is stated that Dr. Glover has made tests in the past two years in over 2,000 confirmed cases of cancer in every stage and that in the majority of cases favourable results have been secured, some patients being discharged free of all symptoms of the disease.—Reuter's American Service.

INDIA'S STEEL INDUSTRY

Protection Bill Passed

Simla, June 5.

The Assembly to-day passed the Steel Protection Bill to provide for the fostering of development of the steel industry by increasing import duties or granting bonuses on certain articles.—Reuter.

FIGHTING IN ALBANIA

Rome, June 6.

It is reported from Bari that 100 persons were killed and many wounded on both sides in six hours of very violent fighting between the Nationalist and Government forces at Kolaedoles in Albania. The latter were routed. A large number of priests are marching through the country preaching a holy war and calling on the population to rise and fight the Beys.—Reuter.

London, June 11.

The Albanian Legation states that the National Army has captured Elbassan and occupied Tirana without fighting. The ex-Premier who was defending the capital escaped. All members of the Government and their partisans went to Italy.

ANGLO-IRAQ TREATY RATIFIED

Beirut, June 7.

It is reported from Bagdad that the Constituent Assembly of Iraq have refused to ratify the Anglo-Iraqui Treaty.—Reuter.

Baghdad, June 11.

The Iraq Constituent Assembly to-day ratified the Anglo-Iraq Treaty by 36 votes to 25.

The majority forwarded a petition to the President stating that, while many of the clauses of the Treaty were severe, they relied on the honour of the British Government not to oppress the people of Iraq. They also declare that the Treaty would be invalid if Britain fails to protect Iraq's rights to Mosul.—Reuter.

SATURDAY'S TELEGRAMS

FRENCH PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION

Left Parties' Difficulty in Securing Requisite Majority for their Nominee: Unexpected Support for M. Doumergue

M. PAINLEVE ADOPTED AS CANDIDATE FOR LEFT PARTIES

London, June 12.

President Millerand's letter of resignation to Parliament is strictly laconic, but at the same time he issued a long manifesto to the nation repeating the views, previously expressed in his earlier message to the Legislature, as to why he resisted the Left's demands for his departure, and announcing his intention of "resuming the struggle for the liberty of the Republic and France."

It is expected that M. Millerand will utilize an existing vacancy in the Chamber as a means of return to Parliament and will lead the Opposition, while M. Poincaré will occupy a similar position in the Senate.

There are indications that there will be a keen contest between M. Doumergue, the President of the Senate, and M. Painlevé, the President of the Chamber, for the Presidency of the Republic.—Reuter.

Paris, June 12.

The meeting of the Left parties of both Chambers for the purpose of selecting their candidate for election as President of the Republic to-morrow has resulted in the ex-Premier, M. Painlevé, obtaining 306 votes against 149 in favour of the ex-Premier, M. Doumergue.

The successful candidate to-morrow must secure an absolute majority of the votes of the 872 Deputies and Senators who are expected to be present.

The fact that so many voted in favour of M. Doumergue is additionally significant because they did so in spite of M. Doumergue's request that his candidature should not be submitted to the meeting on the ground that it was not calculated in the present circumstances to promote Republican union.

M. Painlevé's supporters had reckoned to obtain practically unanimous endorsement and the voting means a severe blow to his hopes, as M. Doumergue can count on the support of the moderate elements in both Chambers which were not represented at the meeting.

M. Doumergue, therefore, is at present the favourite in the race for the Presidency.

Later.

Disliking the prospect of a President elected with a Right vote, the Left deputies requested MM. Doumergue and Painlevé to withdraw in favour of a third candidate. The former refused, whereupon the Left bloc decided solidly to support M. Painlevé.—Reuter.

STATE CAPITALISM IN RUSSIA

Private Capital and State Planned Economy: New Economic Policy

Moscow, May 18.

The following are the replies to a questionaire submitted to M. Krassin, the Soviet Commissar for Foreign Trade, by Reuter's correspondent.

(1). To what extent does the Soviet Government welcome the foreign and particularly the British capitalist?

(Reply). The attracting of purely financial capital is desirable on conditions of common bank credit as well as on the credit of goods stocked in the interior of the country or in harbours.

The partaking of foreign capital is admissible only in the form of mixed companies or the furnishing of Soviet trade organizations with foreign goods on more or less long credit terms. The attracting of British capital is of particular interest for the Soviet Government in view of the financial power of Great Britain and the importance of London as a money market, as well as of the high standard of British machinery productions and other branches of industry.

(2). Has there not been a reaction in Soviet Russia against private capital in general; as witness the frequent attacks in the press against the private capitalist, and those doing business under the N.E.P. (New Economic Policy), and the recent very severe sentence in the textile trust case; and is there any guarantee that the prejudice existing against the native private trader would not extend to the foreign capitalist?

(Reply). The difficulty which foreigners have in understanding the actual internal situation in Russia depends on their inclination to consider the N.E.P. as a restoration of capitalism. In reality it is not so. The existing order in Soviet Russia is State capitalism, i.e. a transient form from private capitalistic economy to socialism. The activity of private capital is admitted in so far as it does not contradict State planned economy. As soon as a given branch of economy can be served successfully by the State or by co-operative apparatus, the Government curtails the admission of private capital and sometimes cuts it out completely. Of course, if the foreign capitalist has obtained by special agreement a certain privilege from the Soviet Government, the latter either grants a continuance of the right, or enters into a free agreement with such capitalist in order that the necessary change in his agreement may be made.

(3). Is it a fact that Soviet Russia looks on the foreign capitalist only as a necessary evil, to be got rid of as soon as the immediate need of him has ceased?

(Reply). We Communists and Bolshevists do consider the capitalist order as the principal evil in contemporary human society, and as the reason for the poverty, ignorance and oppression of the masses of the people and for periodical wars; but until the Western working masses change the capitalist system for the Soviet one, we do consider it necessary, in the interests of Russia's economical development, as well as of the reconstruction of the world's economy and trade, to establish economic relations between Russia and the rest of the world.

(4). Is it a fact that certain firms which had started or re-started business in Soviet Russia have had to close down owing to undue taxation or to being faced, as with an ultimatum, with the signing of contracts which no business firm could sign?

(Reply). It is true that many firms willing to conclude agreements with the Soviet Government could not do so because they could not find a means of agreement. Such cases are easy to find in every considerable and difficult commercial deal. But as regards the extent of taxation, every foreign firm is fully able to fix the extent of its taxation before signing an agreement. I know of no considerable refusal to work in Russia on account of the disadvantage of an agreement.—Reuter.

GERMANY AND THE ALLIES

Paris, June 12.

The Berlin correspondent to-day (of what paper or agency?—Ed.) interviewed the ex-German Chancellor, Dr. Wirth. Dr. Wirth expressed conviction that the experts' report would bring about pacification of Europe and contribute to the economic restoration of Germany. He deplored the progress of Nationalism in Germany in opposition to the progress of democracy in France and England and when only a pacific and democratic Germany could inspire the Allies with confidence.—Reuter.

AMERICAN REPUBLICAN CONVENTION

President Coolidge Nominated: General Dawes for Vice-President

Cleveland, June 12.

A prolonged pro-Coolidge demonstration marked the brief session of the Republican Convention last night, at which the platform was adopted and the planks proposed by Senator La Follette and the insurgents rejected.

Wisconsin insurgents refused to take part in the voting on the platform or in the pro-Coolidge demonstration. They remained silently in their seats, ignoring the jeers, catcalls and hisses levelled at them as the other delegates formed in a long queue and marched round the hall for a quarter of an hour. They only rose when the crowd sang the Star-Spangled Banner.

During the debate of the committee on the platform there was bitter dissension over some of the planks. The World Court plank was only approved after the members of the committee had been informed that President Coolidge had personally written it.

Later.

The Convention has practically unanimously nominated President Coolidge its Presidential candidate.

Later.

President Coolidge secured 1,065 votes, Senator La Follette 34 and Senator Johnson 10.

The Convention went into recess until this afternoon, when it will nominate a Vice-President. Judge William S. Kenyon is a strong favourite for the post.

Later.

After Mr. Frank C. Lowden, ex-Governor of Illinois, was nominated but declined the Vice-Presidency, the Convention nominated General Dawes.—Reuter's American Service.

AMERICAN AVIATORS LEAVE HAIPHONG

Lieut. Smith's Second Mishap: Forced to Land Between Hue and Tourane

New York, June 12.

Wireless stations throughout the Far East have been instructed to keep on the qui-vive for news of the American fliers. Reports are current in San Francisco that the fliers have reached Haiphong and that Lieut. Lowell Smith wrecked his motor in a forced landing at Hue, but both wireless companies at San Francisco are inclined to discredit the report. They declare that no news of the fliers has been picked up there for some days.—Reuter's American Service.

Hongkong, June 13.

Mr. J. A. Shaw, the representative of the Standard Oil Company, received a cable from Haiphong at 6.20 yesterday evening, stating that the three American aeroplanes left Haiphong at ten of the morning of June 11. Two only arrived in the afternoon at Tourane. Lieut. Smith was forced to land between Hue and Tourane. Communications have been opened with Tourane by automobile. Lieut. Smith has requested a new engine to be sent at once from Saigon.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

OBITUARY

M. Deperdussin

EXPLOSION ON AMERICAN BATTLESHIP

San Pedro, Cal., June 12.

Forty sailors were killed and 20 injured by an explosion on the turret of the battleship Mississippi, off San Clements Islands, during target practice to-day. The Mississippi was rushed into San Pedro and dropped anchor. Shortly afterwards there was another explosion caused by a 14-inch shell, which nearly hit the steamer Yale and rocked the harbour district.—Reuter's American Service.

OUR AUSTRALIAN LETTER

Anzac Day Observed with Great Solemnity: British Government's Rejection of Imperial Preference Schemes a Serious Blow: Advent of the Boll Worm

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT

Melbourne, May 5.

April 25 is now a recognized and statutory holiday throughout Australia, and it is every year treated more and more as a holy day in commemoration of the 60,000 Australians who lost their lives during the great war. In its narrowest sense it marks that Sunday in April, 1915, when some twenty thousand raw Australian troops, who had practically never heard a shot fired in anger, surprised the world by their landing on the Gallipoli coast under heavy fire, and stormed the near heights with an élan which has since earned for them the reputation of being the best shock troops in the world. But as Senator General Elliott remarked at one of the great gatherings the other day, that was the exploit for which the Australians were best known, but the day was celebrated as marking all their operation including those in France where they actually turned the tide in the fateful August of 1918. All the churches and both the cathedrals were filled by large congregations, and the Melbourne Exhibition grounds were thronged by thousands who paid the tribute of silence while the bungles blew the unforgettable "Last Post." In all the cities and towns of Australia similar services were held, and generally the day was devoted more to the dead than the living. While many speakers urged that the sacrifices of our youth should not be in vain, by lack of proper defence in the future, the Prime Minister claimed that the Anzacs had lighted a torch of patriotism which it was our duty to keep burning. The question was asked by more than one preacher,—"Are we forgetting Anzac Day?" I think the answer is to be found in the foregoing.

British Budget

The Snowden Budget just issued is one of the most serious blows yet dealt to the Empire sentiment, and to the reputation of Mr. Bruce, the Australian Prime Minister, as a prophet. He felt perfectly certain that some good would come out of the Economic Conference, expecially out of so much of it as proposed to reduce the duties to the British consumer by substantially increasing the preferences to the Empire. Thus for instance with a duty of 10.6 on dried fruit there is a preference of one-sixth. The British consumer would not suffer, and might gain, if that preference were increased to the full 10/6. Similarly the late British Government had promised that if the sugar duties were lowered, the amount of preference, calculated at one-sixth the then duties, would be maintained, thus giving Empire production the existing rate of protection against such countries as Cuba and Java. However, in both these cases the duties have been reduced and the preference kept at one-sixth which means that the preference has been reduced also, and the margin of protection against foreign countries, to the extent of the preference, also reduced. But worse was to follow. At the conference it was urged that the duties on wines should be readjusted so as to enable Australia, which has to fortify her wines heavily in order that they may carry the distance, to compete with Spain and Portugal, and the only answer to this is for the present Government to make new treaties which place consideration of the Australian position on the shelf. There would seem to be something in the contention that the British Government is over anxious to trade with foreigners, including the Russians whose countries are giving us so much trouble, that it does not care what the Dominions want. Apart from the disappointment caused by the Budget there is a feeling that the natural bonds uniting Australia to the mother country have been rudely treated.

The Prime Minister's disgust with the Budget may well be measured by the statements he has made. Before he went to England he declared that if Australia could not get markets for her products in Britain she would have to seek them elsewhere, and in some quarters it was felt that this sounded unfortunately like a threat. However, Mr. Bruce is now being looked to to find those markets [illegible] without hope. Canada is a good market for dried fruit, and Canada wants to sell motor cars and machinery to Australia. Mr. Bruce has made this striking observation, namely, that it may be found desirable to place Britain on the general list of duties and give her preferences to Canada. In South Africa it has been suggested that the day of the preference farce is over, and elsewhere the proposal has been advanced that the Dominions should from a Zollverein for trade purposes, obviously leaving Britain outside the charmed circle. All this is very disquieting and should convince Mr. Snowden that he has started the Empire mountain rumbling, with the prospect that it will produce something more than a mouse.

But Mr. Bruce has gone further. He realizes that under the migration schemes with the Imperial Government we are bringing many ex-soldiers to this country and putting them on the land at considerable expense to ourselves. They are mostly being placed in the irrigation distri ts, and are producers of fruits. If Britain declines to find markets for their products then their introduction into Australia must cease, and the efforts to relieve Britain of some of her unemployed will have to be seriously curtailed. It was calculated in 1921 that the actual value of the preferences given by Australia to British goods was worth something like £5,500,000 to the manufacturers, and that since it has increased to as high as £8,000,000 during the past year. If British trade is made to pay that amount in taxation at Australian ports, and the relieving of the unemployed problem by even the relatively few persons now being brought to Australia ceases the British Government may have to recast its ideas of the advantages of trading with Moscow, Portugal and Spain.

A Defence Policy

Mr. Bruce the other day made the announcement that a defence policy would be laid before parliament soon after it resumed (which it does the day after to-morrow), and he made the curious statement that when it was known it would divide the country from end to end. As it was already known that the Government would procure two 10,000 ton cruisers, carrying 8" guns, and the country had not quivered at the announcement, there was some curiosity as to what the Prime Minister meant to infer. Application to the Minister for Defence has elicited the further information that four cruiser submarines are to be procured from overseas for scouting purposes, that the air forces are to be greatly strengthened, a seaplane base established, probably near Sydney, and oil fuel depots to be placed at strategical points along the coast, and particularly at Darwin in the extreme North. To those who carefully read Admiral Sir Frederick Field's speech at the Commonwealth dinner to the visiting squadron, it will be recognized that this whole programme almost exactly follows the lines of his remarks. But there is a further point, and this may be what Mr. Bruce had in his mind when he spoke of dividing the country from end to end. Sir Frederick referred to the Singapore base and oil fuel depot, adding that we could not have an oil fuel depot at Singapore unless we were prepared to defend it against all comers. It would seem that the country may be said of oil fuel bases in Australia, especially of one at so remote a port as Darwin. Defence means something in the nature of protective works and a permanent force to look after and garrison those works. This will involve an enormous expenditure, and probably Mr. Bruce has doubts about carrying the country with him. It seems highly improbable that he will receive the whole-hearted support of Labour, which in theory at least is against defence lest thereby we might provoke foreign aggression. Mr. Charlton, leader of the Federal Labour Opposition, recently said that in its own defence the Empire must stand shoulder to shoulder, but a vague generality of that sort does not carry us very far. The building of cruisers in Australia naturally appeals to Labour for it will find employment for the most militant of the unionists. Labour has also declared for submarines and air forces, but whether this approval will extend to cruiser-submarines, built abroad, and the creation of a permanent force to guard the oil-fuel bases, is a matter of some doubt.

Revanche

A curious illustration of parochial politics has just been given in Victoria. Its Assembly comprises three parties, Nationalist, Country and Labour, the last-named being in Opposition. The Country party just barely holds the balance of power, and it combined with the Nationalists in forming the Government under Mr. Lawson, who has been Premier for six years until the other day. An annual meeting of the Farmers' Union—the official organization of the Country party—held recently decided that this government would only be tolerated until the end of the present parliament and that when the elections took place the Country party would fight Nationalists and Labour impartially. Mr. Lawson promptly resigned and formed a new government excluding all Country ministers. Just then the Speaker died, and his place had to be filled. At once it was suggested that Mr. Lawson had made his relations with the Country party impossible and that he would make an excellent Speaker, while a more genial Premier, in Sir Alexander Peacock, an experienced expremier, would be able to lead the Nationalists and patch up the differences with the Country party. Mr. Lawson resigned with the assurances of leading Country members that his successor would make things very much smoother. At the last moment the Country party met and decided to nominate an old but not very brilliant member of their own party for the Speakership in Opposition to Lawson. They knew that if the Labour members supported them their man would dish Lawson out of the Speakership, and doubtless they felt that this would serve as he deserved the man who had so unceremoniously bundled the Country ministers off the Treasury benches. And Labour, knowing every move in the game, supported Mr. Bowser, who won the coveted seat by six votes, and left Mr. Lawson high and dry with no more standing than that of an ordinary private member. Labour is naturally delighted. It has succeeded in driving a wedge between the two parties opposed to it, and it will not be long before the Peacock government is defeated and a general election takes place, with results probably similar to those in Western and South Australia.

B. A. W. R. A.

The last bale of wool has been sold, and the tremendous work which the British Australasian Wool Realization Association was formed to carry out has been completed. The story is something similar to that of Cuba in relation to sugar. The end of the war saw immense accumulations of wool, amounting in Australia alone to 1,831,000 bales, which added to New Zealand, Falkland Islands and South African stocks totalled 2,691,827 bales. With a new clip coming in the position seemed desperate, and the Association was formed for the purpose of unloading what was aptly described as a mountain of wool which threatened to topple over and bury us. The two men appointed managers at this end and the London end were Sir John Higgins, and Sir John Goldfinch, and there were many who gasped when they found their salaries were fixed at £10,000 a year each. The assets of the Association, chiefly wool, were appraised at £22,000,000, and negotiable documents were issued to the owners of wool to the value of their holdings. Then commenced the struggle against the Yorkshire manufacturers, who demanded that the wool should be sold en masse. The Association held out for its policy and proceeded to sell on the basis of two bales of new clip to one of Bawra wool. Prices remained firm, and indeed rose, with the result that more than the appraisement was realized. Within 3½ years the whole of the mountain of wool had been disposed of, and the pastoralists at the same time have been able to sell their new clips as they came in. It was a splendid example of what can be done by organization, and the adoption of the best business methods. It is hardly necessary to say that disaster of the worst kind would have followed the granting of Yorkshire's demand that the huge stocks be thrown upon the market and sacrificed. The current clips would have gone into a gorged market, and ruination would have descended upon the Australian wool industry which is calculated to be worth about £35,000,000 a year.

Warship Murder.

An extraordinary crime has taken place aboard H. M. A. S. Brisbane, one of the cruisers belonging to the Australian navy. A seaman named George Ritchie was found lying dead in his hammock with his head battered in and his throat cut. Members of the crew at once thought of another seamen named Brown, who was reported to have a habit of wandering about the ship at night, was believed not to be altogether sane, and was suspected of making attacks on sleeping men. Search was made and Brown's body was found hanging from a rope in the ship's refrigerator. The inquest which has been adjourned brings out the above facts, but curiously it seems to show that the suspicions about Brown's sanity and previous attacks were never reported to anybody in authority. Members of the crew swore that they were waiting for proof, because it would have been serious to report a man on suspicion. One witness stated that the ship's police knew of the attacks at night. The captain is to be called to see whether the matter had ever been brought under his notice. Before the actual murder there had been five night attacks, two at the Royal Naval House and three aboard the ship.

Ghastly Fire Holocaust.

Lying alongside an Adelaide wharf the steamer City of Singapore (6567 tons) having aboard immense quantities of motor spirit and kerosene, caught fire and was soon a mass of flames. Practically every fire-fighting appliance was brought into use, and the fire stations around had to call up reserves to man them, while the permanent forces fought the flames. Immense volumes of water were poured into the holds, and at last it seemed that the fire was well under control. Suddenly there was a terrific explosion, and the ship seemed to burst asunder. Three firemen were killed outright, and nine were seriously injured, some being terribly burnt. Men were blown off the ship on to the wharf, and one charred body was brought out from below deck by the hazardous efforts of his comrades. The crew which consisted of 17 Europeans, 13 Malays and 37 Lascars had all been ordered ashore, and it is considered improbable that any of them were hurt. The body of at least one fireman has not yet been recovered and it is assumed that it was blown over the side. Other explosions of a minor sort followed, but the firemen bravely stuck to their job and eventually brought the conflagration under. The ship's side was blown out and her back was broken, while considerable damage was done to the wharf sheds by the flying debris.

A Cotton Worm.

Quite a sensation was caused when it was announced that the pink boll worm had attacked the cotton crops, chiefly in the coastal areas between Maryborough and Mackay, showing that it is widely distributed. Drastic steps are being taken to eradicate it, and stand-over cotton is being burnt. With all the care which has been taken, how the pest got into the country is not known, though it may yet be found that it is indigenous and that the cotton boll afford it a habitat where it is safe from its natural enemies. Those who deal in sensations naturally concluded that we had the cotton boll weevil in our midst, but the pink worm happily ranks below the weevil in its depredations upon cotton. To what extent the pest will affect the current crop, which is just been picked, has not been estimated yet, but I notice that the latest estimates are an output worth £500,000 and not a million as previously mentioned by the more optimistic. The [illegible] of the pink worm [illegible] sound the death knell of the agitation amongst some growers to be allowed to grow cotton. They claim that this is the more profitable crop, while the experts declare that it serves as harbour pests. Whether the pink worm is the result of rat [illegible] not has not yet been [illegible] but it has turned up in [illegible] make the supporters of [illegible] hopeful of success.

Echo of Police Mutiny.

Melbourne is in the throes of a tramway strike—3,000 men from the cable service and 300 from the electric having ceased work. The tram services are [illegible] ones, and it is hardly necessary to say that those who believe in private enterprise point out that during the thirty or so years a private company was running the cable services there had never been a single industrial dispute. The cause of the strike is rather interesting, and smacks largely of a revolt against law and order. It seems that a man applied for a job as a gripman, and was taken on and put under an experienced man for training. The latter trained the student for seven days and then somehow discovered that he had at the time of the police mutiny applied to be enrolled as a special constable, and was rejected on account of his [illegible] physique. The man who was giving the training at once refused to go on with the lessons, and was dismissed in consequence. This was considered harsh and therefore the whole of the men went on strike. Now of the police mutineers there are at least 70 who were taken on by the Tramway Board, so that the suggestion of bias does not hold. The fact seems to be that the anarchist element in the [illegible] service have once again misled the men into supporting [illegible] of orders. It backed the police in their mutiny, and was largely responsible for the rioting and looting which followed their refusal of duty. Now the purpose to carry their attack further, and doom to idleness and, if necessary, starvation any person who in that moment of anarchy offered to help in restoring order. And 3,000 men are fools enough to throw themselves idle in order to help the anarchists!

WHO WAS MARIE CORELLI?

Niece Clears Up the "Mystery."

Who was Miss Marie Corelli?

Stories are being circulated that the novelist's parentage is "surrounded with mystery." The "Daily News" is able to state, on the authority of one of her nieces, that there is no "mystery."

"Miss Marie Corelli was born in London over 70 years ago," the niece recently told the "Daily News," "and was the eldest girl of a family of nine. Her real name was Caroline Cody.

"Probably from a desire to surround herself with a halo of romance in keeping with the atmosphere of her early novels, she gave out a story of 'Italian and Scotch parentage,' which none of her brothers or her sisters troubled to deny.

"The second wife of the late Dr. Charles Mackay, the famous songwriter, was a personal friend of Marie Corelli's mother, and begged to adopt the child. The mother agreed, and Caroline went to live with the song writer and his wife when she was five years old, and until she became famous with the publication of her first novel, used frequently to visit her parents.

SIR J. JAMIESON AND MR. CHU CHAO-HSIN

Chinese Charge Taxed with Talking Nonsense: Awkward Affair at a Banquet

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

London, May 6.

There has been a very unpleasant incident recently in diplomatic circles in this country, and I take the following from the "People" of May 4:—

"An astonishing incident at the dinner given by the Chinese-British Corporation at Claridge's Hotel last week in honour of His Excellency Liang Shih-yi, ex-Premier of the Republic of China, and formerly Director-General of Chinese Railways, has caused a considerable sensation and much talk in diplomatic circles.

There were 60 guests, with Mr. David Landale, Chairman of the Corporation, presiding, while the gathering included representatives of the Foreign Office and the highest City business interests.

The Chinese Chargé d'Affaires, Mr. Chu Chao-hsin, was present as a specially invited guest, and in his speech he laid stress on the advantages of railway construction in China.

When he had finished Sir James Jamieson, the British Consul-General at Canton, now on leave, laid stress on the fact that he had not been called to speak either at the recent dinner of the Chinese students or at the Legation dinner in honour of his Excellency, and proceeded to attack the Chinese Chargé d'Affaires directly. He intimated he was misleading the audience, knew little about his country's affairs and was talking nonsense, this being the actual expression used. The audience began to show signs of great uneasiness at the personalities used, and Sir James was induced to stop abruptly.

The Chinese Chargé d'Affaires showed great composure and after the dinner many came, it would seem, to him and shaking hands, asked him not to mind what Sir James had said. They expressed the view that it was at least imprudent and improper for an acting British official thus to attack the representative of the country to which he was accredited, and they expressed a hope that the incident would not interfere with the friendly relations between the two countries."

The facts, as I understand them, are as follows:

The Chinese-British Corporation on April 30 gave a dinner at Claridge's Hotel in honour of Mr. Liang Shih-yi, the ex-Premier of the Republic of China. There was a very brilliant attendance, perhaps about 60 people being present, and absolutely those most representative of every branch of our national life, including the Foreign Office. Mr. David Landale, Chairman of the Corporation, presided.

Mr. Landale, expressed a warm welcome to the guest of honour, and called to mind the relations between the representatives of the Chinese-British Corporation and Mr. Liang Shih-yi, who was Director-General of Chinese Railways under the old régime and Minister of Communications under the Republic; through such close connexions the financing of several railways in China was carried out.

His Excellency Liang Shih-yi thanked the Corporation for its hospitality and recalled his pleasure in dealing with the Corporation for a number of years. He was very pleased to meet old acquaintances again while travelling in England. He was much impressed by his first visit. He hoped the Corporation would further do more for China in railway investments.

Mr. Chu on Railways in China.

Mr. Chu Chao-hsin, Chinese Chargé d'Affaires in London, was called upon to speak on behalf of his Government. He first of all thanked them for the courtesies extended by the Corporation to his distinguished fellow-countryman, and secondly expressed his appreciation on behalf of his Government for the enterprise the Corporation had undertaken in developing the means of transportation in his country. He admitted that he had been a great advocate of foreign capital for Chinese railways; he pointed out that investment in Chinese railways was safe and profitable, and when the country was opened up by improvement in traffic and transporation, foreign trade would eventually be increased; he denied that political troubles in China were serious. The internal fighting was only of a temporary nature; and the militarists usually fought each other by means of telegrams. He urged financiers to waste no time in the matter of further railway investments in China. England had money to invest and China had opportunities worthy of investments, the benefit therefore being mutual. By lending money to China for railway construction, the security was at least in the line itself, and in addition the Chinese Government would be quite willing to be held responsible for the loan, and the Chinese people would not object to any foreign loan for productive purposes.

Facts Are Embarrassing.

Sir James Jamieson, British Consul-General in Canton, was then called on to speak and he started by complaining that he had not had an opportunity of doing so either at the recent Students' Dinner or at the Legation Dinner which was given in honour of Mr. Liang-Shih-yi. Now, however, he wished to speak of Chinese politics. He said the situation was getting worse and worse. The Chinese Acting Minister was misleading the audience by saying nice things about his country. Mr. Chu Chao-hsin went to America when he was very young and he had only served the late President as English secretary for a short time, and then went abroad again, so he did not know much of his home affairs. He simply talked nonsense.

At that stage, the audience was getting very embarrassed by the direct personal attack and Sir Charles Addis, who sat next to Sir James Jamieson, was seen to pull him by the coat-tails, whereupon he sat down abruptly without apparently finishing his speech. For the rest of the dinner there was a good deal of suppressed feeling, since clearly those present felt very uneasy at hearing the attack on the diplomatic representative of China at such a public function. After the dinner many came to shake hands with the Chinese Acting Minister, and asked him not to mind what Sir James Jamieson had said. Those present said that it was rather improper and impolite for a British official, who filled a position in China, openly to attack a Chinese representative in his country in such language by saying that the "Chinese Acting Minister talked nonsense." They said they were afraid such an awkward attitude would never help to improve friendly relations between the two countries.

Questions in the House.

London, May 14.

With reference to the attack by Sir James Jamieson on Mr. Chu Chao-hsin, the Chinese Chargé d'Affaires, at the dinner of the Chinese British Corporation, Mr. Maclean in the House has asked the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether it was intended to take any disciplinary action with regard to the speech made his Majesty's Consul-General at Canton, in which he made a personal attack on the Chinese Chargé d'Affaires.

Mr. Ponsonby replied that the occasion in question was, he was informed, a private one. He had been assured by Sir James Jamieson that it was far from his intention to make a personal attack, and that if he did unwittingly cause offence he could only express his regret. No complaint had been received.

"THE MODERN GIRL"

Spinster Born in 1821 on 1924 Frocks

Miss Elizabeth Underwood Lisle, who lives in George Street, Portman-square, London, W. was 103 a few weeks ago. The last survivor of an old county family, she was presented at Court 80 years ago.

Miss Lisle knew intimately many of the famous Victorians, among them Dickens, Disraeli, Tennyson, Browning, Beerbohm Tree and Florence Nightingale. She tells a good story of Queen (then Princess) Victoria sliding down the staircase on a tea-tray just before her coronation.

She has no sympathy for the modern girl. "I don't believe in paint, or powder, or smoking," she says, "I wish, too, that the girls would wear more clothes. Modern dress has neither beauty nor utility, but serves merely for display."

She has little to say about modern men, but thinks, rather ominously, that "a woman makes a man what he is in a good many cases."

Miss Lisle is wonderfully well-preserved, and certainly looks not more than 80. She is now getting deaf and her eyesight is failing, but she still pays great attention to current events and the newspapers.

OUR [illegible] LETTER

This Year's Salon: Preponderance of Hashy Modernism: Gertie Millar Married to Earl of Dudley

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Paris, May 1.

The Paris Salon, which opened today, is characterized by a rather cruel contrast. It contains retrospective exhibitions of works by Puvis de Chavannes, Bonnat, Raffaelli and Lhermitte, departed painters who had varying degrees of genius. The rest of the Grand Palais is filled with the achievements of the living.

If one goes to the Salon for pure enjoyment of art, there is no need to stray beyond the three or four rooms devoted to the retrospective exhibitions. The other 7,000 paintings and groups of statuary are a wilderness with oases. Noticeable among the sculptures are a very beautiful female figure from a monument to Puvis de Chavannes by Desbois, a bas-relief by Bouchard commemorating, with excellent decorative effect, the first crossing of the Sahara by motor-cars, and a girl beautifully modelled by the blind sculptor Bernard Faudot.

As for the paintings, two tendencies are very evident. The rising generation wants to sell its pictures and has been persuaded that novelty in style is the essential. It therefore draws eccentrically, to put it mildly, and paints with ferocity. Van Dongen has hundreds of imitators with as much perversity but not as much wit. The other tendency is to paint portraits according to what is supposed to be the prevailing demand. The walls of the Salon are dotted all over with women in Venetian three-cornered hats, women with black mantillas, women endeavouring with the assistance of small monkeys to look like 18th Century persons of quality, and other women with jade-green snakes. This is portrait painting brought down to the level of a department store's illustrated catalogue.

As a compensation, Forain, Jean Paul Laurens, Devambez, Sabatte and a few others are as good as ever.

Gertie Millar for the Peerage

Mrs. Lionel Monckton, better known as Gertie Millar of the Gaiety, has just been married in Paris to the Earl of Dudley, once Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. To the Consulate for the civil marriage, the bride drove with M. Andre Messager, the composer of "Véronique," and Lady Honor Bridgeman, Lord Dudley's eldest daughter.

The formalities at the Consulate were timed for only half-an-hour before the service at St. George's Church, and therefore the bride wore the same dress at both places. She was in pale grey crêpe de Chine richly embroidered in the same tint and covered by a three-quarter coat trimmed with fine chinchilla fur. A very smart little hat of felt to match the dress fitted close to the hair, and the toilette was completed by grey satin shoes. She wore four strings of pearls and a spray of large mauve orchids.

After the brief ceremony at the Consulate, Lord Dudley drove off to the church with his daughter and best man. The bride came out of the Consulate a few minutes later with M. Messager, and was much amused by a small black velvet kitten mascot which some British and American women admirers had set down on the pavement just outside the door, so that it should be the first object she would set eyes on. She laughed as she picked up the kitten, and waved her thanks to the crowd, while at least 20 press photographers clicked their shutters at her and begged for "just another picture."

Lord and Lady Dudley are spending a few days on the Riviera, and will then go to Le Touquet, of which they are both very fond and where they have both lived for years.

"Doug." and "Mary" Shopping

Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford, who have just come to Paris for a shopping holiday—if such a contradiction in terms may be permitted—have evidently not lost their hold on the French public. They arrived from England on a rainy afternoon, but this did not discourage a large crowd of admirers from assembling at the railway station, and a whole battery of cameras was in action.

There was even cheering when the "world's sweetheart" and her husband drove off to their hotel. They were up early next morning. Douglas was breathing the air of the Place de la Concorde at 7 o'clock, and before nine they were looking at shop-windows, attracting plenty of attention from moving-picture fiends who recognized them. At 10.30 Mary and Douglas, like heads of governments, held a reception of journalists, and in the afternoon they went for another stroll. Mary seemed to be much impressed by the mounted policemen on duty in the Place de l'Opera and other important centres of traffic.

Some of the papers publish a very unbecoming photograph of her, standing with her mouth open and an expression of blank astonishment on her face. The distinguished couple have now gone on to Spain. They say that when they come back to France they will see about "making a picture" in which they will both appear—a novelty, it seems, in the "movie" world.

Englishmen Now the Best Dressed

It is refreshing to find a French writer taking his own countrymen to task for their neglect of personal appearances. M. Pierre Plessis, in the "Gaulois," deplores the undistinguished look of audiences at Paris theatres, including even those on the boulevards, which are supposed to be smart.

He leaves the women out of the question, for, as he very rightly says, a Parisienne can make herself look nice in anything, but he is quite cross with the men. They think nothing of going to the theatre, he says, in short coats and soft collars. Some of them do not even take the trouble to see that the mud is removed from their shoes.

This is the kind of reproach that used to be levelled at the British tourist. Now, it seems, the contagion has spread to the real Parisian. Our British residents set a much better example. M. Plessis mentions that the other evening there was a belle salle—by which he means a well-dressed audience—in a Paris theatre. Every man was in evening dress and there were heaps of chic women. The play was English, and so were the spectators.

M. Plessis refers with admiration to an elderly Englishman of his acquaintance who, though living alone in a remote Indian station, always dresses for dinner, whether he has any company or not. This would strike most Frenchmen as eccentric, not to say absurd, but that is simply because they have not been brought up with the same traditions. The remedy is in the hands of French women. If they insisted on greater attention to dress on the part of their men, we should soon see a change in theatre audiences.

LONDON'S NEW TUBES

Contracts Placed for the Morden Extension

The Underground Company placed two contracts recently with Messrs. Chas. Brand & Son, and the Foundation Co., Ld., for the driving of tunnels on the extension of the City & South London Railway from Clapham Common to Morden. Work is to commence forthwith, and the new line will be completed about August, 1925.

Messrs. Chas. Brand will undertake the section between Clapham Common and the north end of Tooting Broadway Station, whilst the Foundation Company will be responsible for the section of the line to Dorset-road, Morden. These contracts amount together to about £600,000; but even to this huge figure must be added the cost of the stations—both above and below ground—rolling stock, escalators, passimeters, and the like, which will probably bring the total cost of constructing and equipping the Morden Extension to £3,500,000.

The completion of these contracts will add another five miles of railway to the Underground system, of which 4½ miles will be tunnel work. Already for some weeks past the task of sinking working shafts has been proceeding, and if the contractors now appointed for constructing the running tunnels complete their work in the allotted 15 months, it will be the quickest piece of tube tunnel driving yet accomplished. To secure that the work is performed to schedule, 10 rotary excavators will be employed, each one having a forward drive of 15-20 feet per day. Sixty thousand tons of cast-iron segments will be used in the construction of these tunnels.

There will be seven stations on the Morden extension, at the following points:—

Nightingale-Lane. Collier's Wood.
Balham. South Wimbledon.
Trinity-Road. North Morden.
Tooting Broadway.

All these stations will be equipped with escalators of the latest pattern, giving direct access to the platform levels. The Morden extension will serve a population of 300,000, and it is estimated that 50,000,000 passengers will be carried annually.

ROCKET TO HIT THE MOON!

In 36 Hours' Flight

Some time in the next few weeks, if Professor R. H. Goddard, a well-known American man of science, has made no mistake in his preliminary calculations, the man in the moon will receive the first message our satellite has received from the earth since it broke away from our planet a few million years ago.

The professor has constructed a gigantic rocket of a unique kind.

It will be fired from a specially designed apparatus, which, it is claimed, will give it the necessary initial velocity to overcome the backward pull of the earth's gravitation a speed of about seven miles a second.

When it has attained the region of inter-planetary space it is expected to continue its flight to the moon, the propelling power being supplied by continuous explosions of gas, automatically produced by means of an ingeniously designed internal mechanism.

Approximately 36 hours after the rocket leaves the earth, if all goes well, it is expected to reach its lunar target.

When it falls on the surface of the moon there will be an explosion of a charge of "Victor" flash powder which will produce a brilliant flash of light that ought to be visible from the earth in a moderately sized telescope, and thus signal back its safe arrival.

For some years Professor Goddard has been carrying out experiments with rockets designed to attain very great altitudes, and with these he has had no difficulty in reaching heights far in excess of those possible by means of meteorological balloons.

The results of these experiments suggested that it would be possible to fire a rocket propelled by successive discharges governed by reloading mechanism, free of terrestrial gravitation, and even to reach the moon, provided it were accurately aimed at the section of the moon's orbit which the moon would be passing through at any definite time, calculated beforehand, after the rocket was fired.

May Try Mars Next.

He has satisfied American scientists that the thing is possible, and the Smithsonian Institution has agreed to provide at least G.$5,000 (over £1,100) towards the expenses of the experiment.

Professor Goddard is confident that he will be able to hit the moon and see the impact.

If he succeeds he may try Mars when that planet is nearest the earth next August. But it is to be hoped that, should the Martians send a reply back by the same method, they will arrange to use the Sahara as their target.

Fortunately the moon is dead and uninhabited, and a return rocket from the moon to the earth is a danger we need not worry about.

IN A DEVON GARDEN

The spring was late in coming,
The flowers were very shy,
When in my Devon garden fair
The sweet West Wiind swept by.

She dropped some tears in passing.
What magic in them lay
That on the wall japonica
Leapt forth in crimson spray?

The violets just unfolding
Were startled into bloom;
The witch in the genista-bush
Waved high her golden broom;

The pixies through the soft red earth
Thrust up their small green spears.
Ah! would I had the magic touch
Of West Wind and her tears!

AN OLD EVIL

Sermon Preached by the Rev. A. N. Rowland in Union Church on June 1, 1924

"Say unto Wisdom, Thou art my sister, and call Understanding thy Kinswoman, that they may keep thee from the ... strange woman." Prov. 7.4.

These words are urgent enough when you see what follows. They are part of the prologue to a dramatic chapter in which we are shown, step by step, the [illegible] moral downfall. The writer pictures a young man who has got mixed up with the wrong set. He has turned his back on the influences that would have braced him; he has neglected his higher nature and then wondered at the strength of his lower nature; he has refused a spiritual master and then complained that God has made him a physical slave. Such is a typical young man and the writer sketches the course of his inevitable tragedy, how he "goeth on, as a bird hasteth to the snare, as an ox goeth to the slaughter, and knoweth not that it is for his life."

We all know there is a side of civilization that will not bear much speaking about, and does not get closely looked into. It is a cause of discomfort and shame and we are inclined to leave it alone. But there it is, and it is not leaving us alone. It is undermining the strength of our civilization not the less surely because it is half hidden. It cuts at the roots of home, it cancels out the work of education, it nullifies man's highest privileges and steals away his soul. This vice is the child of sin and the parent of sickness, and we could trace the mischief along both these lines of misery.

But I would also remind you that it has the shame of slavery, not merely that men become slaves to themselves, but that women are enslaved to money.

"Branded as Per Margin."

The bitterest thing that can be said against human nature is that there are people who promote vice in order to profit by it, who wax fat on the failings of their fellows. This vice is organized, there is money behind it and it means slavery. Prof. Ramsay Muir has been telling the men of Lancashire that the wealth of their county is largely built upon the slave traffic which was suppressed less than a century ago. "Prime negroes branded as per margin" were a regular item on the invoice. They were bought in Africa for bad muskets and cheap spirits, shipped to the West Indies, and the survivors were exchanged again for rum, sugar and tobacco. "It was probably the most lucrative trade any people have engaged in."

But there is a craftier trade than that, and far more disreputable, that goes on in spite of Moral Welfare Leagues and defies the Leagues of Nations. It deals in young womanhood. There are red-lights connected with the business, and they may well represent the [illegible] of victims who would plead with men not to touch this sinister, soul-destroying trade. Will you not rather give a hand against it, and at least take the funds of the Moral Welfare League which is its most direct opponent. The Municipal Council has just granted Tls. 500 towards the maintenance of the Mixed Court Home. It should be easy to raise the $2,000 more that is required.

The Virtue of Work.

Now as to the matter of this evil we are men, not animals, we are open on both sides of our nature, and to [illegible] course is unwise. But the supreme issue turns on which side we cultivate and provide for. By what ways can we cultivate the higher side that really constitutes our virtue and actually links us to God. We may readily grant to begin with that sports and exercises have their use, the girding up of the loins, and the satisfaction of the muscles, and the mind's pleasure in well-directed competition. Thank God for that.

[illegible] is work. We have become accustomed to the old Jewish belief that work is a curse. We perceive the wisdom of Christ who has raised work to dignity by his parable and by his example, and who plainly says it is a commandment of God. We have [illegible] has often been our defence, whether in sorrow or in doubt or in temptation. I recall a story by Eden Philpotts of a man who gave the strength of his mature years to the reclaiming of the wild moorland as a means of assuaging the remorse of his heart. To him it was no curse but a means of lightening a curse.

Work has helped to keep at a distance that sin of idle gloom which was so prevalent in mediæval times, especially in monasteries. Westerners, we know, are much given to work. It amuses us sometimes to think of it, but it is not because they love it, but because they find it good for them. Orientals may pity all this output of energy and prefer their own placidity and lethargy. But it is worthy of note that by redeeming idle hours other values have been redeemed, and in the lands where men work women are free.

Ideals v. Instincts.

But work is not everything after all. Much work that goes on belongs only to the suburbs and outskirts of a man's real life. It is a poor business when the mind is blank and the heart empty. Here comes in the wisdom of this counsel to those who are uncertain of their paths. Engage your thoughts and affections to all that breathes of wisdom, "Say unto Wisdom, Thou art my sister and all Understanding thy Kinswoman." Cultivate their friendship, and give yourself up to it!

I noticed that a writer on this subject, quoted in Thursday's paper, stopped short with the following sentence. "Youths and maidens of the future must be taught to believe and practice that it is not instincts that matter, but the ideals you bring to them." She is surely right, but she stopped short too soon. For what chance has an ideal against an instinct? It is hopeless, unless it is reinforced by some affection or enthusiasm. Our text has far more insight than many a modern treatise. It says in effect that is not enough to take off your hat to Wisdom, and pay your respects to Good Sense. You must throw yourself into the matter, claim relationship with them, declare you cannot live without them. "Say unto Wisdom Thou art my Kinswoman, my Sister."

Noblesse Oblige.

Let us focus this point for a minute before I finish. Everyone recognizes the advantage of claiming high relationships. If anyone is connected with the aristocracy in England or the Pilgrim Fathers in America he does not forget or fail to let you know it, and there are other connexions to be proud of. The other day it did me good to see a man's face light up as he was speaking of his younger brother and his influence upon public life in the homeland, of his grandfather too, and the honour in which his name was held through a wide region. The remembrance of these connexions dignifies life, secures a man against many an unworthy action. Noblesse oblige. High descent and noble relationships lay claims upon a man; call to him in the festival of life "Friend, come up higher."

This is one of the laws of our nature that the Bible urges us to use as a means of salvation. Think of it, says the Apostle, that our heavenly Father has bestowed such love upon us that we are called to behave as sons of God. Think of it, says another, that Christ was not ashamed to call us brethren. These are incentives to right conduct that reach to the roots of our being.

Kinsfolk in the Spirit.

A lad was saying [illegible] me—and it is [illegible] said—that she thought it was enough for a Christian to do [illegible] in his own way. She was [illegible] against the non-attendance [illegible] at places of worship, [illegible] that was the duties [illegible] the day of prayer for [illegible] seem to have closely [illegible] and was capable of reading her own heart, she would find that the best of her life is by no means due to her own effort, but to the help she has been secretly receiving from those who are kinsfolk in the spirit—it may be her parents, it may be some teacher, minister or friend whom once she chose and now she keeps in remembrance. Bound over to that standard she walks in the Christian path.

A friend was once invited into the back parlour of a grocer in Brighton. "This is my sanction" said the shopman to his visitor, "and there is a portrait of F. W. Robertson on the wall" (referring to the first modernist preacher in England). "When I am tempted in my business I look at him and am made strong." That man claimed a spiritual hero for a kinsman and his strength was doubled.

But all are not complacent. There is many a one who says "I cannot profess to be good or godly. I cannot attain the high levels of virtue." If I might reply I would say: It is not Christianity that expects from you anything of the kind. Your confession is already your subscription to half the Gospel. Our Christian faith is just a matter of relationship: it is taking Christ as Kinsman and through him claiming to be the child of God. So I leave with you the Bible message. It is not "Be wise," but "Say to Wisdom Thou art my sister." It is not "Be good" but "Be ye imitators of God as dear children."

AN AUTUMN DIRGE

By Ou-Yang Hsiu

(After the prose translation of Dr. Giles)

The silvery moon is shining,
The Silver River shines,
A taunted soul repining
The tossing forest whines
And armies swiftly growing
From wind and torrent swell—
A tumult in their going,
A tempest in their knell.

At first a gentle swaying,
And then the muffled blast,
The bluster and the neighing
Of storms that hurry past.
A bending of the willows,
A roaring on the height,
A clash of breaking billows—
Of Autumn in the night!

O cruel time of dying!
O time of rack and mist!
Of desolation flying,
By winds of darkness kissed!
Thine is the sword of sharpness,
Thine is the breath of steel—
The rod of Nature's vengeance,
Her judgment past repeal!

As sure as lifts the flower
To Sping its sunny head
Must come the fatal hour
That finds its beauty sped;
The angel ever stoopeth
To herald sad decay—
When all that liveth droopeth,
And drooping dies away.

But what of tree or flower,
And what of blight for them?
Theirs not the ruling power—
Theirs but the fated stem—
Man, man alone rebelleth
Who fairest is of all,
Whose zeal divinely welleth
To keep him from his fall.

The tinkling bell of tassels
Hangs idly in the wind
Till Autumn and his vassals
Shall come with fury blind—
But worn by wrinkled worries,
Of harsh regrets the slave,
Man seals his heart and hurries
With burdens to the grave.

The burnished hair must whiten,
The staunchest back grow bent,
Nor tears the load may lighten
Nor honest faith prevent
Anxiety his master
And Ignorance his flail,
They drive him ever faster
Upon the Autumn gale.

Yet who but Man the Seeker
Doth steal the strength of Man?
And that he groweth weaker,
Can it be Autumn's plan?
Boy, ere thou curse the season
Give heed to Nature's word—

Alas, I spoke of reason,
And only crickets heard!

ANONYMOUS.

LORD Leverhulme recently stated that he had just returned from a voyage round the world, and his feet had never been off the soil of the British Empire, except in landing at New York to go to Canada and at the Sandwich Islands. The journey was about 40,000 miles. What had impressed him more forcibly than upon any previous journey was the enormous growth that was taking place in every section of the Empire. It was called the Empire upon which the Sun never Sets, but, as it seemed to him an Empire with enormous opportunities, he would call it the Empire of Opportunities.

O-MA-NI-PAD-ME-HUM

The Tibetan's Ceaseless Prayer: Wind, Water and Earth All Called to Keep It Alive

FROM OUR TACHIENLU CORRESPONDENT.

Tachienlu, May 1.

This simple, mysterious sentence, is the lama's prayer. What it implies and signifies is beyond explanation. Learned dissertations have done very little to shed light on this romantic phrase. There is no doubt that the mystery surrounding the origin and import of this sentence adds very materially to its intrinsic value as an efficacious prayer formula. The superstitious lama repeats it day and night; the ignorant nomad hums it as he goes about among his yak; the merchant sings it as he travels across the barren plateau; the old man, weak and frail, mumbles it with his latest breath; the wild Tibetan brigand roars out this mysterious prayer when in search of his prey; young and old, rich and poor, lama and layman, merchant and nomad, professional and amateur, false and genuine, day and night, in sickness and health, the Tibetan repeats this simple, mysterious, euphonious phrase. A meritorious part of lama worship is to walk round the hill side singing "O-MA-NI-PAD-ME-HUM."

As a physical exercise it has indisputable value, it brings the young men and women out into the open and fills their lungs with pure, fresh air; it takes them from their smoky homes out among the hills and flowers and trees. Even as a spiritual exercise it is not without its results; it implies the existence of good and evil; it teaches that good should be sought after and evil should be atoned for; though they may not understand it or realize it, it consciously or unconsciously reveals a spiritual side to his nature. But as a moral force, as a deterrent from evil, as an incentive to good, as an encouragement to truth, as an inspiration to righteousness, its power has yet to be seen. With a very keen prescience the inventer of this Sanskrit phrase hit on a euphonious and catching sentence.

The Happy-go-lucky Tibetan.

The Tibetan mind, the Tibetan mouth, the Tibetan nature, the Tibetan country, all seem beautifully in harmony with" "Omanipadmehum." There is a striking similarity between the British Lord Fisher, the African negro and the woolly nomad—purely temperamental. The Tibetan nomad is a free and easy, happy-go-lucky, devil-may-care, breezy individual. No man thinks less before he leaps and leaps more before he thinks. With a mind entirely free from household worries, family cares, business perplexities; with a mind bent on enjoying life and all its pleasures, this unembarrassing prayer suits him down to the ground. "Omanipadmehum"—he can sing it, read it, pray it, say it, roar it; he can use it as an narcotic to soothe him to sleep, as a talisman to get him past danger, as a means to ease his conscience, as an incentive to fearless, holy living, as a watchword through the gates of Paradise. "Omanipadmehum"—its untrammeled simplicity appeals to his untutored mind. He can repeat this sentence with avidity and do any mortal thing his wild nature prompts him to do. While repeating this sacred prayer he may smash your skull, rob your purse, steal your horse, or take your life. If the word religion means to bind then there is very little religion in the woolly nomad's nature or in his prayer. Freedom from anything and everything is all he asks and demands and "Omanipadmehum" gives him all he wants.

It is not too much to say that this mysterious prayer covers everything in the Tibetan's life from birth to death. They repeat it when he cries and he repeats it when he dies. On a high snow bound mountain pass, on the wide open plateau, on the streets of some small Tibetan village, in the precincts of the lama temple, in the nomad's tent, in the hermit's cell, in the smoky hovel, this mysterious sentence will meet you and greet you morning, noon, and night.

There are some things you can get away from but if you live in Tibet and provided your ears are in good working order, you will not and cannot escape continually and eternally hearing "Omanipadmehum." Tibetan merchant, well furred, well mounted, and well fed, looks at you, stares at you, gapes at your [illegible] and [illegible] you. He [illegible] his [illegible] will not [illegible] his prayer. He [illegible] ested is the awkward [illegible] a horse or the peculiar make of your tight fitting clothes, but he persists in praying and [illegible] hard and fast. Now the facility of this prayer is simply wonderful—he can relegate it entirely to the subconscious and all he needs is a safty valve or an exhaust; he has accomplished the extremely difficult art of praying while he thinks and thinking while he prays. Coueism worked down to a very fine science.

The Automatic Ejaculation.

There is more mystery in why he prays and how he prays than in what he prays. It is no uncommon thing to see a woolly nomad wander into one of our services here, apparently listening the whole time, repeat "Omanipadmehum" the whole time and wander out again. The red-robed lama frequently calls to see us, he listens very respectfully to what we have to say, may discuss a point when occasion arises, but under his breath and with an alarming rapidity keep mumbling his simple prayer. Why does he pray? might be answered by asking. Why does he wear clothes or eat food? He may have learned it from his grandfather or heard others praying or he may have been born with the instinct or his parents may have impressed upon him the duty to pray. There it is—he prays.

A cannon ball may take of his legs necessitating the laying down of his arms, but nothing, absolutely nothing, will compel him to lay down his prayers. I can conceive of no circumstance, no embarrassment, no contingency that would force him to give up this holy habit. The woolly Tibetan has prayed too long and too frequently and too persistently to abandon too lightly what has become part of his nature.

Then again, take his attitude in prayer—could anything be more charming or entirely free from convention? He rides his wild Tibetan horse and prays; he comes to town and prays; he makes love in his own romantic way and prays; he may do violence to your person and you have the consolation of knowing he does it while he prays. The wind carries his monosyllabic prayer across the wide, open grassland; it breaks the silence of the rugged snow-bound peak; it reaches your ear from the inaccesible recesses of some lonely hermit cell; it follows you every day in your straggling caravan across the high barren plateau; this dreary, monotonous, monosyllabic prayer haunts, disturbs or interests you wherever you travel in this great, mysterious closed land.

Prayer or Custom?

We may now ask the question—Is "Omanipadmehum" prayer, superstition, custom, habit or religion? There are six syllables in this Sanskrit phrase and lamas tell us it is a prayer for the six beings into which the Tibetans divide the human race. These six human beings include man, idols, ghosts, walking, crawling, creeping and flying things. If this is true and some maintain it is, then the woolly Tibetan nomad is certainly not remiss in praying for the inhabitants who dwell on the roof of the world. The Tibetans contribution therefore to the progress of the human race is his constant, persistent, devoted prayer. To the Tibetan the difficulty of praying while he made love, or praying while he did business, or praying while he enjoyed himself was child's play to encompassing the difficulty of praying while he slept. Here was a gigantic problem and one he had seriously to face if he desired to maintain his ambition and keep praying all the time. How to pray and work was nothing; how to pray and sleep was something, and this is how the woolly nomad got past this serious difficulty.

The eternal melting snows of Tibet is about the nearest thing we know to perpetual motion and the Tibetan was not slow in grasping this fact. He simply harnessed the mountain streams to turn his huge cumbersome prayer wheels and thus while he slept he prayed and "Omanipadmehum" has breath-ng silently over rugged mountain and barren plateau while the lama ...amed his dreams. By the side ... mountain streams the ... traveller through Eastern Tibet will see these cylindrical prayer wheels, ...cked full with this mystic sen... ...ence "Omanipadmehum," being mov... ...jerkily, jauntingly, slowly, furi... ...sly, by the rushing mountain ...rrent. Thus while he sleeps and ...works and plays he has contrived ...some means or other at the same ... to pray. The Tibetan has ...worked out Paul's injunction to ...without ceasing" to a finer ... than the capillary theory.

Harnessing the Wind.

...ountain streams, however, are ... entirely free from perversity ... they frequently dry up. In a ...ion, cold, barren country like Tibet ...hese streams are frequently frozen ...or many months in the year. ...How now ask will the woolly ...nomad meet this new proposition? ... too cold to sit on for an in... ... period and coal and wood ...are very scarce in the Land of the ...Lamas. Cow manure, the fuel he ...almost entirely depends on, is very ...strictly regulated and a shortage ... would place the Tibetan in ... serious dilemma. A frozen ...mountain stream simply will not ... a heavy cylindrical prayer ...wheel so the next nearest ap... ...proach to perpetual motion and ...perpetual prayer was to harness ...the wind. It is quite safe to say ...that, on those broad, expansive ...plateaus, there is at some time dur... ...ing the day or night a little wind ...of some kind. If the water won't ...move his prayer wheel then he will ...make the wind blow his prayer flag. ...Between houses and from different ...parts of the courtyard these gaily ...coloured prayer flags fly merrily in ...the breeze. In this way the religi... ...ous Tibetan cries, "Omanipadme... ...hum" for ever. All over Tibet, on ...flags of every colour of the rainbow, ...and flying from every tree and ...house and temple the silent prayer ...is fluttered and the simple minded ...Tibetan continues to pray.

Let the Rocks Express It.

However, even this may fail. Chinese soldiers may burn the house, destroy the temple, or steal the tent; the wind, and Tibetan winds know how to blow, may carry off the prayer flags. The water and the wind as elements may fail him; his prayer wheel may cease to turn; his prayer flag may refuse to flutter; his own voice may be still in sleep; he now turns to the rocks, the eternal rocks, and makes them speaks his silent prayer. North, south, east and west, wherever the hard ingenious rocks rise above the plateau there you will find "Omanipadmehum" deeply carved on the unchanging, ever enduring, basalt rock. Thus he makes the eternal rock send forth his mystic prayer and again he can say triumphantly, "Omanipadmehum" for ever. Thus the Tibetan prays and literally fulfils Paul's injunction "To pray without ceasing." With his own voice he will pray till overcome by sleep; he will make the huge cylindrical prayer wheel utter his prayer as long as water will turn it; he will make the prayer flag flutter his prayer as long as wind will blow it; and when all these things fail and leave him he will make the eternal rock speak forth its silent prayer.

Not the Tibetan.

Some people are ashamed to pray, not the Tibetan. Some people are afraid to pray, not the Tibetan. Some people can't pray, not the Tibetan. Some people wont pray, not the Tibetan. Many people have no desire, ambition, or inclination to pray, not the Tibetan. Is it ignorance? many educated Tibetans pray. Is it heriditry? everybody in Tibet prays. Can we by any scientific method, inductive, deductive or otherwise find out why he prays? Religion may have one answer, psychology another, and anthropology a third. They may be all right, they may be all wrong. One traveller, the aesthetic, may see beauty and holiness in every step of this devoted life. The intrepid explorer can't see the point of contact between a smashed skull and an overwhelming desire to pray. The ardent missionary fails to understand why a bullet should put him out of business, fired by a religious being more devoted than Darwin's praying mantis. In the practical daily life of the woolly nomad there is absolutely no connexion whatever between religion and morality. The Indian fakir is easily explained, the Tibetan lama is not. Darwin has carefully placed the whistling bird and the walking monkey, where we ask in wonder to place the praying lama? Religion in almost every other realm has somehow or other been associated with goodness and morality, to this Tibet has proved an exception. Severe praying is no guarantee whatever that prayer will save life: the Tibetan outlaw may shoot you while he prays.

Oriental cults have their fervent admirers and no doubt when admired from a safe distance their is something in them to admire. In actual everyday life here on the Tibetan frontier we have yet to discover why the nomad prays and the connexion between his life and his prayer.

THE ANSWER OF THE SIRENS

Ah, Sorrow! that our shapely knees,
Betrayed by Henli's ardent breeze,
Wrought havoc in the minds of men
And drive me now from Song to Pen!
Why do you hold a "Ladies' Race"?
How can you hope for skill or grace
If we are trussed up like the Fowl?
What is this grouse about, this howl?
Gone are the girls in hoops and stays,
Gone are the Mid-Victorian days!
What if our suits were rather short,
T'was in the interests of Sport!
Ye Critics! Since the days of Eve's
First venture in a skirt of leaves,
In all the changing forms of dress,
Say, have men loved us any less?

BOOK NOTES AND NEWS

Before entering the Church, the Archbishop of York was destined for the Law, and it is said that he wrote a novel while waiting for his first brief.

A copy of the first English edition of Euclid, published in 1570, was sold for £25 at Sotheby's recently.

Sir John Ross, who was Lord Chancellor of Ireland during the recent troublous years, is now busy writing his reminiscences. They promise to be exciting, for Sir John was frequently threatened by the gun-men.

Two new works by Mr. Compton Mackenzie will be published this year. One is a fairy story for children, the other a romance of adventure, entitled "The Old Men of the Sea."

Mr. Moreton Frewen, the author of "Melton Mowbray and Other Memories" (Jenkins, 16s.), seems to have known in his time almost everybody worth knowing in the English-speaking world. He once surprised President Wilson by telling him that he had shaken hands with all the President's predecessors since James Buchanan, who became President in 1856. Mr. Frewen's publishers describe his book as written in "a light after-dinner style." It is certainly a very good style, enlivened with some first-rate anecdotes.

No book about an English garden has had more success than Miss Flora Klickmann's "The Flower-Patch Among the Hills." There is a very charming professor in it, and she has often been asked by her readers who he was in real life. Miss Klickmann has just published a new book on "Mending Your Nerves," and it has a preface by Professor Albert Carless, chief consulting surgeon to King's College Hospital. Perhaps it is not indiscreet to say that he is the professor whose charming personality Miss Klickmann describes in "The Flower-Path Among the Hills."

Further particulars of the activities of the Chief Committee for Popular Education now available provide additional evidence of the very severe press censorship in Russia. It appears that this body has condemned altogether the work of Plato, Kant, Maeterlinck, Tolstoi, Spencer, Schopenhauer, Nietzsche, Kropotkin, and Nordau. Any book, indeed, that deals with liberalism, universal suffrage, or constitutionalism is banned, and the Committee has gone so far as to cancel the whole output of Communist literature from 1918 to 1920 as being "out of date." Books wherein "God" is spelt with a capital are condemned, the chief purpose of the censorship, apparently, being to stamp out religion. It is interesting to observe that the head of this very active Committee is Mme. Lenin.

A newspaper serial to-day requires to be a very pungent and full-blooded affair. The reader in train or tram does not wish to be wearied with psychology or philosophy, but demands plenty of thrills. It is therefore surprising to be reminded by a correspondent of the "Glasgow Herald" that George Meredith's most difficult book, "The Egoist," made its first appearance in serial form. This was in the columns of the "Glasgow Weekly Herald," where that subtle story ran from June 21, 1879, till January 10, 1880, under the original title, "Sir Willoughby Patterne, the Egoist." One wonders what even the thoughtful Scots people made of the famous first chapter!

At last there has arisen a case which promises to be of great importance to the numerous authors who sold the dramatic rights in their novels before films were thought of. An authoress, who disposed of the dramatic rights in a very successful novel to an actor-manager, has sought to establish the point that these dramatic rights do not include the film rights. This is a matter which the Society of Authors has long sought to make clear. The argument is that the cinema established a new sort of asset which contracts made before the coming of the cinema could not dispose of. It is certainly the case that modern agreements between authors and publishers differentiate very carefully between film rights and dramatic rights.

AT REGENT'S PARK

"A MAN IN THE ZOO." By David Garnett. (Chatto and Windus. 6s.)

Even if we had never read "Lady Into Fox," we should have guessed something odd was going to happen when Mr. Cromartie and Miss Lackett quarrel in the Zoological Gardens. Mr. Garnett has a very insidious, innocent style; and, what is more, he is really, we believe, far more innocent in the best sense than either he or his admirers realize. His original idea is fantastic in this story, though not so fantastic as was the idea of "Lady Into Fox"; but as the idea is allowed to sink in and absorb him, the artist in him, like a grave child, takes it quite seriously, quite patiently, and tells the story without a suspicion of deliberate malice or farcical irony. Most of us have known a child who, on learning that there is a man in the moon and that the moon is made of green cheese, has promptly started a fable about the possible happenings when the Man begins to eat the Cheese: and as the fable develops, the existence of the man in the moon and the substance of the moon become not fantasies but premises, axioms almost. Just so, when John Cromartie presents himself to the authorities of the Royal Zoological Society, and is accepted by them, we are not surprised, or tickled in any vulgar way, but excited and amused at his subsequent adventures.

Mr. Cromartie, who was a Scot, is given a cage between the chimpanzee and the orang-outang, and is labelled "Homo Sapiens." His adventures have, perhaps, less poignancy than those of Mrs. Trebrick; but there is plenty to arouse the emotions in the disturbance set up in the heart of Josephine Lackett by John's obstinate and wicked behaviour. We cannot admire too much the manner in which Mr. Garnett makes us believe in the authorities' acceptance of Mr. Cromartie's offer. On the Working Committee was Mr. Wollop, "a gentleman of advanced years, who was not popular with his fellow-members"; Mr. Wollop was furious at Mr. Cromartie's proposal:—

> This was a deliberate insult, he declared. This was no laughing matter. It was a matter which must and should and should and must, without question, be wiped out by legal proceedings. It would expose the society to ridicule if they took it lying down. This and much more in the same strain gave the rest of the committee time to turn the thing over in their minds. One or two first took the opposite view from Mr. Wollop from mere habit; the Chairman observed that the presence of such an interesting correspondent as Mr. Cromartie could not fail to be a great attraction, and would increase the gate-money; it was not, however, until Mr. Wollop threatened to resign that the thing was done.

That is a good instance of Mr. Garnett's unforced, insinuating style; but in this book, as in his other, he gains his effect cumulatively, by the nicest adjustment of such details, by an unerring sense of the right word, and by a gentleness of manner which only heightens the extravagance of his matter. There is one incident which rather spoils the story's unity of spirit. It is a fable of two people, and we rather resent the intrusion of the negro, Joe Tennison, as the second denizen of the Manhouse. He seems to belong to a different story; he is a note of jazz breaking into a formal minuet. For the Caracal, Mr. Cromatie's little animal friend, we are very thankful; it provides a human element just where it is needed. Mrs. R. A. Carnett's illustrations to the story are extremely delightful; is it greedy of us to say we wish there were twice as many of them?—The "Observer."

THE CORNISH COAST

A Delightful Study by Mr. Sowerby

"A NATURALIST'S HOLIDAY BY THE SEA." By Arthur de C. Sowerby, F.Z.S. Routledge & Son, $5.000.

One of the most delightful books from a nature lover's standpoint that has appeared in the past decade is Mr. Arthur de Carle Sowerby's description of a vacation outing in Cornwall, which he entitles "A Naturalist's Holiday by the Sea." The scene is laid in Penzance and each rocky pool that fringed the coast proved a veritable naturalist's Paradise, as the author says:

"A detailed description of each of the many organisms, animal and vegetable, that exists within the narrow compass of those slippery rocky walls, would fill a large volume," and we believe him after reading this "Naturalist's Holiday" with its wealth of information and deduction, dressed in most attractive style, for Mr. Sowerby can write as well as observe. Nor is the application of the volume restricted to Cornwall. Any one of a thousand beaches can reveal as many wonders to the eye of him who will only open his mind to see.

That is the real fascination of this book Mr. Sowerby makes one see. Not a didactic way at all, but just as he led his young son over those Cornish rocks with a "What do you think of this, Sonny?" so he leads his readers. One almost begins to believe the tales of the Indian fakirs who can compel a neophyte to prophesy by looking into a pool of ink, for from one Cornish rock-rimmed pool and 20 words of text, Mr. Sowerby brings vividly before his readers a picture of the whole cosmos. Von Humboldt took 50 years and five times that many thousand words to give a far vaguer outline.

Mr. Sowerby's genius lies not in the mere catalogueing of what he sees. He is not like that famous naturalist we once took through Hongkew market to show him what the Chinese eat. "Scomber scombrus," he said pointing to a fish with such a tone of voice that we have always doubted whether it really was a mackerel or not. Never does the author of this fascinating ramble descend to just enumeration. He even endows the seaweeds with vibrant life and brings forth vividly their place in the eternal scheme of things.

To those who know the Cornish coast—and those who don't as well—it will be a matter of hope that this gifted writer will take another holiday, this Summer preferred, and spend it along the China coast, preferably near where the foreigner sends his family for a holiday. If he brings half the wealth of knowledge and imagination to bear on such an area as Peitaiho, for example, as he did on the fringes of Penzance, we dwellers in China will be given a new link of appreciation, and owe Mr. Sowerby a lasting debt of gratitude for making us see the simple things lying under our feet—simple, yes, but how utterly complex until the mind of the trained observe cuts out for us the silhouette.

THE PREACHING FRIARS

"THE LIFE OF ST. DOMINIC (1170-1221)." By Bede Jarrett, O.P. Burns Oates and Washourne. 6s.

Father Bede Jarrett, the present head of the Dominican Order in England, has done well to produce this popular and interesting biography of his Patriarch. For a hundred persons who believe themselves to be familiar with the personality of St. Francis, not one could give a coherent account of the character and life of St. Dominic: yet the services which his order have rendered to religion and to learning are at least as conspicuous as those to which the Friars Minor can lay claim.

Dominic had not, it is true, the special charm of Francis. He was neither mystic nor poet. Yet the description given by an early biographer, drawn from memories of his asociates, suggests something better than the grim dogmatist of Protestant tradition. "He began to appear among his brother Canons as a bright ray of sunshine, in humbleness of heart the least, in holiness the first shedding around him the fragrance of quickening life, like the sweet scent of pinewoods in the heat of a summer's day."

This aspect of a saint whose austerity towards others was exceeded by austerity towards himself—his only weakness was for apples and turnips!—deserves the emphasis Father Jarrett has given to it. Those who read his little biography will obtain the picture of a lovable human being who was led by circumstances to become a Defender of the Faith.

HUMAN NATURE

"RE-CREATING HUMAN NATURE: BEING AN EXPOSITION OF THE MAKING OF PSYCHOLOGY. By Charles W. Hayward. Leonard Parsons. 10s. 6d.

Some time ago we noticed here a volume by Dr. Charles Hayward called "What is Psychology?" To this volume he has now provided a sequel. We like both the author and his books. He is a barrister and a highly qualified medical man, but he writes like a breezy crusader with a sense of humour, and he charges at social crimes with the single-heartedness of Don Quixote. His thesis is this: human nature is just what we have made it, and it can be just what we Will to make it. While major prophets have evolved great general doctrines that remotely influence mankind, they have overlooked the regular little forces of suggestion impinging daily upon the human mind. It is these that Dr. Hayward deals with specially in his present volume. So to speak, he wants to make us look after the pence of personal psychology, and to persuade us that it is the multitude of minor influences that make or mar us. Of course he does not neglect the greater things; but he is most anxious that we should realize all the forces of evil that, unrecognized, are playing upon us. His book is breezy, personal and unconventional, and as enjoyable to read as it is serious in intention. We hope it will be widely read.

MEN ARE STUPID

"WANDERING STAR." By Clemence Dane. (Heinemann. 6s.)

The fact that men are stupid would be taken a little more lightly by all of us if the clever ones who insist on it would only admit that, occasionally, women are stupid too. Miss Clemence Dane's Damaris Page is stupid enough, but her author insists on treating her tenderly as a wronged, misunderstood, frustrated creature, while Greydon Hart, who is also stupid, is represented with a righteous and malicious indignation. We are sorely tempted, as we read "Wandering Stars," to echo our grandmother's favourite comment on the modern novel, "Well, my dear, I'm sure they'd all be the better for a good shaking." Hart is a successful dramatist, Damaris Page his leading lady and in love with him; though they write a play together, and Damaris insinuates her own character and point of view into the heroine, Hart never regards her as anything but an extremely competent actress. Seven years later—Hart has been in America—he hears from a third person how Damaris has loved him, and how his failure to recognize it has altered her beyond words, and, incidentally, turned the play from tragedy to ironic farce. Prefixed to this story is "The Lover," which is the story of the play Hart wrote for Damaris.

Neither in conception nor treatment can this book rank with Miss Dane's earlier work. All her faults, especially her persistent illusion that masculinity consists of nothing but trousers and thickheadedness, are exaggerated here; and there is little of her interpretative intuition in the portrait of Damaris in the one story or of Hester Peile in the other. "The Lover" is, however, certainly the better of the two, although Miss Dane is a little too solemn for the fantasy which plays around the figures of the real husband and the mirror husband.

EVOE

"AN HOUR FROM VICTORIA, AND SOME OTHER EXCURSIONS." By E. V. Knox (Evoe). (Allen & Unwin.) 4s. 6d. net.

Mr. Knox, unlike most humorists, is really funny. And he is most successful when he is least pretentious. Possibly that is why he fails to satisfy his more exacting admirers in some of his recent peregrinations of Empire with Mr. Raven Hill à le manière de Low and Thomas. But those excursions form no part of the present volume, which consists almost entirely of the saga of Bittleigh, that exquisite corner of Sussex which Mr. Knox, like the old engravers, inv. et del.

Critics have a curious weakness for the opening pages of the books which they criticize: that, one feels, is about as far as most of them get. But after reading Mr. Knox from cover to cover, as publishers delight to say, one comes back unreluctant to the first pages as the cream of an exceptionally creamy little jest-book. There is something more than a good joke in his study of Sussex men, with their Downs and their Sea and their Weald and their dew-pans and their yaffle—something which Mr. Kipling and Mr. Belloc and (if it is not indelicate to say so) Miss Kaye-Smith might do well to put in their pipes and smoke.

Mr. Knox is a master of that apparently effortless comedy which it costs so much effort to bring off as smoothly as he does. The rats which "ate the bread and arsenic and went on with the corn;" the two local ladies who were respectively "democratic after the Colonies" and exclusive after Kensington;" the recipe for Savoury Egge à le Walton, which must be read to be believed; the goat on the golflinks which, when Allardyce readdressed the ball, "ambled up and readdressed Allardyce"—these, and other diversions, are all to be found in Mr. Knox's small volume. At least one reader (and he a writer, at that) laughed through influenza with it. But the influenza's is optional.—"Saturday Westminster."

WHO WROTE "WUTHERING HEIGHTS"?

The question of the true authorship of "Wuthering Heights" is raised by Miss Alice Law in her brief, lucid, and, on the whole, temperately argued book, "Patrick Branwell Brontê" (Philpot 6s.). She has arranged all the available evidence with care, and if she has not exactly added to it, she has at any rate added to its coherence. Her book, therefore, is deserving of serious consideration. For our part, however, we remain without the slightest doubt that "Wuthering Heights" was written by Emily Brontê. No doubt it is in some respects masculine, but then Emily herself was in some respects masculine, and it is at any rate easy to make too much of the fact that on its appearance it was very generally taken to be the work of a man. Reviewers are not safe in arguing from the work to the sex of its author, and we may call to mind the assumption of one distinguished critic of Tennyson's "In Memoriam" that it proceeded from "the full heart of the widow of a military man." That Emily could not have written "Wuthering Heights" needs a great deal more demonstration than has yet been offered us. She was the most powerful and original woman genius our poetry has had, and not easily can we set limits to the capacity of that genius in prose fiction. It is true that "Wuthering Heights" in parts deals with material which can hardly have come within Emily's experience, but with which Branwell was more or less familiar. If that proves anything, however, it is only that Emily was willing to utilize, with something of the ruthlessness of the artist, the troubles of a black-sheep brother.—It does not at all prove that Branwell had the ability to write that great masterpiece. He was clever, certainly; he impressed people; the taverns have always had in them men clever in Branwell's way, quick enough of wit, when it was livened up with liquor, to strike the uncritical as men of genius. That he had the sustained imaginative power to write "Wuthering Heights" there is not a shred of evidence. Nor is the understanding of passion displayed by the book at all helpful to the case for Branwell. As was pointed out some 20 years ago by M. Maeterlinck, the book shows a profound knowledge of love in its essence, but an equally profound ignorance of love in its manifestations. It suggests the possession by its author of wonderful intuition, but of very little notion of the way of a man with a maid. Miss Law somewhat modifies our opinion of Branwell, but "Wuthering Heights," as far as we are concerned, remains the prose masterpiece of a powerful woman poet, not the solitary achievement of a neurasthenic and rather blackguardly young man.—"Life and Letters."

What makes you sell so dear?
Few cafés sell at half the price
To make a profit clear.

Mother, may I go to Henli?
Yes, my darling daughter.
But swathe yourself that none may see
Your figure in the water.

China Takes Notice.

There was a man in Shanghai.

He planned an Exhibition
Of International size
He talked about it quite a bit,
The Chinese said: "Some style!"
But now they say 'twas a mistake
And their show all the while.

HITS WE SHOULD LIKE TO SEND

To the Unco' Omniscient

By Elizabeth Pepys.

To Mr. N. O. Itall
Summit Heights
Shanghai

Dear Mr. Itall:—To begin with let me admit that you are quite right in this as in every other matter and that I am quite in the wrong. I would not doubt that you are the Person and Wisdom shall die with you. All I know is that, my enemy right or wrong, I hate you. There! You've no idea how much better I feel with that out.

Let me proceed further to explain that your method of being right is in the highest degree distasteful to me. You are so superiorly, [illegible], egregiously, ineffably, disgustingly right as to turn others to [illegible]. I had rather be wrong than agree with you any day in the year. My blood boils to contradict you even when you make a statement so non-controversial as "Two and two make four." Why, O why, must you be so cock-sure in order to be correct? Your assertive manner in pronouncing on so problematic a matter as to-morrow's weather is sufficient to make men loathe you. I suppose you would rather be right than be popular; but why must one exclude the other?

Endeavouring to get at the bottom of my virulent abhorrence of your personality I have been obliged to admit that it is at bottom a low jealousy of your unerring exactitude. Of course I only despise you all the more for engendering in my bosom so unworthy a feeling. Moreover I believe humanity has a case against you for making the Right so unattractive. Be warned, abate a bit of your bumptiousness, or in order to preserve any ideals whatever we shall be constrained to dispose of you.

Truthfully your enemy,
Igno Ramus.

ASSOCIATION NOTES

Chinese Women Abroad.

Reports of the Biennial Convention of the American Young Women's Christian Association, held in New York City in May, have been received at the national offices of the Y. W. C. A. of China. Mrs. H. C. Mei, Miss Sin Tak-hing, and Miss Ting Shu-ching were China's representatives at this convention, and each spoke before large audiences during the Convention meetings. Mrs. Mei was a guest in the home of Mrs. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., during her stay in New York.

Mrs. Mei has been requested by Miss Jane Addams of Hull House, Chicago, to represent China at the convention of the Women's International League of Peace and Freedom, to be held in the United States this summer.

Prominent among the guests at the Convention was Lady Gladstone, a daughter-in-law of the late William E. Gladstone; Countess Elsa Bernadotte, niece of the King of Denmark; Mrs. Appasawamy of Madras, India; Miss Kita Hasegawa, Dean of Koran Jo Gakko, Tokio, and many others of several nationalities.

Y.W.C.A. Favours League of Nations.

Matters of technical interest to the organization were side by side on the programme with matters of wide import to the women of all the world. On the last morning of the Convention a resolution was passed by which the American Y. W. C. A. pledged itself to use its efforts to secure the entrance of the United States into the League of Nations.

Announcements were made of gifts to the Y. W. C. A. from the Laura Spellman Rockerfeller Foundation of a large endowment toward the Retirement Fund for Y. W. C. A. Secretaries; also of a gift of $25,000 a year for three years from Henry Ford to further work of the Y. W. C. A. in certain rural sections of the country, understood to be in the Middle West.

Miss Grace Yang, national student secretary of the Y. W. C. A. of China, will leave on June 16 for England, via the United States. She will attend the meeting of the committee of the World's Student Christian Federation, of which she is a member, to be held at High Leigh, London, August 7-21.

MAH JONGG THAT MADE CHINA FAMOUS

The thousands of readers who chuckled appreciatively over the Mah Jongg number of "Life" issued on April 24 were doubtless many of them ignorant of the fact that the artist who drew the artistic cover design of "Mah Jongg" with her hand stretched out to take a tile, while "Pa Jongg" raptly studies his hand was none other than a Shanghai man, Monte Smith, the publicity agent of the local office of the Standard Oil Co. The number contains various quips on this sport of the Mandarins, one of them by James K. Guinness being entitled:

The Mah Jongleur.

Seven glaring characters; six little dots;
How I miss the good old roodle pots!
Dragons done in silver; dragons coloured green—
Once I held the straight flush to the Queen.
Build a house of bamboo; fashion it of reed.
Some one's shy his ante. Show some speed.
If you are the East Wind then I am the West;
Still I like my poker games the best.

TYPES OF BUSINESS WOMEN

The Blatant Pusher

A new and much criticized figure in our modern bustling life is the business woman, and by that I mean the woman who is struggling for a footing in big business and competing on her own merits in present-day commerce. She has not yet accustomed herself to her surroundings, and is apt to be somewhat extreme in her methods and manners. Her success or failure is being eagerly watched, on one side with open hostility, on the other with an anxious concern for her survival. In this struggle for a firm footing in the larger ventures of industry some women are apt to cast aside their greatest assets.

Aping the Man.

We are all familiar with the blatant pusher, who pushes literally with both elbows extended. The woman who considers it essential to speak in a loud strident voice, and who cannot write a letter or converse at the telephone without a cigarette dangling from the corner of her mouth. Who leans back in her chair with both feet propped upon her desk, and in fact feels it incumbent upon her to ape the man, forgetting that she can never be anything but a very poor imitation of the opposite sex. This description to some may sound harsh, but we have unfortunately such a type in our midst, who, instead of helping us in our struggle, only encourages hostility.

HATS FOR ALL OCCASIONS

The Pleasing Personality.

The woman who means to succeed in business with a capital "B" and still remain a woman (and no matter what others may say experience proves that it is an asset to remain, in spite of everything, a woman) should never forget that calmness and dignity of manner, allied to knowledge and alertness, will succeed where bluster and excessive push will fail. The well-modulated voice employed in persuasive argument will gain more for its owner than harsh, sharp tones jerked out in rapid succession.

Courtesy Costs Nothing.

Courtesy will cost nothing, but it makes friends not enemies. Neatness in appearance presents a pleasing picture to the eye, and will gain admission more readily than slovenliness. None of these qualities will detract one jot from your knowledge and real ability—they will add to it—because bluster so often is employed to hide personal deficiencies. The ability to preside at a desk or a board meeting is not bound up with an assumption of mannishness, it is entirely a question of mental capacity.

"Shoemaker Stick to Your Last."

We are all of us prone in our newfound opportunities to attempt too much. Until we have secured a good place upon the ladder of commercial successes we should do well to follow the advice given to the shoemaker and "stick to our last." We should leave bazaars and committees to women with more leisure, and should spend what little spare time we have in healthy recreation. Let us cultivate the week-end habit—a whiff of good fresh air is a wonderful mental stimulant and a great unraveller of these difficult problems with which we have to deal. Our hands are grasping the key to the door of commerce, and our successful opening of this great portal lies largely in the way in which we turn the key. We shall gain admittance more readily as dignified women rather than unpleasing imitations of men.

Catherine Murray.

PERSONALLY CONDUCTED

How to Find One's Way Round Shanghai.

A surprising amount of information is contained in the 116 pages of "Gow's Guide to Shanghai," which is just off the press and selling at a dollar. The author states his purpose as being to "give to new-comers to the Far East some idea of what they may expect to find here, and of how we who live here order our daily lives so far from the scenes of our native places," and he has realized his ideals excellently. The book is thoroughly up-to-date and even the resident of a week—than whom there are few more sapient—can hardly contradict its information.

Besides the usual friendly suggestions as to the most efficient way to make oneself at home as a stranger in an Oriental port, and a well-guaged schedule of prices and tips, there are bits not usually found, such as a comparative thermometrical scale. The maps are helpful, the index convenient, the advice sound and the feminine reader may well profit by the pages on hotels, boarding houses, curio and silk shops, cost of living, servants, cost of clothing and the like. The Pidgin English vocabulary as well as being amusing is a decidedly useful adjunct.

INCHES AND INDIVIDUALITY

Woman By Taking Thought Adds Chic to Her Appearance.

Weighed in a mental scale, one frock that is solely and individually one's own outvalues any number of frocks that might be anybody's.

THE THREE-QUARTER COAT AND COATEES. NOTE THE ORIENTAL INFLUENCE AND BE SURE TO CUT YOUR COAT ACCORDING TO YOUR HEIGHT

Even with a limitless income, there is no place in a wardrobe for a gown that is merely one of a crowd, and, with a limited income, it is more than ever essential that every gown shall be a success.

No one would willingly go to the opposite extreme and carry the pursuit of individuality so far that one is out of tune with the fashion of the day. The clash of ideals comes when style seems to demand surrender of individuality or individuality to demand surrender of style. Nevertheless, gowns may be generically alike and yet specifically different.

Only a short time ago, in Paris, an American girl viewed with consternation, across the tea-tables of the Ritz, a gown that seemed a duplicate of her own. Absolute duplicates the gowns were not, but the identity of inspiration was evident. The point of the episode does not lie in the similarity of the gowns, but in the fact that the untried eye of the girl caught the dissimilarity and that she felt wave after wave of disappointment and dissatisfaction with her own perfect gown. She was absolutely right in admiring the other gown and as absolutely wrong in believing that her own was any less excellent. Points of difference existed no less in the wearers than in the gowns, which had been adapted to the individual requirements of each buyer.

The Crux of the Costume.

One crucial point of difference was the position of the girdle-line, for there were segments of a girdle knotted at each side, as in the lower left sketch on the opposite page. After her French prototype had threaded her way among the tables and taken a seat near the American girl, the smart hats were almost on a level, but the difference in height was sharply noticeable when the two girls were standing. And, as each had stood before the artist who had created her gown, the proper position of the girdle was decided by the position of the hip-bone. That there were many more inches below in one case than in the other mattered not a particle, and, had a third subject appeared, neither so tall as the American nor so short as the Parisienne, the correct placing of the girdle would have been a problem to be solved anew.

Unfortunately, it is not always an artist in dress who makes the decision. If artisans in dress did not use a rule-of-thumb method in working out proportion, there would not be so many travesties of one style to be noted in any large assemblage of women. How many times do we see a tall and sinuous figure ludicrously girdled nearer the knees than the waist, a tiny figure overpowered by a disproportionately large cape or flounce!

Artistic Balance.

The rule-of-thumb method is to take the measurement from the neck-line to the hem-line of the original model and to reduce or increase that measurement in strict proportion when adapting it to a shorter or a taller figure. The artistic method is to take the position of the hip-bone as a starting-point and to make any changes in the proportion above or below, as the type of gown and the build of the figure may demand.

The success of a tailor-made suit may depend very largely upon the relation of the length of the jacket to the height of the wearer. It is a truism that a very short woman should not wear a knee-length coat, nor should a very tall woman wear an exaggeratedly short coat, whatever the mode. Jackets may be exactly finger-length with the length of the wearer's arm determining the end of the coat.

What is said of jackets is equally true of capes, and the cape-back of a coat-frock takes on the appearance of additional inches for a tall figure.

In coat-frocks the position of the tightly drawn segments of the girdle is constant, fixed by the position of the hip-bone, and tunics vary with the height of the wearer.—"Vogue."

FOLK SONGS

Over the long fields, the wet fields that lie between
Me and my lover the blackbird has been;

The blackbird has flown with a dark crying
Over the fields where the cold rains were lying.

And oh, blackbird, as you came on your way
Past the house of my lover, what did he say?

Was he at work with his pipe in his mouth
When you came flying out of the South?

Was there no message he trusted with you,
Was there no errand he begged you to do?

Were the tulips in blossom beside his back door?
O blackbird you never have failed me before!

Will you say nothing of where you have been?
What have you heard, blackbird, what have you seen?

FULL TEXT OF RUSSO-CHINESE AGREEMENT

Important Details as Regards Chinese Eastern Railway Now Declared to Be a Purely Commercial Undertaking: Chinese Director-General and Russian Manager

PRESENT OCCUPANTS OF RUSSIAN CHURCH PROPERTY TO BE EVICTED BY CHINESE

Peking, June 17.

The following is the full text of the Sino-Russian Agreement, ratified by the Chinese Government to-day:—

Agreement on General Principles for the Settlement of the questions between the Republic of China and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

The Republic of China and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, desiring to re-establish normal relations with each other, have agreed to conclude an agreement on general principles for the settlement of the questions between the two countries, and have to that end named as their plenipotentiaries, that is to say:

His Excellency the President of the Republic of China: Vi Kyuin Wellington Koo.

The Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics: Lev Mikhailovitch Karakhan.

Who, having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found to be in good and due form, have agreed upon the following Articles:

Article 1.—Immediately upon the signing of the present agreement, the normal diplomatic and consular relations between the two contracting parties shall be re-established.

The Government of the Republic of China agrees to take the necessary steps to transfer to the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics the Legation and Consular buildings formerly belonging to the Tsarist Government.

Article II.—The Governments of the two contracting parties agree to hold, within one month after the signing of the present agreement, a conference which shall conclude and carry out detailed arrangements relative to the questions in accordance with the principles as provided in the following Articles.

Such detailed arrangements shall be completed as soon as possible and, in any case, not later than six months from the date of the opening of the conference as provided in the preceding paragraph.

Article III.—The Governments of the two contracting parties agree to annul at the conference as provided in the preceding Article II, conventions, treaties, agreements, protocols, contracts, etc., concluded between the Government of China and the Tsarist Government and to replace them with new treaties, agreements, etc., on the basis of equality, reciprocity and justice, as well as the spirit of the declarations of the Soviet Government of the years of 1919 and 1920.

Article IV.—The Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, in accordance with its policy and declarations of 1919 and 1920, declares that all treaties, agreements, etc., concluded between the former Tsarist Government and any third party or parties affecting the sovereign rights or interests of China, are null and void.

The Governments of both contracting parties declare that in future neither Government will conclude any treaties or agreements which prejudice the sovereign rights or interests of either contracting party.

Outer Mongolia

Article V.—The Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics recognizes that Outer Mongolia is an integral part of the Republic of China and respects China's sovereignty therein.

The Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics declares that as soon as the questions for the withdrawal of all the troops of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics from Outer Mongolia, namely, as to the time-limit of the withdrawal of such troops and the measures to be adopted in the interests of the safety of the frontiers, are agreed upon at the conference as provided in Article II of the present agreement, it will effect the complete withdrawal of all the troops of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics from Outer Mongolia.

Article VI.—The Governments of the two contracting parties mutually pledge themselves not to permit, within their respective territories, the existence and/or activities of any organizations or group whose aim is to struggle by acts of violence against the Governments of either contracting party.

The Governments of the two contracting parties further pledge themselves not to engage in propaganda directed against the political and social systems of either contracting party.

Article VII.—The Governments of the two contracting parties agree to redemarcate their national boundaries at the conference as provided in Article II of the present agreement, and pending such redemarcation, to maintain the present boundaries.

Article VIII.—The Governments of the two contracting parties agree to regulate at the forementioned conference the questions relating to the navigation of rivers, lakes and other bodies of water which are common to their respective frontiers, on the basis of equality and reciprocity.

Chinese Eastern Railway

Article IX.—The Governments of the two contracting parties agree to settle at the aforementioned conference the question of the Chinese Eastern Railway in conformity with the principles as hereinafter provided:

(1) The Governments of the two contracting parties declare that the Chinese Eastern Railway is a purely commercial enterprise.

The Governments of the two contracting parties mutually declare that with the exception of matters pertaining to the business operations which are under the direct control of the Chinese Eastern Railway, all other matters affecting the rights of the National and the Local Governments of the Republic of China such as judicial matters, matters relating to civil administration, military administration, police, municipal government, taxation, and landed property (with the exception of lands required by the said railway) shall be administered by the Chinese authorities.

(2) The Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics agrees to the redemption by the Government of the Republic of China, with Chinese capital, of the Chinese Eastern Railway, as well as all appurtenant properties, and to the transfer to China of all shares and bonds of the said railway.

Redemption of the Railway

(3) The Governments of the two contracting parties shall settle at the conference as provided in Article 2 of the present agreement, the amount and conditions governing the redemption as well as the procedure for the transfer of the Chinese Eastern Railway.

(4) The Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics agrees to be responsible for the entire claims of the shareholders, bondholders and creditors of the Chinese Eastern Railway incurred prior to the Revolution of March 9, 1917.

(5) The Governments of the two contracting parties mutually agree that the future of the Chinese Eastern Railway shall be determined by the Republic of China and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to the exclusion of any third party or parties.

(6) The Governments of the two contracting parties agree to draw up an arrangement for the provisional management of the Chinese Eastern Railway pending the settlement of the question as provided under section (3) of the present Article.

(7) Until the various questions relating to the Chinese Eastern Railway are settled at the conference as provided in article II of the present agreement, the rights of the two Governments arising out of the contract of Aug. 27-Sept. 8, 1896, for the construction and operation of the Chinese Eastern Railway, which do not conflict with the present agreement and the agreement for the provisional management of the said railway and which do not prejudice China's rights of sovereignty, shall be maintained.

Extraterritoriality, Concessions and Indemnity

Article X.—The Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics agrees to renounce the special rights and privileges relating to all concessions in any part of China acquired by the Tsarist Government under various conventions, treaties, agreements, etc.

Article XI.—The Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics agrees to renounce the Russian portion of the Boxer indemnity.

Article XII.—The Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics agrees to relinquish the rights of extraterritoriality and Consular Jurisdiction.

Article XIII.—The Governments of the two contracting parties agree to draw up simultaneously with the conclusion of a Commercial Treaty at the Conference as provided in Article II of the present Agreement, a customs tariff for the two contracting parties in accordance with the principles of equality and reciprocity.

Article XIV.—The Governments of the two contracting parties agree to discuss at the aforementioned Conference the questions relating to the claims for the compensation of losses.

Article XV.—The present Agreement shall come into effect from the date of signature.

In witness whereof the respective Plenipotentaries have signed the present Agreement in duplicate in the English language and have affixed thereto their seals.

Done at the city of Peking this 31st day of the fifth month of the 13th. year of the Republic of China, which is, the 31st day of May one thousand nine hundred and twenty four.

(Seal) L. M. Karakhan.

Agreement for the Provisional Management of the Chinese Eastern Railway:

The Republic of China and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics mutually recognizing that, inasmuch as the Chinese Eastern Railway was built with capital furnished by the Russian Government and constructed entirely within Chinese territory, the said railway is a purely commercial enterprise and that, excepting for matters appertaining to its own business operations, all other matters which affect the rights of the Chinese National and Local Governments shall be administered by the Chinese authorities, have agreed to conclude an agreement for the provisional management of the railway with a view to carrying on jointly the management of the said railway until its final settlement at the conference as provided in Article II of the Agreement on General Principles for the settlement of the questions between the Republic of China and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics of May 31, 1924, and have to that end named as their Plenipotentaries, that is to say:

His Excellency the President of the Republic of China: Vi Kyuin Wellington Koo.

The Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics: Lev Mikailovitch Karakhan.

Who, having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found to be in good and due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

Article I.—The Railway shall establish, for discussion and decision of all matters relative to the Chinese Eastern Railway, a Board of Directors to be composed of 10 persons, of whom five shall be appointed by the Government of the Republic of China and five by the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Chinese Director-General

The Government of the Republic of China shall appoint one of the Chinese Directors as President of the Board of Directors, who shall also be the Director-General.

The Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics shall appoint one of the Russian Directors as Vice-President of the Board of Directors, who shall also be the Assistant Director-General.

Seven persons shall constitute a quorum, and all decisions of the Board of Directors shall have the consent of not less than six persons before they can be carried out.

The Director-General and Assistant Director-General shall jointly manage the affairs of the Board of Directors and they shall both sign all the documents of the Board.

In the absence of either the Director-General or the Assistant Director-General, their respective Governments may appoint another Director to officiate as the Director-General or the Assistant Director General (in the case of the Director-General, by one of the Chinese Directors, and in that of the Assistant Director-General, by one of the Russian Directors).

Article II.—The Railway shall establish a Board of Auditors to be composed of five persons, namely, two Chinese Auditors, who shall be appointed by the Government of the Republic of China and three Russian auditors who shall be appointed by the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

The Chairman of the Board of Auditors shall be elected from among the Chinese Auditors.

Russian Manager

Article III.—The Railway shall have a Manager, who shall be a national of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and two Assistant Managers, one to be a national of the Republic of China and the other to be a national of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

The said officers shall be appointed by the Board of Directors and such appointments shall be confirmed by their respective Governments.

The rights and duties of the Manager and the Assistant Managers shall be defined by the Board of Directors.

Article IV.—The Chiefs and Assistant Chiefs of the various departments of the Railway shall be appointed by the Board of Directors.

If the Chief of Department is a national of the Republic of China, the Assistant Chief of Department shall be a national of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and if the Chief of Department is a national of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the Assistant Chief of Department shall be a national of the Republic of China.

Article V.—The employment of persons in the various departments of the Railway shall be in accordance with the principle of equal representation between the nationals of the Republic of China and those of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Article VI.—With the exception of the estimates and budget, as provided in Article VII of the present agreement, all other matters on which the Board of Directors cannot reach an agreement shall be referred for settlement to the Governments of the contracting parties.

Article VII.—The Board of Directors shall present the estimates and budget of the Railway to a joint meeting of the Board of Directors and the Board of Auditors for consideration and approval.

Article VIII.—All the net profits of the Railway shall be held by the Board of Directors and shall not be used pending a final settlement of the question of the present railway.

Revision of Statutes

Article IX.—The Board of Directors shall revise as soon as possible the statutes of the Chinese Eastern Railway Company, approved on December 4, 1896, by the Tsarist Government, in accordance with the present agreement and the Agreement on General Principles for the settlement of the questions between the Republic of China and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics of May 31, 1924, and in any case, not later than six months from the date of the constitution of the Board of Directors. Pending their revision, the aforesaid statutes, insofar as they do not conflict with the present Agreement on General Principles for the settlement of the questions between the Republic of China and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and do not prejudice the rights of sovereignty of the Republic of China, shall continue to be observed.

Article X.—The present agreement shall cease to have effect as soon as the question of the Chinese Eastern Railway is finally settled at the conference as provided in Article II of the Agreement on General Principles for the Settlement of the Questions between the Republic of China and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics of May 31,1924.

Article XI.—The present agreement shall come into effect from the date of signature.

In witness whereof, the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the present agreement in duplicate and have affixed thereto their seals.

Done at the city of Peking, etc. etc.

Exchange of Property

Declaration I.—The Government of the Republic of China and the Government of the U.S.S.R. declare that immediately after the signing of the Agreement on General Principles between the Republic of China and the U.S.S.R. of May 31, 1924, they will reciprocally hand over to each other all the real estate and movable property owned by China and the former Tsarist Government and found in their respective territories. For this purpose each Government will furnish the other with a list of the property to be so transferred.

In faith whereof, the respective Plenipotentiaries of the Governments of the two contracting parties have signed the present declaration in duplicate in the English language and have affixed thereto their seals.

Done at the City of Peking, etc.

Russian Church in China

Declaration II.—The Government of the Republic of China and the Government of the U.S.S.R. hereby declare that it is understood that with regard to the buildings and landed property of the Russian Orthodox Mission belonging as it does to the Government of the U.S.S.R. the question of the transfer or other suitable disposal of the same will be jointly determined at the conference provided in Article II of the Agreement on General Principles in accordance with the internal laws and regulations existing in China regarding property-holding in the inland. As regards the buildings and property of the Russian Orthodox Mission belonging as it does to the Government of the U.S.S.R. at Peking and Patachu, the Chinese Government will take steps immediately to transfer same as soon as the Government of the U.S.S.R. will designate a Chinese person or organization in accordance with the laws and regulations existing in China regarding property-holding in the inland.

Meanwhile the Government of the Republic of China will at once take measures with a view to guarding all the said buildings and property and clearing them from all the persons now living there.

It is further understood that this expression of understanding has the same force and validity as a general declaration embodied in the said Agreement on General Principles.

In faith whereof, etc., etc.

Declaration III.—The Government of the Republic of China and the Government of the U.S.S.R. jointly declare that it is understood that with reference to Article IV of the Agreement on General Principles, the Government of the Republic of China will not and does not recognize as valid any treaty, agreement, etc., concluded between Russia since the Tsarist régime and any third party or parties, affecting the sovereign rights and interests of the Republic of China. It is further understood that this expression of understanding has the same force and validity as a general declaration, etc., etc.

Declaration IV.—The Government of the Republic of China and the Government of the U.S.S.R. jointly declare that it is understood that the Government of the Republic of China will not transfer either in part or in whole to any third Power or any foreign organization the special rights and privileges renounced by the Government of the U.S.S.R. in Article X of the Agreement on General Principles. It is further understood that this expression of understanding has the same force, etc., etc.

Indemnity for Education

Declaration V.—The Government of the Republic of China and the Government of the U.S.S.R. jointly declare that it is understood that with reference to Article XI of the Agreement on General Principles:

(1) The Russian share of the Boxer Indemnity which the Government of the U.S.S.R. renounces will after the satisfaction of all prior obligations secured thereon be entirely appropriated to create a fund for the promotion of education among the Chinese people.

(2) A Special Commission will be established to administer and allocate the said fund. This Commission will consist of three persons, two of whom will be appointed by the Government of the Republic of China and one by the Government of the U.S.S.R. Decisions of the said Commission will be taken by unanimous vote.

(3) The said fund will be deposited as it accrues from time to time in a bank to be designated by the said Commission.

It is further understood, etc.

Fair Treatment for Russians

Declaration VI.—The Government of the Republic of China and the Government of the U.S.S.R. agree that they will establish equitable provisions at the Conference as provided in Article II of the Agreement for the regulation of the situation created for the citizens of the Government of the U.S.S.R. by the relinquishment of the rights of extraterritoriality and Consular jurisdiction under Article XII of the aforementioned Agreement, it being understood, however that the nationals of the Government of the U.S.S.R. shall be entirely amenable to Chinese jurisdiction.

In faith whereof, etc., etc.

Declaration VII.—The Government of the Republic of China and the Government of the U.S.S.R. having signed the Agreement on General Principles, hereby agree, in explanation of Article V of the Agreement for the provisional management of the Chinese Eastern Railway, which provides for the principle of equal representation in the filling of posts by citizens of the Republic of China and those of the U.S.S.R. that the application of this principle is not to be understood to mean that the present employees of Russian nationality shall be dismissed for the sole purpose of enforcing the said principle. It is further understood that access to all posts is equally open to citizens of both contracting parties, that no special preference shall be shown to either nationality, and that the posts shall be filled in accordance with the ability and technical as well as educational qualifications of the applicant.

In faith where, etc., ec.

Russians in Chinese Army and Police

Peking, May 31, 1924.

Mr. L. M. Karakhan,
Extraordinary Plenipotentiary Representative of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to the Republic of China, Peking.

Dear Mr. Karakhan;

On behalf of my Government, I have the honour to declare that, an Agreement on General Principles for the settlement of the questions between the Republic of China and the U.S.S.R. having been signed between us to-day, the Government of the Republic of China will, in the interests of friendship between the Republic of China and the U.S.S.R., discontinue the services of all the subjects of the former Russian Empire now employed in the Chinese Army and Police Force, as they constitute by their presence or activities a menace to the safety of the U.S.S.R. If you will furnish my Government with a list of such persons the authorities concerned will be instructed to adopt the necessary action.

I have the honour to remain, etc.,
(Signed) V. K. Wellington Koo,
Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of China.

Peking, May 31, 1924.

Dear Doctor Koo,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of the following note from you under this date:

In reply I beg to state on behalf of my Government, that I have taken note of the same and that I agree to the proposition contained therein.

I have the honour to be,
Very truly yours,
L. M. Karakhan.
Extraordinary Plenipotentiary etc., etc.

A Protest from Manchuria

Peking, June 18.

The Provincial Assembly and other public bodies of Fengtien have sent out a circular telegram stating that they have no special objection to China's resumption of formal relations with Russia, but they feel constrained to raise objection to the fact that Russia made the agreement with the Peking Government, which has no knowledge, says the telegram, of actual conditions in Manchuria. The telegram declares that they will never recognize any of the treaties concluded by Peking since May, 1921, and they feel sure that the unanimous public opinion of the Manchurian Provinces will not be disregarded by Marshal Chang Tso-lin.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

TRADE MARKS LAW

Period for Registration Now Extended Until December 31

From Our Own Correspondent.

Peking, June 17.

The Chinese Government has agreed to extend the period for the registration of trade marks already recorded with the Customs to December 31, 1924. According to the previous Note the period for registration was to terminate on the 30th instant.

Many Foreign Firms Registering

June 19.

The Trademark Law is beginning to be accepted by foreign firms. The Trademark Bureau, I am informed, have already received several English and American application, notably from the British-American Tobacco Co. They are also overwhelmed with Japanese and German applications.

The English copy of the Trademark Bulletin, with photographs, is now in the press and will be issued shortly.

The Chinese say that a good deal of the opposition among foreigners is founded on misunderstanding of the text of the law, to remove which an official translation has been prepared for early issue.

Although it is said that a foreign expert has been engaged, I cannot yet verify the report.

THE SINO-GERMAN NEGOTIATIONS

Germany's Liability for China's Losses During the Great War

THE HANDING OVER OF GERMAN BONDS

Peking, June 16.

The "Chingpao" and the "Chenpao" state that the following report was submitted to the Cabinet by the Ministries of Finance and Communications at the special meeting called on the evening of the 5th instant, when the report was approved and it was decided to go on with the settlement of the Sino-German agreement:—

Since China's entry into the Great War her losses, according to reports received from various provincial authorities, amounted to upwards of $122,000,000., while her losses due to participation in the war totalled more than $100,500,000., making a total of some $223,000,000.

As the result of negotiations between the Waichiaopu and German representatives in 1921, when the Sino-German Treaty was signed, Germany undertook, in accordance with the general provisions of the Wilson Peace Treaty, to compensate China for her losses, including the cost of interning German subjects in China. The cost of internment, however, has been paid and can be ruled out.

In principle, according to the Peace Treaty, Germany is liable only for expenses incurred in warfare on land, at sea and in the air, also direct losses and the cost of pensions for killed and wounded troops. Therefore, the war participation expenses of China, $100,500,000. cannot be claimed in full as military expenses must be excluded as Chinese troops did not go into the field.

The sum of $122,000,000 represents both direct and indirect losses. It includes increased expenditure due to the increased cost of such commodities as coal, and debts owing to Chinese by Germans. On the other hand, debts owing to Germans by the Chinese Government and funds derived from the forfeiture of German property in China amounted to between 40 and 50 millions of dollars. According to international usage China cannot repudiate these liabilities.

As regards German bonds, although payment of principal and interest was suspended during the war, now that peace has been restored between the two countries these suspensions can no longer be continued. Moreover, these are bearer bonds which have been in circulation in various countries, the holders not being confined to German nationality.

China at first desired to cancel these bonds but protests were received by foreign Ministers in Peking in behalf of their nationals who held these bonds. This question led to trouble with the London Stock Exchange, and it became necessary to abandon this intention. Now the German Government will hand over to the Chinese Government:—first, Tientsin-Pukow bonds to the face value of £1,400,000., to be assessed at the market value, thus representing £957,000; and second, Tientsin-Pukow bonds, face value £950,000, market value £627,000 and Hukuang bonds, face value £381,000, market value £202,269.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, June 16.

Backed by the Opposition, a group of parliamentarians have, it is reported, written to the German Minister pointing out that the Sino-German Agreement is looked upon as supplementing the Sino-German Treaty and that, under the Constitution, no treaty can be put into operation until it has received Parliament's approval.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

MONGOLIAN CONFERENCE

Peking, June 13.

The Joluho Hutukhtu of Western Mongolia arrived in Peking yesterday and called on Prince Kalaching to express his approval of the Mongolian conference. He was offered and accepted a seat in the conference.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

HOUSES AT OTHER PEOPLE'S EXPENSE

June 16.

IF—there is much virtue in an if—if we had not to pay rent and its concomitant evils of taxes, lighting, water rates, etc., how happy we should be. There are certain lowly organisms that are ushered into the world provided with a shelter that automatically adjusts itself to their progressive development. But though we may appreciate the point of view of the worried hotel clerk who wished that the persistent boarder, who had lost his luggage, "had been born an elephant, for then he would have carried his trunk with him," we would rather bear the ills we have than carry our houses on our backs like the snail. Being the lords of creation, we come into the world the least fitted of all living things to fend for ourselves and, ere long, find ourselves under an obligation to provide a shelter for ourselves and those dependent on us. We are not long in discovering that the providing of this shelter is the white man's burden and a life-long handicap in that race which has but one ending. Rent is the companion spectre to poverty when it looks in at the poor man's window; it is the recurring decimal that complicates the solution of life's greatest problem.

When war broke out in 1914 everyone anticipated that rents would fall with a crash and for a little while good houses could be rented for a song. The men were away at the front and their womenfolk often closed up house for "the duration" of the war that was to last for six weeks or months at the longest. During the second year of the war a shortage of houses began to be felt. Rents soared to such an extent that a Rent Restriction Act had to be passed in 1915. How very necessary action of this kind was is shown by a report of the Comptroller for Manchester of the result of de-controlling seven houses in his area in 1921. As soon as the landlords regained unrestrained control of the property rents were increased from 84 to 195 per cent. Or, on an average over the whole seven houses, of 136 per cent. It will readily be seen that great hardship must have been inflicted on the families of the men fighting at the front had the Rent Restriction Act not been passed and the profiteers been allowed a free hand to turn out the families of the ill-paid soldiers in favour of the munition workers who were making fabulous wages in the abnormal circumstances then prevailing.

The unforeseen result of Rent Restriction was that capital sought more remunerative employment than there was to be found in house-building and the shortage of houses was steadily accentuated. To remedy this state of things tthe Government embarked on a policy of subsidizing house building in Acts sponsored, in the Liberal Government, by Dr. Addison and, in the Conservative, by Mr. Neville Chamberlain. Houses built under these acts cost £500 each and were rented at £39 per annum, inclusive of taxes. The money received in rent failed to cover the cost of interest, repairs and depreciation by some £10 per year and this had to be made good, by the Corporations providing the houses, out of rates and taxes. Mr. MacDonald, the present Prime Minister, now realizes that under the present moderate subsidy private enterprise will not be tempted into the business of house-building and he has introduced a comprehensive scheme in which he proposes to build 2,000 houses at a cost of £500 each. The rental is to be fixed at £23 per annum and the yearly subsidy to cover loss on the houses at this rental is to be about £26. The tenant will thus pay less than 50 per cent. of the rent that would have to be charged to him if the houses were built as a business proposition pure and simple. It is stipulated that the houses shall be let only to working men, but whether this phrase covers the humble clerk or is to be taken to mean manual workers only, who are usually more comfortable than their better looking but worse paid brothers of the pen, is not yet settled. If this proposal were carried into effect it would go far to solve the rent problem for those fortunate enough to get possession of one of the subsidized houses, but the less fortunate citizens who will have to pay full rent for the houses they themselves occupy and, at the same time, be taxed to make up the 50 per cent. due on the houses occupied by those who have "got in on the ground floor" may be pardoned if they fail to see the full beauty of the scheme. This would seem to prognosticate stormy times ahead before this housing bill is written on the statute book as the law of England. Nevertheless, there are a few points on which all parties seem to be agreed. The first is that a comprehensive house-building scheme is necessary and must be undertaken. The second is that to make an omelette it is necessary to break eggs and to get the cheap houses that must be had a subsidy is necessary. Just how much that subsidy should be and how it should be paid are details which may occasion some friction, but need not bring about the rejection of the scheme. It will be interesting to watch the debates that will ensue before the bill takes on its final form.

THE REPUBLICAN CONVENTION

June 17.

THE selection of President Coolidge for re-election and the nomination of General Dawes to the Vice-Presidency clearly indicates that the Republican party goes to the country for an endorsement of the policies of President Harding and his successor, the present incumbent in that high office. That President Coolidge would be the bannerbearer of this party was to be expected, since the nomination of any other person would have indicated an admission of error during the past administration and would have assured defeat for the Republican Party. President Coolidge has shown great force of character in his attitude toward many questions rising during the unexpired term of President Harding. He has been called upon to continue policies which he had no hand in forming and to justify acts for which he could not be personally responsible. He was faced with a gross scandal which shook the whole country and brought opprobrium upon men in high station. He was faced with a political revolt in his own party and a recalcitrant Congress which would have weakened the power of the executive branch of the American Government, were it not for his firm insistence upon constitutional government.

All this President Coolidge met with unusual personal bravery and with what appeared to many an utter disregard for his own political future. It was thought for a time that those who were politically his enemies and whom he had braved in his messages would secure his defeat for the Presidential nomination. It was believed that they would, by oratory and the fiery gestures of party politics, make it difficult for him to lead his own party. Yet, his nomination was by acclamation, no other name being suggested. Strength of character, a firm sense of right, political vision and statesmanship won the over the radicalism of sectional politics.

The selection of General Dawes, however, was not anticipated. Several names had been mentioned, but his was not among them. He was the usual "dark horse," whose appearance at American political conventions makes them so interesting. His selection is a recognition of his unusually excellent services in connexion with the reparations issue in Germany and of his popularity with the men of his own party. General Dawes is a figure in the American Legion which at present is not taking kindly to President Coolidge because of his independent and fearless attitude toward the bonus for soldiers who had served in the Great War. The Vice-Presidency in the United States has been a side issue, an office for satisfying "favourite sons" of important states who otherwise might not be happy in the party councils. The unfortunate overburdening of the American President with labours so multifarious and onerous as to lessen his resistance and to impair his health has led to a strong desire to fill that office with men of true presidential calibre. General Dawes is just such a man. A banker, a military man, an organizer of big business enterprise, a fighter for his beliefs, he could be a President were fate to make him one.

General Dawes will probably conduct the campaign for the Republican Party, it not being customary for the President to go before the people in his own interest. President Coolidge, who is unusually taciturn, whose words are few, but whose character seems to be made of that New England steel which produced the founders of the American nation, will undoubtedly sit quietly in the White House and listen to the abuse heaped upon him by opponents during the campaign. In General Dawes, however, he will have a lieutenant who can give as he can take, a fighter with an exceedingly powerful punch, a Rooseveltian character of vigorous decisions and unstinted effort. His familiarity with international problems, his knowledge of the European situation and his clear-mindedness will undoubtedly appeal to many voters in the United States, particularly that element, constantly growing larger and more influential, which desires to see their country resume a greater interest in the solution of the international problems arising out of the War.

SIR Beilby Alston (his Mapesty's Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Buenos Aires) had an audience of the King at Buckingdoh Palace no May 13.

CHINA'S UNWIELDY POPULATION

June 18.

AT the close of the eighteenth century, when the population of England and Wales was less than nine millions, an English clergyman named Malthus wrote an essay on the "Principle of Population as it affects the future Improvement of Society" in which he warned social optimists that the natural tendency of population is to increase faster than the means of subsistence, and when this happens it necessarily means poverty and misery for a very large number. Since his day the problem has become more acute. At the time of the Norman Conquest the population of England and Wales was about two millions. In 1801 it was 8,892,536, having multiplied fourfold during this long period. But in 1851 it was 17,927,609; in 1901, 32,527,843, and in 1911 it was 36,070,492. In other words, the increase between 1801-1911 was as great relatively as during the preceding eight centuries. So with other Western nations. The population of Europe in 1801 was 150,000,000; in 1914 it was 450,000,000. The 3,000,000 colonists in America who revolted against Great Britain in 1776 are now represented by a nation of 110 millions.

This portentous increase has taken place in spite of many checks, both positive and preventive. The positive checks are, as stated by Malthus, "unwholesome occupations, severe labour and exposure to the seasons, extreme poverty, bad nursing of children, large towns, excesses of all kinds, the whole train of common diseases and epidemics, wars, plague, and famine." The principal preventive check mentioned by him is the prudential one of not marrying until ample provision has been made for the children likely to be born. Since his time a far more effective check has been found in the voluntary limitation of births. Nowadays, people marry and do not have children unless they want them. The consequence is that the birth-rate in England and Wales, which in 1881 was 34.7 per thousand, has been reduced by voluntary limitation to 19.7 in 1923, the lowest recorded except during the war years 1917-1919.

Nevertheless, the white peoples are still increasing steadily though at a diminished rate. In the Orient, however, there is no voluntary restriction and the increase is much more rapid. Consider China for instance, with its immense population of 400 millions, and with the men all desiring numerous offspring for religious reasons. The causes which were formerly operative in checking increase of population are being removed or weakened. The epidemic of pneumonic plague in 1921 which might easily have swept over the land and destroyed half the population, was stayed by means of medical science with a loss of only 8,000 lives. The knowledge of public health and hygiene, now being spread everywhere, is reducing the incidence of disease, and the instruction in the proper care of babies is lowering the frightful infant mortality. Famine sufferers are relieved instead of perishing as formerly. Other nations are protecting China from decimation by war. As to internal strife it is not very restrictive; the political change from the monarchy to a republic was accomplished with a loss of life insignificant compared with the loss during the Taiping rebellion. Unchecked, it looks as though the Chinese may so increase as to swamp the world.

Fortunately or unfortunately, as we choose to view it, the Chinese are acquiring from the West, but not from missionaries, the knowledge that if used will prevent an inordinate increase. In a recent article in the "Chinese Social and Political Science Review," the Chinese writer, after discussing the religious and political and social changes now taking place in China and remarking that "the old commandment making the childless a sinner is no longer taken seriously," goes on to say;

"Strange as it may seem, the talk on birth control, unwelcome even in many Western countries, is having a large audience in China, where the Chinese socialistic conception of the family might be expected to furnish the strongest opposition to it. The truth is that the opposition has been great, but not great enough to stop the talk. The talk has been going on unmolested; starting with a handful of radicals, it is now enlisting the leaders of society. It is in the present month that the 'Woman's Journal,' similar in its influence to "The Ladies' Home Journal' in America, issued a special number on birth control. The issue contains 24 articles discussing birth control from the standpoints of ethics, religion, biology, physiology, medicine, education, sociology, socialism, etc., suggesting actual solution of the problem, and voicing a uniform unconditional approval of birth control in China. It would be tedious to mention the special numbers on the same topic of smaller magazines. Suffice it to say, birth control is rapidly gaining ground in China. That even as individualistic an idea as birth control could have prevailed in China indicates a complete destruction of the Chinese socialistic conception of the family."

This is a subject involving tremendous issues. For the present we can only ask the question: Is it likely that the ancient faith of the Chinese in the solidarity and interdependence of the living and the dead with the accompanying rites and ceremonies of ancestral worship, which has held the nation together for thousand of years, is going to be vanquished easily by foreign influences? We think not. The Chinese women who hold advanced views will simply find their place in the home taken by those who do not object to motherhood. Therefore it seems at present as if China is going to increase and multiply without serious check. Likewise the populations of Japan and India. As over-population without a corresponding increase in the means of subsistence leads to grim economic struggles, wars of extermination, poverty, unemployment, and a high death-rate, the outlook is not very promising.

OIL RIGHTS IN SAGHALIEN

June 19.

ACCORDING to the "Osaka Mainichi" quoted to-day, a group of important Japanese concerns are about to spend a large sum of money in prospecting for oil in the island of Saghalien. Our Peking correspondent recently dwelt on the great interest which the Japanese take in the oil possibilities of Saghalien, which, he prophesied, would play an important part in the negotiations for recognition and other matters between Japan and Russia. Our correspondent expressed the belief that Japan would be quite willing to buy Northern Saghalien, and he speculated as to whether Moscow, if it were disposed to sell, would be able to get rid of the American Sinclair Syndicate, to which it granted an extensive tract in Saghalien in 1921, extending up the eastern coast from just above Lat. 50° to the regions of Lat, 53°, a strip of some 200 miles in length by perhaps three and a half deep.

One is inclined to doubt whether Moscow would ever be disposed to sell its remaining half of Saghalien. But supposing that it were, it is important to point out that other concessionaires besides the Sinclair Syndicate have claims on Saghalien. In pre-revolution days this island belonged to the imperial privy purse and the Emperor gave considerable portions of it to Court favourites, many of whom parted with their property to foreign syndicates. Bolshevik maps of to-day, which are in point of fact merely reproductions of surveys made in Tsarist days, show numerous deposits of minerals of various kinds, which are undoubledly identical with gifts of land made at different times by the Emperor. In the year 1889 the Emperor gave to a Russian colonel a piece of land, the potentialities of which appear to be decidedly rich. The new owner made attempts in various directions abroad to get his concession financed and worked, but without much success until the year 1909, when he brought it to Shanghai.

Here he got a number of British subjects to invest money in the land and surveys were actually made and a little boring was done, it seems with no unpromising results. For one reason or another, however, work was not proceeded with—possibly the intervention of the rubber boom year was against it—and of course once the war began there was no more doing anything, although there is reason to believe that before their final evacuation of Vladivostok and general withdrawal from Russian territories, the Japanese had been getting oil from the concession. Representations have been made to the Soviet by the British owners and, if they have not actually been acknowledged, they have not been repudiated. Apart from any question of whether there is or is not oil in paying quantities on the land, the existence of the claim is an interesting complication not to be ignored.

ARMED ROBBERS AND THEIR ARMS

June 19.

THE encounter between police and armed robbers on Sunday afternoon in the western district is welcome for other reasons than that it resulted in the death or capture of the ruffians. Happening as it did in broad daylight, in some of the best known roads of Shanghai, it naturally attracts far more attention than if it had occurred at night in a slum. And it is time that public attention were aroused to the very serious prevalence of armed robbery and the smuggling of arms. Certainly not a week passes without its instance of one or the other. The resulting danger to life is extremely grave. On Sunday afternoon the injuries received by the pursuing party were, happily, slight. But one foreign lady had a narrow escape of being hit in her motor-car and, as things are, almost at any moment some one might be hit and killed. It is easy to imagine what an outcry would be raised, while at the same time it would be absurd and most unfair to the police to say that they must not shoot on such occasions. Too much admiration can hardly be felt for the courage and devotion with which the police generally, of all branches and nationalities, carry on the war against armed robbers. For not only is that work of the highest danger, but the police are hampered in doing it by their inability to prevent arms from entering Shanghai and by the inadequacy of the punishment for men found in possession of them.

It must be remembered that the police have no control either over the harbour or on its banks and wharves. That is in the hands of the Customs. As we have paid tribute to the work of the Settlement police, so would we certainly render it to that of the Customs men. With miserably inadequate forces for the large area they have to cover, the Customs police do astonishingly good work in seizing contraband. As the result of pressure by the Chambers of Commerce, their numbers are to be increased. But however many of them there are, their success in capturing arms on their arrival cannot be so effective as would be some means of stopping the smuggled consignments at the port of shipment. The public are justified in asking whether such means are available and, if they are, why they are not used. This, it appears to us, is a matter for the Consular Body, on account of the many issues involved, and they cannot be too strongly urged to take action. With the same Body does it lie to stiffen the penalties for smuggling arms, for dealing in smuggled arms, and for being in possession of them. Not long ago we drew attention to the special ordinance now in force in Hongkong, which empowers magistrates to inflict many years of imprisonment and the "cat" for these offences. Corporal punishment is, unhappily, past praying for in Shanghai. But even the terms of imprisonment that are or actually can be inflicted in local courts are absolutely derisory and provide no deterrent either for Chinese or foreigners. It is grossly unfair to the police that they should have to work under such disabilities and inasmuch as the public's safety is also involved, as shown by the affair on Sunday afternoon, they too have the strongest interest in demanding that more energetic measures be employed than are available for coping both with the armed robber and the man who supplies him with arms.

In conclusion a word may be said of what would happen in the case of a policeman killed by armed robbers. In this the specials are as much concerned as the regulars, possibly more so, in that so large a proportion of them are married. These men take their share of night patrolling and also in search parties and round-ups. Hitherto only one of them has been wounded, Mr. Rebsamen: he was fully compensated by the Council, and there cannot be the slightest doubt that in any similar or worse case the Council would deal liberally. But as matters stand, the amount of compensation is at the Council's pleasure: there is no kind of insurance either for regular or special police, and one cannot but think that it would be more satisfactory in all ways if there were.

COLD SHOULDER TO THE DOMINIONS

June 20.

IT is indeed tragic that a resolution so momentous as the very modest measure of Imperial preference moved by Mr. Stanley Baldwin should be thrown out, in one case by a mere six votes, in others by but little more. Mr. Baldwin had ten resolutions to urge: the first four gave preference to imperial products without extra charge to the foreign; the last six would have added to the taxation on foreign goods. It is difficult to see what harm could have been done by the first four resolutions and they would have been some consolation to the Dominions for the rebuff inflicted on them by Mr. Snowden's Budget, which threw down practically everything arrived at by the last Imperial Conference. That at least Mr. J. H. Thomas, the Colonial Secretary, had misgivings as to the state of feeling in the Dominions was shown by what he said at the opening of the recent debate. He advocated calling the leaders of the opposition as well as Premiers of Dominions to the next Imperial Conference and he went on to say that "it would lead to disaster to continue conferences only to find when they were broken up that nothing had been done." "At the present rate of going, one may wonder whether even Premiers will bother to come to any more conferences.

There appears no doubt that feeling in Australia is much offended over the rejection of the last conference's recommendations, and it can hardly be much better in Canada, South Africa and New Zealand. How Mr. Ramsay MacDonald is so sure that an Empire emigration scheme alone is "going to draw the Dominions nearer to us" does not at all appear clear. Unsupported by any prefence scheme, it is likely to have precisely the opposite effect, as our Australian correspondent explained last week. Mr. Bruce, the Australian Prime Minister, he pointed out, realizes that under the migration schemes with the Imperial Government we (Australia) are bringing many ex-soldiers to this country and putting them on the land at considerable expense to ourselves. They are mostly being placed in the irrigation districts, and are producers of fruits. If Britain declines to find markets for their products, then their introduction into Australia must cease, and the efforts to relieve Britain of some of her unemployed will have to be seriously curtailed.

At the same time preferential duties granted to Great Britain in Australian ports are at present worth £8,000,000 a year. If, as is not impossible, Australia gives that preference to other countries now, and British trade has to pay that amount of taxation in Australian ports, and the offtake of British unemployed ceases, Mr. MacDonald's Government will have cause to sing a different tune.

There would seem (says our correspondent bitterly) to be something in the contention that the British Government is so anxious to trade with foreigners, including the Russians, whose emissaries are giving us so much trouble, that it does not care what the Dominions want. And he goes on to point out that in South Africa it has been suggested that the day of the preference farce is over, and elsewhere the proposal has been advanced that the Dominions should form a Zollverein for trade purposes, "obviously leaving Britain outside the charmed circle."

If the preferences proposed by Mr. Baldwin were such as to make living dearer in England there would be reason in throwing them out. But while the duties on foreign stuffs are unchanged there is no danger of that, and for the sake of a free trade principle which is not endangered, Parliament risks alienating the Dominions. We have always in the past supported Free Trade against Protection as the policy for Great Britain. But it has become a very urgent question whether the importance of the Empire to the Mother Country does not necessitate her revising her fiscal ideas. She needs markets and she needs an outlet for her superfluous population. The Dominions already supply the one and must in time provide the other. We have only to consider the enormous development of Canada within the memory of everyone not more than forty years old, to realize what the future of the Dominions must be. Meanwhile the future of Europe is to say the least uncertain and America bars her doors with tariffs and legislation to imports and immigrants alike. The question is, What are we to think of the Empire, of what use shall it be to us and we to it? But that question is still distorted by the parrot cry "your food will cost you more" of political Bourbons like Mr. Asquith who have learnt nothing and forgotten nothing. The party system of government blocks all broad and fair-minded consideration of issues in which the whole future prosperity of Great Britain is involved.

THE DEPRECIATION IN COINAGE

June 20.

IT is extremely welcome to see from the "Sinwanpao's" article which we reproduce to-day on the opposite page and from the recent telegram of protest sent by the Shanghai Bankers' Association to Peking, that Chinese business men are becoming seriously exercised over the depreciation of dollars, small silver and copper. As regards the latter, the "Sinwanpao" says that debasement has gone so far that some mints have found it is no longer profitable to coin it. The fineness of the dollar used to be maintained by the steadiness of sycee, which, being controlled by merchants and not by officials, preserves its purity. But apparently the mints no longer care about the ratio of sycee and dollars: they fill the latter with base metal, with the result that whereas for rough purposes of calculation one used to add a third to a given amount of taels to find the equivalent in dollars, which meant Tls. 75 to the hundred dollars, the price has now dropped below 71.

There are three mints with which Shanghai is mainly concerned, those of Nanking, Hangchow and Anhui. The fineness of dollars issued by the two former has been fairly maintained at the proper standard. But the Anhui mint, which is under the control of the General of the province, has been adding more and more base metal to its coinage. Whereas the authorized fineness of the Chinese dollar is 887 and of the old Mexican dollar 898, the Anhui mint's dollar, according to a recent test, showed a fineness of only 830. During the past two months this mint has been producing these dollars at the rate of 50,000 a day. In respect of small coinage, notably twenty-cent pieces, the Kuangtung and Fuklen mints are the worst offenders. Both of them have been passing large quantities into circulation. The fineness of the Kuangtung coins is said to be about 700, of those of Fukien about 400, as against the 800 in former years. This depreciation coupled with overproduction amply accounts for the present cheapness of these coins. During 1922-23 the Canton mint was closed, but it has recently been reopened—under conditions, it is popularly reported, which will tend to make its output worse than ever. For once we may believe that rumour is likely to be correct.

With twenty-cent pieces running six to the dollar and copper cents in the region of 200, it follows that additional cost of life to the poorer classes of Chinese must be severely felt. All the day labourers, wharf coolies and the like, who are paid so many cents a day, find their income reduced in value by a large percentage. To some extent the value of dollars is influenced by the large number of them now in Shanghai. Only ten millions of them went out this year for the financing of the silk harvest as against fifteen last year. But the chief cause is undoubtedly depreciation. Some day the Customs will find that the value of the dollars they are taking is making a serious difference to the quantity of the silver they have for the service of loans: and then perhaps the Powers will make a fuss. But that day is still far off. Peking has been appealed to by the Chinese bankers to close the Anhui mint. But Peking has no power, and it would probably be more efficacious to appeal to Marshal Chi Hsieh-yuan, who is Governor-General of Kiangsu, Kiangsi and Anhui and therefore responsible for the goings-on of his subordinate at Anking. But the most efficient way of all would be that the leading foreign and Chinese banks should boycott new dollars, at any rate for a time. They must between them have sufficient dollars in their treasuries for every-day needs and they also have a properly-secured paper issue. It is scandalous that the Anhui mint should be allowed to thrust its debased coinage on the public and it should be taught that until it calls in the bad stuff and issues good, it shall not be allowed to sell its dollars at any price.

ROCKEFELLER FOUNDATION IN CHINA

June 21.

A few years ago a multi-millionaire said the day was coming when it would be considered a disgrace for any man to die extremely rich. The day has not yet arrived, but there is a growing conviction that power and great wealth, whether inherited or acquired, is a trust which should be discharged for the benefit of mankind. A remarkable illustration of this philanthropic spirit is Mr. John D. Rockefeller's munificent gift of about $160,000,000, U. S. currency, the administration of which is entrusted to an organization known as the Rockefeller Foundation, formed for the purpose of "receiving and maintaining a fund or funds, and applying the income and the principal thereof to promote the well-being of mankind throughout the world." The immensity of the gift, and its devotion to the prevention and treatment of disease in all countries, irrespective of racial differences and animosities, make it unique. Among the subsidiary organizations of the Foundation is that of the China Medical Board of Peking; another is the International Health Board which co-operates with the sanitary and hygienic work of the League of Nations.

Reference can only be made to the principal achievements of the Foundation, the annual report of which has been recently issued. Directly, by means of its highly trained workers, and indirectly, by the aid it has given to other institutions and workers, it has reduced enormously the incidence of some of the worst infectious and parasitic diseases. In the United States it has almost abolished malaria, the second or third great killing disease of the world; also hookworm disease, the cause of much physical and mental weakness owing to the steady loss of blood by the victims, among whom were many "poor whites" in the southern States, who were supposed to be examples of the occasional hereditary deterioration. In central and southern America "Yellow Jack" has almost disappeared. Only those who have lived in these countries and have heard, for instance, the appalling narratives of the mortality among the workers of different nationalities during the attempted construction of a Panama canal by the French can appreciate the marvellous conquest of the diseases which militated so disastrously against the enterprise. The Foundation has also given generous gifts to medical schools and hospitals all over the world. In May, 1923, one medical institution in London was opened with State ceremonies by the King and Queen. In France after the war it helped to wage a vigorous campaign against tuberculosis which was ravaging the country. In Austria and other countries devastated by the war, where women and children were suffering from diseases caused by the lack of proper food, the Foundation came to the rescue. In China it has founded the magnificent medical school and hospital in Peking; it has given financial aid to mission hospitals, medical schools, and other institutions throughout the country, both Chinese and foreign; it has granted numerous fellowships to physicians and scholarships to students: conducted campaigns against hookworm disease, malaria, schistosomiasis (a parasitic disease common in many parts of the country which sometimes attacks foreigners), kala-azar (a serious disease also common in some of the provinces); aided the work of public health and hygiene, and the training of nurses, and in various other ways it has promoted the health physical and mental of the Chinese people. During its first ten years the Foundation spent on Public Health, G.$18,188,838; on medical education, G.$24,716,859; on war relief, G.$22,298,541, and on other philanthropic work, G.$10,445,628.

It is impossible to summarize briefly the benefit to mankind from this effective warfare against disease in some of its most common and pernicious forms. Not only is an immense numbers of lives saved; there is also the prevention of the chronic illness and disability which keeps multitudes poor and helpless, increases the burdens of the country, and at the same time decreases its productive power. If a private organization can do so much to promote the health and welfare of mankind, a wonderful improvement would be effected if the government of every country intelligently and generously supported the scientists in their warfare against diseases. Within a few years probably all epidemic and parasitic diseases would be abolished. Moreover, if the vast regions in various parts of the world still sparsely populated because of their unhealthiness were made healthy by the elimination of disease, new and productive fields would be opened to human enterprise, thus relieving the pressure of population and increasing human resources. Unfortunately, some countries are very backward in this respect. In China, for example, the Central Government and the officials throughout the country do not take much interest in questions of this kind, being absorbed in their own selfish struggles, for place, power, and wealth. Some day perhaps the Chinese will learn that public office is a public trust to be exercised for the benefit of the people, and that sovereign rights are always accompanied by sovereign duties.

TO PHYLLIS

(The Metropolitan Life Insurance Company of New York announces that researches made by eminent physicians prove that kissing is very dangerous, and is in future classifying it among the "extra-hazardous occupations." It is feared this will lead to a movement to prohibit kissing.)

My Phyllis, do you ruminate
(With lovely eyes upturned in musing)
Upon the news illuminate
It seems you were perusing?
If so, then quickly dissipate
The slightest fear that you will heed it,
And argument anticipate
By kissing me—I plead it!

They who affirm that danger lies
In every kiss and each, my Phyllis,
Have never felt Love's rhapsodies
Or known just what a thrill is.
Not theirs the bliss that we attain
When, lip to lip in silence riven,
We leave awhile this earthly plane
And catch a glimpse of Heaven.

They sin who say that man and miss
Should forgo Love's divine expression;
When two hearts beat as ours, a kiss
Will never bear repression.
And should they ever prohibit
Our kissing on the ground 'tis risky,
They'll find us wanting more of it
(As in the case of whiskey.)

So, Phyllis, do not contemplate
Their dicta prejudicing you—
As soon arrest the gravitating earth as stop my kissing you!

MOSES MOOSA.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Thief Catching by Wireless

Ingenious though we know them to be, Chinese thieves in the Settlement must find it increasingly difficult to earn a living in the face of the activities of the police. The arbitrary but in every way excusable practice of sending armed patrols around the Settlement at unexpected hours to examine all and sundry has done more to protect honest and peaceable citizens probably than most of them realize. Silks and satins may clothe a rascal and frowzy rags an honest man, and the police have no mind to be fooled, so whether a man be outwardly a reputable and wealthy merchant or poor enough to look desperate, up must go his hands should a patrol so choose and he will be searched. How many rogues have been gaoled as a result of this procedure the police alone know, but many of us are well aware that the measure of their success has not been small. The Gazette now tells of another proposal for the further harassing of law-breakers. In due course the police are to be provided with a broadcasting station and the value of that will be obvious. There must be many an occasion when it is necessary to send an emergency message to all stations and the possibility of full success would depend upon letting all know as quickly as possible. The speed of telephonic messages is limited by the number of instruments that can be used at headquarters at the same time, but with a broadcasting station the message will reach every station simultaneously and action probably will be taken by all in less time than now is spent in calling up a number. It would be of immense assistance, too, in mobilizing the S.V.C., giving fire alarms and in many other ways. Customs restrictions prevent the immediate installation of such a system, but, judging from the statements in the official report, there are reasons for believing the matter can be arranged.

Missionaries in China

We apologize to our correspondent, P. O. Q., for mistaking him for a newcomer and forbear from the obvious retort to which his claim to 18 years' residence in China exposes him. Of his letter to-day, may we say that as an argument against Christianity it may pass (whether it convinces is another matter); but as an argument against missionaries it decidedly will not. Even if it be true that their teaching only appeals to the weak and vicious —and we do not admit it—we seem to remember something about one who came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance. As for Chinese being ruined by Christanity the list of authorities our correspondent gives leaves us cold in view of the equal or greater testimony that could be given on the other side. For a personal argument, the present writer employed a Christian Chinese amah for some years and a better, more devoted servant could not have been found. As regards missionaries being an element of unrest, again it may be recalled that their Founder came not to bring peace but a sword: but it may also be recalled that again and again (as our own columns have shown) these men have been used by Chinese combatants as go-betweens and peace-makers. A notable example of this was outside Shanhaikuan in the summer of 1922 when Wu Pei-fu's and Chang Tso-lin's troops were facing each other. As for the general devotion and selflessness of missionaries' lives, not one, but scores of travellers in the interior of China (as in many wild parts of the earth) have borne witness to it.

The Russian Ships

General Gleboff kindly sends us a copy of a letter he has sent to M. Gross in refutation of the report that the Russian ships lying off Woosung had been brought into the Huangpu to prevent their being sold. The facts of the case were given by us last Thursday. The ships were brought in, through the influence of M. Grosse himself, because of the terrible amount of sickness on board, nearly two-thirds of the men being prostrated from their long confinement. But it is evident that the Soviet are working in obscure ways to get the ships. A few days ago they brought us a letter purporting to come from 54 officers and men on board the ships, urging that they should be handed back to the Soviet. There was nothing to show that this letter had in fact been written last February, as a means of enabling the signatories to get back to Russia, and we accepted the statement in good faith. We should have remembered, of course, that truth and fair dealing are words that have no meaning for Bolsheviks. They are welcome to chuckle over our folly in having for once so far forgotten ourselves as to believe what they said.

Labour and Art

People such as Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, Dr. Stanton Coit, Mr. George Bernard Shaw, Mr. Pethick Lawrence and others of their kind may be just as truly Socialists, Labour advocates, or whatever they may choose to call themselves, as Will Crooks was, but as between them and those whom the world recognizes as of the "Labour" party there is a very wide difference of opinion. A Home paper prints the following item:—

Miss Margaret Bondfield, speaking at Pontypridd, said all that Labour desired was to get into its propaganda all that was beautiful in life. Some people imagined that Labour was dull and drab, associated with mean streets, old boots, and shabby clothes, and they were inclined to think that that was all that Labour meant. All that Labour wanted was new boots, better clothes, and more to eat. True, Labour wanted all those things, but Labour was interpreted more truly when she said that it hungered far more for the things of the mind and soul. It wanted all those God-given gifts to man in Art and Science.

Such may be Miss Bondfield's idea, but she would get very little support from the rank and file of the party if ever she told them that was Labour's highest aim. The experiment might be tried occasionally. Just now there is a strike on the London underground railways—not that a strike is anything uncommon in these days, and if it were an essential to an experiment there might be a continuous run of experiments—so why not gather up all the labourers who have ceased to labour, fit them out with new boots and set them slipping about on the polished floors of the porcelain rooms in the Wallace Collection, or the butterfly rooms in the South Kensington Museum. Would Miss Bondfield think they would enjoy the experience and decide to vote for compulsory attendance in new boots at the Wallace collection every day? For the sake of making some sort of a show in the experiment it might be suggested that the day selected be one when Stamford Bridge or the Oval are unoccupied.

Smoke

It may not generally be realized that Shanghai, one of the most important cities in the world, and probably one of the greatest industrial centres in Asia, is comparatively free from one drawback that obtains at most great cities, where heavy industry is carried on to any appreciable extent. We refer to the presence and effect of large quantities of smoke from factories and workshops. It is true that there are many big industrial concerns in and around Shanghai, but mostly they are well scattered, with comparatively few in any one area. If there was ever any doubt as to the effect of large quantities of smoke on a city, it was dispelled at Sheffield some two years ago. During the prolonged coal strike of that time most of the Sheffield furnaces were shut for lack of fuel, and even domestic grates failed for a time to contribute their quota to the pall of smoke that normally hangs over the city. We are told that old residents who had lived all their lives in the Sheffield atmosphere realized for the first time that they had to thank (?) the steel manufacturer for obscuring the sky and limiting their range of vision, for, with the wheels of industry at a standstill, the sky cleared and the surrounding country with its pleasant hills and dales clearly could be seen. And so it might be with Shanghai, if we had hundreds of blast furnaces, belching chimneys, foundries, steam-hammers, presses, and so on. In latter years there has come to be more smoke in the atmosphere than was once the case. There is still time to see that it does not get beyond our control.

Far Eastern Shipbuilding

It is well-known that although shipbuilding in the Far East, and especially in Hongkong, Shanghai and Japan, has been an established industry for many years (thanks to the Scottish pioneers in this branch of industrial activity), the greatest impetus in this sphere of industry was provided by the war, when the call for ships, of any and every size, was universal and ceaseless. How well the yards in this part of the world responded to the call, and how much their efforts were appreciated by the Allies, is now ancient history; and from that time the efficiency and comparative cheapness of shipbuilding yards in the Far East was a fact established and acknowledged. In view of this, it is a little difficult to understand the pained surprise with which, apparently, the news has been received at Home and in Australia that the Hongkong and Whampoa Dock Co. has obtained, in open competition, an order for two passenger and cargo steamers for owners in Sydney (N.S.W.). The surprise appears to be based on the fact that both in the United Kingdom and in Australia are modern, up-to-date and efficient shipbuilding berths unoccupied and likely to be for some time ahead. To our mind, there is no reason for surprise at all. The successful tenders obtained the contracts in open competition; their efficiency, as that of all other shipbuilding yards in the Far East under British management or direction, is unimpeachable; and if, as no doubt was the case, their tenders were appreciably lower than any of those from either Australia or the United Kingdom, it is only logical and reasonable that they should have been awarded the contracts. Shipbuilding in these parts is an industry that has come to stay, and if Hongkong has obtained important contracts in open competition with some of the oldest and most efficient ship-construction establishments in the world, it is a matter on which Hongkong deserves heartily and sincerely to be congratulated. If such congratulation should be at all tempered by us in Shanghai, it should be only with the wish that our shipbuilding yards in Shanghai which, like those of Hongkong, have such a fine record of efficiency and achievement, shall secure some equally important jobs in the not distant future.

The Musk Deer

It has been noted many times before in these columns that, since the earliest days of the foreigner in China—and one takes no small pride in adding, especially the Briton—repeated attempts have been made to secure the drafting and enforcement of a series of rigid game laws, but Emperor, Dictator and President alike have been either callous or careless and to-day there is no more protection for wild birds and beasts than there was 100 years ago. Possibly there is less, for far more deadly and effective weapons now are used in the chase. An interesting story in the "Chinese Economic Monthly" once again directs attention to the necessity. Perhaps most people know that China is the greatest musk market in the world and China's product is in the highest demand. Of late years there has been such a great increase in the demand that now it is far in excess of the supply and thoughtless or ignorant people, intent only on profits, are engaging in reckless slaughter of the musk-deer. They are snared and killed at all seasons of the year, male, female and immature specimens alike, for the Tibetans have as much of a craving for the flesh and skins as foreigners for the musk. Up to 10,000 are known to be killed in Western China every year, according to trade returns, without taking into account those who fall to native hunters. Not only because of the demand, but mainly because of the difficulty now in finding the deer, the price of musk has gone up to five times as much as it was 20 years ago and the indications are that it will increase every year. The wideawake Dalai Lama foresaw what would happen and issued orders prohibiting indiscriminate slaughter of the deer, but practically no success attended his well-meant efforts and now no attempt is made to enforce the restriction. At the present time the musk trade is bringing enormous sums of money into China every year and with proper and adequate protection for the deer there is no reason why it should not continue to be a remunerative trade. It is common knowledge that a few years ago fortunes were being made from the export of pheasants in cold storage from districts not far from Shanghai. It is as well known that practically nothing is done in that line now—because the pheasants have been wiped out.

Road Building

The National Road Construction Association of China would have been a fine institution over in London in the days of those mysterious people, the practically defunct penny-a-liners, for the latter would have received twopence straight away for the title and any one of them would have been smart enough to work it into a paragraph at least twice. Those famous old characters ever were more keenly alert for something interesting about the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, the Queen Alexandra Institute and Orphange, or Sir William Treloar's Homes for Poor Crippled Children, than they were for societies with such diminutive titles as the Burns Club, the Royal Society, or something like that. But there are other people who do more than talk about roads and to them every credit is due. Without any particular blowing of trumpets, the authorities in the districts round about Quinsan and Taitsang have been dismantling the useless walls of towns and already are well forward with the work of building connecting roads in that part of the country, using the old bricks as foundation material. These roads will link up with Shanghai by the road to the rear of Chapei and it is said there is every possibility of the work being completed next year. Those who delight in the rural quiet of Henli in the summer time may feel somewhat annoyed when the motor-cars invade their retreat, but it will be a great delight to the majority to have the opportunity of so long a run out into the country. If the Henli people think they are going to be crowded out, it might be worth their while to consider an early removal to some other spot where they will have more room and to complete their plans while there is plenty of time.

Insurance of Sea-Travellers

While insurance has for many years been applied to almost any and every risk that one can think of (including such strange policies as a husband insuring against his wife giving birth to twins and a county cricket club insuring against rain preventing play in an important match), it is a little surprising that the insurance of the lives of those who travel by sea has received comparatively so little attention, both from insurance and shipping companies, and from governments. The advisability of insuring emigrants was we believe, first mooted at the General Labour Conference at Washington in 1919, again at the International Emigration Commission at Geneva in 1921, and yet again by the Comité Maritime International at Gothenburg last year. The matter has been taken a step further by the International Shipping Conference which has just finished its labours at London, and a committee has been appointed to study the whole matter with the Comité Maritime. What apparently is aimed at as essential is a real and comprehensive scheme of protection, not for emigrants only, but for all travellers by sea, against the negligence of shipowners and their servants, and also against all of the risks and chances incidental to sea travel. The International Shipping Conference considers that any such scheme could be worked by the shipowners carrying the emigrants at far less cost and with far greater satisfaction to the insured than by any organization set up by the country from which, or in whose ships, the emigrants or other passengers may be travelling. It is considered that the insurance, if provided by the shipowners, could be combined with the passenger ticket and its cost collected as part of the fare, thereby obviating the need of any separate organization charged with the duty of issuing policies and collecting premiums from either the travellers or the shipowners or both. The inception of some sort of automatic scheme of insurance will, no doubt, be welcomed by most people who travel by sea, especially so as, overseas travel being extraordinarily safe, and the percentage of deaths and injuries so negligible, the insurance premium should, in equity, be very small.

NEWS FROM THE OUTPORTS

CHINESE EASTERN RAILWAY GIVEN AWAY BY PEKING GOVERNMENT

Unparalleled Concession to Foreign Power: What the Soviet Would Gain Under the Sino-Russian Agreement: China's Sacrifice of Sovereign Rights

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Peking, June 14.

Li Hung-chang has been dead many years, but the mention of his name instantly brings to mind the most inglorious chapter of concession-grabbing that ever besmirched the relations between nation and nation. But even China's illustrious statesman, accustomed as he was to the bartering of Chinese territory, balked at the idea of granting a foreign Power the privilege of constructing or partly owning a railway line in China. In recounting the genesis of the Chinese Eastern Railway, Count Witte in his memoirs says Li Hung-chang absolutely refused to consider the construction or the owning of the proposed line by the Russian Treasury. Hence. the concession was passed on to the Russo-Chinese, now the Russo-Asiatic, Bank, and it was with the bank that the Chinese signed the agreement out of which grew the Chinese Eastern Railway. It never dawned on this statesman that the day would come when China would replace that agreement with one which passed on the concession to the Russian Government itself; and he would surely turn in his grave at the turn of events.

Russo-Asiatic Bank.

Whatever may be said of the extent of its governmental backing, the Russo-Asiatic Bank was never the creature of the Government. As the Russo-Chinese Bank it was in existence before it signed the Chinese Eastern contract with the Chinese Government. Its existence as an entity in itself was acknowledged in the minutes of the Portsmouth Conference, as a result of which the southern part of the Chinese Eastern, now the South Manchuria Railway, was ceded to Japan pending negotiations between the Russian Government and the Russo-Asiatic Bank. The terms with the Bank involved to indemnification by the Russian Treasury for this filching of its rights in the interests of reparations. In 1910, its independence was further exemplified in amalgamation with the Banque du Nord, which had over a 100 branches in Russia, and which strengthened considerably the financial foundation of the enterprise. From that time the Treasury's sole duty in the concern was the approving of the board of management, and even this was a mere matter of form. The shareholders carefully guarded their privileges from official encroachment and the Chinese Government on its part saw to it that there was no deviation from the letter and the spirit of the original compact.

Letter and Spirit Broken.

Now, however, both the letter and the spirit have been broken. China contracts with the Russian Government about a railway in its own territory, naked and unashamed. It is true the Koo-Karakhan document it merely an agreement on general principles which have still to be worked into a treaty; but these principles are premises on which one can build the main lines of the future agreement. It is the principle involved in the Chinese Eastern Railway "principle" to which attention is drawn, namely, that

> "the future of the Chinese Eastern Railway shall be determined by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Republic of China to the exclusion of any third party or parties."

Here we have a direct railway concession to another Power, without any camouflage, without any circumlocution. Is there another railway agreement on record in China which yields a principle so subversive of China's sovereignty? And there was no extortion about it; it was a free gift from China, as part and parcel of a reciprocal agreement.

It would not have been tolerated by Li Hung-chang, hardened as he was to the sphere of influence, but to-day after China has won the allegiance of all the "imperialistic" Powers to the renunciation of that imperialistic policy, the Peking Government gives away its birthright to the government whose principal tenet of faith is supposedly the territorial integrity of sovereign nations.

No Power Ever Got So Much.

Rykov and Karakhan protest too much that this is the fairest agreement that China has ever signed with another Power. No imperialistic Power ever secured such a privilege, no imperialistic nation ever pocketed such a concession. One wonders what the students would say if Japan asked to adjust its title on the Shanghai railway under the most favoured clause.

So it is that China has herself violated the provisions of the Washington treaties guarding its own sovereignty. Instead of reminding the Chinese Government of the resolution which puts China in the position of trustee of the Chinese Eastern shareholders—a resolution to which she did not agree—the protesting Legations might have based an objection to the agreement on the ground that it was an infringement of the clause relating to spheres of influence. It would have been very interesting to observe the effect of such an objection in Moscow.

The Huge Cost of Redemption.

It may be argued that China still holds the right to redeem the railway. It is stated in the Koo-Karakhan principle that "the governments of the two contracting parties shall settle at the conference. . . . the amount and conditions governing the redemption as well as the procedure for the transfer of the Chinese Eastern railway." The agreement with the Bank provided that the railway should revert to China free of all charge 80 years after traffic had commenced, which was about 1904; and that China could redeem it after 36 years, or in about 16 years' time. It is to be expected that the Soviet will allow China to redeem the railway any time she can raise the money; but when one considers the value of the line as it is to-day, there is little likelihood of the Chinese Government raising the huge amount required even in 16 years, let alone to-day. Count Witte stated in his memoirs that it was estimated that when the time for redemption came, the property would cost China over 700 million gold roubles; and even to-day the Government would have to raise nearly $400,000,000 for such a purpose. Under these circumstances, the concession that China now shares with a foreign government of one of the railways in its own territory is not likely to change its status for many years, even if Chang Tso-lin gives the Soviet a right of way in Harbin.

Marshal Chang's Romanoffs.

The Soviet will undoubtedly insist on the pound of flesh of redemption. That is perhaps the reason why they steered clear of a paper rouble offer which Chang Tso-lin is reported to have made! When Moscow started negotiations with Mukden after the Wang-Karakhan deadlock, they found the Manchurian warlord in quite an amenable frame of mind. He is naturally keener than the Peking authorities that the affair of the Chinese Eastern railway shall be adjusted; and he has sufficient power to insist that he shall be a party to the adjustment. Therefore, the writer understands, when overtures were made to Chang, the Marshal agreed with the proposal that the agreement that was negotiated between Dr. Wang and Mr. Karakhan be re-negotiated with him; but he went further and suggested that the two parties might anticipate the conference by also negotiating the purchase of the railway. He had plenty of Romanoff notes in his coffers, waiting, like many other luckless people, when they would rise out of the morass, and he offered them in payment of the line. Seeing that Romanoffs have fluctuated between $27 and $87 per 10,000, in the last few weeks, there is every reason to believe that the Mukden talk had some basis in fact. At any rate, Moscow deemed it wise to sheer off at this stage, and turn its attention again to the Peking government; and the Koo-Karakhan instrument was the result.

Moscow and the Bank

In one way, of course, one may appreciate the attitude of the Soviet for not parting with the Chinese Eastern for a song or roubles; it was probably thinking of its obligations to the Russo-Asiatic Bank! These obligations have been assumed in the agreement on general principles. In this connexion, it is interesting to mention that there has been quite a split between Mr. Karakhan and Moscow on the subject of the Bank. Mr. Karakhan wanted to rub out the Bank's account, which is the account of the shareholders, and to regard the institution as non-existent. Although the nationalization of private institutions is a favourite hobby in Soviet Russia, its present rulers differed from their representative in Peking in this particular application of the code of the Third International. A sharp dispute arose, the writer understands, the outcome of which was that Mr. Davtian, who was in favour of shareholders, returned to Moscow.

BRITAIN AND BOXER INDEMNITY

China Indemnity Bill Passes Second Reading: Motion for Rejection Defeated

London, June 16.

In the House of Commons to-day, moving the second reading of the China Indemnity Bill, providing for the allocation of the Boxer indemnity to the education of Chinese, Mr. Arthur Ponsonby, Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, foreshadowed the appointment of a committee to investigate means of securing satisfactory administration of the fund. He declared that Chinese co-operation was being invited and a Chinese member would be invited to join the Committee.

Mr. Ponsonby referred to a motion for rejection on the paper, which was presumably being lodged with a view to raising the trademarks question. He stated that, while the Government did not wish the minimize the importance of the trademarks question, they did not think that these funds should be used as a lever for the settlement of outstanding questions with China.

The House defeated the motion for rejection and the Bill was read a second time.

June 17.

Notwithstanding a Government reverse on an unimportant division last night, the Members of the House of Commons were listless yesterday, saving up their energies for the full debate on the Imperial Conference resolutions to-day and to-morrow. The Opposition is anticipating the contest with particular keenness and has put down many motions covering all phases of the decisions. In order to simplify business, however, it is expected that divisions will not be taken until to-morrow night and then only on three or four representative resolutions.—Reuter.

ALLEGED BRIBERY OF MANILA OFFICIALS

Manila, June 19.

Two members of the Manila Municipal Board have been suspened by Governor-General Wood on a charge of criminally receiving bribes or otherwise benefiting by the construction of public buildings. The amounts involved are believed to total more than Pesos 1,000,000. It is declared that some of the members have been profiting for more than a year by this or similar operations.—Reuter's Pcific Service.

THE Kiangsu-Chêkiang Summer Conference which was to meet in Soochow has been postponed, as financial assistance heretofore given by the Stewart Evangelistic Fund this year is not forth coming.

WU PEI-FU'S ENEMIES IN PEKING

Expected Test Case to Force President to Declare His Sympathies

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Peking, June 12.

The movement in the Chihli party to isolate Wu Pei-fu proceeds steadily, almost stealthily. Little is being said in the Chinese press in Peking about these subterranean manœuvres, but in view of the fact that the isolation of Wu Pei-fu concerns the President as well as his principal supporter, this is quite understandable. The withdrawal of the resignations of Wang Chengping and Feng Yu-hsiang mean nothing but an acknowledgment that the time is not yet ripe to declare themselves; but events are fast following each other which will sooner or later bring on the desirable season for such a declaration.

The minor lords of the Chihli party are all smarting under a dictatorship which is impinging on all their preserves. They have occasion every day to point to the increasing acquiescence of the President in that dictatorship. In the last analysis Wu Pei-fu's word is the final word in Peking. Naturally the other members of the party resent the focusing of the presidential eye on Loyang, leaving them out of the field of vision; and it is not unlikely that a crisis will be forced by a demand that the President come out in the open and declare himself on a test question.

At present there are at least three spots which may provide a test issue—Kiangsi, Szechuan, and the Sino-Russian agreement.

Kiangsi and Szechuan Bones.

In Kiangsi, the notorious Tsai Cheng-tsun continues to reap the fruits of opium cultivation. His authority is disputed by Chi Hsieh-yuan, who, as Inspector-General of the three provinces of Kiangsu, Anhui aand Kiangsi, has reason to expect Tsai's allegiance. But Tsai turns to Loyang, and Wu Pei-fu is believed to keep him in this saddle. Because of this direct loyalty to the Loyang General, General Chi wants to replace Tsai with somebody of his own choice. Tsai's acts in the last 12 months warrant his removal from office, and if Chi and his associates feel sure they have the situation in hand, they may precipitate a presidential crisis by asking Tsao Kun to cashier the poppy-cultivator of Kiangsi. Then a split in the Chihli party will be assured, and the President will have to choose between Wu Pei-fu and his antagonists.

Szechuan has always contained the seeds of Chihli strife. The last action of Wu-Pei-fu in making Liu Tseng-hou Inspecting Commissioner of the whole province, in addition to his frontier job, is not calculated to please Chihli men who think themselves entitled to expectations from Wu.

Chang Tso-lin and C. E. R.

Then there is the challenge contained in the future actions of Chang Tso-lin. By refusing to recognize the Russo-Chinese agreement to which Wu- Pei-fu has given warmest support, Marshal Chang may easily cause an explosion. No agreement about the Chinese Eastern Railway will be tenable without his concurrence, and it will be equally difficult for anybody to oppose his wishes regarding the future of Mongolia.

Chang is now accentuating his independence of the Peking Government by creating his own "ministries." Already a board has been established which will take over all railway affairs in his territory, and an organ to deal solely with his foreign affairs is in course of establishment. The Mukden chief seems bent on destroying all bridges which would connect him politically with Peking.

Portents of War.

It is difficult to gauge Chang's relations with the recalcitrant anti-Wu faction. If there is a definite split in the Chihli party, Chêkiang would undoubtedly compose its difference with Kiangsu, and possibly Chi Hsieh-yuan, Lu Yung-hsiang, Wang Cheng-ping, Hsiung Ping-chi and Feng Yu-hsiang would then strike a blow at Wu through Peking. Mukden's policy would continue to be one of watchful waiting, leaving the offensive to be taken by Wu Pei-fu; but there is every indication that Chang would be implicated when the challenge had been accepted by the Loyang chief. Experienced observers say they never knew a time when the portents of conflict were so gloomy.

CHINA'S FINANCIAL DIFFICULTIES

Friction Between Premier and Minister of Finance Said to Be Exaggerated

Peking, June 13.

Some members of the Cabinet left here this morning for Haitien with the object of persuading Premier Sun to return to the city, and it is expected that he will comply with their requests.

The belief is growing in unofficial circles that the alleged friction between Premier Sun and Minister of Finance Wang has been considerably exaggerated, and there is evidence that the Cabinet situation has been brought about principally by the Sino-German Agreement signed between the Waichiaopu and the German Legation last Friday. This agreement was rushed through hurriedly in order to regularize financial transactions between the Ministry of Finance and the Chinese banks, the Government having received advances to meet the Dragon Festival obligations on the understanding that the agreement would be settled prior to the festival. Premier Sun and the Germans were both in favour of settling all details in connexion with the agreement before the signing, but Mr. Wang insisted and the representatives of the German bank and the Ministry of Finance signed the agreement on the Thursday night. This agreement was confirmed by an exchange of Notes between the Waichiaopu and the German Legation at noon on Friday. (These facts, which were reported by Reuter on the same day, are emphasized in view of denials that have appeared in the Press since then.)

Premier Sun was not prepared to be heckled by Parliament over this matter and went to Haitien. A paper supposed to be under the Premier's influence has since stated that no friction exists between the Premier and the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Wang Koh-ming's supporters state that he has given instructions to the Treasury Department to compile a full report on the financial affairs since he became Minister of Finance last Novermber, and add that he will resign when that report has been completed. Referring to the Sino-German agreement, they say "that it is not unusual for the hound to be sacrifieed after it has caught the hare," which conflicts with the report that no friction has arisen.

The Gold Franc Question

Conflict between the Minister of Finance and the Premier is expected, however, over the gold franc question. Premier Sun is committed to Parliament not to admit the French claim for payment of the indemnity in gold, whereas the Minister of Finance sees that the Central Government is losing an additional revenue of some $2,000,000 a month through France holding aloof from the Nine Power Treaty. The gold franc question has not yet come to the front, but Dr. Wellington Koo is clearing up the big outstanding questions between China and the Powers rapidly and this question will probably be taken up very soon. As the Powers have now all refused to take part in the proposed preliminary conference on the tariff increase, China's only hope of bringing about the increase is to secure France's ratification of the Washington Treaty, and that can only be brought about by a settlement of the gold franc dispute.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

AT Hankow last week the jury found Cartar Singh, a Sikh watchman, guilty of a charge of indecent assault on a Chinese woman and he was sentenced by Judge Sir Skinner Turner to six months' imprisonment. Prisoner was also indicted upon two other counts, of rape and attempted, upon which he was found not guilty. Mr. A. G. Mossop prosecuted for the Crown and accused was defended by Mr. R. A. Frost. Mr. G. W. King, Registrar of the Supreme Court was present at the trial.

DEFENCE OF KUEILIN DAY BY DAY

Marshal Lu Yung-ting's Undaunted Resistance though Northern Relief Forces Unable to Reach City: Death of Rev. Cunningham from Stray Bullet

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

The death of the Rev. J. R. Cunningham, Kueilin's pioneer Protestant missionary, who was reported on June 11 to have been killed during the seige, is now confirmed by Our Own Correspondent in the beleaguered city. Mr. Cunningham was shot right through the head by a stray bullet on Saturday afternoon, April 26, while standing in the garden of his house. The following despatches, which fillI up the gap in reports of the fighting from April 16 to May 16, supply thrilling reading. During this period there was scarcely a lull in hostilities and the city was shelled daily by the Southern forces under Gen. Shen Hung-ying, whose troops are apparently effectively holding at bay forces sent to relieve the Gen Lu Yung-ting's besieged Northerners.

Kueilin, Si., Apr. 22.

This is the 13th day of the seige of Kueilin. Although every artifice has been used to force an entrance into city, they have all failed. During the past two days and nights the fighting has not been so severe, but there is still the steady rattle of rifles all around the city wall, while now and then the machine guns and large batteries add their thrilling notes to the awful uproar.

Both sides seem determined to fight to a finish, and each, at times, seem reckless in their use of ammunition. Marshal Lu says he will carry on to the bitter end: that he will fight to the last man and die in the city rather than surrender and hand over the place to the opposing hosts outside. The old governor's yamên which is now Marshal Lu's headquarters has had the iron gates partly closed and barricaded within with huge stones, but this is regarded by the more thoughtful as a move to instil courage into the hearts of the populous rather than a guarantee of what would really take place should the city be taken by storm.

Food seems to be plentiful though prices have arisen since the beginning of the seige. Nearly all the stores are now closed. The city has put on a Chinese New Year appearance save for the lack of firecrackers and this is made up by the louder and more momentuous cracks of the machine guns and rifle fire that is heard in all directions.

The city gates have been heavily barricaded with pavement stones and coffin lids, while snipers are concealed on a scaffolding under the archway above the gates ready to pick off and one who might attempt to rush in with kerosene and set fire to the gate. This has been attempted once or twice, but with disastrous results to these who made the attempt.

Civilian Casualties.

Large shells continue to fall in the city and civilians are continually being killed or wounded. One shell fell in the hsien yamên. There were several people standing in the outer waiting room when the shell burst. One of these was instantly killed by a fragment while two others were seriously wounded. Another shell came crashing through the roof of a near by weaving factory. It struck high, passed through the roof, a board partition, and then through a brick wall and out and through several other brick walls before it finally landed. No one was hurt, but a few were badly scared. A big store in the centre of the city was also visited by a shell, but although it exploded right in the shop where several clerks were standing, no one was killed, or badly wounded. The Baptist Mission compound suffered more severely. One girl was killed in the girls' school. Firing was in progress and girls had taken shelter on what was considered the safe side of the building, when suddenly a shell came from another direction, passed along the verandah where the girls were hiding, and struck one of the girls in the head, spattering her brains on the wall and flooring. The other girls mere not injured and the shell did not explode.

A few of the students were looking out of an attic window watching a battle, when a stray bullet came in grazing one boy in the head and entering the skull of another boy standing in the rear. The latter boy is still living, but hopes of his recovery are slight.

On Saturday evening a big blaze occurred just outside of the south gate. That day severe fighting had taken place outside of the west gate, and it was thought by some that the outside forces were about to retaliate by attempting to burn the gates. The fire burned fiercely for an hour or more and destroyed about 30 buildings, but it went out finally without any damage being done to the city. Again on Sunday night another fire started outside of the Literary Gate. This, too, lit up the whole countryside and caused some refugees in the city whose homes were on the outside to quake with fear lest their homes be destroyed. Again last evening a fire started to the north of the city, and simultaneously severe fighting commenced in the south and west.

City Magistrate a Traitor.

The citizens of the city are being closely watched and some accused of being in secret communication with the outside forces have been summarily dealt with. Ten days ago, the day before the city was invested, the head of the gambling fraternity was arrested, and after a brief trial was led out to the front of the Governor's yamên and shot. Yesterday the city magistrate was summoned before the Director of Forces and a few minutes later was led struggling to the street and executed.

Unsuccessful Sortie.

The fighting during the last two days has consisted of a sort of guerrilla warfare. The opposing forces surrounding the city hiding behind mounds of earth, rocky boulders, or adjacent buildings and sniping whenever they see a soldier's head appear above the city wall, or when one dares to peer through the parapets behind which they are hiding. City soldiers on the walls are acting likewise whenever a movement is detected by the enemy outside. Occasionally small irregular squads of soldiers creep up close to the city wall, and when they are discovered a lively artillery duel takes place.

Last evening a picked squad was organized for the purpose of charging into the enemies' ranks and driving them from a near by hill on which they had taken up their positions. A light floating bamboo bridge was prepared to enable the men to cross the small stream that separates the forces. Torches, kerosene, and all the equipment deemed necessary was provided for the attack. The night passed off without the anticipated skirmish taking place, but this morning one hour before daylight in a drizzling rain, sharp shots from rifles and automatics, with an occasional roar of a big field gun, told plainly that the attack was on. Shot and shell fell thick and fast, and again bullets began to fly over the city and find lodgement in the dwellings. This continued for about an hour when gradually the fighting slowed down again to normal. It was later learned that the attack was not wholly successful. The bamboo bridge over which the soldiers had to run was not made secure enough, and scarcely a hundred braves had scampered over when the bridge began to separate and prevented further troops landing for the attack. Consequently the position was not taken, but the troops hold the river bank and are planning another attack.

A few large shells have fallen in the city to-day from across the river, but no material damage was done, however, and no one seems to be perturbed. In fact as, the days pass there seems to be a sort of contentment settling down over the people. Shops that have been closed are gradually opening their doors, while street vendors can be seen again peddling their wares as if peace had been proclaimed. Hope says a few more days and then peace, as it is reported, that reinforcements are arriving from Hunnam and Liuchow. But those forces are likely to be strongly opposed.

Marshal Lu is still confident of victory, and he is continually seen among his men encouraging them to stand firm until the end is reached. The Marshal also visits the wounded in the Red Cross and other places and gives a cheering word to the men who have fought and fell for the sake of their leader.

Mr. Cunningham's End.

Apr. 28.

Two days ago it looked as if fighting was drawing to a close, but the dogs of war were again unleashed and shot and shell began to pour in and out of the city as before. On Saturday at half past four in the afternoon while the Rev. J. R. Cunningham, of the Christian and Missionary Alliance, was standing in his yard watching some workmen, a stray bullet came whistling over the housetops and struck him in the head. The bullet entered the lobe of the right ear, and passing through the head came out on the other side. Mr. Cunningham fell headlong to the ground and workmen at once ran and called for help. Friends were by his side in a moment and tried to help him. He never uttered a word. He had already gone beyond the help of man. Foreign doctors hurried to the scene, but arrived to find that life was extinct.

Mr. Cunningham had spent 27 years of missionary service on the field. He who was the pioneer missionary to enter this city, and throughout the succeeding years he had been indefatiguable in his efforts to preach the Gospel here and in the surrounding country. People of every rank found in him a loyal friend and a sympathizing helper in time of need.

Last year when the city was surrounded by hostile robber bands it was through the kind offices of Mr. Cunningham and Bishop Holden that bloodshed was averted and an amicable settlement made. These two men at great risk to themselves acted as go-betweens, and were later suitably rewarded by the grateful citizens for saving the city from destruction.

During past few years Mr. Cunningham has been instrumental in opening no less than 12 out-stations in the Kueilin district.

When the news spread around that Mr. Cunningham had been killed numbers of officials came to express their sympathy and regret at the sad accident. And the following day floral tributes were sent to adorn the coffin by members of both the Chinese and foreign community.

At the present time the city is in a state of siege, and fighting is carried on day and night so that it is impossible to conduct the funeral. The body will be laid to rest in the quiet church outside the north gate.

Huge Fires Nightly.

Apr. 30.

Fires seem to be an almost nightly occurance. On Saturday evening about nine o'clock the heavens were lit up by lurid flames outside of the Literary Gate. No one ventured to attempt to extinguish the flames as the least movement in the lighted district called forth rifle fire. The piteous cries for help could be heard above the crackling of the flames, and it is feared that many may have perished in the conflagration.

On Sunday evening an equally large fire took place outside the south gate.

It is reported that relieving forces from both west and north have come within 100 li of the city, but have met hostile forces and are now engaged in a sharp battle, the outcome of which may affect materially the situation here.

Orders have been isued by the Commander-in-Chief of the City forces that no more pigs are to be killed, so that the relief forces may be fed when they arrive. Dogs and horses are therefore being eaten, and cats find it much safer to sit upon the roof of the highest houses rather than come down to be fed and fondled. The Chinese Red Cross have opened congee kitchens where congee is being served free to the poor of the city who have not other means of sustenance. Rice also continues to be sold out of the city granary to the multitudes who apply for help. Many, however, cannot afford to purchase rice even at the cheapest price and considerable suffering is being entailed in many quarters.

It is stated that outside nearly all the city gates there are bodies of the dead lying around unburied. The fighting has been so intense that no one had dared to venture out, and now for 20 days these bodies have been soddened by rain and scorched by the sun, until when the breeze blows in from that direction the stench is almost unbearable, and great fear of an outbreak of plague is entertained in many quarters.

Reinforcements Held Up.

May 5.

During the past few days more fires have been raging in different sections of the city.

It is stated that the enemy forces had been using the burnt buildings which are adjacent to the city wall, as places in which to hide and under shelter of which tunnelling had begun leading to the city wall. It was therefore necessary from a military standpoint to have these building removed.

Unauthenticated rumous of reinforcements coming to our aid reach us nearly every day, and while none have materialized still there is doubtless a little truth in some of the reports. Gen. Han, from Liuchow is reported to have reached a place within one day's march of this city, but was met by a numerically stronger force and his undisciplined troops were forced to retreat. It is stated that he has now been strengthened by reinforcements from Nanning, and that the march for Kueilin has again begun. One-thousand soldiers are within one day's march of the city coming from the west, but fear to advance farther and so are waiting until additional troops reach them when a general march will be made in this direction. During the past 10 days quite a few of the opposing forces have been diverted to outside points to keep back the relieving troops, but they must have returned yesterday for this morning at four o'clock a general bombardment of the city began.

May 7.

Since the blowing up of the city wall yesterday it has been ascertained by spies that fairly large companies of enemy soldiers are in hiding outside the west gate in the Mohammaden mosque in a large godown outside the south gate, and in the Electric light plant near the Literary Gate, and it is feared that tunnels may be being made from these buildings to the wall. These buildings are too far from the city wall to be destroyed by fire, so it was decided to destroy them by big guns. Accordingly to-day about 20 old cannon shooting shrapnel were placed in position along the wall and at dusk these began to belch forth. The angry roars of the cannon were sometimes followed by the loud triumphant cheers of the soldiers indicating a hit. Presently in four different places fires started to blaze forth adding noise and confusion to the medley of frightful sights and sounds that greeted the ears of the somewhat panic-stricken populace.

RAIN-MAKING TABLET OF HANTAN

A Miracle Worker of Shantung and Its Curious History: Brought to Peking in Time of Drought and Once More Its Claims Justified

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Peking, June 16.

The writer has intended to say something about the "miraculous" rain tablet of Hantan ever since its arrival in Peking was followed by a much-needed downpour; but succeeding hot days have not inspired such a disquisition. He is taking up the subject now for two reasons, first, it is raining hard, and secondly, the tablet has just been returned to its Shantung temple after having justified its removal and left us a parting reminder of its far-famed properties.

Rain in Peking is a dismal subject. A sharp shower is sufficient to make the narrow hutungs almost impassable, while a heavy downpour canalizes the city into seas of mud which the ricsha coolies ford like cavalry horses, leaving their "fares" to hang on by their chinstraps, as it were. The writer has just come through one of these seas, and having been precipitated into the mud for letting go of his chinstrap, is in a damp enough mood to say "Yes" to the question, "Has the Hantan tablet 'worked' "?

But hereabouts the Hantan tablet is the last hope of the people, and so it may be well to look into the other rain-cozeners first.

The God of Rain

Like Westerners, when hopes of melting skies are on the wane, the Chinese offer up prayers. Instead, however, of keeping to the same ritual, as in the case of Westerners, the Chinese vary their approaches to the God of Rain. Sometimes they appeal to the brassy heavens by means of street processions. The streets are bedecked with garlands, and banners are borne aloft which return thanks in advance for the overdue shower. "Bountifully the rain is falling" and "the gracious rain is falling far and wide" are typical examples of these forms of intelligent anticipation. In many cases, unfortunately, they are translated into realization only in the fervent hopes of the people. Chen Huang, or the god of the city, is always on parade, while many other idols keep him company.

Another method of inducing the heavens to open is to prohibit slaughter for a few days. This was done in Peking in May, but the drought persisted. After this failure, the people dragged the Dragon King out of his temple and gave him a taste of the scorching weather, but again the skies were adamant. Then it was that the stricken farmers asked that the Hantan iron tablet be sent for, and the police despatched three men to the temple in Shantung and brought it to Peking.

When it arrived it was met by the local gentry and escorted in a sedan to a suitable temple. Prayers were offered during the next two days, and lo the heavens opened, resulting in the partial saving of a wheat crop that was in danger of entire destruction.

The Magistrate's Sacrifice.

The tablet has a strange history. In the Ming dynasty there was a particularly severe drought. The magistrate of Hantanhsien, as the little father of his jurisdiction, prayed unceasingly for rain to relieve the anxieties of the people. But rain did not fall. Unlike the curate who attributed his failure to the unpropitiousness of the elements, the magistrate thought the reason must be the distance between himself and the heavens, and so, dressing himself in his official robes, he committed suicide by throwing himself into a well in order that his soul might have a hearing in the skies. The next day rain fell abundantly, and the people, rejoicing exceedingly, petitioned the Emperor on the noble sacrifice of their worthy magistrate, who was promptly canonized. An iron tablet erected in the temple to commemorate the occasion was popularly supposed to hold the power of rain-giving, and was thereafter constituted the court of last instance by the people of the two provinces of Chihli and Shantung.

An Escort of High Rank.

In monarchical days the emperors always sent special envoys of high rank to escort the tablet to the people who required it. It was carried to Peking by hand in those days, and is of such a conservative character that it still clings to old custom and tolerates the railway journey only on condition that somebody maintains touch with it all the way. On the last journey to Peking it was held in this fashion with all due reverence.

The tablet, which is held is high respect by the people, is never summoned to Peking; it is asked to come. Coincidentally with its visits to these parts, rain has fallen copiously on several occasions. Although it did not respond to overtures last year, in 1920 it fulfilled the promise of the records on two separate occasions.

One suspects that much of the tablet's success is due to the fact that it is brought out only when all other methods have failed, thus giving it a longer chance; but it would not do to express these suspicions to the farmers in the Peking district whose faith in the iron tablet of Hantan has been firmly established by the rainfall in the last few weeks.

SZECHUAN AS IT IS TO-DAY

Delimited into 20 Petty Military Kingdoms: Yang Sen only Holding Capital

From Our Tachienlu Correspondent.

Kiating, Sze., May 21.

Szechuan has at present a standing army of 300,000 men. For a province containing 60 million people this does not seem very large or very imposing. But the disposition of this army gives it a dimension which is somewhat alarming and a cause for very grave apprehension.

The 300,000 soldiers are strategically disposed round 20 different generals and in very close proximity to 20 important sources of revenue. The size and significance of Kiating as a military centre is unimportant: what really counts is, will the local revenue support and will the immediate district feed 10,000 men. If it can't or won't then Gen. Bu is quite prepared to fight Gen. Fu who unfortunately is in a much better position. And so the war goes on.

At the present time, in every important centre in Szechuan, one can hear the blowing of bugles from morning till night. One sees the drilling of troops during the cool hours of the day and one can feel the military spirit dominant in every wayside village, market, and town. Unimportant cities are loaded with parasite soldiers well fed and well clad whose hardest piece of work is marching daily through the streets singing. An increased lung capacity, especially when the band blows next door, is not an unmixed blessing.

Szechuan and her 60 million people is now divided into 20 petty military kingdoms. Each general is a despot in his own sphere: he holds himself entirely responsible for its internal peace, its sacred integrity, and its independence of any outside state. He will not tolerate any interference from Peking, Tsao Kuen or Wu Pei-fu. To the divine right of things he adds one simple dictum, the divine right of military despots. One general in Szechuan has shot and will shoot anyone who dares to cross his path. History is divided into periods, this large, important, wealthy, province is at present enjoying its "Military Period." I don't think it could be said with truth she is groaning under it: there is apparently plenty of revenue, plenty of money, plenty of opium, plenty of rice, plenty of men and what is very important, plenty of time. The civil official has become entirely honest and the military governor rules supreme.

Yang Sen's Little Realm.

Yang Sen does or did rule everything and everybody 12 miles outside of Chêngtu. Within his own little realm he will guarantee your peace and safety. Beyond his little kingdom he has no control and you travel entirely at your own risk. After you have passed through "no man's land," a distance of three or four miles, Gen. Pu takes you in charge and sees you safely escorted through his immediate principality. Traveller, merchant, and tradesman, they all pass along; robbed here, squeezed there, held up for a time here, allowed to pass there, through "no man's land" and one little kingdom after another till in the maze he begins to ask, is this Gen. Wu or Gen. Su's territory.

From Chêngtu to Kiating, a journey which may be made in one day by boat, the Chinese pass through the lines of Yang Tsi-huei, Liu I-chu and Cheng Hong-fan. In two or three more days he would be through the lines of Liu Tsi-chien, Liu Hsiang and Liu Tsen-hou. Add to this the military lines of Lai Hsin-huei, Yuen Tsu-ming, Hsiong Keh-wu and Tan Meng-hsin and a host of other major and minor military officials and the readers from any distance can visualize this great province not only sliced and quartered but divided and subdivided till its divisions suggest an enlarged map of Ireland.

One surprising thing about the whole picture or situation is the apparent prosperity and seeming indifference of the population. The farmers are busy in their fields, the merchants in their shops, the housewives in their homes. The soldier after all is not really a soldier, that is not a fighting man, but a simple Chinese coolie or farmer lad dressed in light gray. In the 20 days' journey across the province we saw very little poverty, practically no shortage in food, and an abundant supply of opium. Happily the 300,000 soldiers and the 20 generals confine their energies and activities to such cities as Chêngtu, Kiating, Suifu, Liuchow, Fushuen and Chungking. On no occasion could we see or did we hear that the Chinese army was a burden on the people. In some centres admission into the army is not too easy, especially is this so with Chen Hong-fan in Kiating. There the relation between the military and the civilian is most friendly and the intercourse quite mutual.

There is, however, one very great danger—the Szechuan army is decidedly on the increase—each general is striving to increase his army and thereby increase his power and prestige and thus necessitates an increased revenue and this will undoubtedly be followed by an increased burden.

END OF CIVIL WARFARE IN SZECHUAN

Finale to Thirteen Years Struggle: New Officials and Revival of Trade

Peking, June 11.

A mandate issued last night appoints General Liu Tseng-hou Inspecting Commissioner of the armies in Szechuan. The post is principally an honorary one and will not interfere with his duties as Tupan of the Szechuan-Shensi Frontier. General Liu reports that he has established his headquarters at Chungking and asks for an official seal.

As the result of Marshal Hsiao Yao-nan's request to withdraw the Hupeh troops from Szechuan the arrangement has apparently been reached for the 3rd Mixed Brigade at Wanhsien, the 5th Brigade at Yungchuan and Lungcheng to be withdrawn, while the 5th Division under the command of General Lu Chin-shan will remain in Eastern Szechuan to protect traffic along the river, and the 18th Brigade will stay at Chungchow. —Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, June 13.

With the appointment by the Central Government of the regular military and civil officials for the province of Szechuan, the 13 years' struggle in that province is looked upon in official circles as brought to a conclusion. It is learned that, since the issue of the Presidential mandates making the appointments, much progress has been made in the arrangement of administrative affairs. It appears that General Liu Tsun-hou, Yang Sen, Liu Hsiang and Tang Shi-hou are tired of political struggles and are willing to concentrate their efforts upon administrative affairs.

There are still small parties of troops under Lu Ching-hsuan in the several districts to the south of Szechuan, but it is expected that within the next fortnight or so they will be suppressed. The situation both at Ichang and Chungking is said to be settling down rapidly. There are, however, evidences of small groups of bandits who make their appearance off and on and passenger traffic is interfered with at times. But since the placing into service of the Upper Yangtze patrolling squadron, both Chinese and foreign merchantmen are travelling unmolested. The fact that the godowns in Hankow are full of goods for shipment to Upper Yangtze ports shows a revival of trade.

Gen. Yuan Tsu-ming, commanding the Kueichow troops, is unwilling to remain long in Szechuan and is anxious to return to his own province. Negotiations are proceeding with Liu Shieh-shin with a view to his returning without conflict.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Wu Pei-fu wants to use the Russian remitted portion of the Boxer Indemnity to build a railway from Suiyuan to Singkiang viâ Mongolia. He even expects to work it profitably enough to devote a part of its revenues to education, comments the "Sinwanpao." His plan seems good at the first glance (says the paper). But when one considers the desert land through which most of this railway would travel, can one seriously expect that it could be worked profitably? It might be valuable perhaps for military purposes, but never commercial.

MORE PURGE ON THE KIAO-TSI RLWY.

Managing Director's Ban on Smoking and Drinking to Speed up Efficiency

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tsingtao, June 12.

A stern warning has been issued by the managing-director of the Kiao-Tsi Railway to all employees to cease drinking excessively when patronizing cafes and to give up the evil practice of opium-smoking. The managing-director contends that the Railway has received a poor return for the wages paid to a number of its employees whose chief preoccupation has been to run out of the Administration Buildings during the office hours ostensibly for the purpose of going to the doctor but in reality to have a drink. The worst evil, however, is opium-smoking, gambling ranking next. Mr. Shao Hung-chun is seeking to teach his employees habits of temperance and thrift. Recently he has been exercised by reports that certain of his men have been indulging to excess in drinking, opium-smoking and gambling and in a conversation with your correspondent yesterday he said he was aiming to stamp out these evils. If any of his employees persist in these practices after due warning they will be severely dealt with, either being demoted or dismissed.

Mr. Shao has issued a circular on the subject, requesting all employees to refrain from these practices. He describes them as being harmful in a physical way and costly to the pocket-book. He believes that in many cases instances of dishonesty have arisen from indulgence in evil habits. He, therefore points out the necessity of refraining from gambling, drinking and use of drugs.

Through Traffic Conference.

A conference for the purpose of effecting through traffic arrangements between the Kiao-Tsi Railway and the Tientsin-Pukow Railway is in progress in Tsinan at the Railway Hotel there, having opened this week. Matters that must be decided before this improvement can be brought about are engaging the attention of those attending this conference, whose decisions must have the sanction of the Ministry of Communications. The representatives of the two lines are said to be in accord on the question of the cost of the work entailed in raising the station platforms, construction of new sidings, the problem of train yards and a joint freight house, the disposition of rolling stock and the question of through traffic signals. Shippers and the general public are interested in the proposition, as a through traffic arrangement will appreciably shorten the time of through hauls over the two railroads. As soon as the conference ends its deliberations the entire matter will be referred to the Ministry of Communications for approval.

Tsingtao International Recreation Club.

The Committee of the International Recreation Club of Tsingtao is inviting public subscription to 1,000 shares of $50 each. Those applying for allotment, according to the notice just issued by the Club, will have to include 10 per cent. of the value of the shares required with their applications. The Committee, however, does not bind itself to allot the number applied for, everything depending upon the number of applicants and the number of shares available. The shares of the Club are considered locally to be a gilt-edged investment. The Committee, as the name of the Club implies, is an international body, and is comprised of men of very high standing locally. It is predicted that within three years from now, the shares of the Club will be worth considerably more than the original price.

Child Welfare Week.

The complete programme for Child Welfare Week commencing on June 19, is announced by Mr. James O. Kinoshita, chairman of the executive committee. Mr. Kinoshita and his energetic aides have arranged an interesting programme which should interest every father and mother in Tsingtao. Because of the international character of what might be termed an intensive campaign to acquaint parents with accepted methods of child care and child hygiene, the movement should have the earnest support of everyone in both the native and foreign communities. The presence of leading medical authorities from Japan lends much importance to Child Welfare Week.

PAKHOI-LIMCHOW MOTOR ROAD OPEN

Omnibuses Proving Popular: Another Southern Mint

From Our Own Correspondent.

Pakhoi, May 31.

The great event of the past month has been the opening of the new motor-road from Pakhoi to Limchow. Up to the present only two cars have been running, but others have been delivered or are on the way, and the instant success of running the first two, shows that the service will be a popular one, and will supply a long-felt need. The crowds that assembled at each end of the road to witness the arrival and departure of the cars, are only just beginning to diminish. The road has not had much labour expended on it to make a permanent surface, but gangs of men are kept constantly employed in repairing it, as the surface is so soft, though in some places small stones are being rolled in. The farmers' little stone rollers are being used for that. For about half the distance from Kotak onwards the new road runs on, or close beside, the old one, and two old stone bridges, had to be widened. The widening was done as cheaply as possible, for there is no room for anyone to stand on the bridge between the car as it crosses and the parapet on either side. Nearing Limchow the road has struck out an entirely new track, east of and at a higher level than the old one, in the hope of avoiding summer floods, but it has been made much too narrow and winding for safe and speedy running. There are some very bad S-bends which necessitate very low speed.

The larger car of the two is of the omnibus type, very similar to the ones running in Kowloon, and holds 16 passengers, 6 first-class at $1.20 fares, and 10 second-class at 80 cent fares. The distance is less than 20 miles and the time taken for the journey is just under an hour. An extension of the road to Shekhong is already being surveyed and it is hoped that it will be in use this summer.

The new road is under military protection and a few soldiers are stationed at intervals to deal with any brigands who might come along. That this precaution is not unnecessary is seen by the fact that a village quite close to Limchow, on the Shekhong road, was looted by robbers only a few days ago, very early in the morning.

Some alarm was felt in Limchow recently, at the appearance of an aeroplane flying very high overhead. It was thought that it might belong to Sun Yat-sen's army and have hostile intentions. However, it went away without doing anything, and a subsequent comparison of dates, suggests that it was probably the French Aviator, d'Oisy, passing from Hanoi to Canton on his way round the world.

Owing to low rainfall the people of Limchow are holding processions to the various temples to pray for rain. A little rain has fallen lately, but much more is needed by the farmers.

Since the flight of Gen. Wong Ming-tong last August, his unfinished mansion on the outskirts of Pakhoi has been in process of gradual demolition, all who would, going there and tearing out floorboards and window-frames for firewood. Occasionally soldiers have been stationed in it temporarily, but now the authorities seem to have taken it over altogether, and it is said that a mint is to be started in it. Already small furnaces have been built there and a lot of machinery has been installed, including small presses and lathes. It is to be hoped that a sound coinage will be turned out, and not a depreciated one, but the experiences of other places does not encourage such a hope.

YANG SEN'S IDEALS AND HOPES

New Tuli's Ingenuous Propaganda

From Our Own Correspondent.

Mienchow, Sze., May 29.

The foreigners in this city yesterday received through the post a little brochure, tastefully got up on good glazed paper. Its contents are a biographical sketch of the career and ideals of Gen. Yang Sen. It is written in good English and might have been produced by a foreigner, but seems to me to bear evidence of being the work of a Chinese pamphleteer, a piece of propaganda. Foreigners will doubtless readily believe the general truthfulness of its message; and will be helped to a better understanding of Yang Sen and his work. No one here doubts his ability, nor do they suspect his motives, but they know the difficulty of his task. They feel too, that he finds it difficult to live up to his ideals. It would need a man of the ability of his great predecessors in Szechuan, Chu Ko-liang or Tsiang Wan. Perhaps he has that ability. But even they found Szechuan politics more than they could cope with; and present circumstances seem to have many points of similarity with the far away politics of the Three Kingdom Period. It is true the greatly increased population and presence of foreigners make two important modifying factors: but as one reads the ups and downs of Three Kingdom politics and contrasts the situation with to-day the atmosphere seems very much the same.

It is doubtless only just to Yang Sen to believe that he himself and his more cultured officers are in advance of Three Kingdom Period civilization: but they could hardly be more magnanimous than were Chu Ko-liang and the greater of his confrères.

The ideals and hopes that Yang Sen is credited with in this little sketch are admirable; and perhaps it would be ungenerous to remark that there is much happening to contradict it: for in the present condition of China a man with excellent motives will find countless things to prevent him realizing his ideals.

The trouble is who is to be at the top? That is the difficulty at the present time. Chu Ko-liang was unquestionably a greater man than the first sovereign of Shuh, Liu Pei; but he served him faithfully as the man to whom fate had given the pre-eminence.

That is the kind of man that the Republic seems so sadly to lack and the stories of friction between Yang Sen and Liu Tsen-hou and the latter's conference from which he omitted Yang Sen are not reassuring. This is how the pamphlet ends:—

"Ever since the Revolution, the Chinese people are constantly meeting with misfortune; but these misfortunes are the result of fighting. The unscrupulous originators of these petty wars carry them on under various pretexts, such as, 'Self-government,' 'Liberty,' and 'Enforcement of law,' etc. There are really only a few of these enemies, who work to satisfy their own selfish ends. Now, in spite of whatever pretexts they take for fighting against Gen. Yang, he only does his best to unify the Province, and bring about union throughout the country. For without union nothing can be accomplished. Gen. Yang says that he regards union as the most important and the most urgent step to be taken. If union be not consummated he will reprove himself seriously. After union has been gained he will do his best to manage and direct inside political movements."

The italics are mine and I am thinking of Liu Tsen-hou. "If two men ride a horse one must be in front."

HONGKONG PROPERTY DEAL

Hongkong, June 14.

The Banque de l'Indo-Chine has bought the Victoria Building, next to the Chartered Bank, for $87,000 with the object of erecting a new bank building.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

The Hankow native press is informed that the cotton-mill at Chiaochow, which is capitalized by Japanese merchants, will start work at the beginning of July. The majority of operatives, both men and women, will be employed from Shanghai.

SENSATIONAL PIRACY AT CHEFOO

Southern Attempt to Capture One of Adm. Wen's Ships: Vessel Attacked Instead

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Chefoo, June 13.

The Ching An, a small Chinese-owned vessel which plys regularly twice a day between Chefoo and Yamatao, a few miles south of this port, received the unwelcome attention of a pirate band whilst only a few minutes out of the latter port. Reports indicate that these men were not the usual ruffians, but officers from the South who had in view the capture of the warship Hai Chi, which has for some months been lying in the bay. It will probably be remembered that this vessel was at one time the property of the Southern forces, but came over to Marshal Wu and the North, being at present under the jurisdiction of Admiral Wen. The idea of the outlaws was apparently to capture the vessel and restore her to the South.

There are various stories accounting for the reason why this plan was not proceeded with and, in view of the fact that they are so conflicting, it would be unwise to quote any one particular report as authentic. However, the Ching An was eventually beached and deserted by her captors. The vessel has since returned to Chefoo and is again making her two trips per day. According to the Chinese newspapers, 13 of the "bandits" have already been captured, and are now in Chefoo awaiting execution. The ringleader, a man named Wu, has not yet been apprehended and a reward of $300 has been offered to anyone responsible for his arrest.

Although no lives were lost in connexion with this affair it is pleasing to note that the authorities are showing no leniency with those concerned. It is to be hoped that their attitude will effectually put a stop to any further attempts at bandity.

Holiday-makers Arriving.

Chefoo is now entering upon its summer season and visitors are already commencing to arrive in fair numbers. It is anticipated that, with the arrival of the American Fleet in the near future most of the available accommodation will be bespoken. The latest report received here is that U. S. S. Huron will arrive on the 23rd instant whilst the destroyers and other craft will arrive later, the whole fleet being here by the July 15. The new Broadway Hotel, of which mention was made in an earlier letter, has been completely booked, as have also the eight bungalows attached to same. It should prove extremely popular with visitors and every effort seems to be being made to cater for guests in the best possible manner.

There is only one great drawback, apart from the increase which is caused in the cost of living, from the visit of the Fleet and that is the number of bars and cabarets which are opened in the town. These are to be found in the most conspicuous places and are most decidedly not conducive to the popularity of the port. The residents have recently, in view of the extraordinary large number of bars and other undesirable places which have been opened, petitioned to the International Committee to use its influence to have such places closed immediately. The petition will in due course be handed for consideration to the Consular Body who will, it is presumed pass it to the Chinese authorities. It is greatly to be hoped that the last-named officials will realize the importance and necessity of taking the action suggested. Admiral Washington, who recently spent a few days in port in his yacht the General Alava, endorses the views of those who have signed the petition. He has gone so far as to state that, unless the majority of the bars are closed and all undesirable places abolished, he will not allow the Fleet to visit Chefoo.

The Navy Y.M.C.A. is already installed here and, from information received, its programmes and work lead one to believe that the institution will be a greater success than ever.

The new Indo-China S. N. Co.'s str. Lienshing arrived in port today. The company are certainly to be congratulated upon this addition to their fleet. She will be regularly on the Shanghai-Tientsin run and will undoubtedly be the most popular vessel on the run.

CAPTURED MISSIONARIES IN KUANGSI

Escape of Mr. Ray, but Mr. Jaffray Still Held

Peking, June 12.

A telegram from the British Consul at Changsha says that the Rev. Wilson, a British missionary who recently set out from Yingchow in an effort to obtain some news of the missionaries in the beleagured city of Kueilin, reached his objective on June 1 and hoped to enter the city on the following day.

June 14.

A Consular telegram from Canton reports that the American missionary, Mr. Rex Ray, who together with other missionaries had been captured by bandits near Pinglo while proceeding to Kueilin with the object of succouring the missionaries in that beleaguered city, escaped on June 11. Mr. R. A. Jaffray, the British missionary, remains in captivity.

The news reached Canton from the U.S.S. Pampanga, which is at present at Wuchow.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

C. M. S. Part Expected Shortly at Yungchow

Mr. J. A. Bailey, local secretary of the Church Missionary Society, courteously informs us that he has received a telegram from Yungchowfu, dated the 12th instant, worded as follows:—"Kueilin party due here 17th."

Mr. Bailey is of opinion that this refers to the members of the Church Missionary Society who were in Kueilin during its investment, and are probably Bishop and Mrs. Holden, the Rev. and Mrs. H. S. Bailey, the Rev. and Mrs. J. N. Bland, Dr. Charlotte Bacon, Mission Santter, Pim and Watkins.

OPIUM EXTIRPATION IN ANHUI

Farmers Who Paid the Tax and Then Lost the Opium Profits: Someone's $200,000 Squeeze

Peking, June 10.

The latest report received by the International Anti-Opium Association from Anhui contains a lamentation which is strong evidence of Tuli Ma's attempts to clear the province of poppy cultivation. The report is evidently intended to arouse sympathy with farmers who paid the poppy land tax and afterwards suffered the loss of their crops.

The report says that in 1923 Anhui produced several millions of dollars by opium tax, and the people in many districts were encouraged to plant again this year. In some places the opium has already been harvested, while in others it is nearly ready for harvest.

In reply to a recent order from the Tuli, General Shih Shun-yu, Commandant of the 5th Brigade, replied that General Ma was urgently in need of funds to pay the troops, and that both Wuwei and Pochow had raised about $200,000 by the opium tax. This angered the Tuli and orders were given for all poppy in those districts to be uprooted immediately. This order was transmitted to the Wuwei Magistrate by the Taoyin of Anking, and the poppy was immediately pulled up.

Who Got the $200,000?

Some one has the $200,000 and the people have lost their opium. Had the officials obeyed the mandates issued last February, the farmers would have sown other crops. The loss of their crops has brought many farmers to the verge of ruin.

The officials of Wuwei anticipated this year profits as large as they reaped last year, namely, about $1,000,000 from the land tax and the subsequent taxes on the opium produced. These funds were to be divided as follows: $200,000 to the Tuli, $200,000 to the Wangpu, $200,000 to the Taoyin, $100,000 to the Magistrate, $100,000 to the Opium Commissioners, and generous sums to the gentry. The people now are demanded that the officials concerned should be severely punished.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

MILITARY ACTIVITIES IN CANTON

But Little Fighting: American Interest in Arsenal Plant: More Protested Taxes

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Canton, June 11.

During the last week there has been considerable activity amongst the military forces, although there has been little if any fighting. The situation round Waichow has not materially altered, in spite of the continual rumours that serious attacks are about to be made.

The most interesting event is the reorganization of the Cantonese troops, who will be formed into three Armies, the First Army under Gen. Leung Hung-kai, the Second under Gen. Hsu Hsiung-chih (who is also C.-in-C. the Troops), and the Third under Gen. Li Fuk-lam.

Further additions have also been made to the number of foreign troops who are assisting Dr. Sun Yat-sen, by the arrival at Yungyuen of some 4000 Fukienese troops. Their commanders have been in Canton the last few days interviewing the Doctor and making arrangements for cooperation.

Efforts are still being made to get the troops stationed in the City to move outside, but so far little progress has been made, with the result that the numerous disturbances caused by disorderly soldiers continue. The authorities are doing their best to put a stop to them but have great difficulties to face.

Arsenal Machinery Dispute

Considerable interest was caused recently by the stopping of the removal of certain machinery which has been lying in a godown here for some years for the Canton Arsenal, awaiting the final payments. The owners, the Davis Co., renewed the contract with successive Governments, but the last one expired last June, and they wished to sell the machinery elsewhere. It was to be removed, but owing to opposition of the Canton authorities they were unable to get coolies to handle the cargo in Canton and imported labour from Manila, and chartered a Japanese steamer to transport the cargo. The matter was then taken up before the American Consul-General, and a means of settling the matter amicably is being sought. This, it is believed, has now been done although the terms of settlement are not yet known.

Pawnshop Strike

On June 9 the pawnshops in Canton all went on strike as a protest against a new tax. They have not yet resumed business, and great inconvenience is being caused to the poor people in the City. It is reported that they are about to resume.

The question of the Civil Governorship has not yet been finally settled, but it is almost certain that Gen. Hsu Shao-ch'ing, who was Civil Governor some months ago will be re-appointed. He is well-liked by the merchants, and during his last tenure of office was popular.

It is announced that there will be a large review of the Gendarmerie, Police, and Merchants' Volunteers, on the North Parade Ground in about ten days time. It is expected that there will be about 5000 men on parade and they will be inspected by Dr. Sun Yat-sen and Gen. Hsu Hsiung-chih. The arrangements are in the hands of Gen. Wu Te-chen, the Commissioner of Police and Commander of the Provincial Gendarmerie. The Foreign Consuls and communities are to be invited.

HONGKONG GOVERNMENT AND PIRACY

Ship's Officers' Award for Wounds Received

Hongkong, June 16.

The Government has decided to make an ex gratia payment of $1,000 each to Capt. MacKechnie and the Chief Officer, Mr. Robb, in respect of the wounds which they incurred in the piracy of the Sanning.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

FROM July 1 next, sleeping cars will be inaugurated on the Peking-Suiyuan Railway.

NEW COMMERCIAL BANK FOR UPPER YANGTZE

Mashal Wu Pei-fu's Interest: Enough Capital to Begin

Peking, June 13.

Mr. Sun Tan-lin, former Minister of the Interior, who is forming a commercial bank with a capital of $20,000,000, to operate in the Upper Yangtze regions, and who spent the Dragon Festival holidays in Loyang with Marshal Wu Pei-fu, has left there for Hankow. It is understood that Mr. Sun has now an available capital of some $4,000,000.

In accordance with the usual regulations, with one-fourth of the authorized capital paid up, the bank will commence operations, which, it is expected, will take place in the early autumn. Mr. Sun will go to Szechuan and Kiangsu to make the necessary arrangements for the opening of the bank.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

RUSSIAN REFUGEES IN THE PHILIPPINES

Adm. Stark's Men Eager to Gain Admission to U. S.: Health Tests to Be Made

Manila, June 5.

A survey of the condition of the 250 Russian refugees, who arrived here nearly a year and a half ago from Vladivostok, is to be made this month by the Philippines Health Department, the Bureau of Customs and a physician of the United States quarantine service to determine whether they are qualified to enter the United States. There appears to be little likelihood of the refugees being allowed to land in the United States for many months to come, but Admiral Stark, who led the colony from Vladivostok, expresses the hope that arrangement for admission of most of the Russians may be made.

About a year ago some 600 of the 850 who came here in February 1923 were sent to San Francisco on the army transport Merritt, and reports from them about favourable conditions in the United States have caused their friends and relatives remaining here to renew their efforts to reach America.

The colony of some 7,000, headed by Admiral Stark, adherent of the old monarchical régime, was forced to leave Vladivostok by the Soviet. They took 16 small ships and set out late in 1922 to look for a country in which to land. Several thousand were dropped in Korea and other thousands were left in China, a number of ships being sold en route to obtain subsistence. When they reached the Philippines, the personnel had dwindled to 850 and the number of ships to 11. During the last year and a half five more of the ships have been sold, leaving six now at the Olongapo naval station.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

CHINESE IN CANADA

Strong Resentment at New Order Requiring all Chinese to Register

Victoria, B.C., June 15.

Chinese in Canada have designated Dominion Day, July 1, as "Humiliation Day" to mark their resentment at the Dominion regulations requiring all residents of Chinese origin to report to the immigration officials for registration before the end of June. Thirty-eight thousand, according to the last census, will be affected by the order, which was passed last year. The Chinese regard it as an unwarranted affront to the dignity of the race. While Canadian flags on July I will fly at the mast-head, Chinese flags in Vancouver and elsewhere will be half-masted.—Reuter's American Service.

IN a telegram to the Government, Mr. Chu Chao-hsin, Chargé d'Affaires in London, reports that the British Government has consented to conduct further negotiations for the restitution of Weihaiwei, in order to reach a speedy settlement. This according to the Chinese press. One cannot think, in view of all that is past, that it is likely.

PEKING'S PRICE FROM THE SOVIET

Reported $500,000 Were Paid by Moscow for Recognition for Dragon Festival Needs

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Peking, June 10.

It is rumoured that part of the price for China's signature to the Koo-Karakhan agreement was $500,000, which the Soviet Mission paid to the Government to tide it over the Dragon Boat Festival. If this is so, it explains what Mr. Karakhan really meant in a speech he delivered recently to a jubilant host of students. The Soviet representative, according to the faithful Rosta, referrred to the unwritten part of the Agreement. Now this in itself had an ancient and fish-like smell. People in China are very familiar with unwritten parts to agreements; even the British High Courts have been told about them by the Marconi Company. But Karakhan, of course, did not mean what everybody else means; he meant some high falutin' nonsense about the soul bond in the understanding. Listen to what he said:—

"What I wish to say now is something about the unwritten part of the Agreement but one which is perhaps more valuable and precious and which both you and we keep in our hearts."

That was all, and the students applauded. It is not suggested that Mr. Karakhan wilfully misled the students. He was simply poetizing a very vulgar transaction, but the poetry was all that mattered to the students.

As a matter of fact, the Soviet envoy was delicately truthful. The present, or loan, which he is reported to have given to the Ministry of Finance was certainly "precious and valuable;" it has left the Mission poorer by half a million dollars. It was also "precious and valuable" to the Chinese, for it helped considerably to meet the obligations of the Government at this time of the year. On their part they have made no mention of the matter at all, and Mr. Karakhan's reference that he keeps it in his heart may be an unpleasant reminder to them of a hope that it will be repaid. The Soviet representative, who is generally accused of bluntness of speech, surely was too polite on this occasion. To have been more explicit, he should have said; "What I wish to say now is something about the unwritten part of the agreement, but one which perhaps is more valuable and precious and which you keep in your treasury and we keep in our hearts." But that is not the "dope" for the students.

H. M. S. ROBIN'S BRUSH WITH PIRATES

Commander Tudway Wounded: Numbers of Pirates Killed by Machine-gun Fire

Peking, June 11.

Despatches from Canton give an account of an incident which occurred recently on the East River, near Wuchow, when the British river gunboat Robin was fired upon by some soldiers from the banks, and, returning the fire, inflicted a good many casualties.

It appears that the Robin had been sent up the river to bring down some British-owned launches which had been captured by pirates. Near Wuchow some soldiers opened fire from the banks and Commander Tudway, of the Robin, was wounded in the thigh. The gunboat replied with a machine-gun fusillade which sent the soldiers scurrying into a handy clump of bamboos. Ranging accurately with the assistance of a pagoda near by, the Robin's machine-gunners then swept through the bamboos, killing about 30 of the soldiers and wounding an equal number. The enemy's "artillery" consisted of an antiquated muzzle-loader, the missile from which bounced harmlessly off the gunboat's side.

When the affair was over, the Robin went on up the river and had no difficulty at all in collecting the launches and bringing them back.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE Waichiaopu has instructed the Bureau of Foreign Affairs here to submit a list of schools, hospitals and other property belonging to Russian missionary organizations.

NEW HEALTH RESORT OF MANCHURIA

Jelantun Which Harbin Railway Administration Is Doing Its Best to Make Attractive

From Our Own Correspondent.

Harbin, June 9.

The excursion that had been arranged by the Railway Administration to that delightful summer resort Jelantun was a success in every way and every credit is due to those who were responsible for the details. It is quite true that a number of people who were expected to make the trip decided otherwise at the last minute either being depressed about the Sino-Russian agreement or fearing the weather conditions but they were the losers. The train-de-luxe consisting of observation car, restaurant car, three pullmans and a baggage car pulled out of Harbin Station at 11 p.m. on Wednesday evening and the 80 passengers on board immediately made themselves comfortable and turned in for the night, being informed that breakfast would be served on the train at 8 a.m. on the morrow just before arrival at Jelantun. Those up early on Thursday morning soon realized that perfect weather was in store for them and the excellent Manchurian atmosphere, as the mountainous district was approached, had an exhilarating effect on everybodys' spirits.

Jelantun was reached without incident soon after nine o'clock and undoubtedly is the most delightfully situated of the numerous attractive summer resorts along the Chinese Eastern Railway system and with a wonderful future. It is at an elevation of some 1100 feet above sea-level and is situated in a valley on a most beautiful mountain rivulet, the Yar River, which has its source in the Hinghan range some 90 miles distant. The mountains surrounding the resort rise to a maximum height of some 2000 feet whilst the valley is over four miles in width and covered with a thick grass of luxuriant growth abounding with a great variety of wild flowers giving a profusion of colour.

Accommodation and Amusement

Under the able guidance of Dr. Chaplik, who is in no small way responsible for the creation of this summer resort, the visitors were mustered together and shown over the place. One could not fail to notice that the streets are well laid out and lined with trees and that everything is most spick and span as becomes a model and up-to-date village. First of all a visit was paid to the Casino, with its spacious verandah opening into a grove of trees and well laid out flowerbeds. Here some hundreds of persons can be accommodated for meals, whilst in the building itself is another large room, a retiring room spacious lavatories, a hairdresser's saloon and a bar and at the back connected by a corridor pantries and up-to-date and spacious kitchen and usual service rooms to be found in European hotels. The Casino is being operated by the International Sleeping Car Company who regardless of expense have fixed up the "appointments" in a manner that cannot be excelled in the whole of the Far East. Close to the Casino is a two-storied brick building used as a hotel with numerous well-furnished bedrooms available by the day or month at most reasonable rates, 80 from $1.50 per diem and $40 per mensum. In addition to this there is another similar two-storied building on the bank of the river and two large bungalows for the same purpose thus offering accommodation for 100 or more persons. Besides this there are several furnished villas and cottages of two or more rooms specially adapted for families requiring accommodation for the whole season. All are solidly built in brick and equipped with radiators or Russian stoves so that they may be used in the winter as well.

The most attractive feature of the resort is its bathing pool. For this special purpose a branch of the main stream has been damned and sandy beaches improvised. The water runs over the dam, a fall of some four feet. The falls are illuminated at night as well as the paths leading to it creating a dazzling effect. On the beach about the pool there are canvas canopy bathing—boxes, reclining canvas chairs and other facilities for bathers and onlookers besides a few boats and canoes. As the river is fed by numerous springs along its course it is always cool during the middle of the day. At present the temperature of the water does not exceed 16 degrees Reamur (68 Fahrenheit). A few hundred yards from the pool is the main stream of the river and here one can find many beautiful natural bathing pools varying in depth from two to 15 feet. Foot paths have everywhere been made and rustic-bridges thrown across the numerous streams and thanks to the trees and foliage there is plenty of shade making the spot shady and delightful during the whole day.

Musical Delights

Though there is no formality about the social life of the place everybody changed for the dinner-concert which wound up the day. Thanks again to Dr. Chaplik all the principals of the Operetta have been engaged for the season by the Railway Administration who have placed a first-class railway car at their disposal on which they reside. Besides giving concerts at the Casino they are also to give performances from time to time at the Railway Club which boasts of a stage. The dinner menu was as excellent as the tiffins. The company broke up shortly after 11 o'clock many going to the waterfall to see the illuminations and fairy-like effect before turning in and satisfied with themselves and the world at large. Congratulations to the Casino management that they intend to keep early hours and the place is to close by mid-night, it is as things should be at a summer resort. Congratulations are also due to Mr. Yanashevsky the untiring Harbin agent of the Wagon-Lits and his assistants who attending to the comforts of the guests both on the train and at the Casino. It is impossible to write at one sitting as to all the attractions that Jalantun offers and with what care is being taken to make all visitors comfortable, the three days spent at this resort by the writer were to short to appreciate. Seeing that the journey takes some nine hours from Harbin and notwithstanding the fact that it is made during the night, the length of the trip is rather against the place for people who can get away for only a day or so, seeing that there are other summer resorts along the C.E.R. much nearer to Harbin. But for those who can get away for a few days or longer we have no hesitation in recommending Jelantun as an ideal spot for spending a holiday under the best climatic conditions as well as with acquiescence of comfort.

IMPORTANT NEW BRIDGE FOR TIENTSIN

Tender Accepted by Haiho Conservancy Board: Reported Price Over Five Lakhs

Tientsin, June 15.

The Haiho Conservancy Board has, upon the recommendation of its Chief Engineer, Lieut. Pincione, accepted the tender of the Etablissements Dade & Schneider, who are represented by Olivier & Co., in China, for the new international bridge. The new bridge will be of the type known as the Scherzer Rolling Lift.

What the cost will be has not been stated, but the sum is reported to be more than five lakhs of Taels. Some 31 tenders were received from firms of many nationalities, ranging between five lakhs and over ten lakhs.

The bridge in question is to be built to the west of the present bridge and will form a continuation of the Rue de France. The present bridge is considered inadequate for Tientsin's needs, and when the new bridge is completed, which is expected to be somewhere about 1925, it is expected to do much for the facilitation of communications and commerce.

AMERICAN MISSIONS IN JAPAN

Tokio, June 18.

More moderate counsels prevailing and the Committee appointed by the Japanese Christian Leaders' Conference failing to agree regarding a definite course of action, the proposal to break off with American missions has been dropped.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE ARMS EMBARGO IN CHINA

British Government Strongly in Favour of Effective Application

London, June 16.

In the House of Commons to-day Mr. P. Hannon (Conservative) asked whether Mr. MacDonald's attention had been called to the inadequacy of the present embargo on the importation of arms into China and whether, seeing that it operated in favour of countries which had failed strictly to observe the terms of the agreement prohibiting this trade, he would consider the desirability of modifying the agreement so that British manufacturers might have the opportunity of tendering for Chinese armament contracts.

Mr. MacDonald replied in the affirmative to the first part of the question, adding that the Government attached great importance to the arms embargo agreeement and, in order to secure its effective and uniform application, were endeavouring to expedite replacement of the existing agreement by the modified form proposed at the Washington Conference and elaborated by the diplomatic representatives at Peking. If Mr. Hannon were aware of any recent tenders by foreign manufacturers for supply of arms to China, he would be glad of particulars.

Mr. Hannon asked whether Mr. MacDonald was aware that foreign countries were sending arms into China now.

Mr. MacDonald said that he thought Mr. Hannon would gather that from his former reply. He would be exceedingly obliged if Mr. Hannon would send him any information he had of a specific case.—Reuter.

HUPEH KIDNAPPERS' BARBARISM

Mutilating Bodies of Children to Make Chinese Medicine: Bandits again Active

From Our Own Correspondent.

Wuchang, June 11.

A considerable amount of kidnapping is still going on in this centre; in fact, cases are said to be of almost daily occurrence, the victims being both boys and girls. The criminals are suspected to be in hiding amongst the immense river boat population of this neighbourhood, and the Hanyang river police have been given orders to make a strict search for suspicious characters among all the boats on the Han and Yangtze Rivers. Yesterday, one offender was caught in the streets of Wuchang. He was seen in a ricsha with a girl of 15, and a policeman, thinking the circumstances suspicious, stopped him to make inquiries. The girl was found to have been rendered stupid by some of drug. The man was taken to prison, where no doubt he will suffer the fate which he richly deserves.

The motives for this vile crime are no doubt varied. It is probably most profitable to sell the child as a slave. But it is said that another motive is to kill the victim and take out the eyes and internal organs to make medicines. Last week, at Hsientaotsen, a market town up the Han River, the bodies of several kidnapped children were found mutilated, and this fact lends probability to a statement which otherwise one would be unwilling to believe. That such a hideous crime is not unthought-of in China is shown by the fact that it is the very crime of which the early missionaries were so frequently accused.

Hupeh Bandit Leader Active.

Brigandage is still rife in the north of this Province. Around Anlu, there is such a reign of terror that all the wealthy inhabitants have left the villages and taken refuge inside the city. Only the poor are safe outside the city walls. The brigands are said to be defeated and disbanded soldiers from the fighting in Szechuan. Lin Hsin-huei, the Hupeh bandit leader, is still active in the regions round Suichow and Tsaoyang. Chi Kung-shan, the summer resort north of Hankow, is to be guarded this summer, as it was last year, by a special company of soldiers sent up by the Tuchun.

It is curious to find one of your correspondents referring to the T'ong Shan Shae as a new secret society. The T'ong Shan Shae is a religious society, which has been growing for at least 10 or 12 years. It has branches in nearly all the large towns of North and Central China, and numbers amongst its leaders many of the most respected men in such places. Its main object is a kind of religious eclecticism, i.e., it seeks to combine the best features of all religions. But it seems to be most akin to Buddhism. At its meetings, the members sit cross-legged in silent meditation, as the Buddhists do. The rules of the society are secret; but it has no political complexion, and there is probably no more harm in it than there is in freemasonry.

WATER LOW IN KIANGSU CANALS

Cargo Boats Aground Everywhere: Awful State of Soochow Creek

By Our Own Correspondent.

Soochow, June 17.

Returning from Shanghai by boat the other day, I could not fail to be impressed with the chronic condition of the Soochow Creek. Within a very few years no boat drawing 40 inches will be able to get through.

Even beyond the creek, however, I passed launches and heavy cargo boats hard aground. The launch Taiwu which was to have begun her run on the Great Lake between Wusih and Huchowfu some weeks ago, has not yet been able to get into the middle, though she was able to cross the eastern end some time ago. Until there is more than another foot of water, this boat will be useless. Her owners are naturally very disappointed at not being able to start her during the silk season. A good rise in the water level had been hoped for early in April.

The new homes for the foreign staff of the A.P.C. will soon have their roofs on. These residences are being built in the Concession, just south of the Commissioner of Custom's residence. Near these new residences the Standard Oil Co. bought an old house two years ago which they practically re-built, making it a very pleasant dwelling. Together with the staff of the Customs this makes quite a foreign community in the Concession. Though quite a distance from their offices, the oil men will be in close proximity to their tanks and godowns.

These rains have been most welcome. As the water in the lakes and canals has been so low, the rice fields have naturally been at a considerable level above the water. Pumping with water wheels has therefore been extremely arduous, men and buffalo cows being hard at it day and night.

NEW BRIDGE OVER YELLOW RIVER

Peking, June 13.

A Loyang report says that Marshal Wu Pei-fu is in receipt of a telegram from the Ministry of Communications, dated June 12, with reference to the matter of the reconstruction of the bridge across the Yellow River for the Peking-Hankow Railway. It is understood that a preliminary agreement will be signed shortly between the Chinese Government and an Anglo-Belgian syndicate. The cost of the entire work is not yet ascertainable.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

CLAN FIGHTS GROWING FIERCER

No Longer Question of Face-saving, Fisticuffs and Muzzle-loaders

From Our Own Correspondent.

Taichow, Chê., June 9.

Taichow would scarcely be itself if all were living in peace and quiet. A visit to the two hospitals in the city assures one of the not very comforting fact that it still is "itself," as far as the country districts are concerned at any rate. During the last fortnight or so several men have been carried in suffering from gun shot wounds. Dr. Sagerguist, in charge of the C. I. M. Hospital, has had to deal with one specially serious case of a young fellow wounded in a faction fight. Fortunately he is successfully pulling the patient through.

Whilst recently on a visit in the northern district I was awakened with a start at about 3.30 a.m. by the banging of guns in the neighbourhood. Later on I found one young fellow had been shot dead in the street of a hamlet near by. His dead body was laid near where it fell and covered with straw until some responsible person had viewed it, and a coffin had been made for its reception. The fight took place between two factions in the same village and at surprisingly close quarters. I had occasion to visit the village in the afternoon and found that whilst a middle aged man was evidently the leader of one party, only young men were armed with guns.

Then and Now.

Their guns were of a very superior pattern to those used a few years ago, and had the appearance of service rifles though not of recent make. In the old days villagers used muzzle loaders and sometimes, in their excitement, forgot to put in the bullet, or forgot to ram it home and allowed it to roll out before they fired. The powder, too, in the former times was carried about in lumps, broken up in the street, and divided round. These things I have seen, for I had the privilege, doubtful one it may be, many years ago of being in the thick of a village fight. The present-day contest is quite a different matter. Rifles and cartridges are used. Men are killed or wounded in greater numbers now. Although none of the fighters have confessed as much, I believe the old order of fighting was preferred to that of to-day. Fewer lives were lost, less serious wounds were inflicted, and, if anything, the old guns made more noise than the ones in use to-day, so that "face" was quite effectually saved.

On my way back to the city on the following day I met about 40 soldiers on their way to the scene of battle. Probably the two factions will conceal their weapons, as well as animosity, whilst the soldiers are in their midst. When they return to camp both may reappear unless in the meantime their interests have become absorbed in the cultivation of rice.

Poor Wheat Crop.

Harvesting operations have now practically ceased and most, if not all, the wheat has been gathered in. The crop has been a disappointing one, thin and of rather a poor quality. It seemed to me that what wheat growers call "rust" was making its appearance in one or two districts. No sooner was the wheat gathered in than the work of planting out rice was begun. Most of this work has now been done and for the rest of summer the workers' energy will be bent upon keeping the roots well watered.

As far as personal observation and inquiry go, no poppy cultivation is carried on down here. The habit of opium smoking amongst the well-to-do appears, however, to be steadily growing.

Stories of bandits kidnapping persons at Shaohsing and Ningpo and bringing them to Shanghai where negotiations for their release have been going on between the kidnappers and the families concerned through middlemen, continue to be a prominent feature in the Chinese press.

NIGHT OF FEAR ON YUNNAN BORDER

Between Chinese and Burmese Border Tribes: Traveller's Escape

A travelling representative of the B.-A. T. Co. sends the following vivid narrative of a fight, in which the Chinese were badly routed, between border tribes on the Burma-Chinese frontier, west of Tengyueh, Yunnan province.

Tengyueh, Yunnan, April 29.

We left Tengyueh for Lungchang-kai on Friday, April 24, the Magistrate having made no difficulty about granting an escort. Mr. Harding, the British Consul at Tengyueh, gave me all the information he had regarding recent raids by Kachins (border tribes) and fighting between them and the Chinese at Kanai, but assured me of his conviction, based on the experience of other British subjects during this war, that the Kachins were in no way hostile to foreigners or even to traders, and that there was no danger to be expected if I undertook the journey. Mr. Harding even proposed to travel with me, but had to abandon the idea at the last moment.

We spent the first night at Nan-tien where conditions were quite peaceful. The next day we reached Kanai without mishap and found the village deserted by all inhabitants and with only 150 Chinese troops in possession.

We called on the Commanding Officer, a Major Yen, who told us that the tribes were in rebellion, and that Kanai had been attacked several times during the last few days. They also expected an attack that evening as the enemy had collected in large numbers and were camped in the hills a few li away. Taking this to be one of the usual rumours that brighten Chinese warfare, we returned to our inn and turned in at an early hour.

An Early Morning Strafe

At 2 a.m. we were startled by an outbreak of firing. We got up and dressed and settled down to wait for the morning. The firing gradually increased in volume and before long we could here the bowls of the enemy who had apparently entirely surrounded the village. There is open country all round Kanai and no protecting wall.

At 5 a.m. the attack evidently started and the noise was terrific. They were evidently beaten back however, and things became quiet for a while. A glimpse out of the windows revealed a dull red glow which conveyed to us the disturbing news that part of the village had already been fired.

It was a terrible night. Every now and then a horn would sound—a low droning note like a distant foghorn. This would be followed by a deep cry taken up on all sides, exultant and fiendish, increasing in volume. There must have been at least of the enemy, but Chinese reports, of course, put the figure as high as 6,000.

Daylight at Last

At daybreak—the most welcome daybreak I have ever experienced—the garrison sallied forth to attack blowing trumpets and shouting to keep their courage up. We went out and inspected our bodyguard—a band of 20 ruffians who had been detailed to protect us. Most of them seemed to have been recruited locally and they were a weird collection—armed to the teeth with old muzzle-loaders, swords and even cross-bows. They seemed quite cheerful and we gave them tea and cigarettes.

We were soon forced to go indoors, as the firing had again started. Until 10 a.m. the battle continued—the howls of the enemy becoming more and more distinct. Bullets whistled over our refuge. The awful drone of their horns seemed to be coming nearer and nearer. The smell of burning was getting stronger and when we ventured out we could see a huge fire about 50 yards away on our side of the street with the wind blowing in our direction.

It became evident that we must soon make a move, unless we wanted to be roasted, and we were very relieved when an orderly came rushing up and told us to prepare to retreat. We hurriedly saddled the mules and were barely ready when the word came to run. We were compelled to abandon all our luggage and dash for the East Gate under heavy fire. My cook, who was the last to leave the inn saw six Kachins with naked swords and streaming hair coming over the back wall. If we had delayed a minute longer things might have been most unpleasant. As we emerged one of our escort was hit in the hand by a bullet. He picked up his rifle and followed us. At the East Gate we were delayed in the open for what seemed an eternity waiting for the remainder of the troops. The troops with us were panick-stricken but one of the officers held them back and kept control splendidly. As soon as the remainder were sighted we were off, and with a wild yell dashed for the open.

Nightmare Retreat

I am not ashamed to say that I was among the leading members of the retreat and I ran for my very life. I have never heard such a pandemonium. It was a regular pantomime battle, our troops firing as they ran, the bullets whizzing by and hitting the road everywhere. It seems a miracle that none of us were injured, for the Kachins were lying in ditches 100 yards away firing for all they were worth. We could distinctly see the puffs of smoke, and in some places they were standing up and firing. We must have made a glorious target, on the elevated road. Chen Tsu-liang, our Tengyueh manager, had a bullet through the rim of his hat, the cook a bullet between his legs. He was weeping bitterly when at last we stopped. I managed to seize a frantic pony and scramble on, but was thrown into a ditch and wrenched my knee. My next effort was more successful and I caught a mule and was able to hang on.

About a mile from Kanai we stopped and collected our party together. There were remarkably few casualties, a few soldiers wounded and all our party untouched. The total killed and wounded among the Chinese we were told, was about 20. The Kachin casualties were said to be much heavier.

Countrypeople Slaughtered

We set out at once and reached Chetou before dusk. Here we have a dealer who put us up for the night and gave us a good dinner. The following day (yesterday) we returned to Tengyueh and celebrated our wonderful escape. The staff are all badly shaken and have asked for a short holiday before returning to Talifu.

Since writing the above I have heard from Mr. Harding that "every Chinese in the Vale of Kanai, man, woman and child, who did not succeed in escaping has been slaughtered."

HANGCHOW HOSPITAL EXTENSION

Women's Leper Hospital, Fresh Air Home and Other Buildings on Pine Hill

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Hangchow, June 10.

To-day Mr. Hsao, the Chief of Police, opened the new C.M.S. Leper Hospital for Women, the Home of Rest for Nurses and Workers, the Home of Rest for Doctors and Workers, the Isolation Hospital for Women, and the Fresh Air Home for men on Pine Avenue Hill.

Dr. Chang Pao-kyin, Dr. Duncan Main's first pupil who came to him 40 years ago, and is now a leading Hangchow physician, was in the chair, and gave an account of the C.M.S. Hospital's leper work from its inception.

The Police Chief was presented with a gold-plated solid silver key as a memento of the occasion. He and Dr. Li, Chief of the Army Medical Corps here, and a number of other guests referred enthusiastically to the good work of the hospital.

Dr. Main, Principal of the Hospital and School, responding, thanked everybody for their kind words. What he had done in ten years was now before them, and since his return from furlough the five new homes they were opening had been built, costing $26,000. Of this sum only $2,000 had been subscribed by the Chinese for the New Leper Hospital for Women.

VILLAGE WORK BY MISSIONS

Experiences of the Ningpo Missionary Association

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Ningpo, June 12.

Last evening at the house of Dr. and Mrs. Thomas the Ningpo Missionary Association held its June meeting. There was a very good attendance of the five societies making up the Association:—The Anglicans, Baptists, Presbyterians, Methodists and C. I. M. The chair was taken at 7 p.m. by the President, Rev. W. Tremberth and after the dismissal of preliminary business the subject for discussion at the meeting was announced. This was "The Problem of Village Work" and was very ably introduced by Bishop Molony, who at the outset of his remarks called the attention of the members to the work now being done by Mr. Roland Allen, an independent and friendly critic of Missions. This gentleman, said Bishop Molony, had disagreed with some of the methods adopted by long established Missions in appropriating to themselves the new causes that had sprung up quite spontaneously in places hitherto untouched by the Foreign Missionary, thereby curbing the free expansion of a Chinese Christian Church on its own lines and stereotyping to its own form an activity which it would have been far better to have left to develop in its own way.

While not explicitly agreeing with this criticism Bishop Molony contended that there was good in it and he proceeded to point out cases where in the village work of the C.M.S. such spontaneous growths had taken place and how that Society had dealt with them. He also pointed out the system by which the same Society encouraged self support and self control among its Church communities showing how by a reduction of five per cent. per annum of the Mission grants the native Church was slowly trained to assume responsibility and weaned from its dependence upon foreign supplies.

Mr. Tremberth, who has had many years of village work in Yunnan, followed by touching on some vital problems which he declared affected the very existence and continuance of Christianity not only in the country districts but ultimately in China itself. One of these was the tending of the young people. In his (the speaker's) experience the attention of the Chinese pastors was directed almost exclusively to the adults of the Church. Sunday Schools were at a minimum and even societies like the Y.P.S.C.E. had their membership chiefly of grown up people. These in turn had not, it seemed, had enthusiasm enough to bring in their children to admission to the Church and consequently as time had passed the membership of many of the country churches had declined. Services therefore directed to the young were very desirable and to gain these many means might be employed; the more effective employment for instance of the talents and energy of young students who had returned to the village from the Middle School and the rendering of services more interesting by the introduction of a certain amount of form and ritual provided that the purity of spirit was maintained.

The Rev. F. R. Millican, Principal of the Ningpo Middle School aided the debate by relating the work undertaken by the students of his own institution among the outlying villages and showing how fruitful it was on both sides, by giving the student on the one hand right ideas of Christian service and bringing enlightenment and hope on the other into places left destitute of spiritual care. Other contributors were Miss Zimmerman of the Riverside Girls' Academy, the Rev. S. J. Delight and the Rev. W. L. Bromley who brought the discussion to a fitting conclusion by the recital of verses from Tagore showing the essential connexion of the Church with "The poorest, lowliest and lowest," such as were found in the villages of China.

The chairman then announced a change in the programme, forthwith calling upon the more musical section of the company to entertain their fellows. Miss Monica Davies of the C.M.S. was the first to respond by the rendering of two violin solos (Feuillet d'Album and Allegro Brillante, by William Ten Have) which none of those who heard are likely to forget, for their brilliancy sweetness and 'verve' brought down the house. Miss Florence Honey, teacher of music at the Riverside Girls' Academy then rendered with exquisite touch Grainger's "Country Dances" on the piano and Mrs. W. P. Bates (soprano) gave a very feeling interpretation of Gounod's song "O Divine Redeemer" and as an encore "The Smile of Spring" by Percy Fletcher. The accompanist was the Rev. W. P. Bates.

Through the generosity of Dr. and Mrs. Thomas refreshments were served at the close and thus ended one of the most delightful evenings that the Association has held during recent years.

THE EXECUTED WUCHANG AGITATORS

Sixth Man Shot at Loyang: Scene at Meeting of Electric Light Co.

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Wuchang, June 9.

Last Saturday was the Dragon Boat Festival. It was kept as usual, as a general holiday; but the usual racing in boats on the river was forbidden. The rumour got about that the reason for this prohibition was fear of a political disturbance. This rumour had a plausible foundation in the fact of the arrest of six labour agitators in Wuchang, as I reported last week. The six were taken to Tayang and five of them were immediately executed there. News has since come to hand that the lawyer, Lin Feng, who was temporarily spared in deference to the telegram from the Provincial Assembly, has since suffered the fate of the other five.

But in all probability, the prohibition of racing had nothing to do with this political unrest. It was simply with a view to preventing the senseless quarrels and loss of life that nearly always accompany these occasions. The boat races that used to be held in connexion with the Dragon Boat Festival nearly always led to clan quarrels, and very frequently, in the fury of these disputes, people were pushed into the water and drowned. The legislation may be grandmotherly; but it is apparently necessary in order to protect such grandchildren from themselves.

A comedy has recently been enacting itself in Hankow over the election of a new Chairman of Directors to the Hankow Electric Lighting & Waterworks Co., which is now a Chinese company under native control. Five or six weeks ago, the term of office of the Chairman of Directors having expired, a meeting of shareholders was called together to elect a successor. There were two candidates for the post, one being a local gentleman and the other from another province. This fact led to a great deal of jealousy. The "foreigner" was violently opposed by the local clique and the meeting broke up in disorder.

A second attempt was made a week later to elect a Chairman, but it ended in the same way. After this, the Governor took matters in hand and a third meeting was called under special orders. The doors were guarded by police, and only those shareholders who promised to vote in the right way were admitted. But even this measure did not succeed in solving the problem. The Chairman was duly elected; but his election was followed by the resignation of the majority of the directors, so it has since been impossible to hold any board-meetings. Since these works supply the whole of Hankow, both native city and concessions, with electricity and drinking water, it is of the utmost importance that their efficiency should be maintained.

A strike of workers has been anticipated, succeeding to the manifest discontent of the shareholders, and in order to guard against this a strong guard of soldiers have been placed on duty, night and day over the works. Every employee is kept closely to his duty, and all going and coming, except of authorized persons, is forbidden. How long this state of things can continue, it is hard to say.

CHINESE-AMERICAN FRIENDSHIP

Governor Kao on the Two Countries' Identical Aims and Ideals

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Tsingtao, June 5.

With the arrival of the American cruiser Huron, the social pulse of Tsingtao quickened. A reception was given by Governor Kao-En-hung and Admiral Wen Shou-teh on Monday afternoon at Forest Park. On Tuesday afternoon, the American consular officials were hosts to the officers of the fleet and many of the American community.

At the banquet given by Governor Kao En-hung and Admiral Wen in honour of Admiral Thomas Washington and his staff, his Excellency, in the course of a charming speech, said that the peoples of other nations, on account of their geographical situation, had always had different degrees of temperament, but the American and Chinese nations, with their immense territories, natural resources and natural means of communication had always found little need to compete with other countries. There was identical love of peace on the part of the Americans and Chinese peoples. It was the tie that bound the United States and China to a common cause—the preservation of peace.

In 1858, the Governor continued, war broke out between England, and France on the one hand, and China on the other. It was only through the mediation of the United States that peace was eventually restored. Subsequently, in 1868, Pu An-chen, Chih Kang and Sun Kia-ku were appointed by the Chinese Government to visit Europe on a peace commission, the United States lending very generous assistance. "It might be interesting to you to know," Mr. Kao said, "that the American who went with that Commission, and who was known to the Chinese as Pu An-chen, died on account of over-exertions in this commendable service. This was the first appointment of Ambassadors to foreign countries in Chinese history." After that the relations between China and America became closer and closer, culminating in the support extended to this country at the Washington Conference, by which the peace of the Far East was secured—an achievement which would forever have a place in the minds of the Chinese people.

No Peace Without Security.

"As the Chinese and Americans are such peace-loving peoples, why should they both maintain armies and navies?" he continued." In respect of the Chinese there was a very interesting explanation. It was that the ancient Chinese character 'Wu' or 'Martial Spirit' was composed of two radicals bearing the meaning "ceasing or stoppage of arms," and for centuries the saying "Stoppage of arms is the real martial spirit" has been a by-word amongst statesmen, whereas amongst those in military service, it has always been understood that 'soldiers may not be called into action, but they should always be held in readiness.'"

It was evident from all this, Governor Kao said, that those who loved peace should be equipped efficiently to enforce it. Since the American revolution of 1776, she had, in addition to a civil war, found it necessary to take up arms on different occasions until finally she participated in the great European War—to help to maintain the independence, freedom and unity of the world. In each of her engagements, America's motives coincided with the doctrine that the stoppage of arms was the real martial spirit, for in each engagement the motive was to curb the unwarrantable aggression of the enemy.

Admiral Washington replied briefly.

TAGORE'S FAILURE WITH YOUNG CHINA

The Man Who Preaches Spiritual Power and Control Has No Hearing from Young China Set on Material Progress and Physical Domination

FROM A CORRESPONDENT.

Wuchang, June 8.

"Young China" is filled with the passion for material progress and force and is continually comparing herself in speeches, in print and in diverse manners (one of which is the student preaching of hate for Japan) with the nations that possess these things. It is a "complex" which takes strange forms—some laudable, some of "self-humiliation" and attempts to stir oneself up by the internal combustion of excited verbiage—not always realized by those affected by it.

Tagore has found already rampant in China the danger he warns the world, swift undigested material progress and mere masses of abstract scientific facts overwhelming the spirit, and such abstractions being accepted as a substitute for real creative truth and concrete moral personality. To such as extent has this gone that those with some knowledge of natural science in China, often very imperfect, usually profess the philosophic theory of materialism, in a way that is 50 years out of date even in the materialistic West.

Rejected of Young China.

This Chinese situation explains the unfavourable reception given to Rabindranath Tagore in Peking, even after he had been officially and rationally invited, and his coming to Wu-han on May 25 suddenly, unannounced, and leaving the same night for Shanghai en route for Japan.

Disappointed of a newspaper record himself, the writer is supplying, by request, from his rough notes, for the benefit of those who were disappointed even of hearing the speaker, an outline report of Rabindranath's one utterance in this centre, given in the Wuchang public athletic ground to a hastily gathered and miscellaneous audience of some 700.

The speaker, tall, with a flowing beard, wore a plain and dignified robe and spoke in a clear and beautiful natural voice with great carrying power, almost without any gesture. His English was exquisite; simple and quite without repetition. The Chinese translation that followed the whole speech was very brief and imperfect, and so the address must have had very little effect.

"When invited to come among you," he said, "I did not know if you wanted a man from India. I heard some were opposed to my coming because it might check your special modern enthusiasm for western progress and force. And if you want a man who will help you in these things you have been mistaken in asking me. I have no help to give you here: you already have 10,000 able teachers; go to them. My warning is, that those who would have you rely on material force to make a strong nation do not know history, or understand civilization. Reliance on power is the characteristic of barbarism, nations that trusted to it have already been destroyed, or have remained barbarous.

Greatness Not Material.

"But other nations added intellect to teach how to use power and we can no more despise the science and material progress that has resulted than we can despise our own bodies; but still it is not that that makes or has made nations great; nations that have so relied have either been destroyed or are even now reverting to barbarism. It is co-operation and love, mutual trust and mutual aid which make for strength and real progress in civilization. New spiritual and moral power must continually be developed to enable men to assimilate their scientific gains, to control their new weapons and machines or these will dominate, enslave, and slay them. Men have been losing their freedom, their humanity and their lives to fit themselves for vast mechanical organizations, scientific, political, economic, and military. We see to-day civilizations of vast power and great intellect veiling in a decent way mere cannibalism. It is the nemesis of Science dominant rather than subserving the spirit of man, for the world of mere science is not a world of reality but an abstract impersonal world of force.

"But many will point to the weakness of China and India and tell you that among these strong and progressive world peoples it is necessary to emphasize power and progress in order to avoid destruction. And I would not have you deceived by the Sunday-School talk that no advantage is won by unrighteousness. In the words of one of the great ones of my nation:—

'With the help of unrighteousness men do prosper.
With the help of unrighteousness men do gain victories over their enemies,
With the help of unrighteousness men do attain what they desire,
But they perish at the root.'

We have seen victories won by diplomacy and lies and material force, but there are signs in the civilizations founded on diplomatic lies and blind force that even now their doom is on them. Lies do prosper for a while, but the true life dies at the root.

The World Defied.

"You must accept this prosperity and power to-day, but there is to-morrow. This to-day is burdened with lies and oppressions, it is overburdened, it is sinking. I defy to-day and refuse to let it dominate my purposes. I rely on to-morrow with peace and faith. How do I prove it? I have no proof outside myself, in the depth of my soul. Even at the cost of martyrdom and insult and suffering we must continue to believe in peace and love and kindness and idealism. What is the value of success if it be at the cost of humanity and if it make a desert of God's world? I speak to you as a member of a nation that has gone under in the race for progress and I tell you that I am ready to accept defeat and insult and oppression and weakness in the body, but I will never accept the defeat, the last insult, the utter ruin of my spirit being conquered so that I lose my faith and purpose. My enemies may conquer and slay my body, but they cannot make me adopt their methods or hate them. The devil helps in the sphere in which he is master, but we must reject such aid to save our life from utter destruction. Seek righteousness even though success be lost. I believe this not through the evidence of facts! Facts mislead and oppress you with mere numbers and quantity: the world of personality surpasses facts on every side. Truth comes from above, is conscious of infirmity and is creative. We have accepted and followed and venerate men who gave us such truth and lost success. We need to hear this again and again and never more than in this modern world of slavery and cannibalism in decent guise."

"By the help of unrighteousness men do prosper, men do gain victories over their enemies, men do attain what they desire: but they perish at the root."

SIR ROBERT HO TUNG IN LONDON

A Promise to Continue Work for Peace Conference on Return to China

London, June 13.

Sir Robert Ho Tung was entertained at luncheon to-day by the Overseas League.

Sir Ernest Birch, presiding, eulogized the spirit of duty prevalent among the Chinese.

Sir Robert paid a tribute to the treatment of Chinese in British Colonies. He admitted that the present situation in China was not encouraging, but declared that on his return he intended to persevere in his efforts to arrange a round-table conference. There was no reason why China should abandon her old and excellent traditions while conforming to modern conditions respecting education and civilization generally. He was sure that China would continue to maintain the honour of the race.—Reuter.

JAPAN AND THE SOVIET

Possibility of Conciliatory Policy by Japan's New Cabinet

Tokio, June 16.

Conciliatory modifications of Japan's policy towards Russia, consonant with earlier Kenseikai pronouncements, are regarded as being very likely, according to the evening newspapers, which draw attention to Mr. Yoshizawa's return to Tokio, as well as an interview between Viscount Goto and Viscount Kato, the Premier.

Viscount Goto, who was prominent in the unofficial Russo-Japanese conversations in Tokio last year, is contemplating a trip to Copenhagen vid Russia for the international scout rally. He discussed Russian relations with the Premier yesterday evening and it is understood that they will again meet after the Cabinet meeting to-morrow, when the Cabinet's policy will be more clearly outlined.

The opinion is expressed that the Government will announce a date for the evacuation of Saghalien as a preliminary to a formal conference with Russia, which may be held at Dairen or in Tokio.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

A Compromise Reached

Tokio, June 18.

A compromise by both sides has resulted in the reaching of a satisfactory basis for a formal agreement on Russo-Japanese questions, if approved by the Cabinet, according to remarks credited by a press interview to Mr. Miyagawa, an interpreter attached to the Peking Legation.

Mr. Miyagawa, who has just returned from China, is reported to have stated that this compromise affected such questions as the withdrawal of troops and recognition of responsibility for Nikolaievsk.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

AMERICAN BOYCOTT IN JAPAN

Hotheaded Counsels Strongly Reprobated: Police Chief's Warning to Agitators

Tokio, June 14.

Side by side with anti-American movements aiming at a boycott of American goods, films, etc., which, whatever success may be attending the efforts of the promoters, are, at any rate, gaining publicity by demonstrations, meetings and handbills, a voice is being raised in the press and elsewhere against the futility of such methods. Thus the "Jiji" this morning counsels prudence, which, it says, "a really great nation should exercise at this juncture."

The first collective denunciation of a boycott is expressed by the Chamber of Commerce of the silk district of Kofu, which declares that such a movement is illogical in compelling exclusion of necessary imports and is calculated to alienate the sympathy of the world and of friends of Japan in America and besides would invite retaliation, which would spell ruin for the country.

Mr. Ota, the newly appointed Chief of the Metropolitan Police, in view of the anti-American movement, warns the people of the necessity for the maintenance of the nation's prestige at the present juncture. He declares that he is determined vigorously to punish those guilty of inciting trouble and violating laws in this connexion.

Christian Bodies' Condemnation of Exclusion Act

Japanese Christian leaders, including independents and those connected with American missionary enterprises, in a conference to-day denounced the American exclusion legislation as insulting and discriminatory and against the spirit of the original treaty drawn up by Commodore Perry. The conference considered, without reaching a decision, a proposal to break with American missions and appointed a committee to prepare a resolution for submission later.

Later.

While the meeting denounced the action of Congress and expressed necessity for declaring its stand against exclusion, it is not intended to adopt an antagonistic attitude vis-a-vis of missionaries.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

AMERICAN AVIATORS IN HONGKONG

An Uneventful Trip: Leader's Plane Repaired with Aid of Taikoo: The Typhoon Alarm: Special Precuations After Last Year's Experience

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Hongkong, June 9.

The American world aviators arrived here yesterday morning. On Saturday afternoon when they reached Amoy they were warned by cable from Hongkong of an approaching typhoon which threatened to strike the coast, but undaunted they replied they would continue. All craft in the harbour had battened down their hatches and made for shelter; residents resigned themselves to the prospects of a stormy week-end and another delay in the world flying men's programme was fully expected. The fury of the elements, however, held no terrors for the intrepid airmen. They left Amoy at 9.15 a.m. and at 12.30 they had gracefully glided to the mooring buoys on a sheltered stretch of water off Stonecutter's Island, almost prompt to the minute.

The airmen twice circled over the harbour before they spotted their landing station, a 20 minutes ferry boat journey from the city. A thick mist hung over the harbour and visibility was very poor. To onlookers it appeared as if the planes were no more than a hundred feet above the water and apparently they did not see their landing station until Morse signals were flashed out from the American destroyer Paul Jones. But their landing was perfect. They alighted on the water with the grace of a bird, wind and tide were against them, and "taxied" to the mooring buoys. At the moment they were sighted, the sun peeped out for the first time in the morning. Needless to say, the airmen received an enthusiastic welcome, among the first to offer congratulations being the Governor, Sir Edward Stubbs, who had been waiting on the Government launch Victoria which also had on board the U. S. Consul-General, Mr. W. H. Gale. Sir Claud Severn (Colonial Secretary), and Commodore Grace, R.N., on another launch shouted greetings to Lieut. Lowell Smith, the flight leader, as he was preparing to transfer to the Paul Jones.

A Cracked Cylinder.

Interviewed by the "North-China Daily News" correspondent, Lieut. Smith had little to say regarding his flight from Amoy. Like his colleagues, he was smeared all over with grease and wore a heavy growth of beard on his chin, not having shaved since he left Shanghai. The three hours' flight from Amoy was eventless, he said. They flew through rain and mist virtually the whole way. They met with little wind and visibility was very good. Once they had sighted the harbour they had no difficulty in picking out Hongkong. From Amoy they travelled at an average speed of 90 miles an hour, but owing to the heavy mist they had to keep to a height of not more than 500 feet most of the way.

This afternoon I visited Laichikok and found that the leader's machine had been hoisted from the water by a Taikoo tug and an army of workers were busily engaged in repairing various damages. Lieut. Smith explained that a cylinder had cracked during the flight from Shanghai to Hongkong, which necessitated welding. This difficulty overcome, thanks to the Taikoo engineers' aid, a new pontoon was fixed. The old float had been damaged in the take-off at Japan and a substitute despatched on the Paul Jones.

Off to Haiphong.

June 10.

Though working until dusk last night, Lieut. Smith had not completed the repairs to his machine and after a little sleep he was up again at 4 o'clock this morning to add the finishing touches. It was not until 10 o'clock that the flight leader's plane was lifted by the derrick and transferred from the wharf to the water. Fifteen minutes later there was a deafening roar and the adventurous airmen were on another lap of their long trip. One of the machines (No. 3) seemed to experience some difficulty in rising, but eventually it joined the others and was soon out of sight. The 'planes only skirted the city before heading straight for Haiphong which is a distance of just over 500 miles from Hongkong. Lieut. Smith was confident before he left that they would reach Haiphong before dark to-night.

During their stay in Hongkong, the U. S. airmen had little time to spare to attend any official reception. Except for an occasional respite aboard the destroyer Paul Jones, Lieut. Smith hardly left the side of his machine throughout the 48 hours the machines were here. His colleague, Lieut. Wade, attended Government House at the request of his Excellency yesterday. He was the only representative to go ashore. As in Shanghai, the Standard Oil Co. was mainly responsible for the excellent arrangements made for the convenience of visitors at the welcome and farewell of the airmen.

Hongkong's First Typhoon.

Apropos of the typhoon previously mentioned. Fortunately, for the airmen, the typhoon of which they were warned proved merely to be a false alarm, a storm in a teacup. The ominous warning displayed on Signal Hill was indicated at 11 o'clock on Saturday morning. According to the signs, a typhoon was expected to strike the coast near Hongkong from the east. It was the first time the warning had been given this season—rather an early start. Native craft, junks, sampans and the like made a hurried dive for shelter and by midday there was hardly a junk to be seen in the harbour. Several excursion trips to Macao were temporarily postponed; the ferry boats maintained their clock-work services, but with awnings well furled and the giant Empress of Australia which was lying at the Kowloon Wharf rode out of anchorage in midstream and spent the night at the buoy. Many of the river steamers sought the shelter of the Kowloon Bay. The Whitsun holiday crowds were scared and bathing parties and picnics were put off. Though the signals still flew throughout Saturday night, the two green and white lights on the Observatory mast standing out like a beacon light and visible from all parts of the Harbour, all that Hongkong felt of the prospective typhoon were spasmodic showers and a little wind. Yesterday morning the storm signals were removed. To-day the sun shone and the tennis matches were continued.

After last year's disastrous typhoon, Hongkong shipping people are taking no chances in future. This year, arrangements have been made by the Harbour whereby Naval tugs will patrol the harbour when a typhoon is expected and will be at hand to tow any craft that requires aid to a typhoon shelter. In this week-end's fiasco the Chinese wasted no time; they disappeared as if by magic as soon as the signal was hoisted.

Delayed at Tourane

Hongkong, June 14.

The American Consul-General has received the following radiogram from the U. S. destroyer Hart:—

"The time of departure of the 'planes from Tourane is indefinite. It depends on the replacement of the engine of 'plane No. 2. It is estimated at three days after the arrival of the new engine."—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Arrival at Saigon

Hongkong, June 16.

The American Cnosul-General has been advised by wireless that the three planes are at Tourane. The engine of Number 2 is being replaced. The probable time of departure for Saigon is five o'clock this morning.

The destroyer Preston landed Squadron-Leader Maclaren's plane at Akyab on June 13.

JAPANESE AND THE EXCLUSION ACT

Evidences of an Anti-American Rift in Many Trades: Epidemic of Patriotic Suicides

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Tokio, June 12.

The situation throughout Japan in consequence of the exclusion legislation is becoming daily more and more unpleasant for Americans here, most of whom are in a state of acute nervous tension. Exclusion is the main topic of conversation everywhere, in the restaurants, on the trains, in the streets, on trams, in hotel lobbies. No violence of any kind towards Americans has yet occurred, except for an unpleasant incident in the Imperial Hotel during the regular Saturday night dance on June 7, which however, was devoid of violence.

A band of young men, in conventional Japanese attire, burst into the dancing hall, roundly upbraided the Japanese who keep company with Americans, especially those Japanese women whose dancing partners were citizens of the United States, demanded to know whether it is right for the Japanese to be frivolous at a time "when the nation is facing a crisis" and bestrewed the room with hundreds of pahphlets of an anti-American nature.

While this is very dramatic and sounds sensational, still the incident itself is hardly worthy of being taken seriously. The youths who thus broke in are just excitable and irresponsible young men, and are not organized. A prominent Japanese told your correspondent that they are of the soshi (bully) type and are just trying to fish in troubled waters.

Orchestra's Cool-headedness

The orchestra deserves every credit for the part it played. The conductor sensed what was in the air and immediately the band struck up the Kimigayo, Japan's national anthem. This compelled the aggressive youths to stand at attention and broke the crest of the excitement. Another Japanese, not belonging to these youngsters, later made a speech in which he pointed out that the demonstration was more against the Japanese than against the Americans and certainly not against other foreigners.

On Sunday, the day following the unfortunate dance incident, I went through a considerable portion of Tokio, on foot, by tram and in crowded buses to try and find out whether there was any particularly unbridled sentiment. I could not find the least trace of this, though, there was writ in the faces of nearly every one the fact that the discrimination of America is keenly resented.

Crowds at Funeral

What is more significant and far more important than the dance incident at the Imperial Hotel was the public sympathy with the young man who committed suicide as a protest against the American immigration legislation. I went towards the cemetery, one of the finest in Tokio being chosen for the interment of the remains, and the crowd could easily have been anything between 50,000 and 70,000. The ceremonies were hardly over when the grave was buried under an immense mound of flowers. This grave is likely to become a Mecca for Japanese patriots, and the newspapers predict that it will take a place beside that of General Nogi who slew himself at the time of the funeral of the Emperor Meiji to "follow my Master in death as I did in life" and to startle the Japanese back to homage to the Imperial Family.

Boycott Commences

The boycott of American goods and products has taken definite shape, though, at the present writing, there is no organized movement on a large scale. The guiding minds behind the boycott movement are emphasizing that American goods alone—and not all foreign goods—should be boycotted.

This morning a prominent British dealer in photographic apparata put up a big card in his show window declaring that his firm was English and not American.

Missionaries are receiving letters urging them to return to the United States and convert the Senators and the anti-Japanese element in America first, on the ground that the immigration legislation is a betrayal of the spirit of Christianity. One Japanese Christian pastor is heading a movement for returning to the United States whatever relief funds and relief goods are yet left, while another has declared that it is time for the Christian church in Japan to carry on alone, without accepting any kind of assistance from "missionaries whose Government has gone on record as favouring discrimination because of race and colour."

An American-trained dentist, whose shingle till recently proudly proclaimed the fact that he was a graduate of a Chicago dental college, has replaced it by one simply bearing his name and profession. Beside this he has put up a board, in English and in Japanese, declaring that Americans must not cross his threshold. A large Japanese firm in the Marunouchi district has put up a similar notice.

The indignation felt is not confined to just one class. It permeates the whole nation. Stores handling American goods have already had their sales decreased by some 30 per cent. The decline in the value of the yen, of course, has something to do with this, but trade reports point out that the falling off is out of proportion to the drop in the value of the yen and out of proportion to the handling of merchandise from other lands. Merchants are reported to have cancelled several of their orders placed with firms in the United States for fear they will not be able to dispose of them.

A Contract for British

The city of Tokio, which placed a contract for 45,000 automatic telephones to replace those that were destroyed last year with a firm in the United States, is reported to have transferred the order to merchants in London and Liverpool.

Moving picture houses have decided not to show any American films after July 1. They declare that they can get just as good pictures from Great Britain and Germany.

Mass meetings are being held in various parts nearly every day. All have but one slogan: The voicing of indignation at the alleged wrong attitude of the United States and the boycotting of American goods.

Epidemic of Suicides

An epidemic of suicides has resulted since President Coolidge wrote the last chapter—thus far—in the immigration law when he signed the bill. Death has always exercised a peculair fascination on the Japanese. One of these took place in the compound adjoining the American Embassay which is now known as Camp Cyrus E. Woods where some 20-odd United States marines under the command of Major Sullivan are camping. They came here following the earthquake, and rendered valuable assistance in transporting relief stores to different parts of the stricken regions, besides looking after the Japanese staff of the American Embassy who are still living in the tents that were pitched for them by Major Sullivan and his men. In order to obviate the possibility of some unthinking hot-head becoming inordinately aroused at the fact that American soldiers are here, it has been decided, your correspondent understands, to close Camp Cyrus E. Woods about the 20th of this month. The camp has certainly outlived its usefulness and the move is a step in the right direction. It is interesting to remark that these American marines are the only foreign troops that have encamped on Japanese soil since the abolition of extra-territoriality.

Anti-American Handbill.

The anti-American handbill with which the hotel dancing hall was littered on Saturday night reads:

"This is no time for idle talking. This is the time for carrying out our purposes.

"We demand all American missionaries to leave.

"Let us prohibit American dancing which kills the nation's spirit and causes demoralization.

"Let us discontinue watching American moving pictures.

"Let us carry out a boycott against American commodities.

"Let us cancel all American treaties and prohibit Americans coming to Japan and Japanese going to America.

"We cannot leave things to our elders. It is time for us to stand up."

FROG THAT TERRIFIED A VILLAGE

Being a Tale of Two Faithless Swains, the Forlorn Maiden and Japanese Legend

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Tokio, June 8.

A French frog of the edible species, who was invited in company with his mate to Japan early last year, and who afterwards fell in love with a Japanese maiden of his species and eloped with her, has been the cause whereby thousands of people living in Nagano, a Tokio suburb, went very near being scared out of their wits. It was the female that really did the terrorizing, but it was the male's infidelity and betrayal of her love that caused her to do so. The story reads like a fairy tale, especially in its Japanese setting, but is a real, actual occurrence.

Being of the opinion that edible frogs would be acceptable to the Japanese gourmand, the owner of a frog farm at Nagano imported a pair from France at the beginning of last year. The couple were thriving splendidly when the quake came with its subsequent conflagrations. In the confusion that ensued, Mr. and Mrs. French Frog decided to seek safety themselves. They, accordingly, left the frog farm and went to a small pond further away. Here they are supposed to have lived for months and then along came a Japanese female frog and induced Mr. French Frog to elope with her. Anyway that's the story the villagers of Nagano tell.

The Village Legend

In Nagano some time ago, a young girl, abandoned by her lover, threw herself into this pond and perished. The Japanese believe that true love always mourns, even after death, the agony caused by a faithless lover.

Some days ago, in the dead of night, came croakings from the pond that the superstitious villagers declared were the moans of a broken heart. It was frog-like in tone true, but then it might be—no it was really—the spirit of the love-lorn maiden who, in the guise of a frog, returned to her the spot where she bade farewell to life for the purpose of sighing out her soul. The croaks continued regularly night after night. The villagers got alarmed. Would the spirit of the maiden call down imprecations and curses on the place where she was met and wooed and afterwards thrown aside, a broken doll?

The local police got wind of the tale which had now become the one topic of conversation in the teahouses and restaurants, in the market place and even in the homes of the people, and determined to sift the matter to the bottom. Accordingly, some of them, assisted by the young bloods of the village, decided to keep watch throughout the night.

Mrs. Frog Found

They kept close together, the policemen ready to flash out their sabres and the civilians to down the ghost with clubs and iron bars. About the witching hour of midnight the moaning croak came, repeated at regular intervals. Heroism vanished in the face of superstition and the belief that it really was the voice of one who had returned to this sphere from the Unknown Beyond. All kept close together and remained there until morning. In one thing the watch by the pond was fruitful, namely that they were able to confirm the tale of the villagers that the so-called voice of a heart-broken woman came from the sheet of water in which a young woman who had stooped to folly sought solace from earthly sorrows

With the dawn of day, courage returned. The pond was drained. At first there was nothing but tadpoles by the millions. Then, almost in the centre, they saw, perched on a stone that was shiny with green moss, a large frog. It was carefully captured and taken to the frog farm where the owner identified it as the female of the two he had brought from Paris.

The male is still missing, and, as the female yet continues to croak moaningly, the simple villagers believe—and perhaps they may be right—that Mr. French Frog had fallen in love with a Miss Japanese Frog and is either ashamed, or else does not want, to return to his legitimate mate.

IMPORTANCE OF SAGHALIEN IN RUSSO-JAPANESE NEGOTIATIONS

Japanese Military Strategy, the Japan Sea an Inland Sea and Control of the Amur

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Peking, June 10.

Something deeper and more widespread than even the oil in Saghalien, though related to it, is involved in the Karakhan-Yoshizawa conversations, namely, the strategy of the Far East.

It is no flight of fancy to say that the whole of the island has been possessed mentally by the Japanese General Staff since 1906. Korea was annexed in precisely the same way long before the actual fact was announced to the world. So was Heligoland by the Germans; it was an objective to the Germans and merely a place on the map to Lord Salisbury.

The Chain of Islands.

Japanese military strategy has two faces—faces which face each other. The first concerns the development of a breakwater of islands which at present stretch from the Kuriles to Formosa and reach out to the mandated islands on the Pacific. The other is on the mainland and is concerned with the establishment of an economic and strategic rear. The milestones in the creation of an island breakwater are already defined, and Japan has never had to retrace the steps she has taken since she exchanged Southern Saghalien for the Kuriles in 1875. It has been an onward march, giving Japan a fanwise outlook over the Asiatic mainland.

Not so on the mainland.

The Allied expedition to Siberia was to be the culminating stroke of the Japanese strategy, which had already established a strong hold on Fukien, the Yangtze and Manchuria.

But the world and the Bolsheviks and the venality of the White leaders combined to frustrate the scheme. Retreat followed retreat until Vladivostok itself, which Japan had made herculean efforts to save from Bolshevism, entered the fold of the Reds.

Saghalien is the sole remains of the Napoleonic dream of the militarists in Japan, a dream that was persisted in months after it had been disowned by the Japanese people. The island means more to Japan than any other part of the territory over which she cast a covetous eye less than three years ago. Its importance is aggravated by the presence in it of oil.

The acquisition of Northern Saghalien would make the Japan Sea an inland sea to Japan, and in that sea, according to the strategists, lies the heart of Nippon. Distance and her island breakwater keep Japan comparatively secure on the south. Her weak point is the north, where Pacific distances are smaller and where she comes in contact with a European Power. If she can lock the Japan Sea, she can prevent the incursion of a foreign fleet, and justify a hope of controlling the hinterland by the domination of the main line of communications.

Opposite the Russian portion of Saghalien is Nikolaievsk. It burst into fame as the scene of the massacre of Japanese troops by the partisans in the course of the intervention, and is the ostensible reason for the occupation of Saghalien. But it has another reason for being well-known to strategists. It guards the entrance to Siberia's main line of communications, the Amur river. To control this line is the strategy behind Japanese occupation of and desire for Northern Saghalien.

Russia's Bargaining Advantage.

If Soviet Russia gives any promise of being a permanent institution, it is more to the advantage of Japan than of Moscow to come to terms. The Soviet aim is not so much territorial or even strategic advantage, as was the case with its predecessors, but rather the inoculation of other peoples with its own idea of government. This is helpful to Japan as long as her own people don't catch the germ. The "realist" way in which Moscow now looks at things may also be helpful to Japan in developing her plans for strategic security. Finally, the country that controls the Chinese Eastern and the Ussuri is in a position to do Japan a distinct service.

Russia has gained a bargaining position by the delay in settling the question of the status of northern Saghalien. Is her need for Japanese recognition at this day when the nations are preparing to recognize Russia on her European side so urgent as to make her juggle out of the dilemma by throwing over the Sinclair company? On the other hand, is Japan diplomatically strong enough to withhold recognition until the question of Saghalien has been settled to her satisfaction?

Reported Expenditure of Y.1,000,000 Prospecting for Oil and Minerals

According to the "Japan Chronicle" the "Osaka Asahi" reports that the Mitsui and Mitsubishi companies, leading semi-official companies of Japan, are planning to spend Y.1,000,000 on prospecting for oil and minerals, especially for oil, in Saghalien island. Although nothing has been said lately of oil in connexion with the negotiations between Japan and Russia over Saghalien, it may be taken as certain that the matter has not been forgotten. The concession granted by Soviet Russia to the Sinclair Company (American) to develop the oil resources of the northern part of the island is still an unsettled international issue. That region belongs to Russia but is occupied by Japanese forces.

The "Asahi" says: According to experts the mines and oil fields in Saghalien have considerable deposits and the qualities are excellent. In view of the state of Russia, every country is inclined to undertake their exploitation, though none has set her hands to it so far. With the approval of the Government the Mitsubishi and Mitsui companies plan to prospect the mines and oil fields in the island. If the investigations are satisfactory leading business men will take part in the development.

Japan's Oil Supplies

The oil fields at Akita and Nigata are becoming exhausted and the output is decreasing year by year while demand is steadily increasing. At present half of Japan's oil supply is imported, and quotations on the home market depend on those abroad. The Kanegafuchi Spinning, Dai Nippon Beer, and other big factories, which honed to use oil as fuel had to suspend their projects, finding that oil was dearer than coal. For these reasons the Mitsubishi and Mitsui companies are said to place great importance on the oil in Saghalien.

JAPAN'S FOREIGN POLICY

Statement by Baron Shidehara: Friendship and Good Will to All Peoples

Tokio, June 12.

Baron Shildehara, the Foreign Minister, to-day made a further statement to foreign pressmen emphasizing that Japan's foreign policy was based on peace, justice and honour, whereby she might face without fear and without misgiving whatever the future had in store. He said that he was convinced by his long experience abroad that there were infinitely more points of similarity than of difference in human nature among peoples divided by race, religion and language, but the differences were sometimes unduly magnified and emphasized so that mutual estrangement appeared. The Minister declared that the world was gradually awakening to a broader vision of international solidarity and good fellowship. The principle of live and let live, which was being more widely recognized, was more successful than the policy of self-assertion without due regard to the rightful positions of others, which was ultimately bound to yield to the adverse verdict of an enlightened public opinion.

"To the nobler principles expressed or implied by the Covenant of the League of Nations and the treaties of Washington," the Foreign Minister continued, "we will adhere loyally and unswervingly, extending to all peoples the hand of friendship and goodwill."—Reuter's Pacific Service.

ITALIAN ARMS DEALER SENTENCED

What a Tientsin Customs Official Discovered: False Bottoms in Wine Cases

FROM THE "P & T. TIMES."

Tientsin, June 17.

"Some friends wrote to me three months ago suggesting that they should send some wine from Italy, and put some in the cases. I answered at once and said that they must not do it, for it might get me into trouble." This was the defence put forward at the Italian Consular Court yesterday by A. Pellegrini, Italian, who was charged with importing arms.

His appearance at the Consular Court was the sequel to the discovery by a Customs' employee of 29 pistols and 2,800 rounds of ammunition hidden in false bottoms of cases of wine. The wine was consigned from Genoa to the defendant's firm in Tientsin.

The arms were found by C. W. Landers when Pellegrini came to get the wine passed through the Customs.

Mr. Landers told the Italian Consul, Mr. Gabrielli, that on looking into the second case, he discovered that there was a false bottom. He turned and asked, "Why is there a false bottom?", and Pellegrini answered "I do not know." On examining the case, witness found some pistols, and he then informed Pellegrini that he would report the matter. Defendant answered "What must I do about it? There are only 20 pieces."

On the cargo being searched the following day, the 29 pistols and ammunition were revealed.

For the defence, Mr. De Barbveri said that Pelligrini had never before been charged with any offence. He served in the Italian army during the war, and was now lame owing to a wound.

Mr. Gabrielli sentenced Pellegrini to 25 days' imprisonment.

1,500 Rifles Seized: American Arrested.

A Tientsin telegram to the "Sinwanpao" reports the discovery there of 1,500 rifles and hundreds ounces of opium at a certain American firm whose proprietor has been placed under arrest. The Consul has reported the case to the U. S. Court in Shanghai, and the Judge is reported to have promised to proceed to Tientsin on July 14 to try this case. A Tuchun of a Yangtsze Province is said to be involved.

THE RUSSIAN LEGATION

Delicate Questions Involved in Soviet Occupation

Peking, June 12.

The question of occupation of the Russian Legation by a Soviet representative is bringing forward some interesting problems, in view of Soviet Russia's repudiation of the former Russian Government's part in the 1901 Protocol. In addition to the question whether the Russian representative will collaborate with his colleagues in maintaining the administration of the Legation Quarter, which is based on the position defined by the Protocol, there is the matter of a portion of the Russian Legation area which was ceded to the Diplomatic Body by that Protocol. This portion was taken over by the Russians and on it stands a part of the main Russian Legation.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

JAPANESE LOAN FROM UNITED STATES

New York, June 14.

It is understood that Japanese interests, headed by the managing director of the Diado Electric Power Company, are negotiating with New York bankers for a loan of $30,000,000 for the purchase of electrical equipment in the United States.—Reuter's American Service.

MARSHAL Chi Shieh-yuan, Inspector-General of Kiangsu, Anhui and Kiangsi, is said to have again requested the Government to define clearly the areas over which foreign flying machines should be prohibited from passing. The President has ordered General Chao Yu-ko, Head of the Aeronautic Bureau, to frame some regulations.

THE CHINESE EASTERN RAILWAY

Waichiaopu's Reply to Japan: China's Right to Deal With It as She Likes

Peking, June 17.

A Chihling Mandate, dated June 16 and published in this morning's Official Gazette, ratifies the Sino-Russian Agreement, in accordance with a memorial from Dr. Wellington Koo, the Minister of Foreign Affairs.

The Mandate briefly recapitulates the documents therein and orders the affixing of the State seals and the counter-signature of the Waichiaopu and the formal exchange of the Agreement between the Waichiaopu and the Soviet representatives.

The Waichiaopu yesterday afternoon replied to the Japanese Note of June 6, saying that before the Sino-Russian Agreement was signed, the Chinese Government had obligations and responsibilities as trustee regarding the Chinese Eastern Railway, as provided by the Washington Treaty. The Sino-Russian Agreement has now been signed, however, formal Sino-Russian relations have been restored, and the situation has become quite different. The matters which China and Russia are going to adjust are questions regarding which those countries alone have rights and interests. The Note, in conclusion, states that the Chinese Government cannot therefore accept the reservations suggested in the Japanese Note.

Simultaneously, the Waichiaopu sent almost identical Notes to the French and American Legations, replying to their Notes of May reminding China of her obligations in connexion with the Chinese Eastern Railway.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, June 18.

With regard to Reuter's Peking correspondent's report yesterday of the Waichiaopu's reply to the Japanese Note concerning the Chinese Eastern Railway, the Waichiaopu says that the report does not fully represent the attitude adopted in the Chinese Note. In declining to consider the reservation, the Chinese reply had reference to a possibility of interference with future Sino-Russian negotiations concerning the Railway, while, as regards the legitimate claims which Japan or any other Power might have against the Railway, it expressly stated that they had not been prejudiced by the recent Sino-Russian negotiations.

A CHINESE EMBASSY IN MOSCOW

M. Karakhan's Invitation: China Undecided

Peking, June 16.

M. Karakhan, in a Note, inviting China to establish an Embassy at Moscow, which was forwarded to the Waichiaopu on Saturday, classes the Tsarist Government with other Powers as hitherto looking on China as a party not enjoying full rights and one which could be coerced into signing humiliating treaties preventing development of this country. It goes on that China is a country with over 400,000,000 inhabitants and a country destined to play a very great role in the development of mankind. Her present position, M. Karakhan affirms, does not give others the right to consider China unworthy of taking her place as a first-class Power. The Note then explains the altruistic attitude of the Soviet towards Asiatic States.

Incidentally, the Soviet representatives everywhere are called Ambassadors, and the suggested establishment of Embassies in Peking and Moscow would not entail alteration of the usual rank of the Soviet representative.

The Waichiaopu states that the Chinese Government has not yet decided what China's attitude will be as regards this invitation.

MERCHANTS propose to obtain the necessary funds for the exhibition of Chekiang products on West Lake, Hangchow, by raising a loan of $2,000,000, bonds of $100 to be issued at $82.

JAPANESE CABINET ECONOMIES

Departmental Posts to be Cut Down But More Money Spent on Navy

Tokio, June 13.

Drastic financial reforms and departmental readjustments, with a view to avoiding wasteful expenditure, are forecast by statements of the Minister for Finance and the Minister for Home Affairs respectively, who are regarded as two of the strong men of the new Cabinet.

The Minister for Home Affairs, Mr. Wakatsuki, in addition, favoured the abolition of all investigation boards set up by the former Government, and the weeding out of all superfluous officials, as well as legislation for universal suffrage.

Changes in the country's naval policy in hastening by a year the auxiliary vessels construction programme, which was postponed owing to the earthquake, are anticipated from a statement made to the press by the Minister for the Navy, Admiral Takarabe, in which he declared that the gaps which had been created in defensive equipment would be filled up as finances or occasion warrant.

The "Kokumin" expresses the opinion that the Naval air services will be further developed, with other Naval construction in line with the recent activites of the Powers in this direction.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Drastic Curtailment of Issue of Loans

Tokio, June 18.

The Ministry have adopted a policy of not floating loans during the current year by deciding on drastic curtailment of their predecessors loan policy, which provided for the issue of loans amounting to Y. 437,000,000, of which Y. 110,000,000 was for capital rehabilitation, Y. 104,000,000 for extraordinary military expenditure, and the balance for rehabilitation elsewhere and also for low interest funds to individuals. The newly announced policy, according to an official statement by the Finance Department, reduces the amount to Y. 295,000,000 approximately, which sum is being derived from Government deposits as well as the recent foreign loans.

The statement of policy is warmly welcomed by business interests as calculated to accelerate the economic recovery of the country.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

JAPAN'S POLITICAL PROBLEMS

Minister to Peking Visiting Tokio for Consultation with Cabinet

Peking, June 16.

Late on Saturday night the Japantese Minister, Mr. Yoshizawa, received instructions from his Government to return at once to Tokio and he will accordingly leave Peking by the Mukden train this evening. It is expected that he will be away about a fortnight and in the meantime Mr. Ohta, Counsellor of Embassy, will be in charge of the Legation.

Mr. Yoshizawa's instructions did not say why his presence was required in Japan, but it is presumed that the new Japanese Cabinet wish to discuss with him several important problems he has lately been handling, including, of course, the Russo-Japanese negotiations. —Reuter's Pacific Service.

STATUS OF CHILEAN CONSUL IN SHANGHAI

Peking, June 19.

Replying to an inquiry from the Waichiaopu regarding the status of the Chilean Consul in Shanghai, the Diplomatic Body say in effect that it is a matter in which they do not feel justified in expressing an opinion.

It appears that the point is whether the Chilean Consul is entitled to deal in lawsuits against Chileans in view of the fact that Chile does not enjoy extraterritoriality.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

FOREIGN INTERESTS IN C.-E. RAILWAY

Protest Against Exclusive Control by China and the Soviet

Washington, June 18.

With reference to newspaper despatches from China, stating that the Chinese and Soviet Governments have agreed on exclusive control of the Chinese Eastern Railway, the State Department has issued a statement saying that the American Minister in Peking, Dr. Jacob G. Schurman, formally drew the attention of China to American interests in the railway. Dr. Wellington Koo replied to the effect that only China and Russia were concerned in the railway and the arrangement with Russia did not prejudice the rights of other nations.

The statement adds that, while the American forces were in Siberia during the war, the railway was administered by an inter-allied Commission, financed by the Allied Powers. Thus the United States has become a creditor to the extent of about $5,000,000, together with Great Britain, Japan and France.

It is understood that Japan and France have made similar representations to the Chinese Government and have received similar replies.—Reuter's American Service.

DR. SCHURMAN IN HOSPITAL

Peking, June 19.

Dr. Schurman, the American Minister, was taken to hospital this morning suffering from a slight attack of dysentery.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

CHINESE AVIATION STUDENTS

Peking, June 19.

The Aviation Department is asking the provinces to recommend suitable aviation students, who will be taught all branches of aviation at Nanyuan, near Peking.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

TSINGTAO has already had the honour of receiving a "North-China Daily News," the first newspaper ever carried by aeroplane in China, writes a correspondent. This was in May, 1920, when the O. K. Club at that port, received a copy of this paper from the Italian aviator, Ferrarin. Congratulations to Tsingtao. But honours are divided. Hongkong, which is a British Colony and not within the realm of the Chinese Republic, for the first time in its history, received copies of the "North-China Daily News" by airmail.

TAONANFU-TSITSIHAR RAILWAY

Reported Japanese Agreement with Chang Tso-lin

Moscow, June 13.

It is reported here that the Japanese have concluded an agreement with Mukden whereby, without permission of the Peking Government, the Japanese will be allowed to construct a branch railway from Taonanfu to Tsitsihar.

This will enable them to dispense with the Chinese Eastern and Ussuri Railways.—Reuter.

Peking, June 16.

It was stated, in answer to inquiries at the Japanese Legation to-day, that no information had been received there in regard to the agreement reported to have been concluded at Mukden for the construction by Japanese of a branch railway from Taonanfu to Tsitsihar. It was pointed out that, if such an agreement had been made either by the Japanese Government or the South Manchuria Railway, the Legation here would certainly have had news of it, though that would not necessarily be the case if the agreement was concluded by a private Japanese concern. Some time ago, it was mentioned, the South Manchuria Railway built a line for the Chinese Government from Szepingchieh to Taonanfu and it is known that Marshal Chang Tso-lin has for some time contemplated linking up Taonanfu with Tsitsihar.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

MACAO, June 17.—It is reported from Hanoi that the departure of the Portuguese aviators from Hanoi for Macao has been postponed to to-morrow owing to bad weather.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

BUBBLING WELL ROAD SHOOTING AFFRAY

Afternoon Battle between Police and Gunmen: An Exiting Chase: Gang Captured: Two Prisoners Fatally Wounded

A sensational shooting affray took place near the Burlington Hotel on Sunday afternoon, when an armed patrol encountered four Chinese desperadoes, who began firing indiscriminately. Mr. M. O. Springfield, Assistant Commissioner of Police, who happened to be visiting a private house in the vicinity, took part in an exciting chase of the robbers, one of whom took refuge in 6 Seymour Road, the house of Mr. R. E. Toeg.

It appears that about 7.10 p.m. on Sunday a police search party, consisting of two Sikhs and three Chinese constables, held up three Chinese near the junction of Hardoon and Annam Roads, for the purpose of searching them for arms or drugs. The three Chinese at once drew pistols and fired on the police, and then ran northwards towards Bubbling Well Road, with the police still in pursuit, and still firing shots. One ran into a small house near the junction of Bubbling Well and Hardoon Roads, and this house was searched, with the result that one man was found therein with a bullet wound in his stomach. A revolver and a packet of ammunition were also found in this house. The man arrested there is described as a Kompo coolie, about 37 years of age. He was conveyed immediately to the Red Cross Hospital, where he was detained, suffering from very serious injuries.

By Broker Trap and Motor.

The police then continued the chase eastward along Bubbling Road and shots were fired by both parties. Mr. M. O. Springfield, coming out of a private residence on the north side of the road, joined in the pursuit of the fugitives, who were running eastwards under the cover of Mr. S. A. Hardoon's garden wall, while Mr. Springfield was running parallel with them on the other side of the road, as yet unarmed. On the arrival on the scene of the Sikh Havildar, Mr. Springfield took the Sikh's revolver and fired several shots. A Chinese police constable of the search party also arrived about this moment, on the north side, and he also fired. One of the armed Chinese fell wounded near the entrance to the Burlington Hotel, and two others ran eastwards, followed by Mr. Springfield, the Sikh Havildar and the Chinese constable. As the fugitives turned south into Seymour Road, more shots were fired on both sides and near Weihaiwei Road the police were joined by another Sikh constable on duty in Weihaiwei Road. One of the Chinese ran into the garden of Mr. Toeg, Seymour Road, while the other continued in a southward direction towards the French Concession. At this moment a broker's trap emerged from a small road west of Seymour Road and this was commandeered by the police. On reaching the boundary of the French Concession and the International Settlement the fugitive turned east along Avenue Foch, and at this stage of the pursuit the police obtained a motor-car, which, however, was handicapped by the sandy middle of the road. The Chinese eventually escaped over the border into the French Concession after a further exchange of shots, in spite of an attempt by an Annamite policeman to stop him, and having crossed the border, French Concession, where he was very pluckily captured by a Chinese pedestrian whose present whereabouts we have been unable to ascertain.

Miss Jansen's Narrow Escape.

From beginning to end of the affray 17 rounds were fired by the police and many by the armed Chinese. The man who took refuge in Mr. Toeg's garden made good his escape and has not been seen since. The only injury suffered by the police force was that of Sikh P. C. 89, who was wounded in the shoulder in the early stages of the affray, but not seriously.

A Chinese bookbinder, of the Chung Hua Publishing Co., was hit accidentally in the leg by a stray bullet, but not seriously injured, Miss E. R. Jansen, of No. 74 Avenue du Roi Albert, narrowly escaped being hit by a bullet which passed right through her motor-car as she and her sister were driving along Bubbling Well Road at 7.10 p.m.

One of the wounded men died at the Shantung Road Hospital on Monday at 4.15 p.m. Taken to hospital in a very serious condition with a bullet wound in the small of the back, he was, we understand, operated upon during the night, but efforts to save his life were futile.

Three of the Chinese concerned, all of them coolies, appeared at the Mixed Court on Monday, the charge against them being one of having attempted to murder Havildar Bhagwan Singh.

Mr. Springfield's Chase.

Police evidence was given bearing out the facts already reported, and an exciting tale of the chase was told by Mr. M. O. Springfield. He stated that while backing his car from a house in Bubbling Well Road he heard police whistles and the firing of shots and, jumping from his car, saw Sikhs and Chinese police in pursuit of three Chinese. Shouting to the Havildar to hand over his revolver, witness joined in the chase. At first he could not fire, because of two foreign ladies looking into a shop window who were in the way, but, having passed them, he opened fire and brought one of the men down. Stopping to see if the man was capable of doing any damage, witness found that he was badly wounded. Following the other men, who had turned into Seymour Road, witness saw one of them disappear into Mr. Toeg's garden, the other running straight on towards the French Concession. On reaching Avenue Foch, witness jumped into a broker's trap and a little farther on continued the chase in a motor-car. Witness instructed the driver, a Volunteer, to drive over the man. Seeing he was about to be run down, the fugitive swerved, and the driver followed suit, so that the car was almost overturned. The Chinese then turned on to some waste ground, and having used up all his revolver cartridges, witness fired a carbine shot, but missed. The man ran on to the corner of Rue Ratard and Route des Sœurs, where a policeman on point duty attempted to head him off, but he had only his traffic baton and was faced with a revolver. Shortly afterwards, the man was pluckily held by some Chinese who came out of a tea house, and it was then found that he had thrown his revolver away.

The accused were remanded.

Death of Second Man from Wounds

Another of the men wounded in the Bubbling Well Road shooting affair on Sunday died on Monday evening, the first, Sung Poo-sung, succumbing to his wounds at the Shantung Road Hospital late in the afternoon, and the second, Woo Yau-chuen, at the Red Cross Hospital the same evening.

Others who were in the chase, in addition to the Sikh police constable who received a bullet wound in the shoulder, must have narrowly escaped injury as, for example, the bullet hole discovered in the door of the car commandeered by Mr. Springfield indicates.

Two loaded revolvers and 13 rounds of ammunition were left in Mr. Toeg's garden by tthe man who took refuge there.

One touch of humour has been given to this rather grim affair by the "Sinwanpao" which on Monday reported it as "an attempt upon the life of a detective in front of the Burlington Hotel." The paper very thoughtfully adds that "on investigation we find this report is not true."

The Inquest: Police Commended

At the inquest held on the bodies of the two Chinese who were killed in the Bubbling Well Road chase, the following verdict was returned: "The deaths were due to the effects of gun-shot wounds." The following rider was added: "That the police be commended for their excellent work in rounding up these robbers."

Wong Ching-pau, an employee of the Chung Hwa Printing Co., who was accidentally shot during the chase, has been operated upon at the Red Cross Hospital and is progressing favourably. The bullet extracted from his leg was found to be of the same pattern as that used by the robbers.

FLATS FOR WESTERN DISTRICT

Huge Block to Be Built in Rue Lafayette: Largest in China

Although flats both for residences and offices are a common enough feature of the central district they have hitherto not appeared in the western district, with the exception, we think, of the block in Avenue Joffre. With land at its present prices and the general cost of building, it must have occurred to not a few people that well designed flats surrounded by sufficient land would contribute very materially to the solution of the housing question; and very much better materials might be employed in such a building, proportionately with the amount of space offered each tenant, than those at present commonly to be found in the appalling jerry-built rabbit hutches which are being allowed to disfigure the Western residential district.

Not a little interest, therefore, attaches to the large apartment building which Mr. J. H. Blackstone is at present constructing in the new extension of Rue Lafayette.

This building is the largest of its kind this side of San Francisco, and contains in all some 31 apartments. Of these there are 20 large apartments containing four rooms together with a pantry and a kitchen, three medium sized apartments consisting of three large rooms with kitchen and pantry, and eight small apartments composed of living room, a bedroom, a bathroom, and a kitchen, suitable for single ladies or bachelors.

All bedrooms have adjoining them bathrooms with hot and cold water in abundance, and the latest modern conveniences. The kitchens are fitted with ice boxes, gas rings, fireless cookers, and small laundry tubs. All the floors of this building are of parquetry set in pitch on a concrete foundation with the exception of those of the corridors which are of mosaic or of tarazzo. Each apartment is connected with the main entrance hall by telephone.

Swimming Pool for Residents.

The building contains a private swimming pool, a large social parlour, where refreshments will be served, a winter garden, and a roof garden commanding an extensive view of the Ezra Estate, and the greater part of the French Concession. There are moderately large grounds adjoining, which contain three tennis courts free to all tenants, and also 12 garages. The exterior of the building is square and imposing and is covered with a veneer of cement and granite, which has the appearance of stone. The total ground space is 132 ft. by 69 ft. with a height of 72 ft. all told. There are five floors with a space between floors of 10 feet. The rents, it is understood will be, for the large apartments Tls. 148 to Tls. 152, medium apartments Tls. 115, and for the smaller flats Tls. 85 per month. This includes all hot water heating, and the servants' quarters, and also all rates and taxes. Meals will also be served in each flat if required.

The architects are Mr. Blackstone and Mr. Johnson, and this is one of the first buildings to be built without a Chinese contractor.

THE story of a murder at Woosung on a vessel bound for Hankow was reported last Friday in the Chinese press, the details apparently first coming to light when the vessel reached its destination. It is said that on the 8th instant, when the Kung Woo was on its way out at Woosung, a passenger, believed to be in possession of a large sum of money, was missed, and upon search being made his dead body, cut in four parts, was found in a box in his cabin. Three men who were occupants of the cabin were placed under arrest.

CHILD LABOUR IN CHINA

Dame Adelaide Anderson's Tour: Chinese Officials Consulting Her on Principal Needs

Dame Adelaide Anderson, formerly Chief Lady Inspector of Factories in Great Britain, who has been making Shanghai her headquarters during her visit to China, left on Monday for Wuchang where she will investigate industrial conditions After this Dame Adelaide will go to Kuling where she will spend the summer, returning to Shanghai in the autumn and leaving for Japan in November.

Although her stay in China has been comparatively brief, Dame Adelaide having arrived in Shanghai from Hongkong last December, she has been able to see much of factory conditions and has received encouraging co-operation from Chinese officials. Coming at the invitation of the National Christian Council and being invited to sit with the Child Labour Commission of the Municipal Council, Dame Adelaide's role has been dual, to place her experience in Great Britain at the service of these bodies and, as an interested individual, to study for herself the existing conditions of factory labour.

That other organizations have taken the initiative in securing the benefits of Dame Adelaide's life long specialization on these lines is shown by the fact that during her recent visit to Peking, Dr. W. W. Yen, the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce interviewed her at his private residence, with the Vice-Minister, Dr. Hawling Yen, and the Chief of the Labour Department of the Ministry, Mr. Sun Chi-yi was also present.

A General Awakening

On the one hand, the interview afforded an opportunity of hearing Dame Adelaide's impressions, after some months of service with the Shanghai Municipal Council's Child Labour Commission and of study of the factory situation on behalf of the National Christian Council of China; and on the other, of explaining the plans and activities of the Ministry.

Dame Adelaide Anderson was able to report an awakening interest on the part of officials and employers in the subject of industrial welfare, so that although the conditions, notwithstanding some notable exceptions, are generally speaking very terrible, the outlook is hopeful. The great difficulty is the securing of co-ordinated action, and the great desideratum a wider public appreciation of the issues involved. Emphasis was placed upon the need for the regulation of child labour, its exclusion from night-work, and the provision of education; and upon the shortening of the hours of labour in view of the greater strain of work in factories using power-driven machinery.

Among the subjects discussed were the need for more accurate statistics for the study of health and safety, for means whereby the labourers could voice their own needs the question of trained travelling inspectors, and the preparations for sending a Chinese delegation to the International Labour Conference to be held in Geneva in September this year.

Among other significant invitations was one to address the Chinese Science and Political Society in Peking, Dame Adelaide being the first woman who had ever attended one of its meetings. Mr. S. T. Wen, the Minister of Foreign Affairs in Nanking, also arranged a luncheon for Dame Adelaide at which the discussion was very helpful and left a hopeful impression. Mr. Wen asked for an outline of English law on the subject of factory supervision which has been sent to him.

The Authorities in Kiangsu.

The Civil Governor of Kiangsu has recently issued the following important Ordinance to the Industrial Bureau as follows:

The Ministry of Agriculture and Commerce has already promulgated a set of factory regulations. Although there are special articles in regard to child labour, they are perhaps not perfect since there is no careful inspection. This would tend to make them exist in name only.

Dame Adelaide Anderson of Great Britain has presented personally a memorandum. It was entirely because of her humanitarian spirit that she wished children to be better treated in all the factories.

A Child Labour Commission has already been appointed by the Municipal Council in Shanghai to investigate factory conditions. China should also organize a commission of the same nature to sit in Shanghai so that regulations in regard to children in both the Chinese and foreign factories will be similar.

Besides writing to Commissioner Hsu of Foreign Affairs in Shanghai asking him to see Dame Adelaide Anderson about the matter, the Commissioner of the Industrial Bureau of Kiangsu is also notified.

RUSSIAN SHIPS AT WOOSUNG

Gen. Gleboff's Protest Against Report They Were Brought to Woosung for Sale

The recent activities at Woosung centring round the five Russian ships which have been lying off that port for many months past has occasioned a considerable amount of bitterness between the parties concerned,—and this bitterness has not been lessened in any way by inaccurate reports of what has been happening which have appeared inadvertently for the most part, in Shanghai's foreign newspapers. The following letter sent by General Gleboff, Commander-in-Chief of the Far Eastern Cossack group, to the Assistant Commissioner for Russian Affairs in Shanghai, a copy of which has been forwarded to us by him, is not without interest-therefore:—

Commander in Chief of the Far Eastern Cossack Group.—June 14, 1924, Shanghai.

To the Assistant Commissioner for Russian Affairs in Shanghai:—

"In issue No. 1133 of the newspaper "Russky Golos," appearing on the 7th instant, there appeared a report stating that on receiving M. Karakhan's protest concerning the disappearance of the str. Eldorado from Woosung, the Chinese authorities issued an order that that the three remaining ships be brought into Shanghai Harbour and kept under guard until the question of their ownership can be solved by the Chinese Central Government.

Immediately after this there appeared the report in two Shanghai newspapers, the "Shanghai Times" and the "Echo de Chine" stating that the three ships in question were compelled by the use of force, exercised by officials from the Bureau for Russian Affairs, the Harbour office and by 20 Chinese policemen, to enter the harbour, and that the men were disembarked and detained under guard.

All the written and personal intercourse I have had with you regarding these ships and the men aboard them shows that the bringing of these ships into harbour and the disembarkation of the men were entirely the result of my persistent demands, and had nothing to do with the Chinese authorities. With reference to the aforesaid reports, however, I can only assume insincerity on the part of the Chinese officials, and I am therefore asking you whether any order was issued by the Chinese authorities for the ships to be kept under guard until such time as their fate can be settled by the Peking authorities.

"If such an order has in fact been issued, then I beg officially to inform the Commissioner for Foreign Affairs in Shanghai that the strs. Mongugai and Zashchitnik are the private property of the Cossack group, while the str. Okhotsk is my own private property, a fact proved to you by documents you know of.

"After what has already been said about these ships I am quite sure that neither the Soviet Government nor the Chinese authorities have the right to dispose of them, for they cannot dispose of what does not belong to them, and I will take every step to defend my rights and my property.

In conclusion, I beg of you immediately to refute the accuracy of the reports in the "Shanghai Times" regarding the ships being brought up the Huangpu by the Chinese authorities.

DEPRECIATION OF SMALL MONEY

Foreign Shopkeepers' Profits Threatened

A meeting of representatives of foreign stores in Shanghai was held on Wednesday afternoon to consider the possibility of taking action in the matter of "small money" losses.

It was mentioned that some firms are losing a considerable amount of money in this connexion, one representative saying that his firm lost as much now in a week as they did in a month three or four years ago. Women, it would seem from the discussion, are the most troublesome customers in the matter of small change, and, somewhat surprisingly, one heard that "globe trotters" are equally fractious about "big" and "small" money.

The matter was discussed at length from the points of view of the customer and the store-keeper, and afterwards a committee was appointed to draw up a report and make recommendations. These will be circulated in due course and, it is hoped will result in the general adoption of a scale of prices for purchases under a dollar which will be equitable both to the storekeeper and the customer.

THE NEW SHANGHAI POST OFFICE

Magnicient Structure on Soochow Creek Now Fairly to Be Appreciated and Due to Open in the Near Future

The fine new premises built for the Chinese postal authorities to replace the building in Szechuen Road as Shanghai's district head post office are nearing completion, and by September it is confidently expected will be complete. The congestion in the present post office should be completely eliminated, for the new premises are large and commodious enough to take even Shanghai's postal traffic,—if the term is permissible. Certainly the counter space is larger, the counter in the parcels department being 523 ft. in length, and that in the public hall, 515 ft. Some idea of what this means can be gathered by picturing H.M.S. Hawkins, and chopping off a little under one-sixth of her length; then take what remains and you have the size of each of these counters. The Shanghai Club bar will be no where in it.

Now that the matting and scaffolding have been mostly taken down, it is possible to realize something of the building's commanding presence,—an effect heightened by the rather dingy surroundings. The clock tower particularly stands out, while the general classical simplicity of design is very pleasing to the eye.

The building was started only about 18 months ago, and occupies a commanding site at the corner of North Soochow and North Szechuen Road, immediately across the new bridge.

Thanks to most efficient organization, extraordinary progress has been made. The contractors, Messrs. Ah Hong & Co., are to be heartily congratulated on their splendid performance, for the building will be completed many months before contract time, a state of affairs very rarely attained in China.

Roughly the premises are U-shaped in plan, five storeys in height, fronting upon North Soochow, North Szechuen and Tiendong Roads, with the various postal departments conveniently arranged to meet the requirements of the public, and to allow of rapid and efficient handling of incoming and out-going mail.

The principal facades to the North Soochow and North Szechuen Roads are designed in the form of a single massive classic colonnade, rising direct from the pavement to a height of more than 50 feet. They will be constructed of granite in the lower portions and artifical granite above.

ONE OF THE TWO HUGE GROUPS OF STATUARY TO BE PLACED ON THE TOWER. THEY WERE MODELLED BY A LOCAL SCULPTOR, MR. WAGSTAFF.

At the corner of these two frontages is placed a clock tower some 200 feet in height, which forms a dominating feature of the design. On the north and south sides of this tower 110 feet from the ground, mammoth groups of statuary, symbolical of the postal services will be placed. These groups are approximately 21 feet wide and 14 feet high. The group illustrated will be placed on the south side. Mr. Wagstaff (of Arts & Crafts) an exhibitor of sculpture at the Royal Academy, is the sculptor who modelled these groups, and the infinite pains he took in the work show up in the finished work.

The ground floor is occupied by the Import and Export Parcels Departments, and the walls, counters and floors are treated in a simple and hygenic manner with encaustic tiles and terrazzo. On the first floor is the postal public hall along the Soochow Road front with mosaic floors, marble and teak counters and ornamental plaster wall and ceiling treatment. It is approached by a double staircase of Italian marble from the Soochow-Szechuen Road Corner and auxiliary staircases at the west end. The remainder of this floor is occupied by the sorting, despatching and other offices.

On the second floor are the administration offices and on the third floor residential flats and quarters for members of the staff.

The architects are Messrs. Stewardson and Spence, F. R. I. B. A., B. A., who obtained the award in competition.

AN IMPOSING VIEW OF THE NEW POST OFFICE AS IT WILL APPEAR FROM NORTH SZECHUEN ROAD BRIDGE, SHOWING THE TWO MAIN COLONNADES. THE CLOCK TOWER IS 200 FEET HIGH.

APOSTOLIC DELEGATE AT ST. XAVIER'S

His Excellency on Materialism in Modern Schools in China

On the occasion of the close of the Catholic General Council in China, the Apostolic Delegate, Archbishop Costantini, and 17 Bishops attended a reception in their honour at St. Francis Xavier's College on Monday. The reception was followed by a delightful musical and dramatic entertainment by the pupils. Among the bishops present in addition to his Excellency, were Mgrs. Gauthier, Blois, Carlo, Rayssac, Terlaak, Aguirre, Part, Bourgain and Van Dick.

Shortly after five o'clock to the strains of Gounod's impressive "Marche Pontificale" the Delegate, accompanied by the visiting Bishops entered the school hall, packed with an enthusiastic gathering past and present students and friends.

Welcoming the Delegate and bishops, the Rev. Bro. Antonin, Director of the College, asked his Excellency to glance at the assembly. It represented 25 different nations, but they were united far more intimately than nations and states. Their hearts beat in unison, their spiritual minds were nourished from the same source, and all were children of the Church.

Referring to the wonderful growth of the College, Bro. Antonin said that it would shortly celebrate its 50th anniversary. Its development had been as rapid as that of the Concessions. In conclusion he thanked his Excellency for having come that afternoon to give them precious encouragement. The visit was the greatest consolation that Christian educators or their pupils could possibly desire.

The Apostolic Delegate thanked masters, and pupils for such a magnificent expression of respect accorded to the venerable Bishops in China on the occasion of the Catholic Council. Might Providence bless the good work of the Marists who collaborated with the Missions with such Christian fortitude, might their numbers European and Chinese never grow less, and might they ever be imbued with the admirable spirit of the founder of the College.

Continuing, his Excellency begged the masters to remember that they had more to do than merely teach languages and sciences. They had to realize the dignity of the human soul.

"Unhappily," he went on," there reigns in modern schools in China a Materialist atmosphere. It is a copy, coming some years later, of the European materialism of the last 50 years, and like all copies far worse than the original. The other day, Tagore, the Indian poet, asked some students at a university whether they believed in a god or not. The question fell like a thunderbolt in the material atmosphere of that university. "It is impossible for me to believe," said the poet, "that the universe with its marvellous life and beauty could be the result of blind mechanical force."

In was in spiritual matters that lay the superiority of their schools, where it was not sufficient merely to adorn the intelligence but where the admirable moral underlying all was the forming of their spiritual consciences.

The choir then rendered "Vive Monseigneur!" and after a humorous dialogue by two of the pupils, "Les Martyrs aux Arenes." Two violin solos by H. dos Remedios and the Lustpiel of Keler Béler, charmingly interpreted by the orchestra followed.

"Le's Jeunes Captifs," a playet by the Abbé Labardin, brought a most enjoyable entertainment to a close.

MR. KUAN CHUN, Senior Magistrate of the Mixed Court, has assured Mr. Hsu Yuan, Commissioner of Foreign Affairs, that he will gladly resume duty after a good rest if his health should be then improved. Mr. Kuan has also expressed his gratification at the solicitude shown him by Mr. Hsu and members of the Chinese General Chamber of Commerce.

ANGLO-AMERICAN RULE IN LAW

The Best to Adopt for China: Dr. Tung K'ang's Advice to Chinese Law Students

At the seventh annual graduation of the Comparative Law School of China, the Law Department of Soochow University, which took place on June 14, an honorary degree was conferred on H. E. Tung K'ang, former Minister of Justice and Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of China.

Dr. Tung K'ang called attention to the fact that the legal system of China dated back 2,000 years. The educational system, however, retarded the growth of Law because research was unusual and not encouraged. Some scholars, however, interested themselves in the law and during the Tang Dynasty a code was compiled which in some respects resembled the English Common Law.

During the Ching Dynasty a law codification bureau was organized with which Dr. Tung was associated which undertook to revise and codify the laws of China. It was unfortunate, he thought, that the continental instead of the Anglo-American legal systems were adopted in China.

"The former system, with its intricate provisions and complicated procedure, is diametrically opposite to the traditions and customs throughout this country," he said "My tour of England and America has brought home to me most forcibly that a thorough judicial reform according to the Anglo-American legal system is urgently needed."

Delays That Should Be So.

Dr. Tung recommended that the judicial system be reorganized along Anglo-American lines, the procurator system, which only made for delays being abolished and judical powers being vested in the district magistrate and branches of the Supreme Court should be established in various parts of the country. The Civil Code must recognize the variations in local customs and traditions in China and the authority should be vested in local officials to determine the relationship of the law to local practices. Only in case of conflict between local customs and national enactments should the power of the national government be applied. Dr. Tung also favoured arbitration instead of constantly rushing to the courts on every occasion. In the Ching Dynasty, he said that there had been a form of compulsory arbitration.

Bachelor degrees were conferred by Dr. J. A. G. Shipley, Chairman of the Board of Trustees of the University, upon the following candidates:

Chang Ching-rwen, William Wenpak Chen, Cheng Ying-hou, Afman Hsi, Charles H. Kao, Herbert C. T. Lee, R. C. W. Sheng, Ruchin T. Y. Tsar, Tsiang Koh-fong, Tsok Kong-ming, Yang Feng-chun, Henry T. Yao, I. W. Yen, Zurtin Zao and Zongsan Zia.

HOW TO CHECK THE SMUGGLING OF ARMS

Drastic Powers Against Shipping Available to Customs, If They Wish to Exert Them

The seizures of smuggled arms and ammunition which have this week been made by the Customs officials and police once again emphasize the need for strong counter-measures against the extensive traffic in contraband. Discoveries of the kind have been made on each of the last four French mail boats to arrive and, whilst it is not suggested that offenders are not to be found elsewhere, information gleaned on the present occasion suggests that Marseilles is just now a centre of big business in this trade. Over 200 revolvers have been seized this week, and in this, as in other, cases, it by no means follows that the number actually discovered represents the total cargo. And it is an extremely difficult business for the authorities to tackle, difficult especially in the way of finding the chief offenders. Traffickers in arms hide their cargo away on board and "take a chance" on its not being discovered by the authorities on arrival in Shanghai. If it should be traced, the smuggler remains in the back-ground, the loss suffered by confiscation being easily met by the enormous profits made when a deal is successfully completed.

How considerable these profits must be is shown by the information which has come to light in the latest case, viz., that a revolver and 100 rounds of ammunition can be purchased in Marseilles for Frs. 80, while in Shanghai the same may be disposed of at prices as high as $150. No one is ever brought to book except occasionally a member of the crew attempting a quiet landing with a few revolvers under his coat, or a longshoreman engaged to dispose of some of the contraband on commission, and as long as this method of dealing with the matter continues, the leaders in the trade will continue to run the risk of their goods being confiscated. Playing their cards carefully, it is about the only risk they do run.

The All Essential Permit.

We think it both advisable and necessary to draw attention to the fact that the Commissioner of Customs has very extensive powers in the matter, which powers do not seem to have been rigidly exercised. According to "Customs Procedure," every vessel using the port of Shanghai does so by permit, and the granting of this permit is subject to very special conditions. The "General Discharge Permit" is issued subject to the signing of a guarantee by responsible shipping firms that certain conditions will strictly be observed. These conditions, naturally, make special provision against the introduction of contraband cargo. Amongst other things, the guarantee requires that once at least during a voyage, a steamer must carefully be searched with a view to discovering any contraband or smuggled goods which may be on board and, in the event of any being found, the master is required to deliver the same over to the Customs authorities at the first port reached. The guarantee further sets forth that the master of a vessel and all other officers are to receive the most stringent instructions in the matter of contraband, but its chief condition is this: that the guarantors have to make themselves responsible for payment (if called upon) "of any fine to which the master of a steamer may have become liable through the contravention of any treaty, rule or regulation in case he (the master) shall not, within three months of the alleged contravention, have been brought before the Consul or other official concerned to answer the charge; and, finally, it is provided that the Commissioner of Customs may at any time cancel the "general discharge permit," even without assigning reasons for so doing.

The Companies' Responsibility.

We have not given the precise wording of the regulations, but such is their bearing, and it is obvious that their enforcement would be fraught with very serious consequences for those concerned. It is equally obvious that the regulations, which of course apply to other contraband than arms and ammunition, were intended to be drastic and to place final responsibility on the shipping companies. We do not recall that either the master of a vessel or the agents have ever been proceeded against under these regulations: possibly fines have been levied, paid, and a new permit issued. In any case, here is authority for dealing with the problem in a drastic manner, and it might be well for the authorities to consider whether this greater power should not be exercised to some extent at least to the extent of eusuring precise and sustained caution against the introduction of contraband on a steamer. We do not, of course, suggest that agents and masters of vessels are not taking precautions, and precautions which may seem to them to be adequate, or the utmost within their power but the facts of the case prove that these precautions, rigid as they may be, are being flouted, and the logical conclusion would seem to be that, through the agents, pressure must be brought to bear upon the master, and through the master, upon the members of the crew. No improvement in a situation fraught with real danger to the public generally, can be looked for if we continue to rely solely upon chance discoveries when a vessel arrives in port.

WEDDINGS

Donnelly-Taylor

A quiet wedding took place on Tuesday afternoon at Holy Trinity Cathedral when Miss Lillian Taylor, who recently arrived from Melbourne, Australia, became the bride of Mr. C. A. Donnelly of the Shanghai Waterworks, Ld.

The bride, who was given away by Mr. Allan Youngson, was charmingly gowned in fawn morocain, tastefully embroidered in shades of pink, with large shady picture hat to match trimmed with drooping feather.

The bridegroom was attended by Mr. J. Armour as best man, and Mrs. Allan Youngson, who wore a dress and picture hat of carnation pink crêpe-de-chine, acted as matron of honour. Dean Symons officiated at the simple ceremony, which was short and impressive.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Allan Youngson, 586 Rue de l'Observatoire, where friends of the young couple, who both hail from sunny Australia, met to wish them every happiness in their new life.

Mencarini-Ruiz

An interesting wedding was solemnized at the Capucin Fathers' Church in Manila on Sunday evening, June 8, when Miss Almudena Ruiz, of Alhama de Granada, Spain, became the wife of Mr. Alfredo Fernando Mencarini, of Shanghai, second son of Mr. and Mrs. Juan Mencarini. The church was prettily decorated for the occasion, and the bride presented a pleasing picture in a French satin dress with Brussels lace trimmed with orange. The Misses Pascual acted as bridesmaids, attired in a classic Spanish white mantilla, while the little daughter of Attorney Jubierrz Refida and the bridegroom's nephew, Alhino Mencarini, acted as train-bearers. After a brief honeymoon in the Philippines, the young couple left for Shanghai, where the bridegroom is employed with the Standard Oil Co.

PRIZES were distributed at the Foreign Y. W. C. A. on June 12 to the winners of an essay writing competition for Shanghai schoolchildren on "Alcohol: What It Is (etc.)" organized by the Shanghai Total Abstinence League. The successful competitors were R. M. Noblston, S. Edward Williams, Samuel Harvey, and Charles J. Taylor, who received awards to the value of $75. Nineteen papers were sent in, of which 13 were by boys and six by girls attending the Municipal schools. Each competitor, irrespective of the quality of the essay presented, received a book, and in this way everyone had a souvenir of the occasion. Mr. R. G. Dowie was the judge, and Miss Barchet presented the prizes.

OBITUARY

Dr. Frank George Carpenter

We greatly regret to announce that Dr. F. G. Carpenter, an American journalist and author, who was known the world over by his travel and political articles contributed to newspaper syndicates and magazines, died on Wednesday morning at 7.22 in the Foreign Hospital in Nanking from cystitis, with serious kidney complications. His body was brought to Shanghai on last evening's train and will be sent to America. A simple private service for his friends will probably be held in Bubbling Cemetery to-day.

Dr. Carpenter was on one of his extended tours, having sailed from Seattle on February 14, passing through Japan, Shanghai, and Hongkong en route to Manila, where he arrived on March 10. After spending several weeks there he returned to Hongkong and Canton for a week and came to Shanghai on May 10, where he remained until May 21 and then went to Soochow and Wusih on his way to Nanking. After two days in Nanking he became ill and on May 25 went to the Foreign Hospital, where he was under the care of Dr. Wilmot, in consultation with Drs. Hutcheson and Daniels. His secretary, Mr. Chester Wathen, and his friend of 30 years, Dr. John C. Ferguson of Peking, were with him during his illness and everything possible was done for him, but he finally succumbed early on Wednesday morning.

Dr. Carpenter was born in Mansfield, Ohio, on May 8, 1885, began his newspaper work as legislative correspondent for the "Cleveland Leader," at Columbus, and from that time has been a valued correspondent of the largest American dailies, newspaper syndicates and magazines. Besides his world tours he made extensive trips to every part of the globe, having visited China at least four times. He was the author of Carpenter's Geographical Readers and of many educational books for children. His home in the United States was in Washington, D. C., where we understand he has a son and a daughter with whom deep sympathy will be felt.

CHINESE "KU KLUX KLAN"

Reported Establishment in French Concession: Secret Society or Club?

What purported to be a detailed description of the newly-formed Chinese "Ku Klux Klan" was published in the "China Times" on Wednesday. The Chinese reporter stated—with a suitable expression of surprise—that the English language is used at the ceremony of initiation, an interpreter being used if the new member is only able to speak his own language. The usual secret signs of recognition are in vogue, with a special one for use when members casually meeting desire to enter into conversation.

It is said that the offices of the "Klan," in the French Concession, are comfortably furnished as a club, which has its recreation ground, reading room, piano and gramophone. The Cantonese leader of the organization is said to be "an important member" of a foreign firm in Shanghai, and , adds the reporter, among the members is "a fat man, who is a Chilean." It is customary for members to keep exemplary hours, the Club being closed promptly at 11 p.m., and any member residing at a distance is kindly provided with the use of a motor-car. Where the money comes from for all this is a mystery, and the investigator is equally uncertain as to how the following schemes will be financed: establishment of a hospital, bank, university, college and school. One learns that the Klan proposes to sweep away all class distinctions among Chinese, the rule being that all men become brothers from the moment of their election. The "China Times" notes that membership of the Klan is "alarming."

AT the request of the native banks at Nantao, the Constabulary Bureau has detailed additional policemen to patrol the quarters where these banks are situated from 8 a.m. to dusk, commencing from Monday last.

THE ANGERS'S ARMS

Further Seizure and two More Arrests: Guns Purchased at Marseilles for Frs. 80

The excellent stroke of work accomplished by Customs officials in seizing over 200 revolvers and some 10,000 rounds of ammunition on board the French mail str. Angers on Saturday did not, as might have been supposed, account for the whole of the steamer's contraband cargo. It was thought advisable to keep a watch on the vessel, and this has resulted in two arrests and a further seizure of arms.

Early on Monday morning, a Sikh watchman on duty at the Whangpoo Wharf observing three men coming from the Angers went forward with the intention of challenging them. They at once ran away, one making for the ship and the other two dashing off in the direction of Yangtszepoo Road. The alarm which was raised brought other police on the scene, and these two men were arrested and taken to Wayside police Station.. They were then found to have in their possession 19 automatic pistols of .32 calibre and 973 rounds of ammunition, and in addition there were two pistols and 174 rounds which one or both of them threw away in the course of their flight. The police ascertained that the revolvers were purchased in Marseilles at Frs. 80, with 100 rounds of ammunition.

Accused to Be Tried by Naval Court.

The two men, Pierre Renucke and Jean George, of the Angers, were brought up at the French Mixed Court on Tuesdaay, and an order was made that the revolvers and ammunition be handed over to the French police headquarters, that a full report of the case be forwarded to the French Consulate, and that a date be fixed for trial of the accused by a Naval Court on board a French man-of-war.

CHINESE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Election of Committee

The ballot box containing the votes at the election of the General Committee of the Chinese General Chamber of Commerce for the fifth term was opened in the presence of Mr. Yen Teh-ching, representing the Taoyin of Shanghai, on Sunday last. The total number of votes cast was 437, of which one was declared invalid. The result showed that 35 members, who polled the largest numbers of votes, were elected to form the General Committee, and 35 members who polled the next largest numbers, were elected in reserve, the former being headed by Mr. Fang Chiao-pah and the latter by Mr. Sung Han-chang.

The elected members were notified by the Chamber of their election on Monday, and requested to say whether they were willing to serve or not within 15 days, so that in case of any one refusing to serve, his vacancy might be filled by one of those elected in reserve in time for the new Committee to hold an election of a Chairman and two Vice-Chairman on July 5, next, from among themselves.

BIG OPIUM RAID BY THE POLICE

Two Men Arrested

A raid of specials (Reserves) and members of the S.M.P., under the personal direction of Mr. M. O. Springfield, Assistant Commissioner of Police, on the premises at 349 Santeh Road led, yesterday, to the arrest of two men and the seizure of a considerable (officially described as such) quantity of opium.

The house, which has numerous entrances, has been used by the band for some time for dispensing the drug and when the officers arrived in the morning most of the gang made off. Two of their number, however, not so active as the others, fell into the clutches of the law.

The opium had been made up into small parcels, ready to sell to the ordinary man of the street, who desired just enough for the moment, and there appeared to be thousands of small packages.

The two arrested men will appear at the Mixed Court this morning, when, it is expected, a remand will be asked for.

EXCLUSIVE UP-RIVER RESORT

Russian Belles in Garden Somewhere in Nantao and "Top-Hatted" Clientele

Where can it be?

On Thursday, a Chinese newspaper called "Microscope" printed an account of extraordinary proceedings alleged lately to have been carried on at a pleasure garden on the Nantao side some 30 li from Shanghai. The writer of the article presumably refers to foreigners in his description of "gentlemen with top hats and walking sticks" who motor from Shanghai and, arriving at the rendezvous, alight and proceed into the garden" with heavy tread." This last delicate descriptive touch suggests Police Constables, though, we believe, the majority of them do not ordinarily sport "toppers."

The proceedings within the garden, where, it is said, Russian women are engaged to dance, are described in such detail as would make a member of the Moral Welfare League weep. The story is fantastic enough, but there may be some truth in it. Perhaps the authorities will make discreet inquiries, especially as, latterly, a notice is said to have been displayed: "Foreigners only admitted."

RUSSIAN REFUGEES' AMNESTY?

Reported Statement by Soviet Representative in Shanghai

Dealing with the Russian refugee question last Friday, "Shanghai New Life" gave an interview said to have taken place between Citizen Pugacheff and a prominent Shanghai representative of the Soviet Government. The latter is credited with the following statement:

"A guarantee is being given to all military refugees who participated in the civil war that upon their return to Russia they will not be punished for the past. Publication of a special Government Act granting an amnesty to all White leaders returning to Russia of their own free will is expected in a few days, and thus no one will be punished for having assisted the Whites in the civil war. Persons who have committed serious crimes, however, such as murder, robbery, torture of prisoners, etc., as well as persons who were members of the White secret police or who acted as traitors, will not benefit by the amnesty. Nevertheless, such persons will be given an opportunity of having their responsibility reduced if they repent and ask for pardon, and their voluntary return to Russia will itself tend to ensure leniency for them. Rumours which have been spread by Whites reporting the execution of military refugees are baseless. The Labourers' and Peasants' Government has punished only the real culprits, viz., the White leaders, but the Government is prepared to forgive even the Whites provided they express regret and desire to return to Russia. That this is so is shown by the case of General Zaitseff, who recently returned to Russia from Shanghai.

IT was announced on Tuesday that the Shanghai Bar Association (Chinese) has decided to form a special organization to be known as "The Mixed Court Rendition Support Association."

MR. Yu Ya-ching, on behalf of the San Peh S. N. Co., has wired the Minstry of Communications, offering to buy the two steamers, Huata and Huali, for $170,000. No reply from Peking has been received yet.

THE Chinese Banking Association and the Native Banks' Guild have received a telegram from the Mint at Anking, saying that it commenced work only from April 1 last. Due to the mismanagement of the former directors the public has withdrawn its confidence. The low rate of the dollar has made it impossible to go on with the work, and that the Mint has, by permission of the Governor, therefore stopped minting the dollars for several days.

SECOND SHANGHAI DOG SHOW

A Splendid Collection of Dogs but Poor Support by the General Public

The second attempt, on Saturday, of a small group of dog-lovers to start a regular dog show in Shanghai was one of those curious mixtures of success and failure which occasionally occur. So far as the dogs on exhibition were concerned, the show probably was a great deal in advance of what anybody imagined could be done in Shanghai, but the trouble was that there were not a great many more people than dogs present and therefore it is extremely doubtful whether the show paid for itself, apart from making the profit which the promoters were hopeful of handing over to the "Field" Distemper Fund. Last year's show was spoilt by a deluge of rain that continued all day: this year's apparently suffered through the gloriously fine weather, for, as there were no other special attractions until the tennis doubles match late in the afternoon, it is to be assumed that most people must have been engaged at cricket, tennis, or on up-river excursions.

As regards the dogs there can be nothing but praise. There were altogether about 350 benched and certainly 75 per cent. of them were animals who would have ranked well in any provincial show at Home, even though possibly they would not have made much impression in London. There were even some, according to the judges, who could with confidence have been benched anywhere. Notable amongst the latter were Mr. H. E. Morriss' Alsatian bitch, Mr. W. J. Hawkings' bull terrier, Mr. A. W. Burkill's wirehaired fox terrier bitch, Mrs. E. G. Tait's dog of the same breed (though the latter only took third place behind Caesar, last year's Champion), Mr. F. B. Scott's champion Boston bull terrier and Mrs. Schregardus's champion Japanese spaniel. The Alsatians easily were the biggest class, it being possible to make sections for dogs, bitches and puppies, but the pointers probably were the best class as regards quality. It was particularly noticeable that, although only two classes were judged by the same judges as last year—and in neither of these two were the awards the same—in very many cases dogs who secured awards last year also came to notice this time, so that their owners may be sure their animals really have merit.

Judging always is a difficult business and it is impossible to be too lavish in praise of those ladies and gentlemen who officiated on this occasion. Miss Vera McBain, Mr. Trevor Twentyman, Mr. H. E. Gibson and Mr. J. F. W. Milne had the tasks which came more prominently to notice, through being the judges of the more popular classes, and they gave every satisfaction but only those more closely connected with the management of the show know of the immense help given by Miss Jean Armstrong, Mr. P. W. Goldring, Mr. C. H. Green, Mr. J. F. Duncan, Mrs. Wing and Mr. R. Neumann, who judged classes previously allotted to them and at the shortest notice also took over the duties of other judges who were indisposed. Mr. E. T. Byrne, Mr. M. O. Springfield and Mr. A. de C. Sowerby accepted what always are the most difficult tasks—judging the miscellaneous classes—and did them well. One cannot omit some mention of Major H. E. Keylock, who for two hours sat under a broiling sun conducting the veterinary examination, but who seemed to be content with being able to say that not one of the dogs was suffering from disease.

During the afternoon, Mrs. E. T. Byrne kindly presented cups to the owners of the winners in each class, and her husband, as chairman of the committee, in addition to paying generous compliments to all who had assisted, offered some very direct comment, especially reminding exhibitors that it would be quite impossible to run dog shows if people who entered dogs walked them off as soon as the judging was finished, leaving only empty stalls to be viewed by visitors to the show.

Hongkong's public executioner has resigned rather than hang the Chinese woman condemned to death in the Lantao murder case, for poisoning her husband.

WHY SHOULD NOT THE DOGS HAVE A SHOW OF THEIR OWN?

GLENAMOY REFLOATED AT LAST

After Five Weeks: Fine Work Done by Tokio Salvage Co: Ship Now at Beal Is.

The Glen Line motor vessel, Glenamoy, which had grounded on Video Island in the Chusan Archipelago more than a month ago, was refloated last Friday at 4.30 a.m. and towed to Beal Island about 35 miles, where the vessel is now beached.

The Glenamoy grounded on May 11 in the course of a very heavy fog on a trip from Hongkong to Shanghai. Hitting the rocks of the archipelago, the vessel was considered lost. The rocks penetrated the bottom of the ship and held her tightly, while the No. 1 and No. 2 holds were seriously damaged and flooded.

On May 16, the Tokio Salvage Company appeared on the scene with the Azuma Maru, formerly the Brodie Clark, a ship built at the Old Dock, Shanghai. Launches and lighters were also provided the remove whatever cargo could be saved. The Nagasaki Maru, No. 1, stood by to take off the cargo. The position of the vessel was such that no landing place could be provided and the work both difficult and dangerous because of the underwater rocks on all sides of the Glenamoy.

The Glenamoy was hanging by her head in a most critical position when the salvage corps got to work. The flooding of the holds settled the ship in such a way that it was impossible to budge her. The salvage corps first built a coffer dam so that the deck became a bottom and thus prevented further settling.

Under Water Work.

They then pumped the water out of the No. 1 and No. 2 holds into the aft hold to tip her head up. Much of the work was done under water by expert Japanese divers. A corps of Japanese engineers, divers and workmen had been sent over to salvage the ship. Captain S. Mori, Managing Director of the Tokio Salvage Company, superintended the work personally. Chief Engineer Tashiro and Captain Miyazaki were in immediate charge of the crew.

Work on the vessel has been practically constant since May 16, day and night shifts operating. Powerful searchlights were used to make work possible during the night and both steam and gasoline pumps were in action all the time. The vessel finally was freed from the rocks at 4.30 a.m. on Friday. At 9.30 a.m. she was moved off to Beal Island, arriving there at 7.30 p.m. It was impossible to bring the Glenamoy to Shanghai because of the bad condition of her bottom. She was therefore beached at Beal Island, where she is still drawing 30 feet until the lightening is completed.

A Deadly Coast.

Mr. Ito of the Mitsui Bussan Kaisha Insurance Dept. and Captain Mori of the Tokio Salvage Company, in describing the wreck, said that it was difficult to prevent accidents from happening to ships off the rocky coast of Ckekiang in the typhoon season, when fogs were thick, gales strong and the current so powerful as to throw almost any ship against the submarine rocks which abounded everywhere in the Chusan Archipelago.

The Tokio Salvage Company operates after the fashion of a Chinese medico. No cure, no pay! In salvaging vessels they do so largely at their own risk, gambling the ability of their divers and engineers with the forces of nature. The Shanghai agents are the Mitsui Bussan Kaisha.

MAKING MODEL HOMES FOR CHINA

Hygiene Education and Tariff: Sound Principles at 5th Annual Conference

At 2 p.m. on Saturday last, the fifth annual meeting of the Society for the promotion of Model Homes began at the Professional and Industrial Educational Department of the Kiangsu Educational Association. Dr. Y. P. Huang presided. He said in part, that he would call this first day of the meeting "a savings day" and the two following days "the days for care of children and adoption of hygiene principles." The primary aims of the Society, he said, were to encourage the habit of thrift and saving money, proper attention to the upbringing of children, and adoption of healthy principles of hygiene.

Dr. Huang emphasized the importance of practising abstinence, from smoking, drinking and gambling.

Mr. Chao Hen-sen, in charge of the Savings Department of the Shanghai Commercial and Savings Bank, spoke on the necessity of giving every child a complete education for 18 years before we could expect any good result from him or her. In order to meet the large expenses of education now-a-days, he advised all people to save a little money at regular intervals; and he also mentioned many other advantages to be derived from such a thrifty habit.

Mr. Wang of the Hsin Hua Savings Bank also spoke feelingly and interestingly on the same subject.

A programme of music and dancing concluded the first day's meeting.

A REVENUE STAMPS SCANDAL

Stamps Recklessly Mortgaged by Peking Now a Fine Squeeze for Tax Offices

The Ministry of Finance is again ordering all tax offices to report their sales of revenue stamps regularly, according to the Chinese Press. Its order, issued through the Financial Commissioner of Kiangsu, furnishes curious reading. This Ministry, it says, as well as the provincial offices authorized to collect the stamp duty, has mortgaged quantities of such stamps for loans from the banks. The banks, upon the expiry of the terms and without the consent of the Ministry, have flooded the market with these stamps by selling them at a considerable discount. The tax offices have picked up very cheap lots of revenue stamps from the market instead of procuring them from the Government Bureau. Most of these tax offices have failed to report their sales for months, while a few have reported a sale of several tens of cents a month only! The Ministry warns them that they must mend their ways, or they will be dealt with as severely as the penalty provides for the embezzlement of government funds. This looks very much like a case of "heads I win, tails you lose." Poor native banks!

TWO SERIOUSLY INJURED IN MOTOR ACCIDENT

A serious motor accident took place on Sunday afternoon on the Rubicon when Mr. E. Schroeder and Mr. Frentzler were thrown out of a hire car.

It appears that the car was hired from the Nanyang Garage and that the occupants were out for a pleasure ride. The accident was caused by the stern wheel coming off which threw the car. The occupants were thrown in the road and it was said that several cars passed the scene of the accident without offering assistance. Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Bena in one car and Mrs. Craig of the, Astor House, in another came along, stopped and did their best for the injured men. Mr. Bena rendered first aid, using a policeman's baton for a splint. The unfortunate victims were taken in the two motor-cars to Dr. Fearn's Sanitorium, 30 Route Pichon, where immediate treatment was provided and every attention shown them. Dr. Birt, who happened to be in the hospital and Dr. Martin, who was called by one of the party, performed an immediate operation. Both patients are suffering from very severe fractures.

CHINESE ATTACK ON CIGARETTES

Smoking Denounced as Harmful, Wasteful and Beneficial to None but Foreigners

A meeting to start a campaign against smoking cigarettes was held on Sunday morning at the Institute of Industrial Education at Lokapang. About 500 persons were present, including many educationists and students. Mr. Li Ping-shu was in the chair.

Mr. Yuan Kuan-lan outlined the object of the meeting. Money squandered in China on cigarettes, he said, far exceeded a hundred million dollars a year, Kiangsu bearing the lion's share to the extent of 24 millions. Something creditable would surely have been achieved, had this huge sum of money been spent on education and industry, instead of being rendered into smoke, literally, from year to year. He estimated that 90 per cent. of this wastage went to the foreigner's pocket. Therefore, this meeting was held with the object of persuading people to refrain from smoking any more cigarettes. Everyone present, he hoped, would do his or her best to preach the benefits of non-smoking.

Chairman Li called upon Mr. Wu Tse-hui and Mr. Ma Hsiang-peh to address the meeting.

Mr. Wu dilated on the injurious effects of cigarette smoking. In the Ming Dynasty, smoking was so rigorously suppressed that smokers were frequently given the extreme penalty, which, he said, was also the punishment enforced in ancient Turkey. Among missionary circles, smoking was taboo, being considered one of the sinful deeds that a good Christian should avoid committing. He regretted to see people the world over being addicted to this pernicious habit, while youths and girls apparently thought it fashionable to be seen with a cigarette dangling between their lips. Mr. Wu estimated the cost of cigarettes annually consumed in China at over 20 million dollars, his own village spending about $75,000 a year on them. He suggested two remedies: (1) To request the Government to levy as heavy a tax as possible on cigarettes, and (2) to conduct an extensive anti-smoking campaign.

The Doctrine of Non-Co-operation.

Mr. Ma Hsiang-peh interspersed his speech with several anecdotes. He spoke of the demoralizing effect of smoking opium. One rich family of his native town was reduced to a state of penury in a couple of decades only, simply because its youngsters indulged in smoking this stuff. When the white man first set his foot on Australian soil, the native population was both numerous and flourishing. The white man gave them wine which the natives drank and felt jolly, but they became indolent. They soon drank heavily. "Now, if we go to Australia, we will not see many natives," Mr. Ma continued. "Let us learn that drinking and smoking, though trivial matters, could exterminate a race of human beings. The white man is now supplying us with cigarettes to smoke and draining us dry of our money at the rate of hundreds of millions a year. If the white man won't repent, nobody can say to what extent mankind will have to suffer ultimately.

"Swear never to smoke any cigarettes again, and we shall be carrying out the doctrine of non-co-operation as is preached and practised by the Indian people," concluded Mr. Ma.

LOCAL NURSES DECORATED

O.B.E. for Miss Dalton and Miss Little

Two local nurses, Miss Catherine Dalton and Miss Norah Little, were invested with the order of the British Empire by Mr. Barton, H. M. Consul-General, at the Consulate on Saturday. Following the ceremony, Mrs. Glass gave a reception in honour of the recipients and their friends.

Miss Dalton, it will be remembered, was matron of the Yokohama Hospital at the time of the earthquake, with Miss Little as her assistant. Their heroic efforts and self-sacrificing work for the sufferers attracted widespread attention. Mr. A. T. White, who assisted them, has been awarded the M.B.E.

The price came yesterday at 34⅝d. ready and 34 1/16d. forward, against 34⅛d. and 34⅛d. a week ago, showing rises of 1/16d. and 1/16d., respectively on the quotations. Business has apparently been very quiet in the London market, where the Continent has only been reported as a buyer on one day during the week. Reuter reports the market yesterday as quiet, with buyers holding off.

Bars in stock, 2,871, including Silver Yen 10 lakhs, of which we hold 141 bars. Stocks of Sycee and Dollars amount to Tls. 360¼ lakhs and $379½ lakhs, against Tls. 344 lakhs and $361½ lakhs last week, and Tls. 204¼ lakhs and $277 lakhs on June 19, 1923.

Exchange.

Exchange left off last week with the official quotation for T.T. at 3/3⅛d., where it has since remained. We have had no excitement during the week and the market generally has been quiet and steady. The market opened yesterday morning quiet and steady, with sellers T.T. 3/3⅛d. June/August, 3/3⅛d. September/November. Gold $ T.T. 71⅝ June/July, 71⅛ August. At the moment the market is easy with probably no sellers over T.T. 3/3⅛d. ready and forward. Any small amount of bills offering could probably be placed at 4 m/s. MODERN CHINA BANKS

At present, throughout the country there are 81 Chinese banks with a total authorized capital of over $368,900,000 and a paid-up capital of over $155,000,000. Of these banks 17 have headquarters in Peking, 19 in Shanghai, 8 in Tientsin, 8 in Hangchow, Chêkiang province, 7 in Hongkong, 3 in Soochow, Kiangsu province, and 3 in Nanchang, Kiangsi province. Other commercial centres, including Hankow, Tsinan, Chungking and Kaifeng, each boast of one or two such institutions. It was not until August 1, 1919, that a foreign exchange department was established by a Chinese bank, the institution being the Shanghai Commercial Savings Bank. Several other banks in process of organization are not included in the above figures.

SHANGHAI MARKET REPORT

A Dull Week: Lack of Interest in Piece Goods Result of Fall in Raw Cotton

June 21.

The local markets had one of their almost unexplainable lapses again this week. Last week, after the holidays, every one was happy, for there was a regular boom in business and there seemed to be nothing to interfere with a continuance of it. Of course, general produce is excepted, for that particular line just now is dead. It was piece goods that caused the trouble and the only possible explanation is a continuance of the policy that often has been noticed, of reducing or increasing orders as the raw material goes down or up. Last week the price came down with a run: hence, say some people, a reduction of piece goods orders. As for produce, as one merchant put it, "If 'moribund' was the correct word to use before—and somehow it seems to sound all right—then the market now can only be described as 'more moribunder'."

Piece Goods

Indent business has been very quiet throughout the week. The inquiry, according to dealers' reports, has been of a more general nature, but it has been very limited. Then, too, although local values have been somewhat easier, only small sales have been recorded, on account of native interest being high. Forward business at the moment is unpopular with dealers, for they have a conviction that Home values must weaken.

Cotton, Yarn, etc.

China Cotton.—There is reported to be a scarcity of cotton locally and prices, though they declined rather smartly in the latter part of the week, still are regarded as high. The tendency of the market now is bearish. Yesterday's closing quotations on the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange were:—June, 47.20; July, 46.90; August, 46.30; September, 43.30; October, 40.70; November, 40.05. Spot quotations:—Shensi, Tls. 47; Hankow, Tls. 45.50 to Tls. 46.

Yarn.—The market has not fluctuated greatly during the week and now is steady. The closing quotations on the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange yesterday morning were:—June, 177.30; July, 175.30; August, 173.90; September, 171.60; October, 167.50; November, 166.30.

In their weekly report, issued yesterday, Messrs. A. B. Rosenfeld & son state:—

China Cotton.—The market has had rather a more active appearance during the early part of the week, prices having advanced about half a tael, due to the local bulls buying. Furthermore, weather conditions had also strengthened. However, prices receded some seven mace for October/November. Market closing steady. In summing up the situation, we see no reason for either materially higher or materially lower prices for cotton in the near future until something more definite can be known as to the general outlook of the crops.

EXTRACTS OF CORRESPONDENCE.

Tungchow, June 16.—Cotton is small, but growing nicely and the outlook so far very good. Stands are from 5 to 6 inches high. Acreage increased about 30 to 40 per cent.

Shanghai and Districts, June 17.—During the early part of the week rains were general throughout these territories and the land has been so wet that little progress has been made. With another few days of clear and warm weather, rapid improvement should take place. Acreage increased about 20 per cent.

Yangtze Valley, June 15.—Weather a little too cool. Crop reports, however, are very favourable.

Chêkiang Province, June 16.—The conditions in this province are steadily improving. Crop prospects so far very good.

Shensi and Shansi Provinces, June 14.—Weather favourable. Farmers are making fair progress with chopping.

Shantung and Chihli Provinces.—No reports to hand.

Yarn.—Fluctuations during the past week have been unimportant, and, although during the early part of the week the tendency was somewhat firmer, the undertone of the market at the close was steady. From present indications, we look for steady markets in the future.

Messrs. J. Spunt & Co., in their weekly report, issued yesterday, state:—

China Cotton.—While the volume of business for prompt deliveries during the past week may be said to have been within narrow dimensions, prices on the whole ruled slightly higher than those prevailing in the preious period and as regards the rates in the local Cotton Exchange on new crop deliveries the predominating tendency moved to higher levels, apparently due to conditions for the growing crop, which is as yet in its delicate state of infancy. Spinners are seriously contemplating further curtailment, being actuated in this direction by the unrelenting unfavourable parity of prices between raw cotton and the finished product. Nevertheless, even if such intended wholesale curtailment were to become an actuality the resultant effect would probably create an appreciation in Mill products, as, for the time being, there are no indications of any drastic curtailment in spindleage affecting materially the present trend of the raw cotton markets which will be regulated from day to day more by the weather map and insect pests than any other factors. Tone of the market, steady.

Produce

The market remains practically unchanged. A few inquiries have been coming forward for sesamum seed, but up to the present local prices are much in excess of buyers' ideas. Inquiries for other commodities are negligible.

WHITEAWAY, LAIDLAW & CO.

The report of the directors for the year ended February 29, 1924, states:—

The accounts show a profit of £167,201 16s. 5d., and, after providing for the payment of the preference dividends to December 31, 1923, and an interim dividend on the ordinary shares paid December 1, 1923, there is a balance of £107,373 19s. 5d., which the directors recommend shall be appropriated as follows:—

To pay a final dividend of 5 per cent., making 10 per cent. per annum, free of tax and a bonus of threepence per share, free of tax, on the Ordinary shares.

To carry to the reserve account £35,160 16s. 9d., making the reserve £275,000.

To pay the trustees of the employees' provident fund £1,500; and to carry forward the balance of £33,876 17s. 8d., to the next year's account, subject to the payment of Corporation Profits Tax.

CHINA MATCH FIRMS

There are 51 match companies in China, with a total capital of above $6,000,000. The amount of business transacted in a year is at least $12,000,000 in total. Most of the factories employ Japanese methods; therefore, equipment, chemicals, chips and boxes usually are imported from Japan. During the past three years, some of the factories in Shanghai, Tientsin, Tsinan and Mukden have been equipped with saw-mills. The Tam Hwa Company has a capital of $2,000,000, owns a forest and a saw-mill in Antung, and also a factory for the manufacture of requisite appliances, except chemicals.

ITCHY PIMPLES ON BABY'S FACE

Spread To Arms and Legs. Cuticura Healed.

"Small pimples began to appear on baby's face. As time went on they festered and formed sore eruptions which soon spread to the baby's arms and legs. The itching and smarting were awful and some nights we hardly got any rest.

"We sent for a free sample of Cuticura Soap and Ointment and after using noticed a great improvement so purchased more, which healed the eruptions." Signed) Alfred B. Simner, 13, Cross Lane, Sedgley, Staffs., Eng.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment are ideal for every-day toilet uses.

Soap 1s., Ointment 1s. 3d. and 2s. 6d. Sold throughout the Empire. For sample each free address: F. Newbery & Sons, Ltd., 27, Charterhouse Sq., London, E.C.1. Also for mail orders with price. Cuticura Soap shaves without mug.

THE ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY

Sale of Old Premises for Purchase of New Suggested by Mr. Goldring

A startling suggestion was sprung on the Royal Asiatic Society at its annual meeting on Thursday evening by Mr. P. W. Goldring, who suggested that the present premises should be sold and larger and better premises purchased elsewhere. Matters resumed normal when Mr. Barton, H. M. Consul General, presiding, explained that the building was owned by the British Government and not by the Society, therefore it was not their's to sell.

Mr. Barton was supported on the platform by Mrs. Gordon Enders (Librarian), Mr. Stark Toller (Secretary) and Mr. A. C. de Sowerby (Curator).

Mr. Stark Toller, reading the secretary's report, stated that the Society's membership was 650, an increase of 50 during the year as against an increase of 28 last year. He feared, however, that many of the names should be struck off by rights owing to subscriptions not having been paid.

Mr. Toller, reading the treasurer's report in the absence of that gentleman, said the Society had a balance in the bank of $1,342.54, and a balance in hand of $99.40.

After Mrs. Enders had read the librarian's report, Mr. Sowerby reported on his work as curator during the year. He remarked that the museum was very sparsely stocked as far as mammals were concerned, and he hoped up-country members, and people who shot, would remember this when disposing of their kill. They were not so badly off for birds and insects, and during the year a good deal of hard work had been put in tabulating them and bringing them generally into order. He greatly regretted they had not a museum guide book or any guide book to help their members when searching for specimens. The work of compiling such a book would be much too heavy for the curators to do on their own, but he would suggest that it might be done with the aid of an intelligent Chinese clerk and the result would well repay them for their trouble. Another thing he had to record with regret was that the museum records were inadequate and incomplete, and although the birds and reptiles had been catalogued, the work was not very completely done. Generally speaking they were very cramped for space, and really needed much more room.

The report and accounts were unanimously agreed upon and adopted.

A member, apropos the curator's report, said it was his habit to go to the museum in order to identify birds he had seen in the country, and nearly always he came away disappointed. The reason was that most of the birds were in a dilapidated condition, were not marked, or were marked in such indistinguishable handwriting that they could not be read. Also the cases were so crowded and often so high that it was impossible to get at them to see them. He wished to know whether it was not possible to re-label the birds and obtain some new specimens.

Mr. de Sowerby replied that the trouble was largely one of room again. They had not the space to set the birds out as they should be set out by rights. However, if any bona fide student of ornithology at any time wished to see birds which he could not get at, it could be arranged that the Chinese in attendance should take the cases down for him and open them, excepting in the summer weather when that course might spoil the specimens. In winter it could be done.

Mr. Goldring then put his question regarding their premises. He pointed out that the building they had now was a very valuable property, but for their purposes very confined. Would it not be possible, he asked, for the incoming council to consider the possibility of disposing of the property and acquiring larger and better premises elsewhere. He reminded the meeting that the Post Office was shortly to be removed, and when that happened there was no telling what was going to happen to that stretch of road. Certainly it would be very much altered, and the probability was that the S.M.C. would be requiring them to slice some of their premises off. This, then, seemed an excellent opportunity to get out and get somewhere larger and better. He felt their work was hampered by lack of space. He was quite sure, also, that with a better hall and better ventilation their meetings would attract larger attendances.

Mr. Barton, replying, said the desirability and necessity of ventilation was realized by them all. Unfortunately, however, they were not in a position to dispose of the property owing to the fact that it belonged to the British Government and was given to the Society under certain conditions. It was extremely doubtful, in fact he would say it was almost certain, that they would not be entitled to realize on the property and with the proceeds go elsewhere.

Mr. Goldring replied to this that if the property was held in tenure from the Government why should the British Government not give them some portion of the Consulate grounds? (Laughter).

This closed the discussion.

The Council was elected as follows:—

President: Mr. Barton, H. M. Consul-General.

Vice-Presidents: Rev. F. L. Hawks Pott, D.D. Mr. Isaac Mason. Curators of Museum: Dr. C. Noel Davis, Mr. A. de C. Sowerby. Librarian: Mrs. Enders. Assistant Librarian: Miss Hays. Honorary Treasurer: Mr. A. E. Baker. Editor of Journal: Rev. G. W. Sheppard. Councillors: Messrs. H. A. Wilden, C. Kliene, R. D. Abraham, C. Harpur, Dr. H. Chatley, Rev. Evan Morgan: Honorary Secretary: Mr. W. Stark Toller.

CHINA'S WRETCHED COINAGE

Mints Issuing Trash: A General Outcry

The chaotic condition of our currency seems to have become still more pronounced recently, remarks the "Sinwanpao." Reckless coinage of copper cents was soon followed by reckless coinage of 20-cent pieces. Next appeared the light-weight copper cents, and then light-weight 20-cent pieces in our market. Lately, silver dollars below the standard purity that is stipulated in our Currency Law have been discovered. All the provinces have had quite a busy time in trying to prevent their respective domains from being flooded by these base coins.

Currency tokens should enjoy to the fullest extent a free circulation, but over-supply and inferior quality have both adversely affected such circulation. By the inexorable law which tells us that bad currency will diminish and replace good currency, our market will soon handle nothing but light-weight copper coins and light-weight and inferior quality 20-cent pieces and dollars, unless remedial measures be taken forthwith. However, to find a solution to this complicated problem in the present circumstances is impossible, while it will be increasingly more difficult as times go.

Copper cents in Tientsin have depreciated to 220/225 for a dollar, 235/237 in Changsha and 195/196 in Shanghai, with a decided tendency to fall still further. Conditions in other places appear to be no better, since most places are prohibiting the importation of copper coins from neighbouring provinces. We hear that Tientsin is forbidding their import from Manchuria, and Hupeh refuses to admit them from Hunan. Although Hunan is itself prohibiting the influx of coppers from Szechuan, it is nevertheless straining every energy to transport and sell its own coppers to Hupeh.

Copper Pays No More.

As the manufacture of copper coins is not so profitable now as before, certain mints have turned their attention to turning out light-weight 20-cent coins and inferior quality dollars from which they have derived very handsome incomes for some time.

The issuance of copper cent notes in the north has added not a little to the already chaotic condition of our currency system. A rather strange and reprehensible practice is that indulged by the Chamber of Commerce at Changli in Chihli who, in addition to issuing its own so-called "Financial Relief Notes," has been assisting various firms and shops there to issue the ping p'iao, a sort of paper money, by affixing the Chamber's Seal thereon as a sign, we suppose, of good faith, instead of restricting or forbidding such reckless doings as it certainly ought to have done.

Our currency reformers are apt to advocate the aboliton of the tael and the adoption of the dollar as the unit. Yet at Ningpo, people are just doing the other way, discarding the dollar in favour of the tael. What a strange contrast.

CHINESE STRIKE IN SILK FILATURES

Ringleaders Taken to Police Station: Amazons Gather to the Rescue

The present time seems remarkable for signs of unrest among labourers. The strike declared by workmen of the Chinese ink-making shops about a fortnight ago is still as far from being settled as before. The cigarette dealers at Pootung have suspended business for four or five days in order to force the tax office to agree to increase the discount allowed them, but without avail. Now, we are told that work at no less than nine silk filature factories has been seriously interfered with by a number of female workers (said to number 5,000) demanding an increase in their wages and a curtailment of their working hours, and refusing to work until the granting of both demands.

The trouble is reported to have started first at the Yunchen Filature at Hukamochiao in Hongkew, because of the alleged ill-treatment of women by a foreman there. When the trouble spread rapidly to other similar establishments in the neighbourhood, the above demands were advanced as the reasons of their going on strike, probably as an afterthought.

The other eight filatures affected are the Tungfengyu on Dixwell Road, Yuchin, Tungyi, Yuanfeng, Changyuan and Fuhua, all situated in Wuchow Road, Tienchang on Tienpao Road, and Yungtai on Tsepoo Road, the last two being drawn into the quarrel only on Monday.

The chief cause of the strike is the question of wages. Last year, when silk was worth Tls. 1,700 or Tls. 1,800 per picul, the workers got as much as 45 cents a day. But the price of silk this year is now only Tls. 900 per picul; the wage was 38 cents per day before the new crop came on the market, and this should have been increased after the new silk was harvested. The proprietors intended to increase two cents at first, and four cents afterwards, but the works are not yet satisfied, demanding to be paid 45 cents, the same as last year.

14 Filatures Affected

In all, 15 filatures were affected by the strike on Tuesday. At only one of these, the Yungtal Factory, whose wages are on a more generous scale, has work been resumed.

Proprietors of the filatures have held several meetings at their Guild, as a result of which, the Chinese authorities have been petitioned for protection and intervention. A revised scale of wages was also drawn up, raising the daily wages to 45 cents for each worker, and allowing those who work seven days per week a weekly bonus of 20 cents each and also a monthly bonus equal to four days' wages for those who work uninterruptedly throughout the whole month. Absence of every half day will forfeit one day's bonus, so that no bonus will be paid to those women who have not worked for two days in a month.

Criminal proceedings will be taken against the five leaders for inciting the workers to strike and for disturbing the peace. Civil suits will also be filed by the factories, which have suffered damages and losses, at the Shanghai District Court. Legal expenses will be borne by all the filatures in Shanghai in proportion to the number of reeling machines in operation.

SENSATIONAL ALARM ON THE RIVER

But Only a Coolie Broaching Cargo: Signalman's Blunder

Towards dusk on Wednesday the River Police were startled on seeing the N O signal hoisted by the str. President Grant, lying at the China Merchants' Central Wharf: and well they might have been, N O being the international code for the following message:

> I am sinking (or on fire) send all available boats to take off crew and passengers.

Members of the River Police immediately pushed off in a sampan with the intention of saving the ship and/or putting out the fire, but all were much relieved upon nearing the vessel to see the ominous N O signal lowered and the Y N (the ordinary police signal) run up in its stead. All that had happened was that a coolie had been caught in the act of stealing eight pieces of silk, and police were required to take charge of him.

It is interesting to note in connexion with this report that the President Grant, which left port at 2 a.m., is the first vessel of its size to leave the Shanghai Harbour after dark. The reason for this, according to Mr. Martinez, despatching agent, is, that she is drawing 28ft. of water and will require two full tides to make both Woosung and Fairway flats. Had she not left during the night she would have been 24 hours late in arriving at Hongkong.

By order of the Constabulary Bureau, exchange and cigarette shops as well as pawnshops in Chinese territory must all put up iron or other metal grills on their counters.

MISSIONARIES IN CHINA

To Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—By comparison with youself I may be a new-comer to China but as it is over 18 years since I first came here, judged by general standards, I think you will admit that I do not come within the category of "New-comer."

It is not my custom to embark on the discussion of a subject of which I know little and I am sorry that my reference to the American "Mercury" should have caused you to believe that this was my sole guide in forming my opinion of the religious Missionary movement in China.

With your permission I will quote some eminent authorities on the subject, whose reputations are almost world-wide. And perhaps I cannot do better than start with Dr. Ku Hung-ming M.A. Ph. D. of whom you recently wrote an admirable obituary notice, thuogh the gentleman is still very much alive. Dr. Ku said:" I appeal to every foreigner who is at all acquainted with the minds of the best and most educated Chinese to say whether such can be converted, whether the very foundation of their national faith and culture can bear such a superstructure as the forms of Christianity which the Missionaries bring into China. Is it not, I say, on the contrary, an open secret that it is only the worst, the weak, the ignorant, the needy and the vicious among the Chinese who have been or could be what the missionaries call converted? If any one should think this too strong a statement I challenge him to show me that the missionary converts are as a class not to say morally higher, but even as educated and as good and useful citizens as those of the Chinese who have not been converted; I ask him to show that these converts, men who have lost faith in their fathers, who are bidden by their foreign teachers to have no sympathy with, if not to despise the traditions or memories of their own past history, who live isolated and as out casts in the midst of their own race and people; that these men when once the mere hope of pecuniary benefits and other external influences are withdrawn, will turn out to be worse than the worst of the Chinese at present. If any one should still doubt the truth of what I say, I would ask him to read the story of the Taiping Rebellion which ought properly to be called by the future historians of China, the Rebellion of the Chinese Outcasts of the Christian Missions in China. Morally and intellectually the Taipings are a type of the Chinese converts in China."

Lord Curzon has said of the missionaries:

"It is impossible to ignore the facts that their mission is a source of political unrest and frequently of international trouble, and that it is subversive of the national institutions of the country in which they reside."

Mr. Ivan Chen once wrote:

"It will be quite impossible to have peace in China so long as foreign missionaries are allowed to interfere with the institutions of the country, and no Government at Peking can be strong enough to protect unpopular missionaries throughout so vast an empire. We may not be able to keep these missionaries out of China, because we are not a fighting nation. Anything will be better than the missionaries.

Peace, prosperity, and healthy commerce will be impossible until the missionary shall have been eliminated from our local problem. Recall the missionaries, and all will go well."

Li Hun-chang on one occasion was asked if he had "ever known an honest Chinaman to become a convert to Chistianity." He said: "No, never; not one!"

There is no end to the authorities one might quote but the foregoing should suffice for the time being.

You speak of the capture of Missionaries as "accidents." I would say that these "accidents" are now of very common occurrence and when five missionaries at a time are captured, as was the case recently, this might be discribed as a "disastrous accident."

I did not in my first letter, as you suggest in your note of comment, belittle the teaching of science, works of charity or educational movements of the missionaries. These are all worthy of praise, but anyone who trys to foist a new religion on the credulous, is deserving of all the suffering he may have to endure and should be denounced by all right thinking people.

As I have previously pointed out some who come to do the Lord's work develop a remarkable capacity for business and money-making. Sent here at great cost and further expense to learn the language of the country, they find it profitable to begin trading, instead of continuing mission labours. If ever such men or women were called of God, constrained by love of Jesus Christ, or moved by the Holy Spirit, for sake of common honesty let them refund to the Mission the whole of the cost incurred in equipping them for their work; the refunded money to be used in further education.

In early stages many start off enthusiastically but after a while become helpless, hopeless human beings like many others, and their wives also become lacksadaisical, and lamentably deficient in all that should constitute a help-meet in the work. Servants must await every beck and call and generally the poor missionary has a far happier time than he could ever expect in his own country, notwithstanding, hardship and sometimes imaginary hardships he has to endure.

It must at least be a great satisfaction to the Chinese to know that the convert rate is but a fraction of their birth rate.

P. O. Q.

Shanghai, June 13, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—I have been in China more than twice as long as P.O.Q. and have a more or less intimate acquaintance with every part of China and have studied the missionary question. I differ in toto from P.O.Q.

Missionaries are human as well as the rest of us and are as liable to mistake and error as others. There is much to criticize in missionary methods but not in the direction mentioned by your correspondent. His letter shows he repeats current nonsensical chit-chat but has no accurate knowledge of the question he attacks.

Missionaries have caused unrest: of course they have or they would have utterly failed in their Mission. But so also have merchants, engineers, doctors and every foreigner. We have introduced new thoughts, methods and civilization. It is unthinkable all this could be done without causing unrest. Unrest is a healthy sign: there would be no progress without it.

The argument advanced by P.O.Q. that the missionaries are forcing their religion on the Chinese is a charge which no thinking man would advance. It is so ridiculous as to really require no answer: but as there may be others who will be influenced by it let the following facts be considered. There is no known modern process by which any man can be compelled to accept any doctrine concerning which he is not convinced. There is no more power in the hands of missionaries to compel any Chinese to accept Christianity than there is to compel P.O.Q.

What are the indigenous religions P.O.Q. is so anxious to preserve? The two indigenous systems are Confucianism, which is not a religion at all, and Taoism, which is a philosophy and only partly religious. The two great systems of religion in China are Buddhism and Mohammedanism and both of these are foreign religions, the one from India and the other from Arabia. Christianity is as foreign to Britain and America as to China: it has its origin in a little state long since extinct politically, Palestine—but which is now again coming into being.

Missionaries are seized by bandits because they are working where these blackguards operate. They would just as soon seize P. O. Q. if he were not safely sheltered in a guarded port like Shanghai.

If we had not forced railways on China, there would be no Lincheng case to disturb the nations. If no merchants, there would be no Peking Wall soldier case or assault at Fengtien station. If no mills and commercialism, there would be no industrial unrest. If we had not forced arms on China, bandits and their cousins the Tuchuns would not cause so much unrest. If we had not brought our ideas on philosophy and education into China, there would be no student question and government would have wallowed along as of yore. P. O. Q. is forcing himself on China just as much as any other man, missionary or merchant or what not: he is forcing his presence, his ideas and his good on this poor unwilling people and causing thereby unrest just as much as anybody else.

Why should everything foreign be brought to China with the one exception of religion? P. O. Q.'s position is untenable from any and every standpoint. Has he lived here for 18 years with his eyelids only half open? Wake up P. O. Q. and see things as they are and then use your thinkpan and when you have arranged the information so gathered into an intelligent situation, try again.

SPIRITUAL AND COMMERCIAL PROSPECTS

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—There has been considerable correspondence in these columns recently on the subject of the Commercialization of Missionary Work which I have read with considerable interest.

In to-day's mail I received two booklets in English and Chinese carrying the title, "Hints and Helps on Christian Endeavour Topics" which represents the best tie-up of evangelization and commercialization that I have ever seen. The letter and prospectus which accompanied the booklets states that 50,000 Chinese converts or "prospects" are reached every day in the year by this literature "as one book is often used by a whole family or group." I am also informed that the "English edition is used by missionaries of all denominations working in all parts of China, many of whom have expressed appreciation of the advertisements, the rates for which are reasonable."

Now to prove that the above claims are not pure "moonshine," I find in the Chinese edition a letter signed by one Thomas Mosely, a missionary in Kansu province, who acknowledges receipt of the "Hints and Helps" on Chinese Christian Endeavour. Mr. Mosely says, "It meets a very special need in our work and we wish to congratulate you—last evening we organized a Christian Endeavour among our 18 fine young men in the High School here and they have taken it up with enthusiasm."

So much for the "evangelization" part of it. Now, after Mr. Mosely got those 18 fine young men together, what happened? The last paragraph of his letter then takes up the "commercialization" phase.

"The advertisements are most useful, especially to us in the interior, and this morning I have sent off four letters to various firms for merchandise advertised in your little booklet."

So there you have it! The perfect tie-up of religion and commerce! Get 'em together for Christian Endeavour and then sell 'em "Dimol, The Most Wonderful Discovery of the Century," "Mellin's Food, When Mother's Milk Fails, thte experienced nurse turns to Mellins," "The Small Investors' Company will invest any amount of money to yield you a certain 6 per cent. to 8 per cent.," and so on.

Or, to put itt another way, we might turn to Page 5 of the English edition of "Helps and Hints" where we find the question, "How may we know whether we are consecrated to God or not? Well we might turn to the coloured advertising pages and find the answer: If in doubt, try "Germinol Soap," or if this fails, "Dryco, the Dry Milk," might help. Then, of further assistance we might recommend "Ayrton's Malt Extract and Cod Liver Oil," or "Savonax Hair Shampoo de Luxe."

On Page 6 we find the quotation, "God gives only good things." It is no use asking Him for things that would be bad for us or others. (Matt. 7:11). Turning again to the nearest advertising page we assume that among the "good things" might be included a policy in the Asia Life, or a fixed deposit in the American-Oriental Bank. Other helpful things that might be included in the prayer are Parker Fountain Pens, an Arcola Heating System, or, perhaps, a Pyrene Fire Extinguisher. If a sea voyage is in contemplation, the prayer might include some of Kirby's Sea-Sick Cure, a ticket from Thos. Cook and Son, and the services of the C. P. R.

The subject is not, of course, exhausted by the above examples for on Page 23 we find, "To ask anything in Christ's name is to plead His promise with God, and to ask in His spirit, for the things of which He would approve" (John 14:13,14). Among the things which "He might approve" in the advertising pages are doubtless some of the following, "Osteopathy," "Jaborandi Hair Tonic," "Scott's Emulsion," "Ingersoll Watches," "Dupont Fabricoid," "Campbell's Paints," "Ovomaltine," "Ever-Hot Waterless Bags," "Germicide Disinfectant," or a nice roast and some sausage from "Futterer's."

To sum up the matter, we must admire the enterprise of the publisher of "Helps and Hints for the Christian Endeavour" for he has shown the perfect co-operation and co-ordination of missionaries and business men. There is only one weak point, we find no ads of cigarettes and alcoholic drinks. Why leave these out and give all the advantages to "Kofa Proprietary Medicines," "Kopler's Cod and Malt Extract," "Carnation Milk," "Stark's Headache Powders," or "Allenbury's Foods," and "Chesebrough's Vaseline."

In the introduction to the Chinese edition we are told (in English) that one of the best ways to show appreciation for these books, that is, "Helps and Hints for the Christian Endeavour" is "to mention the fact that you have seen their advertisements in the C. E. Topic Books." And we are also told that One Lady wrote as follows, "I appreciate every page of the topic book and read all of it, from the first page of the Introduction to the last of Advertisements." And then still further and better yet we (I use the word we as referring to the 50,000 missionaries and Chinese Christians who are supposed to use the book) are told that the publisher will appreciate it if his "attention be called to any Advertisements which may inadvertently have been included, to which our readers may take exception." "It will be observed," says the author in the preface, "that all tobacco and liquor advertisements have been refused, although we have been offered several times the regular rates if we would include them." In reply to this dig we have already voiced our objection to the lack of these helpful advertisements in the "Hints and Helps," and hope they will be included in the next edition.

Yours for more "co-operation."

I am, etc.,
FUNDAMENTALIST.

Shanghai, June 15, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—I have carefully read "Fundamentalist's" letter in your issue to-day, but fail to see why your correspondent objects to the inclusion of advertisements in a handbook to be used by Christian societies. His charge that commercialism and missionary work are being mixed up would only be justified if the editor or publisher of the book advertised produce to be sold by themselves for their own account, which is not the case. Is it that your correspondent thinks that advertising is morally wrong? If so, it is wrong also in the "North-China Daily News" and your correspondent should abstain from buying and reading a paper which indulges in so wicked a practice. Or is he upset because he did not find his favourite brand of tobacco or whisky in the advertisements? The exclusion of these articles is amply justified by the fact that many of the communities who use the incriminated book advocate total abstinence from tobacco and alcohol. Or is it the mere fact of buying and selling which in "Fundamentalist's" small mind is tainted with evil? If so, how does he get the clothes he wears or the food he eats?

Correspondents in your paper who find their pleasure in attacking missionaries often refer to the sums collected from charitable people for mission work, in a way which implies disapproval of the practice Would "Fundamentlist" have the publisher of the book go round with a hat begging for money to pay for the paper and printer, rather than get it quite as honestly by advertising for a fixed remuneration honest wares that are bound to be required by his readers?I do not know much about the book that roused "Fundamentalist's" ire, but I think it is sold far below cost so as to bring its teaching within the reach of all.

The funniest thing about the letter is the nom-de-plume by which your correspondent wishes to be known. He calls himself "Fundamentalist." I have been told that the editor and publisher are themselves fundamentalists of the purest water. This would seem to justify the idea current in some quarters that fundamentalists are best left to themselves, because in that case they will promptly devour each other!

I am, etc.,
COMMON-SENSE.

A LITTLE TRUTH AFTER DINNER

To Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—In your issue of June 12, there are two items which very clearly show the difficulties to be contended with in getting the truth about China across to people at home. One is the report of the experiences of an American girl amongst the wild (?) Lolos, and the other the report of Sir James Jamieson to counter the romances of a Chinese diplomat.

Would that there were more men in China and at home who, like Sir James, do not mind calling a spade a spade. I, Sir, take off my hat to him, and say "That's the stuff to give "em," and, as a Roman could have said, "Si vellas vestimentum viri, non addis dignitatem."

I am, etc.,
VIDI.

Nanking, June 13, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—I have always thought that a person who has been knighted in England is at least a gentleman, and I have never suspected that a British Consul-General in China would use such language at a public dinner in London society as hardly befits a cockney. So how rudely shocked I had been after I read your London correspondent's report about the affair.

The saving grace is that the Chinese Acting Minister, being a perfect gentleman, took it with such great composure that he has not even demanded an apology.

The incident could evidently be avoided if Mr. Chu had presented Sir James a top-hat—to use Mr. Chu's own expression—by calling upon him to speak at the two Chinese public functions. For that reason only, the incident is regrettable.

I am, etc.,
PROPRIETY.

Shanghai, June 14, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—As a coward dreads the surgeon's knife, so a "perfect gentleman" may possibly object to the bald truth even though it is for his own or his Country's good. That a lot of "tommy-rot" is dispensed to the British public is well known to the China hand, and it is a pity that your Chinese correspondent, who champions the cause of a "perfect gentleman," should lay stress on the personal side of the incident he refers to.

However flowery a picture of China may be painted for the benefit of the British public, the fact remains that strife is the real order of the day—bandits carryon in their own sweet way, kidnapping is rife and even the official police and soldiers have to whistle for their pay. The pity is that some of the officials on the scene cannot be taught gentlemanly habits. In the definition of of a gentleman I imagine honesty should be included.

It is gratifying to know that the official who represents this great country is a "perfect gentleman" and it is regrettable that there are not more like him. Personally I prefer the blunt truth to gilded exaggerations. All who have the interest of China at heart should thank Sir James for his courage and not lose sight of the main issues in personal recrimination.

I am, etc.,
BRUTUS.

UNKNOWN TREES

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—I should very much appreciate it if some one would give me, through this column, the names of the various trees seen along the waterway between Nanziang and Kading.

There are tall old trees whose branches are at this season heavily tasselled, and others planted about small fenced burying grounds, etc.

The five trees, so uniform in size, standing beside an old temple I know to be ginkos, but I should be most grateful to have the names of the other varieties, as I wish to make use of it in some descriptive writing of the trip.

THE RUSSIAN SHIPS AT WOOSUNG

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—I notice an article in your paper of the 7th instant, signed by a certain Pugacheff, whom you yourself consider a Bolshevik agent. Needless to say the real origin of the article in question is well known to me, and in the interests of justice, I beg leave to make known to you, the other side of the story.

When General Lebedeff arrived off Woosung, on the str. Eldorado, his men were offered the alternative of remaining faithful to their group, or returning to Soviet Russia. Two or three score of the men led by Captain Zebin, elected to return to Russia. Captain Zebin, immediately got into communication with Elleder, Kosolapoff, and other members of the Soviet in Shanghai.

On pain of refusal to enter Russia the unfortunate men were forced to sign a statement, the same which appeared in your issue of the 7th, and signed by Mr. Pugacheff. In the same manner the Bolsheviks lately tricked a similar group of 88 men. By such shady methods, the Bolsheviks try to influence public opinion in their favour.

But the chief motive back of all this, is the desire to get possession of the ships and property, which belong to a group of refugees, comprising the remainder of the national army. As always, the Bolsheviks have recourse to a bold perversion of the truth.

To return to the ships. The Okhotsk, Zashitnik, Mongugai, as well as Admiral Stark's fleet, were given to the suffering. starving, army and navy in lieu of pay. The ships are an integral part of the men which are aboard, just as much as an American, or British ship, is an integral part of America or Britain. And let us not forget, the ships were taken after a battle, and when the maritime provinces existed as an independent state.

England, having recognized the Soviet, yet has reserved the right to grant separate recognition to those state formations, who have seen fit to break away from Bolshevik misrule. and tyranny. This shows that the Soviet have not been recognized as the government of all Russia, and therefore have no right to property which they were unable to seize by force, during the civil war.

The same views obtained in the American courts, who upheld the refugees, when the Bolsheviks attempted to get possession of Stark's fleet at Manila.

The ships at Shanghai are the property of a group of Far Eastern Cossacks, who have a right to dispose of them as they see fit, and I shall taken measures to guard the property of the group, from any party whatsoever.

It is frequently stated in your columns, that Russians ought to be repatriated. That is all very well, but we do not care to place ourselves at the mercy of an autocracy who have not only murdered our relatives, but ruined and pillaged our country into the bargain. It is true, the humble need not fear to return. Indeed some of them are not worth killing, as the subservient need not fear slavery. They are slaves by nature.

I hear it remarked that the Russians ought to do their fighting in Russia and not in Shanghai. Let me assure you that we Russians have no desire to disturb the peace of Shanghai.

We are only temporary residents, many of us living for months on end in the stinking hold of a ship. We are exiles, but we know that our country will yet call us to deliver her from the clutches of the red hangman. Then we will return.

Thanking you,
I am, etc.,
GENERAL GLEBOFF.
Shanghai, June 11, 1924.

To Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

Sir,—In your issue of the 14th instant General Gleboff delivered himself of a remarkable piece of correspondence.

If it were not for the quite extraordinary logic revealing the crank representatives of times past and forgotten, and never to return, one could pass up without ado the little epistle. But while dispensing fun the "Cossack-Admiral" offers good opportunity to be shown up together with all his like for the benefit of those who might be otherwise misled by the ridiculous reasoning of this self-appointed saviour of Russia.

Says the General: "The ships are an integral part of the men which are abroad, just as much as an American, or British ship is an integral part of America or Britain." Do you get the logic? According to this theory of the gallant warrior the crews of the U.S.A. and U. K. navies have the right to claim independence from their respective governments, call their battle-ships their "integral part" and take the same "in lieu of pay."

Joking aside, it is high time that the lie were given to the General, and to all those who have been and are giving open and clandestine support to those who shamelessly stole these ships and other property of the Russian people, and who are now bartering this property for their personal gain and naturally resent every honest effort that threatens to take from them what they have unlawfully grabbed, availing themselves of the civil war in Russia.

It is a brazen lie that the ships staying at Woosung belong to a "group of Far Eastern Cossacks" (although it is a refreshing novelty: "naval Cossacks"). The ships belong to Russia, and whoever dares to "dispose of them as he sees fit," is, to say the least, knowingly selling stolen property, besides being a contemptible traitor to his country. If Gleboff finds the hold of these ships "stinking" let him take the fresh air before the strong hand that got Koltchak, Ungern-Sternberg, Pepeliaieff, etc., will get him too, and make him pay for his "temporary residence" in Shanghai.

There is another question of importance touched by the General. It concerns the protest of about 100 of his former followers who after having been exploited, led and misled by sundry Generals and Admirals, have now decided that the place for them to live in is not the stinking holds of the ships but their own country, Russia. They, as so many thousands of their comrades in misfortune, want to return home. It is obvious that this will definitely show to everybody who cares to think about it that the Generals have definitely lost all hold on these people who have now become convinced that the source of all their misery is that they have so far believed the trash about the "White delivery" of Russia by their Generals.

Mr. Gleboff wants to dispose of this question by simply saying that the repatriants have been forced by the agents of the Soviets to sign the protest. I leave it to you to decide whether the gentlemen in question have time, or care for, "forcing" tens of thousands of poor peasants, workers, and "intelligents" to return home to their families and honest work, instead of begging for alms dispensed at soup-kitchens abroad. Fact is, and this is admitted even by the General, that these people need not fear any retaliation. The representatives of the Russian Government have repeatedly declared that the soldiers of the defunct White armies may return without fear of being prosecuted at home.

The All-Russian Central Executive Committee has issued several general amnesties to all who want to avail themselves of the pardon, and it is the greatest pity that the bulk of the deceived masses was artificially kept in ignorance and terrorized by lies about "horrors" that according to the Generals await them at home.

Now all this will quickly end. The Sino-Russian agreement spells the end of all the machinations and mispractices like sale of ships, guns, ammunition and general pilferage of Russian Government property, or in other words, the career of Generals without armies, Admirals without navies and all those who built their individual well-being on the misery of many thousands of their unfortunate compatriots.

Even if the General and his companions succeed in "disposing" of the ships, their game is finished for ever. Russia is great enough to do without a few ships, and while she needs the legions of workers and peasants who are now scattered all over the world, she can very well go without White generals. If Gen. Gleboff is waiting for the time when "the country will call him to deliver her" he will indeed have to do some mighty fine waiting, and will be a very, very old man before such a thing will happen.

Until then, however, he will do better to learn an honest trade instead of spreading calumny about and doing harm to the country which he has so unsuccessfully "delivered" in the past.

This may be a specially Russian matter, which has already had much attention on the columns of your esteemed paper, but the general foreign public of Shanghai that has contributed to the maintenance and repatriation of the Russian refugees, has the right to know who are those who do not want a repatriation—to Russia.

In conclusion, I trust that in common with your practice of "audiatur et altera pars," you will not refuse to print this letter in its full extent.

Enclosing my card,
I am, etc.,
A FRIEND OF RUSSIA.

RUSSIAN SOLDIERS AND THE SOVIET

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

Sir,—We officers, cossacks and soldiers of the Far-Eastern Cossacks' Group descended from all classes of Russia, most of us workmen and peasants, having read with deep indignation the declaration by a group of Russians which appeared in your esteemed paper on the 7th instant signed by certain Pugatcheff and Patireff.

Being sure that said declaration has been written by Bolsheviks and they compelled all repatriants to sign it under menace of not being allowed to return to Russia, still we wish to express to those pusillanimous men our indignation for their sneaking and crawling under the dirty feet of the criminals and murderers who call themselves Bolsheviks.

We mostly workmen, peasants and cossacks have to declare that a Workmen-Peasants Government does not exist in Russia at present. There is just a bloody reign of terror and death.

We state categorically that we do not recognize the Soviet as well as all Russian people do not recognize them and Bolsheviks are still in power because of the horror of death, starvation and division of people's strength.

We have fought our many battles not with Russian people, but with the satanic power of Red hangmen and do believe they will be overthrown before long by means of real workmen and peasants. The Bolsheviks will have to answer before all the Russian population for their many criminal acts as convertions of churches into houses of ill fame, depravation of children and so on.

When our Mother Country shall call us we will go again, every one of us, to fight for Her because we belong to Her, not to U.S.S.R. As to Bolsheviks attempts to seize our ships Okhotsk, Mongugai and Zashchitnik we decidedly declare they are our own property, and we have got all rights and very good means to defend them from their dirty hands.

We firmly and holily keep old covenants of our fathers: "Remember only death can free Thee from execution of Thy duty before Mother Country." And at last being very down hearted about cowardice of some Russians we have to say: "We know what for we are going to die, but you do not."

We are, etc.,
(There follow 683 signatures officers and men of the Far-Eastern Cossacks Group, which signatures we have seen.—Ed.)

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—The problem of the Russian ships in Woosung aroused such a lengthy controversy in the columns of your esteemed paper that there is hardly anything to be added.

But a letter of "A friend of Russia," published in your issue on the 17th is lacking to a great extent a sense of impartiality, one would expect from a friend of a people, suffering under social disturbances.

I leave aside the sarcastic wit of this correspondent towards Gen. Gleboff. I do not know this general and never came in touch with him on duty. I am looking further to the ships in Woosung.

Most of these refugees on board: generals, officers and soldiers fought for Russia since 1914 and being overwhelmed by demagogues in civil war, had had too leave their country.

They escaped on those ships, on board of which they live now in most terrible conditions and the ships are the only guarantee of their existence in future because it is hard to expect some support from outside.

Have they lawful and moral rights to sell these ships?

Let me put a few questions as parallel.

Is it lawful and moral that Lenin accepted money and free passage from Germany during the war?

Is it lawful and moral to conclude Brest-Litovsk treaty—a treason towards our Allies and high treason towards our own country?

Is it lawful and moral that the Soviet was selling the "confiscated" property which belonged to foreigners in Russia—to some other foreigners abroad, not to say about "nationalized" Russian private property?

There might be no end to such parallels.

The demagogues demoralized our Army, denounced our international obligations, refused to pay debts, they stole whole Russia and fancy! they accuse these refugees of grabbing and selling ships not belonging to them.

These ships belong to Russia and there is no Russia at present, but Union of Soviet Socialist Republics—U. S. S. R.

The present Moscow Government protested recently to the British Foreign Office that the old-fashioned expression "Russian Government" ought not to be used in correspondence when addressed to Soviet.

Therefore according to Soviet's own interpretation it must be clearly understood—there is no Russia at present.

And this is why we hate the Soviet! We want Russia, our mtoher-country, our national state.

I do not mean any special restauration—monarchy or republic—anything, but not that international communistic rigmarole—U. S. S. R.

Believe me, Sir, sooner or later this change will come—evolution or another coup d état, and there will be no need to persuade our refugees that the best place for them is their country—they will disappear from Shanghai as fast as they have come to it.

"A friend of Russia" mocks at Gen. Gleboff that he will "have to do so mighty fine waiting and will be a very, very old man before such a thing will happen."

A very bad laugh indeed but. . . rira bien qui rira le derpier!

The refugees in question are the remainder of the Russian Army and they have full moral right to dispose of the ships for their benefit—the single item the Bolsheviks did not get hold of.

Some witty expressions of "A friend of Russia," like, "Cossac-Admiral," sundry Generals and Admirals, "White delivery of Russia" and so on, make me believe that this "friend" has more sympathy to the present Moscow Government than to Russia itself.

If so—the picturesque name of "A friend of Russia" should be changed to another one, not in the least less picturesque but more up to point: A comrade of U. S. S. R.

It is also not bad to remember a clever aphorism—let God relieve us of our friends—of our enemies we shall get rid ourselves.

Enclosing my card.

P.S..—As for the "Naval Cossacks"—"A friend of Russia" is mistaken, he does not know Russian history.

About XVI century on the Dnieper, near Kieff there existed the famous Cossacks' stronghold—Zaporojié.

On their "Caidaks" they sailed down to the Black Sea, where their fearless rides were not once a menace to Byzantyne.

CHINESE BANK NOTES

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

DEAR SIR,—Permit me a little space in your columns for a small query I wish to put.

In your Thursday issue under "Notes and Comments" you censured the exchange system, or rather, non-system, of China. On the heel of this comes the report published in your Friday issue re the "Anking Bad Dollar." It is well these records are being made against this other system of profiteering and one might say concerning what is being done outside the Shanghai walls,—but can anybody guarantee against a great evil, namely, that the local Chinese bank notes will not suffer some heavy and unrecuperable depreciation of their face value in the near future?

Can you inform me whether there is any security against such a depreciation of the local Chinese bank paper currency that at present is truly flooding the market?

I am putting this question to you as I have been unable to find an answer to it and on an event which any well informed business man will find eventual. And, foreseeing all the possible havoc of the mark and rouble, it is well indeed to be prepared.

Yours faithfully,
SILVER DOLLAR.
Shanghai, June 14, 1924.

As far as we have know there is no guarantee for Chinese bank notes beyond the name of the bank that issues them. The safest plan is to accept only the notes of banks which the Shanghai Race Club accepts at its meetings.—Ed.

GEN. Lu Yung-hsiang has been explaining by telegraph to the Chêkiang Association in Shanghai the reason for the presence in his province of the defeated Tsang Chih-ping and Yang Hua-chao from Fukien. The Tupan concludes with expressions of "love for the Chêkiang people" to whose satisfaction he "will deal with any situation that may henceforth arise," and says that Gens. Tsang and Yang's tenure in the province will not be of long duration.

IN a circular telegram, Mr. Sun Pao-chi, the Premier, informs the provinces that he had assumed the difficult office of Premier with extreme diffidence; that Wang Koh-ming, the Finance Minister, while absolutely refusing to attend Parliamentary sessions when required and absenting himself from Cabinet meetings, had nevertheless dealt with several very important questions all of which required his (the Premier's) signature and for which he, as Premier, had to bear full responsibility. Mr. Sun felt no personal animosity against Wang, but he regarded national affairs as of such importance that he must expect co-operation from all his colleagues. To remove misunderstanding, he issued this explanation.

LAWN TENNIS

Close Contest in Mixed Doubles Final Won by Mrs. Hicks and Mr. Whitamore

The mixed doubles championship final attracted a big crowd to the Majestic Hotel grounds on Saturday afternoon and was a game of sustained interest, even if it did not provide any special thrill. The finalists, Mrs. Hicks and C. E. Whitamore, and Mr. and Mrs. Elmore, were as evenly matched as could be wished and the result of the game was always in doubt. Mrs. Hicks and Mr. Whitamore won by two sets to one—3-6, 6-3, 6-4—and deserve full credit for their success over experienced and very capable opponents. In the first set, after losing the opening game, Mr. and Mrs. Elmore won three games in succession, lost the next two and then took the set with another three, all very closely contested. In the second set, Mrs. Hicks and Mr. Whitamore gained the substantial lead of 4-1, and although their opponents got three more games, they had little difficulty in taking the set at 6-3. With the third set deciding the match, play was given an added pace and keenness, the score being carried to three-all by dint of clever play on both sides of the net. In the following game, Mr. and Mrs. Elmore twice seemed to have certain scoring chances at the critical point, but both strokes were cleverly countered, Mrs. Hicks in particular making one brilliant recovery which saved the deciding point against her and paved the way to game and match, she and her partner winning the ensuing game and so the match.

The great feature of the game was the prominent part taken in it by the ladies, both of whom were in excellent form. Their driving was fast and of good length, and there were some pretty back line duels between the two. Mrs. Elmore's placing lobbing were excellently judged, and she was especially good in the final set. Mrs. Hicks also played a very sound game, her drives being clean and forceful. In point of style and skill there was barely a shade of difference between the pairs, and it might have been thought that greater match play experience would have given Mr. and Mrs. Elmore the victory, but they just failed at the critical moment and this slight lapse in the final game was turned to the fullest advantage by their opponents. The victory was an extremely narrow one, however, and possibly a replay would see a reversal of the result. The strain of the encounter told rather heavily on Mrs. Hicks, who collapsed immediately play was over. She had been unwell and was really not in a condition to play, but very pluckily stuck to the game and finished it in great style.

International Ladies' Match at Wimbledon: Davis Cup Competition

Tegner beat Signor Colombo by 3 sets to 1; and Signor Demorpurgo beat M. Petersen by 3 sets to 0. Denmark yesterday won the doubles by 3 sets to 1.—Reuter.

Paris, June 17.

In the third round of the Davis Cup competition, M. Lacoste (France) beat Mr. Sleem (India), 4-6, 6-4, 6-2, 6-4, and M. Cochet (France) beat Mr. Jacob (India), 6-4, 4-6, 6-4, 6-2.—Reuter.

London, June 18.

In a ladies' lawn tennis match between British and American teams at Wimbledon to-day, Mrs. Covell (Britain) beat the American star, Miss Wills, 6-2, 6-4, and Miss McKane (Britain) beat Mrs. Mallory (America) 6-3, 6-3. Mrs. Covell and Mrs. Shepherd Barron (Britain) beat Mrs. Jessup and Miss Goss (America) 6-2, 6-2.

Mrs. Covell's somewhat hollow defeat of Miss Wills, whose record of achievement has established her as a strong challenger to Mlle. Lenglen, has caused a sensation in lawn tennis circles, who have been anticipating a great struggle between Miss Wills and Mlle. Lenglen in the Wimbledon final. Miss Wills was unversatile, was faulty in length, repeatedly double-faulted and was slow. It is inconceivable that she showed true form.

Paris, June 18.

France beat India in the third round of the Davis Cup competition. MM. Cochet and Brugnon (France) defeated Messrs. Hadi and A. H. Fyzee, 6-1, 6-4, 7-5.—Reuter.

First Test Match: England v. S. Africa: England Bats and Scores Freely

Edgbaston, June 14.

The first test match between England and South Africa opened here to-day in glorious, cloudless weather. There were 4,000 people present at the start, but by tea-time the crowd had increased to 12,000. The wicket was recovering after the rain. H. W. Taylor, the South African captain, won the toss and sent England in. The South African team included the recently discovered fast bowler, Parker, who was born in South Africa and is now playing for the Bradford League team.

Hobbs and Sutcliffe opened the innings, and at the luncheon interval were still in partnership, the former having made 57 and the latter 61. Four extras brought the English total to 122 runs for 0 wicket.

After lunch Sutcliffe was bowled by Parker for an addition of only three runs. He scored one 6 and six 4s.

Woolley then joined Hobbs, but the latter was l.b.w. to a ball from Blanckenberg when he reached 76. Hobbs played a typically excellent innings, without giving a chance. He hit seven 4s. Hendren joined Woolley, who had run up 64 when he was caught by Ward off Parker's bowling. Chapman did not stay long, being bowled by Parker for 8. Fender then joined Hendren and at the tea interval the English score was 291 for 4 wickets. Hendren had scored 44 not out and Fender 24 not out.

After tea Hendren added 30 to his score before putting the ball into Nourse's hands off Parker. He made a 5 and six 4s. Fender was caught by Taylor off Blanckenberg for 36. Kilner was then joined by Tate, who made 19 before being caught by Taylor off Parker's bowling. Gilligan then came in. When stumps were drawn for the day Kilner's score was 40 not out and Gilligan's 4 not out. With 13 extras, the English score was 393 runs for 7 wickets.

Total for 7 wickets	398

Oxford, June 13.

The match between Oxford University and the South Africans started at two o'clock to-day, the last day of the fixture. The wicket was still very soft. Oxford had scored 117 for 9 wickets when stumps were drawn at five o'clock to allow the South Africans to entrain for the north for to-morrow's test match.—Reuter.

South Africans' Remarkable Collapse: Out for 30

Edgbaston, June 16.

The test match was resumed today in fine, warm weather before a crowd of 3,000.

Roy Kilner was caught and bowled by Pegler for 59. He played a bright innings, batting five fours. The remaining wickets fell rapidly. Gilligan was bowled by Pegler for 13, and Wood by Parker for 1. Parkin made 8 not out. England's total was 438, a record score against the South Africans in this country. The innings took six and a half hours, 33 minutes of which was to-day.

The South Africans collapsed before the bowling of Tate and Gilligan, being all out for 30, the lowest total ever made in Englang in any Test match. They were all out in 47 minutes. They followed on and at the lunch interval had scored 34 for 0 wickets. Taylor's score was 22 not out and Commaille's 8.

After lunch Taylor was caught and bowled by Tate when he had reached 34. Commaille was caught by Hendren off Tate at 29. A partnership between Susskind and Nourse put on 70 runs and the score at the tea interval was 143 for 2 wickets (Susskind 41, not out, and Nourse 29, not out).

After tea Susskind and Nourse were dismissed by Gilligan for 51 and 34 respectively. Catterall and Blanckenberg then entered into partnership and at the close of play had scored 52 and 56, both not out. When stumps were drawn the South African score was 274 for 4 wickets.

The Africans' second innings was a complete reversal of their first innings form. Their batting throughout was very steady. Susskind showed a magnificent defence. Catterall and Blanckenberg collared the bowling with delightfully clean, all-round hitting. So far they have added 113 runs in little over an hour.

South Africans Beaten by an Innings after Uphill Fight

Edgbaston, June 17.

The weather was fine and hot for the third day of the Test Match. There was a small attendance. The wicket was wearing well.

Catterall carried his innings to 120 when he was caught by Hobbs off Tate. Blanckenberg was caught by Chapman off Gilligan without adding a run to his overnight 56. Ward with 19 was the only one of the remaining batsmen who got into double figures. The South Africans were all out for 390, England thus winning by an innings and 18 runs. The innnings closed at 12.45, having lasted 5¼ hours. Catterall played a vigorous innings with superb driving. He hit two sixes and fifteen fours.

South Africans v. Essex: A Century by Taylor

Colchester, June 18.

The weather was glorious and 3,000 people were present on the opening day of the match between Essex and the South Africans. The wicket was good and easy.

Essex were all out at tea time with 155 runs. Russell made 34 and Pegler took 4 wickets for 34. At the close of play the South Africans had scored 157 for 2 wickets. Taylor was 104 not out. He played a magnificent, all-round innings. Hearne made 43.—Reuter.

The County Championship

London, June 13.

There was no play in the matches between Leicestershire and Surrey at Leicester and Somerset and Gloucestershire at Taunton. The matches between Warwickshire and Yorkshire at Warwick and Northamptonshire and Hampshire at Northampton were also drawn.

At Dudley Gloucestershire beat Worcestershire by 102 runs. The Gloucester bowler Parker took 5 wickets for 50 and 6 for 24.

At Brighton Sussex beat Notts on the 1st innings.

At Manchester Middlesex beat Lancashire on the 1st innings. Lancashire made 207, Fowler taking 5 wickets for 29. Middlesex made 222 for 6 wickets. Mann made 60 and Hendren 104 not out.

The match between Lancashire and Middlesex was for E. Tyldesley's benefit.

London, June 16.

At Kettering, Northamptonshire beat Glamorgan by five wickets. Glamorgan made 108, Thomas taking 4 wickets for 22, and 73, Thomas taking 6 wickets for 32. Northants made 93, Clay taking 7 wickets for 15, and 89 for 5 wickets.—Reuter.

London, June 17.

At Lord's Somerset beat Middlesex by 37 runs. Somerset made 178, Lee taking 5 wickets for 35 and 136 in the 2nd innings. Middlesex made 128, Robertson-Glasgow taking 9 wickets for 38, and 149.

At Horsham, Sussex beat Leicestershire by 10 wickets. Leicester made 186, Bowley taking 5 wickets for 27, and 51, Parkes taking 7 wickets for 17. Sussex made 233 and 6 runs for 0 wickets.

At Colchester, Gloucestershire beat Essex by 4 wickets. Essex made 188 (Parker 7 wickets for 91) and 302 (Russell 104). Gloucester made 195 and 299 for 6 wickets (Dipper 116 and Smith 96.)

At Manchester, Surrey beat Lancashire on the first innings. Surrey made 195 (R. Tyldesley 5 wickets for 32) and 238 (R. Tyldesley 6 wickets for 79). Lancashire made 166 and 197 for 7 wickets.

At Tonbridge, Kent beat Worcestershire by 93 runs. Kent made 137 and 345 (Seymour 167). Worcestershire made 158 and 231 (Foster 128).

At Nottingham, Notts beat Hampshire by 124 runs. Notts made 273 (Whysall 61, John Gunn 87) and 307 for 3 declared (Whysall 150 not out). Hampshire made 217 and 239 (Mead 84).

At Chesterfield, Yorkshire beat Derbyshire by 137 runs. Yorkshire made 169 (Horsley 6 wickets for 42) and 205. Derby made 74 and 163.—Reuter.

MR. ERIC MOLLER IN BANKRUPTCY

Public Examination: Composition with Creditors: Mr. Moller's Statement of His Shipping Experience, the Business He Built up and Losses on Ships Commandeered in War

In the Supreme Court on Monday, Mr. Eric Moller came up for public examination in bankruptcy before his Honour Judge Sir Skinner Turner. The statement of affairs showed net liabilities amounting to Tls. 255,607 and assets Tls. 1,616.

Mr. H. Lipson Ward appeared on behalf of the petitioning creditors, the Yangtsze Insurance Association and the Shanghai Dock & Engineering Co., and Mr. Reader Harris for the Kailan Mining Administration.

In answer to the Official Receiver (Mr. R. F. le Mesurier), debtor stated that he had been engaged in the shipping business for 33 years, and his father was in the business before him.

The Official Receiver informed his Lordship that at the first meeting of creditors a composition was proposed by Mr. Moller and was accepted by the creditors then present. He had since written to two creditors who were not present and one had replied saying that they also agreed. The other creditor, in Chefoo, had not yet replied, but he anticipated there would be no disapproval. In the circumstances, he did not propose to ask Mr. Moller many questions, debtor having made a very full statement at the first meeting, a statement with which he thought the creditors were more or less satisfied.

His Lordship—You have reason to believe the proposed composition will be accepted by creditors, subject to approval by the Court?

The Official Receiver—It has already been accepted by special resolution.

His Lordship—Very well. I shall not disapprove of the course you propose to take. Have you any objection, Mr. Ward?

Mr. Ward—None.

His Lordship—The public examination must of course be completed before the composition can be put forward, and there would be no difficulty in re-opening it if necessary.

Mr. Ward—In view of the facts, we all hope that the composition will be approved by the Court, and I do not think any good purpose can be served by questioning debtor this morning. If I went into all matters relevant to the bankruptcy it would take a long time, and I do not propose to question debtor on behalf of the two creditors I represent.

Mr. Moller Asks to Explain.

After Mr. Reader Harris had questioned debtor with reference to his client's claim for coal supplied to the strs. Ralph Moller and Henli, Mr. Moller asked to be allowed to make a statement. "I would ask your Lordship to be patient with me," he said, "because this is a great moment in my life. I want to put my position before you and before my friends here in justice to myself and my wife, and to explain how I have been brought to this deplorable and humiliating position. I want to take this opportunity of clearing myself and of showing how I have been unable to prevent an enormous fortune passing through my hands, so that I can leave this court with my head up."

The Official Receiver pointed out that if in his statement Mr. Moller said anything which was likely to raise a controversy, a great deal of harm might be done, and that was what they wanted to avoid, since everybody was agreed that Mr. Moller had been unfortunate.

Mr. Moller said he would be careful in what he told the Court, but he did wish to show how he had come to his present position.

His Lordship—I quite see your position, and I do not want to stop you, but you must remember a composition is proposed and you have not been asked anything at all about your bankruptcy. If you want to make a full statement, possibly you may have cause to withdraw from that composition.

Mr. Moller—There will be nothing personal against any of the creditors in what I say.

His Lordship—Very well. I cannot prevent you making a statement.

Previous Shipping Experience.

Mr. Moller then gave a lengthy account of his business career. He began by saying that he had been brought to this humiliating position after having had an enormous fortune pass through his hands, and he wanted to make his position clear, for the sake of his family, his friends, the Yangtsze Insurance Association, who had trusted him for many years, and all the agencies at the coast ports whose confidence he had long enjoyed. It was 33 years ago this month since he left school and joined his father in business, sailing ships being at that time operated. He took over the business in 1902, on the death of his father, and two years later he found opportunity for using his shipping experience to a very great extent. The Russo-Japanese war came on, and it was then that he first came in touch with the Yangtsze Insurance Association. In that year, he looked after the interests of a Norwegian steamer running the blockade between Shanghai and Vladivostok, and this was successfully done. Meanwhile, he was approached by partisans in the war and was offered a bonus of 20 per cent. on the ship and her cargo if he would divulge information as to her movements. He turned this offer down, and when the late Mr. W. S. Jackson heard what he had done he said he would never forget it and that if the opportunity arose he would assist debtor in shipping.

In 1913 he went to Mr. Jackson and told him that in the preceding 11 years he had amassed a sufficient amount of money to start on the ambition of his life, viz, the owing of steamships. He had already had one steamer for about six years, and he bought the Gemini and Sagittarius— named after race ponies that won the Champions—and by 1916 he had accumulated nine steamers.

On War Service.

In that year the Gemini and Sagittarius were ordered Home by the British Government. He sent them to the New Engineering Works to have repairs done costing over Tls. 60,000, and the steamers were sent to Saigon and loaded with rice for France. Three other boats followed, all to assist in the war, he being glad to assist even though the losses were enormous. Two of the vessels were destroyed by submarines and one was lost on the run between France and England. The Peregrine was also lost, and he thus suffered enormous capital loss without being able to get a copper of it back.

The Lindsay Moller, the Ralph Moller and the Wallowra (in which Messrs. Burkill had an interest), were then taken over by the Hongkong Government, and his business became stagnant, he having no more tonnage. He then decided to build two steamers, and contracted with the Kiangnan Dock to build the Shanghai No. 2, for which he was to pay $650,000, and also the Nancy Moller, for which he paid $475,000 cash. The two ships were delivered and were supposed to be classified Bureau Veritas. On her maiden voyage, however, the Shanghai No. 2 had to be beached in the Shanghai river, being absolutely unseaworthy, and they were all thankful she had not gone out to sea, as she would have perished. The Nancy Moller was also unfortunate on her maiden trip, there being a blow-out of the boiler tubes as she was entering Hongkong. One man was killed and several injured and the boat had to be brought back to Shanghai. These two boats, representing an investment of $1,000,000, were laid up at Kiangnan for over six months. Excellent time charters had been fixed up for both vessels, covering their value, but permission had to be given to the charterers to cancel them. On the question of a claim for damages being raised, the matter was amicably settled, $250,000 being paid in cash, the Shanghai No. 2 being handed back to the builders, and the Nancy Moller being retained. By this time, said Mr. Moller, the market was down, he could make nothing out of the vessels, and they had to be written down to a very normal value.

The Case against Hongkong.

Mr. Moller next described a visit to England which he made to see what had happened to his valuable assets there. He found there were none, for most unfortunately the people to whom he had entrusted his interests had got entangled in the huge financial embarrassment which spread over England in 1919, and so he was at Home for six months without doing anything. Finally, he cut down the value of his property by 50 per cent. and settled on an amicable basis by accepting promissory notes. He returned to China in 1920. During his absence, legal proceedings had been instituted at Hongkong against the Hongkong Government. He was on very friendly terms with Mr. Fletcher, the Colonial Secretary, and had several meetings with him at Hongkong. A case similar to his own had been brought by a shipping company against the Singapore Government, and it was mutually agreed not to spend anything in legal fees but to try to settle their differences amicably when the result of the Singapore case became known.

During 1918, the only year when shipping was to any extent profitable, Mr. Moller continued, the earnings of his vessels amounted to $498,538, which went to the Hongkong Government. He considered he had made an unfortunate slip in holding up his own legal proceedings pending publication of the result of the Singapore case. Returning to Shanghai in the autumn of 1920, he found that business had been bad during his 16 months' absence, but he cleared off every obligation except that with the Yangtsze Insurance Association, a loan of Tls. 120,000 in connexion with the purchase of the Lindsay Moller. This was the only serious financial obligation he then had, all the others being of a minor character, and this amount was put as a mortgage against the Lindsay Moller. Mr. Jackson quite rightly pointed out that the value of tonnage had gone down so seriously that the security was insufficient, and accordingly the Ralph Moller, then unencumbered, was given as collateral security.

Position in 1920.

In 1920, he had property of the total value of Tls. 1,610,808—including in this amount tthe earnings of the steamers being handled by the Hongkong Government, and he felt practically certain he would receive sufficient to clear off his obligation with the Yangtsze Insurance Association. The shipping market collapsed in 1921, and he had further trouble with the Nancy Moller. She was chartered by a firm in Java, but the firm was declared bankrupt and the vessel had to be taken back to Hongkong, at his expense. She was sold there, and all they could get was $26,000. The Lindsay Moller, which cost $250,000, was sold to a Chinese for $32,000, which sum was paid to the Yangtsze Insurance Association. The motor schooner Chris Moller also had to be disposed of, and this vessel, which had cost $213,000, was sold by Messrs. Hopkins, Dunn & Co. for Tls. 12,200, and this sum was also used in the interests of the Yangtsze Insurance Co. The str. Kaho, which cost Tls. 97,000, was sold for Tls. 21,650, and this was the only sum of the whole lot which he touched himself, and he used it in his business in an attempt to stem the run of trouble which he saw coming along.

Mr. Moller went on to say that he had a small limited company, Moller & Co., and he put $50,000 cash into the Shanghai office and $50,000 into the Hongkong office. The Shanghai office unfortunately lost its capital and was quietly wound up, everything being paid. He had also to shelve the Hongkong office, a trusted servant they had down there having embezzled nearly all the capital. This company was being held in abeyance in case one of his children by and by wished to start business at Hongkong.

Hongkong's Indemnity Act.

Mr. Moller described at length his many attempts to get the Hongkong Government to meet his claim in whole or in part, saying that he visited Hongkong two or three times a year for this purpose. The position at one time looked very favourable, he being given to understand that his readiness to accept 50 per cent. of the total amount due would be favourably considered at Home. Then came publication of the Singapore judgment, and the passing of the Indemnity Act, which barred his claim being heard and prevented him from recovering anything. The Ralph Moller was handed over to the Yangtsze Insurance Association and was sold for Tls. 55,000, and thus there passed into Chinese ownership a vessel for which he had paid Tls. 475,000.

Mr. Moller concluded by saying that he was prepared to work to the utmost to carry out his proposal to creditors, but it would entail 10 years' mental strain. He trusted that when the Hongkong Government saw the position in which he was placed they would come forward from behind the barrier of the Indemnity Act and do him the justice of relieving him of some part of the burden he was taking on his shoulders in the attempt to do the right thing by his creditors.

The Ownership of "Fairyland."

After his statement had been read over, Mr. Moller asked permission to make reference to "Fairyland," saying that he did not want any wrong impression about it to get abroad.

Mr. Ward—"Fairyland" has not been disclosed in the statement of assets, and I do not see that it is material until Mr. Moller is questioned about it.

The Official Receiver suggested that the matter should be left till later on.

His Lordship—Nobody has asked you any questions about "Fairyland," Mr. Moller.

Mr. Ward—And you have been treated very kindly, you know.

Mr. Moller—From your point of view, Mr. Ward.

Debtor was allowed to make his statement, and informed the court that "Fairyland" was financed by his father-in-law, Mr. Blechynden, in 1907. Just before he died, Mr. Blechynden asked witness to see that Mrs. Moller and the children were protected, and accordingly he confirmed the property in his wife's name, most of it having been so purchased and registered.

His Lordship—There has been no suggestion, Mr. Moller, that your statement of affairs is not an accurate statement.

The examination was then declared adjourned.

CARGO OF MUSHROOMS

Were They Bad? A Claim for Tls. 50 and Promissory Note Not to Be Evaded

The case of the Polish Chinese Trading Corporation v. A. J. Ross was heard before Judge Peter Grain in H. M. Supreme Court on Monday, Mr. John Ross having refused of pay the sum of $50 for a cargo of mushrooms which had been delivered and accepted by him, and in receipt of which he had signed on March 10, 1924 a promise to pay the said sum within 10 days. The Polish Chinese Trading Corporation was represented by Mr. Koogalgan who stated that he was the manager of the Piece Goods & Mushroom Department of the firm.

In defence Mr. Ross claimed that he had been promised a commission of 5 per cent. by the Polish Chinese Trading Corporation and that the mushrooms were in bad condition, in evidence of which he produced samples.

Further evidence showed that the mushrooms were delivered to a Chinese buyer and were stored for a month in a Chinese "Joss House" before any compaint was made concerning their quality. Mr. Ross had on two other occasions had dealings with the Polish Chinese Trading Corporation, and did not think it necessary to make investigations concerning their condition.

At the conclusion of the case the decision was granted in favour of the Polish Chinese Trading Corporation, the Judge's order being that Mr. Ross would have to stand by what he had signed.

THE dispute among the shareholders of the Hankow Electric Light & Waterworks Co. was brought before the Hsiakow Court on Tuesday of last week when Mr. Hu Tzechu appeared and made a statement on behalf of the plaintiff shareholders. The defendant party, however, refused to come before the court, so no solution of the case has yet been arrived at.—In the meanwhile, owing to the resignation of the chairman and directors, Hankow's electric light is in jeopardy.

BROOK MATRIMONIAL DISPUTE

Respondent's Case Not Proved: Restitution of Conjugal Rights to the Wife

The matrimonial action of Brook v. Brook, which was a petition by the wife for restitution of conjugal rights, was the subject of an interesting judgment given on Tuesday in the Supreme Court by his Honour Judge Sir Skinner Turner. Respondent alleged displays of violent temper and a confession of misconduct by his wife as grounds for refusing to live with her, but his Lordship found the first grounds inadequate and the second not proved, and granted the petitioner's prayer.

Mr. M. Reader Harris appeared for petitioner and Mr. R. G. MacDonald for respondent.

His Lordship said: This is a claim by a wife for a decree of restitution of conjugal rights: the husband claims that he had reasonable cause for leaving her. It is clear that the burden of proof in such a case is on him, and I am not at all satisfied that I was right in calling upon the petitioner to begin. At all events, the cases of Smith v. Smith (1900, p. 66) and Greene v. Greene (1916, p. 188) seem to show that it was for the respondent to begin.

The respondent claims that he had reasonable cause for leaving his wife in that (1) she was possessed of a violent temper, (2) she had committed acts of violence towards him, had locked him out of the house, had abused him and accused him of immorality, and (3) she had confessed to acts of adultery in Tsingtao in 1922. All this the petitioner denies, and there is no evidence before me save that of the parties: oath against oath: and such additional matter as is contained in the correspondence, which really only shows that in 1923 the respondent had determined not to cohabit with his wife any longer. It really would be enough to say in this case that the respondent, upon whom the whole burden of proof lies, has failed to make out his case and therefore the decree must go. But I am not satisfied to do this: I want to ascertain the basis and the principles on which a decree of this nature ought to be granted or refused. The law is that up to 1884—Matrimonial Causes Act—47 and 48 Vict. Cap. 68, a respondent could only resist a petition of this nature by proof of a matrimonial offence on the part of the petitioner: i.e., something for which a decree of divorce or judicial separation could be granted. But that Act as interpreted by the Courts in Russell v. Russell (1895, p. 315) and Oldroyd v. Oldroyd (1896, p. 175), gave the Court some sort of discretion to refuse a decree for matters which do not amount to matrimonial offences. I have to ascertain what that discretion is and how it is to be exercised.

Mutual Duty

I start with the fundamental position that husband and wife are under a duty to each other to cohabit. Unless there has been a separation, judicial or by a valid agreement, the parties are not entitled to refuse to cohabit in the absence of any matrimonial or quasi-matrimonial offence, or even where such an offence has been committed and afterwards condoned. And the law has now given a discretion to the Court to refuse a decree of restitution: but "that discretion is not to be generally or lightly used, but it is to be exercised judicially after a consideration of all the facts:" per Evans, P., in Fletcher v. Fletcher (31, T. L. R. 306). Again: "The Court is not to exercise a general discretion in granting or refusing a decree of restitution: to go so far would involve a large alteration of the old law and would confer discretionary power on the Court of far-reaching effect and most difficult to exercise:" Per Barnes, J., in Oldroyd v. Oldroyd (1896, p. 183): and that learned judge proceeded to lay down the test, as afterwards adopted by Shearman, J., in Greene v. Greene (1916, p. 188): "Has it become practically impossible for the parties to live properly together?"

The position there is that a petitioner is entitled to a decree unless the respondent can satisfy the Court that it is practically impossible for the parties to live properly together: remembering always that it is their duty to live together and that the Court will not lightly absolve either from that duty.

Parallel Cases.

What is the evidence here? Apart from an alleged confession of adultery, it is to the effect that the wife was violent tempered, and at dates in 1922 had abused, threatened, and even struck her husband: the instances given being at long intervals apart, and there being no instance between December 1922 and September 1923. I cannot say that such conduct is enough to justify the husband in leaving his wife, and I am following here the decisions of two such experienced judges in these cases as the late Sir Samuel Evans and Mr. Justice Shearman. I take the later case of the two, Greene v. Greene, already mentioned, tried by Mr. Justice Shearman. The evidence was to the following effect: "The petitioner was hysterical and jealous. She made false accusations against her husband and wrote affectionate letters to other men: she had written letters which no modest or sensible woman would have written, but it is not suggested that there was any guilty intimacy between her and the recipient. She was furiously jealous of her husband, with the not unnatural result of her outbursts that after a time he separated himself from her more and more, with the further result that, if the husband's evidence be accepted, she gradually gave way to drink. Then we find the usual concomitants—untrue accusations and hysterical outbursts." The judge, notwithstanding this evidence, and without calling upon the wife to answer it, felt that he would be extending the law if he held that the husband in this case had reasonable cause for deserting his wife and granted her a decree of restitution. This was on the same principles as led Sir S. Evans to grant a decree to another wife—Fletcher v. Fletcher (1915)—where he held that the conduct of the wife did not justify the husband in withdrawing his protection from her: protection "which included not only providing for her livelihood but giving her his society, his care, and that anchorage in life which a frivolous and foolish woman required."

I am satisfied on the principles as I evolve them from the authorities that, even were I to accept the respondent's evidence, he has not (apart from the alleged confession) shown me reasonable cause for refusing to cohabit with his wife. At the same time I hold that he has failed to prove the charges he has made against her.

The Alleged Misconduct

I come now to the alleged confession of adultery, said to have been made by the wife in September 1922. This, if proved and true, would be enough to lead me to refuse the prayer of the petitioner. Again, there is no evidence before me save the word of the parties and the surrounding circumstances. It is suggested that this woman, the mother of two small children, came back from her summer holiday and rather boasted of her intimacy with several men at Tsingtao during that holiday. She strenuously denies the fact and the confession. Why should she make such a confession? The parties, even if their relations were strained, were living under the same roof: why present her husband with this evidence, if true? And the more so, if untrue? And why did not the husband take steps to ascertain more, or even to learn where he was with such a confession in his hands? He did nothing of the sort, and the parties continued to live under the same roof. Nay, more; in 1923 he sends his wife with both the children at his expense to the same place for the summer; and it is only while they are there that he writes the letter of August 17 definitely refusing to live any longer with the wife. In no single letter is any reference made to this confession: it is clear to me that he paid no real attention to it and did not believe it, even if made. Why should I? And I cannot believe that the wife ever made such a confession. I have referred to this matter in this way because it would be most unsatisfactory if I were merely to say that the respondent had failed to prove it. There is no reasonable cause here for the desertion of the wife.

The prayer of the petitioner must be granted: there will be an order for restitution of conjugal rights to be obeyed in 14 days after service, with costs.

INDIAN DEPORTEE'S AFFAIRS

Allegations that Funds and Property were Detained by his Friend: Aiding the Young

The wartime adventures of Gaya Deen, deported from Shanghai in 1918 on the charge of being a "suspect," and who was subsequently allowed to return to the Settlement, had a sequel in H.M. Supreme Court on Wednesday, before Sir Skinner Turner, when be claimed the sum of Tls. 1,000 from Dabe Pudun Das, together with a quantity of photographic materials. The money was alleged to be held in deposit by defendant for plaintiff, and to have been wrongfully detained by him.

Mr. P. W. Goldring appeared for plaintiff; and Mr. L. K. Kentwell for defendant.

Mr. Goldring said that plaintiff, who was now at Watson's mineral water factory, was formerly employed by the Shanghai-Nanking Railway. About June, 1918, there was a considerable amount of trouble among the Indians in Shanghai, and on June 18 of that year plaintiff was placed under arrest and subsequently deported to India. His case was investigated, the deportation order was cancelled, and the man was allowed to return to Shanghai. Nearly 15 years prior to this deportation, plaintiff had been attached to the Medical Department of the railway, and when one of the European employees left for Home, he handed over the photographic materials, etc., to the plaintiff to keep for himself. During his employment Gaya Deen had an excellent character and he had managed to save Tls. 1,000, which he placed on deposit with the International Banking Corporation at the rate of 5½ per cent., which he drew up to the date of deportation.

Then came the period when he was arrested. He was put into gaol, and the prospect of deportation was hanging over his head, with the result that he had to put his affairs in order. Therefore, he endorsed the deposit receipt for his money and gave it to the defendant to look after for him. He also gave him the photographic materials. When he was away, so the plaintiff alleged, instead of keeping that money and afterwards handing the interest over to plaintiff's daughter as instructed, defendant transferred it to his own account and had since refused to hand it over. Evidence would be produced from the bank to show that this transferring of the money took place in 1919. Some of the interest which accused between 1919 and 1924 was sent to plaintiff's family and some to plaintiff himself while he was living with the defendant, but the capital was not handed over, though on several occasions plaintiff asked for it.

Mr. Goldring at this point produced a letter sent to Gaya Deen's daughter by the defendant, which, he said, proved that defendant did possess the deposit receipt and had charge of the money. This letter stated that he had "kept the balance safely," and he was doing the best he could on her behalf. With regard to the photographic materials he had not been able to get the price for them she had asked, and therefore he could not send her the money.

Missionaries Recommended.

"By the way" it ran, "may I mention, whenever you are in need of a true friend or adviser, please call on any of your local British missionary bodies. I am quite sure they will be very glad to see you and help you to mend your present and future life. They will help you far better than your own people can. I am especially saying this because you are young, and your mother is old, and you might come across thouble which it will be hard to deal with, so before you run such risks cultivate the friendship of the missionaries." The letter continued in this strain for some time, defendant stating that he would always do his best to help the young girl to mend her future life.

Plaintiff bore out Mr. Goldring's statement. He added that he had been on good terms with the defendant and had at one time lived in the same house with him at Shanghai. Whenever he asked defendant for the money, he simply made excuses until witness was driven to take this action.

Mr. E. T. Stell, cashier of the International Banking Corporation, stated that the accounts were changed over by defendant into his own name.

Mr. Kentwell said the defence was that the money had been paid back in different sums at various times, the last amount, Tls. 140, being paid this year. Defendant thought nothing further about the matter until he received a letter from Mr. J. G. Priestwood on plaintiff's behalf, demanding the sum of Tls. 1,000. With regard to the photographic materials, they admitted that some of them still were in their possession, but most had been returned. They had been given to the defendant to sell.

The case was adjourned.

Judgment Reserved

The case was continued on Thursday.

Mr. Kentwell pleaded that the deposit receipt around which the case centred had been given by the plaintiff to his brother-in-law to sell for him, when he was deported to India in 1918 on a charge of being a "suspect," and that the brother-in-law sold it to defendant, who paid him in two sums, one of Tls. 860 and the other of Tls. 140. Counsel pointed out that the brother-in-law had not been produced, and now, after the deposit had gone out of plaintiff's possession he claimed from the defendant. Furthermore, he admitted that he endorsed the receipt, and in that action he rendered it negotiable.

After Mr. Goldring had replied, the Judge intimated his intention of reserving judgment.

THREATENED TO "BREAK HER FACE"

Cabaret Girl's Assault Charge Against Insurance Broker: Boarding House Scene

C. S. Maitland, insurance broker, of 7 North Honan Road, appeared before Mr. R. F. le Mesurier at H. M. Police Court last Friday charged with doing bodily harm to Katarina Gonsievsky and "causing her to fear that he would do her some actual bodily harm." On the application of Mr. E. T. Maitland, who appeared for complainant, the charge was amended to one of assault and battery.

Defendant pleaded not guilty, saying he had never done the woman any harm, or threatened her.

Mr. Maitland said defendant had known the complainant for five years and had made himself a continual nuisance, so much so that some time ago complainant went to Hankow because of his annoyance. He called at her room in Haining Road on Wednesday morning and refused to leave, remaining there until 8 o'clock in the evening. About 6 o'clock he lost his temper and seized complainant by the throat. She cried out, and hit him on the head with a China vase—but unfortunately did not seem to have hit him hard enough—and she received bruises on her face, arms and back. Members of the household came into the room at this moment and defendant stopped. Complainant was frightened of the man and would ask the courts to bind him over not to molest her.

"Cut Her Up and Kill Her."

Complainant, a woman employed at the Carlton, gave evidence bearing out Mr. Maitland's statement, adding that defendant threatened he would "cut her up and kill her," if she would not go and live with him.

Mr. le Mesurier—What did he mean by "cut you up."?

Witness—Break my face, I think. The woman went on to say that defendant threatened that he would kill her when she came home at 1 a.m., and in consequence of this she stayed at the house of a friend that night. He had assaulted her many times.

Mr. le Mesurier—How many, two or three?

Witness—More.

Mr. Maitland—It would almost seem that he made a hobby of it.

Defendant cross-examined complainant at some length, apparently to show that she had been living with him and left him when all his money was gone.

Two witnesses called for the prosecution both gave evidence as to a disturbance having taken place, but neither actually saw a blow struck, and defendant denied that he hit the woman.

After a lengthy hearing, the acting Magistrate dismissed the charge of assault, and bound defendant over in the sum of $250 to keep the peace for six months.

HONGKEW BRAWL

Engineer Charged with Attempted Murder: Alleged Sequel to Drinking Bout

W. N. Lester, described as an engineer, of 24 Seward Road, was charged before Mr. Grain at H. M. Police Court on Saturday with attempting to murder John Welsh, an unemployed seaman, by shooting him with a revolver in the Wayport Rooms on Friday.

Mr. E. T. Maitland prosecuted; accused was undefended.

Evidence of arrest was given by Chief Det.-Insp. Cruickshank, who stated that he arrested the accused in the Continental Hotel bar at about 5 o'clock on Friday evening. He went up behind him and grabbed him by the elbows. Accused said to him: "It's all right, I have not got a revolver on me." Witness then told him he was arrested for shooting a man in the Wayport rooms, to which he replied: "Oh, it's that damned bum Welsh, I suppose." Witness cautioned him, but he went on to say: "Oh that's all right, I shot him, I shot him in the leg."

Witness then took accused to Hongkew police-station, where he was charged, and again warned. He made a statement then to the effect that Welsh went to his house at about 3 o'clock on the 10th inst. Accused fitted him out with clothes, boots and a hat, and Welsh then suggested that he should go out and buy some Chinese wine. Accused agreed and gave him 60 cents for the purpose, whereupon Welsh went out and brought back three bottles. They drank it and Lester became so drunk he fell to the ground, and was found in that condition by detectives who wanted to see him about something else. On coming to his senses he found that Welsh had robbed him of everything (so the statement ran) and when he got away from the police he went to look for him. "That bum, Welsh (the statement concluded) took my property and I shot him."

The prisoner was remanded till Friday.

PARKING CARS NEAR THE CARLTON

Another Conviction at H.M. Police Court

A night at the Carlton theatre had a sequel at H. M. Police Court yesterday, when D. C. Burn, of the Kalee Hotel, was fined $3 for parking his motor-cycle and side car in a prohibited area.

P. C. Telfor told the court that he passed along Bubbling Well Road in a police car at about five minutes past nine on the evening of June 6, and he saw defendant's motor-cycle and side-car parked in Park Road. When he came back that way at about 11.10 p.m. the vehicle was still there, so he waited till Burn appeared and then took his name and address.

Defendant, who did not appear, sent a letter to the Court admitting the offence, but pleading ignorance. He added that, before going in to the pictures, he was standing chatting with some friends for five minutes or so, and although a Chinese constable near at hand saw him he said nothing.

P. C. Telfor stated that there were two notice boards, plainly printed and illuminated by the street lamps, stating that the area—Park Road—was prohibited as a parking place. Motorists, when spoken to by Chinese, frequently took no notice and then pleaded the excuse that they did not know what the man was trying to say to them. In this case the constable alleged he had spoken to defendant.

In inflicting the fine, the Magistrate said Mr. Burn could have the case re-opened if he wished to put in an attendance. He had given the excuse on this occasion that the notice served on him to attend the Court was too short for him to put off a business engagement, and that seemed quite reasonable.

MR. HERBERT WEBB v. "CHINA PRESS"

Counsel's Argument: Flowers of Oratory in the Dry Land of Legal Defence

The final arguments in the case brought by Mr. Herbert Webb against the "China Press" for damages for breach of contract, occupied the whole day on Monday, in the United States Court for China, before Judge Purdy. The Court was again filled with people, interested spectators of a most interesting case.

Mr. Rodger reminded the Judge that the defendants pleaded an affirmative defence to the claim, and it was for them, therefore, to prove that defence. They had made three allegations against Mr. Webb; that he had failed to perform his duties under the contract; that he failed to obey the lawful and reasonable orders of the Board of Directors; and that by the use of intoxicating liquors he had unfitted and incapacitated himself, both physically and mentally, for the proper discharge of his duties. These, then, were the only issues before the Court.

The Order as to Hours

Take first, that charge that he had failed to discharge his duties under the contract. The defence pleaded that he had failed to obey the lawful instructions of the directors. In the whole 13 years that Mr. Webb had been in charge of the paper he had only once been given instructions by the directors at all, and that was seven days before his dismissal, when he had been ordered to adopt the working hours of 9-12 and 2-5. Counsel submitted that not only was the order unreasonable, but it was not even given in good faith. They had had the testimony of a number of witnesses, all experienced newspaper men and women, who had unanimously told the Court that such hours were absurd and impossible for the editor of a morning paper. Such an order, if carried out, would have prevented Mr. Webb from fulfilling that part of his contract which gave him complete control and a commission on advertisements and sales. How could he have exercised proper control if he was not on the premises last at night when the paper was "put to bed." The reason he said the order was not given in good faith was that it was given some time after negotiations had been started to cancel Mr. Webb's contract. Mr. Webb had replied to the order, but had received no answer to that reply, and concluded from that, quite justly, that the course he had expressed the intention of taking had met with the approval of the directors.

The Charge of Drinking

Mr. Rodger then came to the charge of using intoxicating liquors to the extent that he had rendered himself incapable mentally and physically of carrying out his duties. There was not an iota of disinterested evidence before the Court to bear out this allegation. On the contrary, it must have been quite clear to the Court from Mr. Webb's conduct in the witness box that he was not a man suffering either physically or mentally from the effects of drink. He asked the Judge to review the witnesses who had given evidence to the effect that they had never seen Mr. Webb drunk or in any way incapacitated as the result of liquor. They were all men who had worked with him day by day, his news editors, cable editors, sub-editors and reporters. Not only that, they were all people who stood to suffer for their temerity in giving their testimony on plaintiff's behalf, for they were all employed by the defendants, and would, therefore naturally incur their displeasure by testifying for Mr. Webb. Certainly they would not have done so had they not believed the allegations to be a slander on Mr. Webb's character both professionally and personally. And in addition to these witnesses they had the evidence of Mr. Graham Barrow, Mr. Laval and Mr. Bruce Lockhart, all of them absolutely disinterested witnesses. All these people had stated that they had never seen Mr. Webb drunk or incapacitated through drink, though they had all seen him at various hours of the day and night regularly.

Against that evidence, Mr. Rodgers continued, they had the testimony of Mr. Norman, who worked in the business office and whose hours normally concluded every day at five in the evening, when Mr. Webb's day of work was little more than starting. They had the evidence of Jabin Hsu, who, according to the evidence of Mr. West, defendants' own witness, and other witnesses, rarely appeared in the office for more than half an an hour each day. Mr. Norman, also, was an interested witness. Indeed, he might be described as the "$30,000 witness" since that was his regular salary now, as against the $20,000 or so commission which was his pay when Mr. Webb was on the paper. Mr. Norman was, incidentally, a friend of the plaintiff's of some 12 years standing. His evidence was generally unreliable and interested.

Capabilities as Editor

With regard to Mr. Webb's capabalities as an editor, all the old residents in Shanghai knew that he had produced a successful and interesting paper while he had been in command. In August of 1923 Mr. Sopher had come on to the scene and taken command as editor-in-chief. Seven months later the circulation had reached its lowest ebb—a fact testified to by the defendants' own witnesses. The defence had mentioned that Mr. Webb was a frequenter of cafes at nights. Yet they knew that this frequenting of cabarets had been the means of bringing in thousands of dollars worth of advertising to the paper. Mr. Webb had only visited them after business hours, when, late at night he was hungry after six hours' work, and they were the most respectable places to go to at that hour of the night. In any case, if the directors of the paper, thought they were not respectable places, they should not accept their advertisements and persuade respectable people to go there.

Mr. West had testified to the fact that the esprit de corps in the office during Mr. Webb's editorship had been excellent, which testimony had been corroborated by Mrs. Kuhn. Mr. West, also, though he was a witness for the defence, had testified that he had never seen Mr. Webb drunk, though he had seen Mr. Norman drunk on one occasion, when he had completely wrecked the office. The defence had alleged incompetence. Yet the evidence showed that under Mr. Sopher, the intelligent editor-in-chief, the paper was costing $10,000 more per month to run that it was under Mr. Webb; that did not seem to show that Mr. Webb was so very incompetent.

It was interesting to notice, too, that Mr. Webb's discharge came just before he was due for six months' leave to New York on full pay, with first-class transportation each way,—another indication that the discharge was simply made for reasons of finance. The truth of the matter was that Mr. Sopher was trying to get hold of Mr. Webb's job as editor of the paper for himself. Mr. Fessenden and Mr. Dollar, the other two directors, realizing that Mr. Sopher had the largest ownership interest in the concern, had just let him have his own way in the matter. It was true Mr. Webb drank whiskies and soda, but what successful business man in Shanghai did not? It was true also, that there had been drinking among the staff, but this drinking had been inconsequential and had not had any harmful effect on the work or the esprit de corps.

Mr. Franklin then continued the argument, dealing with the legal aspects of the case.

Mr. Franklin said the contract was admitted, of course, by both parties, and that plaintiff was discharged under the contract was not denied. The defendants had put in an affirmative defence and the burden was on them to prove the allegations they had made. Failing this, he submitted judgment should be given for plaintiff.

A Master of Metaphor

Counsel, after referring the Court to various authorities on the position of master and servant, when the servant held the position similar to that held by Mr. Webb, contended that under the contract defendants had no right to order Webb's hours in as much as if he had followed the hours laid down by them he would have been unable to fulfil his duties for the proper supervision of the paper. He described the whole case as a plant owned by Mr. Sopher in the soil of necessity, watered by the consummate skill of opposing counsel and attempting to blossom in the U.S. Court. And sitting on the branches of the plant it was not difficult to pick out the various birds of prey. Mr. Norman, the witness with a craven heart, paid with a pot of gold; the Esau who would sell his soul for a mess of potage, the witness who would take the stand and testify to anything in order to save his job and to save his skin. And Arthur Sopher, the witness with a nationality as shifting as the flocks which roamed his own native Mesopotamia,—the man who, like a hungry jackal, followed Mr. Webb around, waiting for his job. "This financially lean and hungry Cassius who is waiting to draw down the pay that Mr. Webb formerly earned." These were the witnesses who had sought to establish an affirmative defence, and he put it to the Court, to what did their evidence amount? There was Jabin Hsu, also the young man who would one day be a President of China, that smooth and talkative young witness who was a Chinese reporter under Mr. Webb, and Chinese editor under his present employer, Sopher. Their evidence could not be credited.

The case was at this stage adjourned for tiffin.

In the afternoon Mr. Franklin quoted various authorities and cases at length, arguing that Mr. Webb had fulfilled his contract to the letter.

On the subject of how much he was entitled to, Mr. Franklin said they would leave it to the Judge to decide whether Mr. Webb should be awarded on a basis calculated from the minimum wage of $1,500 guaranteed to him in the contract, or whether he would take the average amount he had been receiving as commission, ranging around $2,100 monthly.

Mr. Fessenden on Directors' Powers

Mr. Fessenden, addressing the Court on Directors' Powers for the defence, first took the point made concerning the order given to Mr. Webb concerning his hours of work. And to do this, he said, they had to go back to the terms of the contract, which stated that Mr. Webb was engaged as having full charge and supervision over the "China Press," subject to instructions to be given from time to time by the Board of Directors." It was that last clause that gave them their justification for the orders they had given to Mr. Webb on that occasion. Much had been made of the fact that an editor should be in the office to "put the paper to bed," but it had been forgotten that in the letter they sent Mr. Webb giving him the order, they had remarked that they had provided for a night editor who would do the work. Surely the directors were entitled to do this if they pleased. Mr. Webb was in the habit of visiting disreputable places, the cafes in town, and he himself admitted he was an habitue of the Del Monte. The Directors did not think this was doing the "China Press" any good, and therefore they were entitled to alter Mr. Webb's hours in such a way that it would not be so convenient for him to make use of these places. As regards the allegation that the order was given in bad faith, that, he submitted, made no difference. Mr. Webb was bound to carry out a reasonable order if even if it was given in bad faith,—which was not admitted,—though he was not bound to carry out an unreasonable order given in good faith.

Drinking on Duty

With regard to the evidence that Mr. Webb had never been seen in a state of drunkenness while on duty, and the great point made of that evidence by counsel, the defence had never alleged that he had been. What they said was that Mr. Webb's drinking had lessened his efficiency mentally and morally. The after effects of heavy drinking could have this effect. They objected, also, to the way in which he ran the office. There undoubtedly was excessive drinking among the members of the staff, and Mr. Webb had participated in this. It was not a thing which could possibly do the office any good.

The Court rose at 5.20 and adjourned till next morning.

Mr. Rodger announced to the Court that he would plead the facts of the case while Mr. Franklin would argue the law, summing up for plaintiff.

Final Speeches Concluded: Mr. Franklin's Last Sally

The hearing was concluded on Tuesday.

Mr. Fessenden, resuming his argument for defendants, said the sole problem the Court had to decide was whether the defendants' had the legal right to discharge Mr. Webb. Counsel submitted that as a matter of law they had the right absolutely to discharge a man under contract for habitual drinking, if that drinking did incapacitate the servant in any way. The law implied a duty on the part of any employee not to indulge in alcoholic liquor to such an extent as to prevent him carrying out faithfully and to the best of his abilities, his duties. That was what they alleged Webb had done. Granted that to some extent prior lapses of his had to a certain extent been condoned. When those lapses, however, became as frequent as they had, when he was continuing his indulgences right to the very day of his discharge, then that discharge was justified. That Mr. Webb's drinking was steady and daily his own witnesses had testified. The directors had every right, taking Webb's course of conduct into consideration, to discharge him.

The Leave Clause.

Dealing with the claim put in by Mr. Webb for leave and transportation to New York, counsel contended that on the phrasing of the agreement, provided the Judge held that the agreement had been breached, he could make no claim for transportation. The agreement read:

> The "China Press" agrees to grant Home leave to the said Herbert Webb for the period of six months in 1923, or if impossible or undesireable at that time, in 1924.

Webb had put in no claim for Home leave in 1923, neither had he brought evidence to show that it was impossible or undesirable at that time. If, therefore, his Honour considered the contract breached, this claim could not be allowed. As to the assessing of damages, it surely was not fair that Webb should be paid his full salary for the next two years for nothing when the chances were that he would get another job long before that time, possibly as good as the position he held on the "China Press" and possibly even better.

Mr. Franklin, replying, said the mere fact of a man's drinking was not enough to justify his dismissal. "Even in our enlightened country," said counsel, "with its XVIII Amendment, it is not a crime to-day to take a drink." The employee could only be discharged if that drinking impaired his efficiency, and that had most certainly not been proved in this case.

The Judge reserved his decision.

ALLEGED FORGERY OF A CHEQUE

Chinese Claiming $3,000 from Asia Banking Corpn.

The case of L. S. Wing v. the Asia Banking Corporation was heard in the U.S. Court last Friday afternoon, Mr. W. Y. Char appearing for plaintiff and Mr. E. Anthony for the defendants. The case hinges upon a cheque for $3,045.14 paid by the defendants which the plaintiff alleges was forged; he therefore claims a balance of $3,000 due to him from the account. The plaintiff gave the details of his banking transactions with the defendant company and stated that in examining his cheque book he discovered that a cheque and stub had been abstracted. He notified the bank immediately and recognized the writing of a friend in the signature purporting to be his own. He asked the bank to prosecute and offered them every assistance, even to the furnishing of a photograph of his friend.

On being asked in cross-examination as to the pen with which he signed cheques, plaintiff stated that he used his own fountain or the pens furnished by the bank, and denied that he had delayed prosecution of the alleged forger by failing to produce an enlarged photograph as promptly as was requested.

Giving evidence for the defence, Mr. J. Warner Brown, cashier of the American-Oriental Banking Corporation, expressed his opinion that the signature on the alleged forged cheque had been written by the same man who wrote other cheques admitted as genuine signatures. Mr. Brown said that he had been accustomed to recognizing signatures in a banking experience of six years. He was thoroughly cross-examined with regard to differences of handwriting pointed out by plaintiff's counsel, but maintained that such divergencies were slight, and that signatures, unless copper-plate, were bound to differ slightly.

The case was adjourned until Monday morning at nine o'clock.

Handwriting Expert's Evidence

The evidence of a handwriting expert was given in the U. S. Court on Monday, continuing the case of L. S. Wing v. the Asia Banking Corporation, when Mr. Walter Smith, formerly of the defendant company, and now with the China Fibre Container Co., gave his reason for thinking that the cheque alleged to be a forgery was a genuine signature of the plaintiff's.

Mr. Smith stated that minor divergencies in signatures were to be expected, that the shading was an important point to note in comparing signatures, as the shading of strokes was produced by muscle pressure which could not be imitated. He further cited criminology tests for studying the angle of a signature, saying that the relationship between letters was the test, and by judging this difference between the letters of the signature in question he was convinced that it was genuine.

Other points of correspondence were given, among them, a peculiar upward stroke on the "W" which appeared on the cheque in question and on no others except the card signature in the bank's possession, indicating that it could not have been copied from the other cheques but was characteristic peculiarity of Mr. Wing's signature.

Judge purdy gave judgment for the defendant, saying that he was convinced that the cheque was genuine and that the facts in the case were unequivocal. The plaintiff was represented by Mr. W. Y. Char and defendant by Mr. E. Anthony.

SEQUEL TO SHANGHAI ELOPEMENT

Mother-in-Law's Extraordinary Claim Against Young Husband: Dancer's Romance

Alleging that when he became married to her daughter she was deprived of support, Mrs. V. Richter, a Polish subject, at the U. S. Court last Friday claimed from Theodore Tapia, a Filipino musician, $1,200. The complaint stated that defendant signed a document agreeing, to pay plaintiff board and lodging for a period of 12 months at $100 per month, give the plaintiff's son music lessons, and in the event of the son securing a position to provide him with an instrument. Defendant, in his answer, alleged that he was desirous of marrying the plaintiff's daughter who was under legal age and that he was coerced by plaintiff against his will to execute this document before plaintiff's consent to the marriage could be obtained, and that the signature was therefore illegally obtained. Defendant further alleged that he was under age and not legally authorized to sign such a document.

Mr. P. F. Faison and Mme. Flora Rosemberg appeared for plaintiff; Mr. W. Y. Char for defendant.

Plaintiff, giving the history of the affair, said that she was obliged to invite the defendant to meals on account of her daughter. She did not consider it a commercial transaction as she was friendly with him until he "absconded with her daughter," and that previous to that time he had practically lived at her home.

On being asked whether defendant had given her gifts of money or redeemed articles in pawn, plaintiff denied that he had done anything except to redeem a ring which she gave him as a present. She admitted that defendant was under age at the time the document in question was executed, and that she knew he had parents resident in Shanghai.

Met Her at Cabaret

The defendant, who is a member of the French Club orchestra, stated that he had met his present wife when he was playing at the Del Monte and she was dancing there. When he was invited to meals at her home by her or by her mother he went, but he had never lived there and except for the time when he boarded elsewhere for three months he was living with his parents. He could always have his meals at his home and his tea and dinner were furnished by the French Club. He had given his mother-in-law the amount of his bonus and other amounts of money, $60 on one occasion. When he married his wife and deprived his mother-in-law of her support he felt sorry and paid $100. Nevertheless he did not feel called upon to support plaintiff indefinitely. These statements were corroborated by defendant's wife, Yamina Richter Tapia, and by a boarder in plaintiff's house, Mr. Pubel.

In summing up, the Judge said that it was very clear that while defendant was keeping company with plaintiff's daughter he was frequently at meals in plaintiff's house, but that defendant had a house where he could live and have his meals, besides being a self-supporting young man. He was at this time a minor and this fact was known to the plaintiff, but there was no thought in the plaintiff's mind that she was furnishing necessaries. Later when her daughter and defendant ran away and the mother found her main support taken away, she induced defendant to sign the document and then gave her consent.

The only stand the plaintiff could have in court would be to show that the amount she claimed represented necessaries furnished to a minor during the period of the statement and the value of those necessaries. These, however, were not necessaries at all, simply meals furnished from day to day while defendant was in her house as her invited guest, or as the guest of her daughter. The plaintiff, therefore, would not be entitled to recover on this claim and judgment would be given for defendant.

ARSON CHARGE OUT OF REVENGE

A Complicated Case Result of Quarrel: Sentence Quashed on Appeal

An extraordinary example of complications which Shanghai courts are called upon to unravel was recently provided in the French Mixed Court.

In October last fire broke out at a lodging house in Rue Palikao, four houses were destroyed, and a Chinese woman lost her life. The fire originated in a room occupied by one Wang Tsang-chi, but the police were satisfied that the outbreak was accidental.

The next incident in the story occurred on January 8, upon the arrest of three Chinese engaged in a street fight. They were quarrelling about the division of some money obtained from the aforementioned Wang Tsang-chi, and one of the combatants informed the police that Wang had promised them some money to set fire to the house in the previous October. Wang was promptly arrested and admitted having paid $180 to the three fightingmen, not, as they alleged, to set fire to the house, but simply because one of them blackmailed him. The alleged blackmailer thereupon confessed that he himself started the fire, and having gone fully into this story, the Court sentenced both men to 10 years' imprisonment.

Wang's family then intervened and called for a re-hearing of the case, and their request was granted. The whole case was gone into again, and it was discovered that the blackmailer had lied in confessing he started the fire, which, it was now found, began in the room of a lodger who shortly afterwards absconded from Shanghai, he being "afraid of complications."

In view of these disclosures, the court of appeal, composed of M. Wilden and Magistrate Nyeh, cancelled the 10 years' sentence and released both men. The Wang family were represented by Mr. J. Em. Lemière.

Li Yi-yuan, the soldier who has been sentenced by the Tahsin Magistrate to imprisonment of the fourth degree for assault on Mr. Campbell, has lodged an appeal against the judgment with the Public Procurator of the Peking District Court.

Road Openings

The Council has recently had under consideration the question of the condition of the roads, with special regard to the possibility of better co-ordination of effort where road opening work is requisite in connexion with the public utility services, and the following extract from a report by the Commissioner of Public Works on this subject is authorized for publication:—

"With further reference to your letter of April 8, due notification is given to each Public Utility Company and the Electricity Department before any road work is undertaken by this Department. Each Company is also notified of the proposed work of every other Company. Further, near the end of each year, I request each concern to inform me of such of their proposals for the coming year as will involve the public highways. This information is usually given, but the actual work sometimes differs from the original proposal owing to various causes; also, when very large mains are required, twelve months' notice is not always sufficient to enable full consideration to be given to all the interests involved, and, since most of the public service companies must themselves have a fairly good knowledge of their probable major requirements two or three years in advance, it is desirable that this office be acquainted with these requirements as early as possible, since they may have a very direct bearing on drainage, sewerage and road work covering two or three years of construction. These remarks, of course, do not apply to minor extensions of existing distribution systems.

There are many reasons for the present condition of affairs—in the first place, it must be remembered that the population of the Settlement has increased by approximately 200,000 since 1913, and, during this time buildings have been erected to the value of Tls. 94,000,000, covering 44,314 Chinese houses, 604 mills, godowns, etc., 1,505 other foreign buildings and 7,700 miscellaneous buildings, a total of 54,123 buildings in the Settlement alone. The public services have had to cope with the demands which this development has brought about, as well as with a great deal of extra Settlement development for which I have no exact figures. Also, during the years 1917-1919, considerable difficulty was encountered in obtaining material, and extensions during those years were not commensurate with increasing requirements.

During the past five years, 250 miles of trench have been excavated in Municipal roads, and as the mileage of road under the Council's control is some 140 miles, I think it is obvious that this work could not have been carried out without some co-ordination.

In my report for 1922, I wrote as follows:—

"There has been no diminution in the opening up of roads for the purpose of laying underground mains, cables, sewers, etc., a total length of 62.8 miles of trench having been excavated, details of which are shown elsewhere in this report. The sewerage work causes more obstruction to traffic than most other underground work by reason of the greater depth at which the pipes are laid, necessitating close timbering of trenches, and the storage of excavated material until the trench can be refilled. The existence of other underground works, the necessity for maintaining the gradients in the pipes upon which the discharge capacities are based, and the difficulties encountered by subsoil water and leaks from old brick mains, which, in the Central District, flood the new work at every high tide, all combine to make the work slow. Although some of the Public Utility Companies have still important extensions to be carried out in 1923, there is every indication that the total mileage will be 10 to 15 miles less than for 1922.

"In an endeavour to co-ordinate the activities of the various undertakings and the Public Works Department, so far as public thoroughfares are concerned and to keep each in touch with the projected work of others, 11,920 notices, dealing with 2,384 works, were issued during the year, but it is questionable whether such a large number of formal papers receive careful attention. However willing Public Companies are to co-operate, there are many reasons why little success results, such, for example, as the non-arrival of mains and cables from abroad at their expected date and sudden heavy demands for light, water and power from industrial undertakings. Certain sections of the roadway are allocated in advance for certain works, and that is why sometimes one side of a road may be opened up and filled in, to be followed by similar work on the other side. The majority of the roads are so narrow that often a choice has to be made between closing a road entirely or keeping it partially closed for a rather longer period by carrying out work in sections.

"It will, of course, always be contended that underground mains and cables should be of sufficient size to provide for any future requirements, but on this point one at once comes into conflict with the financial policy of the undertaking, which, generally speaking, does not wish to expand capital when a reasonable immediate return is not expected."

The absence of any "zoning" bye-laws and the lack of an adequate system of arterial roads has made it difficult to form any comprehensive plan, with much hope that changing conditions will not render such plan useless in a few years.

The situation of the Waterworks and the Electricity power station at one end of the Settlement has entailed the laying of miles of large mains through districts which such mains do not serve, and under conditions which are bad for the work involved, in order to supply the demands of intensive industrial development at the other end of, and beyond, the Settlement.

The root of the whole trouble lies in the poor road system and the inadequate widths of most of the existing roads. Little or no consideration has been given in the past to the effect that a good road system has upon the economy and efficiency of public utility services, and this applies as much to a tramway or omnibus system as to the distribution systems of companies requiring underground mains.

A great advance was made in 1922 and 1923 in the amount of road widenings carried out, but it must always be remembered that the amount of work done has a direct relation to the amount of money available for this purpose; for instance, in the endeavour to keep expenditure in 1924 near the budget appropriation of Tls. 1,000,000, many negotiations are now being allowed to languish and new ones are taken up only when brought about by owners' rebuilding schemes (except in the case of Manila Road).

Owing, unfortunately, to the number of local administrations having jurisdiction in the vicinity of the Settlement, their supposed conflicting interests and their different powers, no real attempt has ever been made to plan an arterial road system for the town as a whole, with the result that in places like Chapei and that portion of Paoshan in the neighbourhood of North Szechuen Road the worst features of the worst parts of the Settlement (such as the Northern District) have been repeated, while in the area West of the Western District private building development proceeds without consideration being given to future road requirements.

I should not omit to mention that since the end of 1920, one or other of the Soochow Creek bridges has (with short intervals) been under construction, and there has been considerable interference with traffic from this cause. The Council of 1908 decided that thenceforth one bridge should be reconstructed annually, but it has been found impracticable to carry out this programme in view of other calls upon the amount of money available. Naturally, one result of the delay is that a much greater volume of traffic is now affected by the carrying out of such works.

I see no prospect of relief from road work in the near future. The doubling of the tramway tracks in Broadway and Broadway East will cause temporary inconvenience to, and diversion of traffic, for, though considerable progress has been made in the widening of East Seward Road, it is not—except for freight traffic—a satisfactory relief road to Broadway. The condition of the track in Bubbling Well Road and Avenue Road also calls for early reconstruction. Railless tram extensions will necessitate several miles of feeder cable, and I think, too, that it cannot be long before additional pumping mains will be required by the Waterworks Coompany for the Northern and Western Districts. The heaviest part of the sewerage works should be over in two years or thereabouts, but so long as the town expands, extensions will be constantly required.

Under existing conditions and so long as the Settlement continues to develop, in my opinion, there must be continued interruptions to the surfaces of the roads since, whatever measures of amelioration may from time to time prove practicable and be adopted, it will always remain that unless roads are drained and sewered and the necessary mains required by the public utility services placed in position in advance of requirements, continued interruption to the road surfaces will be inevitable."

Police Report for May

During the month 422 reports of property stolen, representing a total estimated loss of $116,449, were made to the Police. These cases included 20 of burglary, 10 of house-breaking, 3 of godown-breaking and 9 of shop and office-breaking. In 121 cases investigation was made with successful result, the value of the property recovered being $13,974.

Twelve reports of armed robbery from premises, 1 of armed highway robbery and 3 of highway robbery in which no arms were used were made to the Police. In connexion with these reports 12 persons were arrested.

An alleged daylight holdup and armed robbery of $11,024 from the Yung Yue native bank at No. 497 Tientsin Road on May 30 was under investigation at the month end. This case presented several curious features. No alarm was raised by the people on the premises; a watchman on duty within a few yards of the front door neither saw nor heard anything; the same watchman was informed later that a robbery had occurred but was told by the employees to say nothing about it; no report was made to the police until an hour and twenty minutes afterwards notwithstanding the presence of a telephone in the house. In this connexion may be mentioned the entire lack of all ordinary precautions on the part of native style banks. The Yung Yue is a well established bank of good standing, heavily staffed, and doing considerable business: yet its banking room has no physical protection of any kind, one of its two safes is made of painted wood and thousands of dollars in notes are commonly kept in an unlocked drawer accessible without difficulty to any person entering the room. On this occasion it appears that a coolie employed by another bank had, unaccompanied, a few hours previously carried notes to the value of $20,000 in an unlocked basket through the streets from Ningpo Road to the bank that was robbed—a means of conveyance that is said to be quite usual. With such methods in vogue, constituting as they do an open invitation to robbers, it is clearly impossible for the police to protect people from the natural consequence of their own deliberate neglect.

The attempted murder of a Chinese Police Sergeant by an armed robber occurred on May 2. A night watchman was found strangled in his hut on Markham Road on May 10. The dead body of a Chinese bearing bullet and knife wounds was found in a box in a house in the Wayside District on May 13. As the result of a quarrel, a coolie died in the Harbin Road District on May 14. On May 15 the manager of a pawnshop in Shanhaikwan Road was attacked with a chopper and strangled. On May 18 a Chinese gambler was shot dead outside a house on Point Road. Six arrests were made by the Police in connexion with the above-mentioned cases.

Seven men charged with the murder of two Chinese and the attempted murder of a foreign Constable and a coolie in the Gordon Road District on April 5 were disposed of during the month. Two were sent to the Chinese Authorities for execution, 2 to other Chinese authorities by whom they were wanted, 1 was sentenced to 5 years' imprisonment, 1 was expelled the Settlement and the case against 1 was dismissed.

A Chinese making a false accusation to the Police against a third party of highway robbery on April 13 was sentenced to 6 months' imprisonment.

Several Chinese and foreigners were arrested by the Police for being in possession of or trafficking in firearms.

Thirteen Chinese found guilty of armed robbery or murder, 7 within the Settlement and 6 outside, were executed by the Chinese authorities at Lunghua.

Twelve cases of armed robbery and 1 of piracy were reported as having occurred in Chinese territory adjacent to the Settlement. In one case four men who took part in an armed robbery and shot two farmers were caught by the country people and beaten to death. The commendable spirit exhibited by these folk has no counterpart among the people living within Settlement limits.

During the month 74 opium and gambling raids were carried out by the Police from which a sum of over $5,100 accrued to the Council from fines and confiscations.

Reports of the death of Sun Yat-sen in the middle of the month caused some local sensation.

Over 800 disbanded soldiers from Fukien Province arrived in Shanghai and were either sent back to their homes in North China or provided locally with board and lodging by the Chinese authorities.

Attempts by means of bombs on the lives of Dr. Wellington Koo in Peking and of the Tuli of Fukien were made. In the latter case four soldiers were killed and two senior officers were wounded.

In connexion with the anti-Japanese boycott movement a fair for the sale of Chinese goods at cheap prices was held on May 7-9 in the Chapei Benevolent Institution. The attendance was large and various free amusements were provided for the visitors. On May 9, the so-called Day of National Disgrace on which China accepted the twenty-one demands of Japan in 1915, large numbers of shops in the Settlement closed their doors in response to an appeal sent out by political agitators. A mass meeting attended by about 1,000 people was also organized in the Temple of Heaven in North Honan Road at which speeches were made denouncing Japanese aggression in China and advocating continuance of the boycott as the best means of preventing further encroachments. The speakers included a secretary of Sun Yat-sen.

Information reached the Police on April 30 that an organized attempt would be made to prevent the Council from exercising its right to widen the North Szechuen Road Extension. It was reported that some hundreds of loafers had been hired by interested parties to stop the contractor's workmen from demolishing the adjacent houses and erecting a bamboo fence. Police protection was accordingly provided and the work proceeded without serious incident. Local agitators made the event a pretext for considerable anti-Council propaganda and of course accused the Settlement Authorities of attempting to infringe China's sovereign rights. These views were endorsed by certain sections of the Chinese press which endeavoured to give the affair a wholly unwarranted importance. The public, however, remained indifferent and the attempts of the agitators to organize a mass meeting met with no response.

Shanghai continues to be the dumping ground for undesirables from elsewhere who, in the absence of emigration rules, cannot be kept out of the Settlement.

Four new labour unions were started during May. Labour Day was celebrated on May 1 by a mass meeting attended by some 800 people including Europeans, Japanese and Indians. The speakers, as usual, advocated the extermination of capitalists and handbills advancing similar views were distributed.

Five strikes of workers in the cotton, silk, tailoring and hoisery trades occurred during the month.

The women's suffrage movement is still active in Shanghai and a periodical is shortly to be published.

The movement for the re-establishment of a Chinese Volunteer Corps outside Settlement limits, which was started by the Street Unions and endorsed by the Chinese Chambers of Commerce, has failed to obtain the approval of the local Military Governor and the matter is consequently in abeyance for the time being.

Public Health Report for May

VITAL STATISTICS

Both foreign and Chinese death-rates are below the average, especially the former.

COMMUNICABLE DISEASES

Smallpox.—Only two foreign cases, both fatal, occurred in May, one of which was resident. This was a female British child aged six weeks, unvaccinated; the other was a male British child residing outside the Settlement. In this case the vaccination history was not obtained. Four fatal Chinese cases were reported.

Influenza.—One female British subject, resident outside Settlement limits, died of Pneumonia following Influenza.

Diphtheria.—One case, British female child, aged four years—not fatal.

Tuberculosis.—Eleven deaths were reported among foreigners, of whom seven were residents.

Typhus Fever.—One male British subject died of this disease. He was resident in the French Settlement, and was taken ill on his way to Shanghai.

Scarlet Fever.—Five foreign cases, in one resident family, were notified.

Relapsing Fever.—Two foreign cases, both male Russian subjects, were reported. One of these was resident in Chinese territory.

Enteric Fever.—Two foreign cases of Typhoid Fever, and two of Paratyphoid Fever were notified.

Amœbic Dysentery.—Two foreign cases were notified, one an American male child, and the other a recurrent attack in a British adult.

Bacillary Dysentery.—One foreign case was notified.

Encephalitis Lethargica.—No further cases have been reported. It should be noted that this disease, which is sometimes known as "Sleepy Sickness" has no connection with the "Sleeping Sickness" of Africa. Of late years there have been a few cases annually in North China, but it has not assumed epidemic proportions.

The experience of past years has shown that there is always a considerable increase in the incidence of the Enteric Fevers in late August and September. This means that, for some obscure reason, there is a greatly increased risk of infection between the middle of July and the end of August. It is advisable to guard against this by inoculation, which should be performed in June to give the maximum of protection during the period of greatest risk. Two injections are given, at ten days' interval. This precaution is specially important for anyone going up country. The protection afforded is not absolute, but both the risk of contracting the disease, and the severity of the attack if it is contracted, are very much diminished. Anti-Cholera inoculation may be taken at the same time, and is of value to those who have to pass through infected districts where the sanitation cannot be trusted. The Cholera season is generally from July to September inclusive, and protection lasts about three or four months. The inoculation for Cholera usually causes no discomfort, and only one injection is needed. Anti-Typhoid inoculation should be repeated in full on alternate years; or the second, larger, dose may be given annually to maintain the immunity.

"Health Week" was observed from May 4 to 11 under the auspices of the Council on Health Education. This Department co-operated by the loan of exhibits and cinema films. It is be hoped that the simple, but vitally important, sanitary precautions which were emphasized during that week, may be remembered and practised, and bear fruit in a "Health Summer."

FOREIGN TELEGRAMS

M. DOUMERGUE FRENCH PRESIDENT

Victory for Moderate Elements: A Man of Character and Distinction: Strongly in Favour of Understanding with Britain

Versailles, June 13.

The town and Palace are a hive of excited activity. All roads hither at noon were crowded with motorcars bringing not only Senators and Deputies but many members of Paris society.

A meeting of the Left parties of both Chambers immediately prior to the opening of the National Assembly decided to uphold M. Painlevé's candidature.

The Assembly opened at 2 o'clock this afternoon, M. Doumergue presiding.

The voting has begun.

Later.

M. Doumergue was elected President of the Republic on the first ballot.

The new President obtained 515 votes to 309 cast for M. Painlevé.

The Communists voted for M. Camerlinat, who obtained 29 votes. Others received eight votes, while there were seven blanks. The total number of voters was 860.

The élite of Parisian society watched the voting from the galleries.. The whole assembly broke into loud cheers when the result was announced, the Communists shouting "Vive la Commune!" The demonstration lasted several minutes. The Centre sang the "Marseillaise" and the Socialists and Communists the "Internationale."

The Premier, M. Marsal, immediately afterwards formally invested M. Doumergue with office. Congratulations followed. M. Painlevé was among the first to do so. He and M. Doumergue cordially kissed one another on both cheeks to the delight of the spectators.

In the course of his speech at the ceremony of investiture M. Doumergue declared that he would respect the Constitution, which stood above parties. He trusted that President and Parliament would collaborate to solve the grave problems and to enable France to enter an era of useful work and peaceful progress.

Military rendered honours and the crowd cheered as M. Doumergue, accompanied by M. Marsal, left for the Elysée, whence M. Millerand had meanwhile quietly departed.

Immediately on arrival at the Elysée, M. Doumergue summoned M. Herriot.

M. Doumergue, though a Radical-Socialist, largely owes his election to the fact that the Centre and Right voted for him in order to defeat the official candidate of the Left parties, M. Painlevé. The latter is considered by the moderates as more of a party man than M. Doumergue.

The New President's Career

The new President began life as a lawyer. He was elected to the Chamber in 1893 and held office in many Ministries. He was Premier for the six months ending in June, 1914. As President he is President of the Senate. He is described as a fine speaker, confident, polished, well-informed and much respected. He knows England well and is very friendly towards her. Long before the war he advocated very close collaboration between France and Britain. The prospect, therefore, of M. Herriot and Mr. MacDonald reaching a complete understanding on pending questions at their forthcoming meeting appears very favourable.

M. Doumergue is 61 years of age. He is a Southerner. He is the first Protestant or bachelor President. He was at one time a member of the Colonial magistracy, holding posts in Indo-China and Algeria.

The election of M. Doumergue is regarded as a severe blow to the Left bloc as the entire Opposition in the Chamber and the whole Senate, including the Radicals, voted for him.

M. Marsal has tendered the resignation of the Cabinet.

Well Received by the Nation

The election of M. Doumergue is warmly received by the newspapers, which express satisfaction that the Versailles Congress has chosen a good Frenchman and a good Republican to preside over the destinies of the country and unanimously attribute to him the virtues of equanimity and judgment.

The "Matin" declares that the political storms of yesterday will become under M. Doumergue only distant memories.

The "Journal" emphasizes that the majority preferred an arbitrator who has proved his impartiality and manifested a desire for the maintenance of France's treaty rights.

The "Figaro" regards the election as a victory for political morality.

M. Herriot as Premier

Paris, June 13.

The report that M. Herriot will not accept the Premiership from a President elected with votes from the Right is disposed of by an announcement by friends of M. Herriot that "whoever is elected President M. Herriot will answer his call if he is invited to form a Cabinet."

June 14.

M. Herriot has agreed to form a Cabinet. It is announced that he hopes to go to London during the next week-end.

Composition of Cabinet.

The Cabinet has been formed as follows:—

Premier and Foreign Affairs	M. Herriot
Justice	M. Rene Renoult
War	General Nollet
Navy	M. Dumesnil
Interior	M. Chautemps
Finance	M. Clementel
Education	M. Francois Albert
Public Works	M. Peytral
Commerce	M. Raynaldy
Labour	M. Justin Godart
Agriculture	M. Queville
Colonies	M. Daladier
Pensions	M. Bovier Lapierre
Liberated Regions	M. D'Albiez
Under-Secretaries of State.
Posts	M. Pierre Robert
Merchant Marine	M. Leon Meyer
Aviation	M. Laurent Eynac
Technical Education	M. Moro-Giafferi

Socialists Standing Aloof.

The Cabinet is composed entirely of Republican-Socialists and Radical-Socialists, as the Socialists have refused to take office in the present circumstances. It is characterized by a dearth of striking personalities, though exceptions, beside M. Herriot, are M. Clementel, who had already held the portfolios of Finance and Commerce with distinction, and General Nollet, hitherto President of the Inter-Allied Mission of Military Control in Germany. Political prophets predict that the new Cabinet's tenure of office will be short and stormy. It is noteworthy that M. Herriot is at the mercy of the Socialists, who constitute one-third of the Left majority of 300, or 320 with the Communists, which is faced by a compact Opposition of 260 members.—Reuter.

Why M. Millerand Fell

London June 13.

The replacement of M. Millerand by President Doumergue ends one of the most remarkable incidents in the life of the Third Republic. M. Millerand had still over three years of the presidency to run, but he had too deeply offended the Left for them to agree to serve under him. They, in spite of his denials of unconstitutional conduct, contend that he identified himself openly in the electoral crisis with the National bloc, of which he was the founder, while certain reported declarations led to suspicion in some quarters that he was playing with the idea of converting the presidency into a kind of personal dictatorship. Moreover, his action as Premier in 1920 in assisting Poland against the Bolshevik invasion and in putting down the railway strike has never been forgotten by the Communists and others of the Left.—Reuter.

Berlin Press Unenthusiastic.

Berlin, June 14.

The newspapers consider the election of M. Doumergue as a severe blow to M. Herriot and his supporters and not a very good omen for the prospects of the Herriot Government, which, some of them are of opinion, will soon be supplanted by a Cabinet headed by M. Briand.—Reuter.

Favourable Press Comment: A Conciliatory Policy Towards Germany

Paris, June 15.

Press comment on the new Cabinet is favourable, especially with regard to the choice of General Nollet as War Minister, which, it is considered, shows that M. Herriot is carefully considering the question of France's security. It is stated that the Left are resolved to seek a basis of understanding with the Democratic elements in the Reich without any concession which might injure the rights of France.

M. Herriot, in the course of an interview published in the "Matin," said that he would adopt a conciliatory policy towards Germany and make every effort to help her young democracy, but he would show pitiless severity with regard to German reaction and Nationalism. —Reuter.

Ministerial Statement as to Intended Programme of New Government

Paris, June 16.

The Ministerial statement which is to be read in the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies, comprises a general amnesty in home politics with certain exceptions, suppression of the French Embassy at the Vatican, strict application of the Law of Congregations, and reduction of military expenditure as far as compatible with the security of the country.

Financial measures include suppression of retrenchment by administrative decrees, restoration of the match monopoly, strict inquiry into the financial position of the country with the object of ensuring the balancing of the budget, prosecution for frauds against the Exchequer, tightening up of the income-tax, readjustment of direct taxation and decrease of taxes paid by the consumer, especially the turnover tax.

The statement also includes observance of the eight-hour law, and the right of Government employees to belong to a trade union. It deals with the consolidation of peace by international agreement, extension of the part played by the League of Nations, the International Labour Office and the Court of International Justice at the Hague, restoration of normal relations with Russia, unreserved acceptance of the experts' report, continuance of the Ruhr occupation until the pledges provided for in General Dawes' report are handed over to the proper international organizations, resumption of the control of disarmament in Germany and solution of the problem of security by guarantee pacts under the aegis of the League of Nations.—Reuter.

Berlin, June 16.

The appointment of General Nollet as French War Minister has been received with consternation and anger by the German newspapers, particularly the Nationalist papers, which indulge in violent language terming it a blow in the face to Germany and evidence that France will continue her old policy. —Reuter.

New President's Message to Parliament

Paris, June 17.

President Doumergue, in his message to Parliament, declares that he is determined to remain an impartial arbitrator above the parties. He emphasizes the need for calm, order and peace in order to develop commerce and industry and restore the prosperity of the country. The President declares that the absence of peace is not the fault of France, who fosters no dangerous ambitions and only desires payment of reparations and guarantees of security. The question of reparations seems to be approaching a final solution, but the debtor must prove good faith by definite action in a conciliatory spirit. France cannot cease her vigilance, and renounce her established position or method of control, which the Treaties entitled her to exercise in Germany, which appears to be preparing for a war of revenge instead of fulfilling her engagements.

The Prime Minister, M. Herriot, in his Ministerial statement, said that it was impossible to evacuate the Ruhr before the pledges provided by the experts and effective guarantees had been constituted and handed over to qualified international organizations. The disarmament of Germany must be controlled by common effort of the Allies and as soon as possible by the League of Nations.

M. Herriot said that resumption of normal relations with Russia was being prepared under conditions imposed by respect for the treaties.

He foreshadowed extensive conversion operations, and said that active military service would be shortened, though in such a manner that France would never be taken by surprise or enfeebled.—Reuter.

Paris, June 18.

The general amnesty, except for evaders of military service and traitors, mentioned by M. Herriot in his letter to the leader of the Socialist Party, outlining his programme on June 3, applies to those convicted by the Senate sitting as a High Court and therefore includes M. Caillaux.

Later.

The Prime Minister, M. Herriot, will leave for London on June 21 and for Brussels on June 23.—

Paris, June 19.

According to "Le Matin" the Premier, M. Herriot, would not modify the French policy toward Russia without previously exchanging views with the American Government.—Reuter.

DEBATE ON IMPERIAL PREFERENCE

Resolutions Left to Free Vote of the House of Commons: Government's Decision Regarding Economic Committ: Strong Opposition of Liberal Party

London, June 17.

The Dominions Gallery of the House of Commons and the Liberal and Labour benches were early filled to-day for the debate on Imperial preference.

Sir Philip Lloyd-Greame moved the first of ten resolutions, of which notice had been given in the name of Mr. Baldwin. The first four of the resolutions proposed Imperial preference without imposing any new charge on the foreigner, while the remainder did impose such a charge. While there is small chance of the Opposition carrying the last six resolutions, there is a chance of their carrying the first four, if their appeal for a non-Party debate succeeds. The Opposition in this connexion looks to the 60 Labour members of the British Commonwealth group to give the lead to their party.

The first resolution proposes that Imperial figs, raisins, plums and currants should be imported duty free.

Mr. J. H. Thomas, the Colonial Secretary, said that while the resolutions would be left to a free vote of the House and the Government would accept the verdict, the Government themselves proposed to vote against the resolutions.

He announced that the Government had re-considered their earlier decision with regard to the Economic Committee, and were prepared, if the Dominions desired, to consider the question, not on the lines of a commitee as proposed, but perhaps as an ad hoc body, something like the Shipping Board. The Dominions would be consulted on the matter.

The Colonial Secretary said that it was worth considering whether it would not help Imperial unity and encourage confidence to invite not only the Dominion Prime Ministers, but responsible leaders of the Opposition to the Imperial Conferences. He knew that the latter were reluctant, but opinion he had consulted showed the conviction that some such change was absolutely necessary in order to make the Conferences more effective and real. It would only lead to disaster to continue with the Conferences only to find when they had broken up that nothing whatever had been done. This would lead to agitation against the Conferences, which would be disastrous to everybody.

Sir John Simon, on behalf of the Liberals, stoutly opposed the resolutions.

Major-General J. E. B. Seely, who is an Imperialist Free Trader, however, begged the House to pass the first four resolutions and not to cling to doctrinaire Free Trade to the disadvantage of Imperial relations.

Dr. L. Haden Guest, the Secretary of the newly-formed Labour Commonwealth Group, also announced his intention of favouring the first four resolutions.

Colonel Josiah Wedgwood declared that the lines on which the Labour Party proposed to proceed were more likely to secure permanent unity of the Empire than the Conservative policy.

The debate was adjourned.—Reuter.

Mr. Baldwin's First Four Resolutions Defeated: Remainder Withdrawn

London, June 18.

On the resumption of the debate on Imperial preference in the House of Commons to-day, the Prime Minister, Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, announced that he would vote against all the resolutions. He said that the first four innocent-looking resolutions were a preliminary declaration in favour of a full programme of Imperial preference.

Mr. Stanley Baldwin declared that the decision was one of profound and far-reaching importance (Opposition cheers). It was important to pass the resolutions as they stood. A reference by Mr. Baldwin to the absence of Mr. Lloyd George caused Opposition laughter in view of a belief that Mr. Lloyd George's absence was deliberate. Mr. Baldwin agreed that, if the resolutions were defeated, there could be no talk of breach of faith as Parliament was supreme.

Mr. Baldwin suggested that the Government might form a committee of economic experts to study the whole question of Empire development and an economic system suitable for Britain at present. Then the political leaders could consider the committee's report and see whether there was any possibility of evolving a fiscal system, which would help us at present and on which there might be sufficient agreement to carry it. Mr. Baldwin also suggested an arrangement with the Dominions whereby the enormous amount of foodstuffs we required might be obtained solely from the Dominions, brought to Britain at cost price and distributed with the least possible margin, and obtaining in exchange free entry of British manufactures into the Dominions where those goods would not compete with Dominion goods. If that could be done, it might last for the best part of a generation, after which it would be reviewed in order to see whether the Dominions, which had filled up in the meantime, desired to become more of manufacturing countries than before.

Mr. Stanley Baldwin declared that defeat of the resolutions would gravely imperil the future of the whole Empire (Opposition cheers and Ministerial cries of "Nonsense"). The Dominions would reluctantly seek elsewhere what we would not give them. There was no country in the world that would not jump at the opportunity.

Mr. Asquith declared that the verdict of the general elections already condemned the resolutions (Ministerial and Liberal cheers). He would vote against all the resolutions. Mr. Asquith, amid loud Ministerial and Liberal laughter, ridiculed the resolutions, causing strong Opposition resentment. He declared that they attenuated the emasculated, anaemic and apocryphal version of the full-blooded nostrum Imperial preference. He quoted Mr. S. M. Bruce, the Australian Prime Minister, as saying that this was not the real thing for which he was contending.

Mr. Ramsay MacDonald emphasized that the policy of preference advocated by the Opposition would necessitate abandonment of our principles and recasting of our fiscal system. Mr. Baldwin's speech and his plea was not merely for Imperial preference, but for tariffs and protection, which would inevitably involve increased food taxation.

Imperial Economic Committee

The Prime Minister denied that the Government was cold-shouldering the Dominions. He declared that except in the case of un-manufactured tobacco it had not been proved that preference had helped to develop the resources of the Empire. He emphasized that he was backing the Empire emigration scheme for all he was worth. He thought we were thus going to draw the Dominions nearer to us. He was sure that along the lines of an Imperial economic committee and the creation of machinery, so that the public opinion of the Empire should influence the Empire policy, far more than in preferences, lay the solution to the problem of creating an economic policy, by which the protectionist Dominions and free trade Britain would co-operate in building up a strong Community of Nations based on sound economic foundations.

Mr. Philip Snowden, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, declared that the resolutions would tie the hands of future Chancellors of the Exchequer. For example, no labour Chancellor could abolish the sugar duty for the next 10 years without breaking the word of the House (Ministerial cheers and Opposition cries of "Nonsense!")

Referring to Mr. Lloyd George's absence, Mr. Snowden said that he understood that Mr. Lloyd George had paired in support of some of the resolutions (Loud Opposition cheers). Mr. Snowden promised that the Government would earnestly consider Mr. Baldwin's proposal, which, he understood was that the Government should arrange with the Government of Australia that the whole Australian production should be sent to Britain and distributed by the Government at cost price. The Government had already gone some distance in that direction, because they had promised to the Dominions the establishment of a permanent economic committee to consider the possibility of increasing consumption of Empire food products in the United Kingdom and promoting the interests both of the producer and of the consumer.

Later.

Reuter's Lobby correspondent states that the division on the first preference resolution will probably be decisive. If it is defeated, which is anticipated, the Opposition will not trouble to divide the remaining resolutions, but, if it is carried, it will divide the others at least till they are defeated on one resolution.

Later.

The first preference resolution was defeated by 278 votes to 272.—Reuter.

Four Resolutions Defeated and Remainder Withdrawn

Later.

The second, third and fourth resolutions, relating to tobaccos, wines and sugar, were defeated in the House of Commons by 284 votes to 271, 285 to 268 and 283 to 263 respectively. Mr. Baldwin thereupon announced that he did not intend to move the remaining six resolutions. —Reuter.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN ELECTIONS

Defeat of Gen. Smuts and Sir Abe Bailey: Labour and Nationalist Gains

Capetown, June 17.

The general elections were held to-day.

The Prime Minister, General Smuts, was defeated in a straight fight with Labour for Pretoria West.

The earlier results show that the polls have increased as compared with the 1921 election.

The Minister of the Interior, Public Health and Education, Mr. Patrick Duncan, and the former Minister of Railways and Harbours, Mr. J. W. Jagger, have been returned.

The Ministerialists have up to the present lost three seats and gained none.

Later.

The Ministerialist, Sir Abe Bailey, has been defeated at Krugersdorp.

The Party gains hitherto are as follows:—Labour, 7; Nationalists, 3; Ministerialists, 3; Independents 1.

It is difficult to see how the Government can now secure a majority.

The polling on the Rand shows increased Labour and Nationalist votes.

Later.

The Labour leader, Mr. Creswell, has been re-elected.

Up to the present the state of the parties is as follows:—Ministerialists, 25; Labour, 18; Nationalists, 12; Independent, 1.—Reuter.

Government's Former Majority Wiped Out: Nationalist and Labour Pact

London, June 18.

The election in South Africa has been the most momentous in its history. There were 267 candidates for 131 contested seats. Many of the rural constituencies cover huge areas, which will delay announcement of the final result, but already the South African Party, of which Gen. Smuts is leader, has had its majority of eight at the dissolution wiped out, with notable leaders like Gen. Smuts himself, Sir Abe Bailey and Mr. Rooth, the Chairman of Committees, defeated.

All three Parties entered the fight with the greatest confidence. The South African Party, which has absorbed the predominantly British Unionist Party, had 129 candidates; the Nationalists, who are mostly Dutch and are headed by Gen. Hertzog, 84; and the Labourites 37. The feature of the election, however, was the agreement or pact between the Nationalists and the Labour Party, who were mutually pledged to vote for one another. The South African party were the most optimistic, claiming that there had been a revulsion of feeling against the pact.

The centre of the fight was the Rand and Cape Province. No important changes are anticipated in Natal and the Free State.

There were very few triangular fights. One of the most notable occurred in the Rand constituency of Denver, where Col. Creswell, leader of the Labourites, defeated a South African and an Independent Labourite.

Capetown, June 18.

Mr. Malan, the Minister of Mines and Industries, was defeated.

Up to the present the state of the parties is as follows:—Ministerialists, 29; Labour, 18; Nationalists, 16; Independent, 1.

Gen. Hertzog Re-elected.

Later.

The position of the parties in the elections is now as follows:—Ministerialists 46; Labour18; Nationalists 41; Independents 1.

The Nationalist leader, General Hertzog, has been re-elected, as has also Sir Thomas Smart, the Minister of Agriculture. Colonel H. Mentz, the Minister of Defence, has been defeated.

The most notable feature of the election has been the Labour and Nationalist sweep of the Transvaal. —Reuter.

THE LONDON RAILWAY STRIKE

Now Completely Ended with Resumption of Work by Last Unions

London, June 12.

The meeting of railway managers and representatives of the Locomotive engineers and firemen has proved abortive. The Society has decided to ballot on the question of a general strike to enforce demands relating to classification of drivers and minimum rates for Sunday work.

One critical phase in the London Underground Railway dispute has passed as an outcome of a meeting of the committee of the Electrical Trade Union to consider extension of the strike to all power-station men. The meeting decided that, as far as the Electrical Trade-Union was concerned, the strike should be called off. A meeting of the London district committee will be held to-morrow to consider the whole position. Thus the strike is again wholly unofficial.—Reuter.

The Strike Ended

London, June 13.

The "Daily Herald" announces the conclusion of the London Underground Railways strike. The joint Secretary of the Strike Committee has informed the paper that the men resumed work at the power station at midnight.

There followed a calling off of a series of meetings, which were held in various areas, at which the position, following the ultimatum signed by Baron Ashfield, the Managing Director of the London Underground Railways, was placed before the strikers by the strikers' committee. All men then decided to return.—Reuter.

London, June 13.

While the unofficial strike of railway shopmen has collapsed, the strike is not yet ended as far as it concerns the shopmen belonging to the four craft unions, namely, the Electrical Trades Union, the Vehicle Builders' Union, the Blacksmiths' Union and the Amalgamated Engineering Union, who will decide to-night whether to return to work or continue the strike.

Meanwhile the Underground service is officially stated to be 50 per cent. of normal, and is expected to be 100 per cent. by to-morrow.

Later.

The four craft unions have ordered their men to resume work on Monday, pending the result of national negotiations, thus completely terminating the strike on the Underground Railways in London.

June 14.

Every station of the London Underground Railways is open to-day and the services are running normally.—Reuter.

POLITICAL OUTRAGE IN ITALY

Sensational Disappearance of Socialist Deputy: Alleged Kidnapping by Fascisti

Rome, June 16.

Italian public opinion is profoundly shocked by the kidnapping in the streets of Rome a week ago of the Socialist deputy, Signor Mateotti, by Fascists. His fate is still a mystery. The report that he has been murdered is not confirmed.

The Premier, Signor Mussolini, in the Chamber of Deputies, in response to indignant protests promised vigorous action against the perpetrators of the "stupid crime."

It is officially announced to-day that a warrant has been issued for the arrest of the advocate, Signor Filippelli, the manager of the Fascist newspaper, the "Corriere Italiano," on a charge of inciting others to deprive Signor Mateotti of liberty.

Later.

In connexion with the Mateotti affair, the Communists are posting up appeals to the working classes and discussing the advisability of a general strike. The entire police force of the nation is being organized to find the missing Deputy, alive or dead.

Later.

In consequence of the national agitation in the Mateotti case, Signor Mussolini has appointed a temporary Directory of the Fascist movement, composed of 11 members, with the object of ensuring that the strength of Fascism shall be used in accordance with the direction of the leaders.

Several Arrests Made

June 17.

Several arrests have been made in connexion with the Mateotti case. They include Signor Dumini, Secretary to Signor Rossi, who has just resigned the mangership of the Government Press Office and his Directorship of the Fascist Party. It is reported that a warrant has also been issued for the arrest of Signor Rossi, whose whereabouts is unknown.

An exciting search is being conducted for Signor Filipelli, who left Rome on board the Pisa train. The police stopped the train at Lodi and searched it, but their quarry had vanished. Telegrams despatched to Piacenza and Milan, ordering his arrest, elicited the information that he had hired a car at Piacenza, after which all trace of him had been lost.

Later.

Signor Filipelli has been arrested at Genoa. His chauffeur, Colini, who brought the car which was used to kidnap Signor Mateotti, surrendered to the police.—Reuter.

Concentration Ministry Formed

Rome, June 17.

Signor Mussolini is evidently determined to purify the Administration from the stains of the scandals revealed by the Mateotti affair. Apart from closing the Chamber of Deputies and the appointment of a temporary fascist Directory, it is reported that the holders of the celebrated Annunziata Order have been summoned to see the King for the purpose of forming a "great concentration ministry," including, besides Signor Mussolini, the former Premiers, Signor Giolitti and Signor Orlando.

Signor Mussolini has taken up the duties of Minister of the Colonies, having appointed Signor Federzoni Minister of the Interior in succession to Signor Finzi, who has resigned in order to defend himself against a charge of complicity in the kidnapping of Signor Mateotti. It is noteworthy that the "Corriere Italiano," of which Signor Fillippelli was editor, was Signor Finzi's organ. Signor Moncada, the Prefect of Trieste, has been appointed Director-General of Public Safety, and three judges have been appointed to investigate the Mateotti affair. Signor Mussolini told the Cabinet that the search for those implicated in the kidnapping was proceeding ruthlessly.—Reuter.

All the Authors Arrested

Rome, June 18.

Signor Mussolini's appreciation of the seriousness of the national situation arising from the Matteotti crime is evidenced by a semi-official statement declaring that all the authors of the crime have been arrested. The authorities are now on the track of some of the accomplices. "Signor Mussolini desires the guilty to be fully punished. The appointment of a new Minister of the Interior and the replacement of the Director-General of Public Safety are calculated to satisfy public opinion. This explains the complete calm in the country and the total failure of isolated attempts at demonstrations and strikes. The situation can now be regarded as normal.

Later.

Signor Filippelli has been undergoing many hours of stringent interrogation, but no light has, up to the present, been thrown on Signor Matteotti's fate, except allegedly damning evidence against Signor Dumini, in whose luggage, it is stated, bloodstained articles were discovered.

June 19.

The police have arrested Signor Giovanni Marinelli, a former member of the Fascist Directory, in connexion with the kidnapping of Signor Matteotti.—Reuter.

H. M. CONSULAR AGENT IN MEXICO

Mexican Government's Threat of Expulsion: Not an Acceptable Diplomat

London, June 15.

According to official advices reaching London, Mr. Cummins, the British Agent in Mexico, is voluntarily a prisoner in the British Legation under a threat of deportation when he emerges. His flight is attributed to the frank tenor of Notes he forwarded to the British Foreign Office regarding the treatment of British subjects in Mexico. —Reuter.

New York, June 15.

A telegram from Mexico City states that the Mexican Foreign Office has issued a statement explaining the threatened expulsion of the British Agent, Mr. Cummins.

It says that Mr. Cummins has long been persona non grata to the Mexican Government. It alleges that he has been discourteous and has wilfully made incorrect statements to Britain with regard to local incidents. Mexico has twice asked Britain to recall him, but Britain has supported him.

The statement claims that Mr. Cummins is not a diplomat, but a private person. It declares that Mexico is anxious to renew friendly relations with Britain, but must have acceptable representatives in Mexico, who will observe diplomatic customs.—Reuter's American Service.

A Mission of Inquiry

London, June 16.

In the House of Commons to-day, questioned with regard to the Mexican Government's threat to expel Mr. Cummins, the British Agent, Mr. MacDonald said that there had been friction for some time between the Mexican Government and Mr. Cummins. The Government were unable to agree that the complaints against Mr. Cummins were justified. Mr. MacDonald had been informed on May 13 that, if Mr. Cummins were not withdrawn, he would be expelled on June 10. The Mexican Government had been officially informed on April 15 that Mr. Cummins would leave on the arrival in Mexico of Sir Thomas Hohler on a mission of inquiry with a view to regularizing relations between Britain and Mexico. The Government regarded the action of the Mexican Government as a grave breach of international courtesies, but Mr. MacDonald was awaiting further information as a result of communications he had made to the Mexican Government, whom he had informed that, if they took steps against Mr. Cummins in which the British Government did not concur, Sit Thomas Hohler's mission would not be proceeded with.

Replying to questions, Mr. MacDonald agreed that the trouble was due to Mr. Cummins's representations on behalf of the rights of British subjects. The latest referred to a British woman whose property the Mexican Government wished to seize.—Reuter.

Mexico City, June 17.

The Foreign Office states that it has decided to wait a short time as a result of the Chilean Minister's Minister's amicable efforts on behalf of the British Government in order that Mr. Cummins, the British Agent, should leave, but failing Mr. Cummins's departure after a prudent period the order for his deportation will be enforced. —Reuter's American Service.

London, June 17.

Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, through the Mexican Consul-General in London, has made strong representation to Mexico with regard to the Cummins affair. The Premier also interviewed the American Ambassador. The United States is being kept fully informed of the progress of events.—Reuter.

Washington, June 18.

The American Embassy has taken over the archives of the British Legation at Mexico City, which were in the custody of Mr. Cummins.—Reuter's American Service.

THE ANGLO-SOVIET CONFERENCE

Premier's Promise to Make a Full Statement when Circumstances Permit

London, June 16.

In the House of Commons to-day, questioned in regard to the Anglo-Soviet Conference, the Prime Minister, Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, said that he would make a full statement in the House of Commons when the negotiations had reached a stage which would justify his reporting to Parliament.

In this connexion, Mr. P. J. H. Hannon, Conservative Member for Birmingham, asked whether the statement would include limitation of the period of time that the conference would last. Mr. MacDonald replied in the negative. He wanted the conference to have as much time as necessary in order to cover the very wide and complicated ground, which also necessitated certain sections of the conference negotiating with interests outside the Government.—Reuter.

SOVIET AND TURKEY

Trotzky's Further Denial of Speech Regarding Invasion of Bessarabia

Moscow, June 15.

M. Trotzky, in the course of a speech to-day, declared that the reports of his alleged speech at Podolsk in favour of a Russian invasion of Bessarabia as a step towards the seizure of Constantinople and the Straits were absolutely untrue. On the contrary, he declared, the conquest of the Straits was radically opposed to the policy of the Soviet, who had helped Turkey to regain possession of Constantinople and to proclaim the autonomy of the Nationalists.—Reuter.

THE ANGLO-TURKISH DISPUTE

Question of Mosul Frontier to be Submitted to the League of Nations

London, June 16.

In the House of Commons to-day, replying to questions in regard to the breakdown of the Mosul negotiations at Constantinople, the Prime Minister, Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, said that as soon as the period of nine months, which is allowed for direct negotiations by the Treaty of Lausanne, had elapsed, the Government would invite the League of Nations to decide the Turco-Iraquian frontier. Meanwhile they proposed to communicate with the Turkish Government in this connexion in order to smooth over any difficulties.—Reuter.

THE SINGAPORE BASE

Portion of Plant Offered for Sale but Only Such as May Deteriorate

London, June 18.

In the House of Commons to-day, replying to Viscount Curzon, Mr. Ammon, Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Admiralty, said that he was aware that the plant collected for the Singapore naval base had been offered for sale. The contingency of the scheme having to be proceeded with in certain events had not been overlooked, and no offers would be accepted which would likely involve the State in a loss.

Replying to supplementary questions, Mr. Ammon said that no prejudice had been done with regard to any future action. The plant offered include everything that would deteriorate by keeping. It might generally be accepted as right that other material was not being offered.—Reuter.

AMERICA'S EXCLUSION OF JAPANESE

U. S. Reply to Japan's Note of Protest: Kindly in Tone But Strongly Worded

Washington, June 18.

Secretary of State Hughes's reply to the Japanese protest on the Immigration Law is kindly in tone, but strongly worded. It declares that Congress is wholly within its rights, and the new statute is mandatory upon the Executive, leaving no latitude for exercise of discretion. The provision, which is called in question, does not greatly differ in practical operation from the understanding with Japan, embodied in the Gentlemen's Agreement. It declares the appropriateness of the long-established United States policy, which is not due to any lack of esteem for the Japanese people, their character and achievements, has been confirmed rather than questioned by the voluntary action of the Japanese Government in aiding its execution.

Secretary Hughes points out that Japan has not failed to exercise her own discretion respecting admission of aliens and conditions of their settlement in Japan. The United States in the Treaty of 1894 expressly reserved the right to enact restrictive immigration laws.

Diplomatic circles are of the opinion that the incident is now closed.—Reuter's American Service.

TERRIBLE EXPLOSION IN U. S. BATTLESHIP

Three Officers and 43 Men Killed by Back Flash of a Big Gun

San Pedro, June 13.

Three officers and 43 men were swept to death by the premature explosion of a shell in the battleship Mississippi's No. 2 turret and a score of others injured by the flare-back, carrying a terrific charge through the breech instead of the muzzle.

The gun-crew was preparing to fire a broadside when a sailor called for the turning on of the electricity to fire the charge before the breech was locked. A flash followed and the turret was littered with dead and dying.

The Mississippi immediately raced to port, wirelessing the news of the disaster to the hospital-ship Relief, which rushed out to meet her, but just as the Mississippi let go her anchor another blast rocked her and a 14-inch shell shrieked past the steamer Yale, which was crowded with passengers, but ploughed the sea harmlessly.

After the dead and injured had been transhipped it was discovered that another unexploded charge in the gun-chamber was likely to explode at any moment, so the Mississippi hurriedly steamed to sea to obviate the possibility of a shell ploughing San Pedro and killing many persons.—Reuter's American Service.

Insufficient Air Pressure

San Pedro, Cal., June 15.

A naval court of inquiry on board the U.S. battleship Mississippi with regard to the explosion to-day heard the evidence of a sailor, who said that the air pressure was so weak that he, as plugman, was obliged to lend the weight of his shoulder to close the breach of the gun. Naval officials point out that insufficient air pressure would be quite likely to cause ignition of the powder.—Reuter's American Service.

INTERNATIONAL LABOUR CONFERENCE

Proposed Legal Recognition of Liberty of Workers to Form Unions

Geneva, June 17.

Mr. Suzuki, the Japanese Workers' delegate at the International Labour Conference, which has opened here, requested that the question of legal recognition of the liberty of workers to form unions should be played on the agenda for the 1925 session. He asked the Conference to institute an inquiry into the question of liberty of association in order that a recommendation for the suppression of hindrances placed by legislation in the way of development in the organizing of the workers might then be presented.—Reuter.

CANADA'S IMMIGRATION RESTRICTIONS

Coming Test of Legality

Victoria, B. C., June 16.

Counsel for Vancouver and local Chinese businessmen have lodged formal complaint with the Immigration Department against the Government regulations, requiring all Chinese nationals to register before the end of June. They must give photographs with a synopsis of personal history of the complainants. They say that the regulations discriminate against naturalized Chinese, and assert that the measure will be ignored and prosecutions welcomed as a test of the legality of the provisions.—Reuter's American Service.

DUNLOP RUBBER CO.

Annual General Meeting: The Proposed Reduction of Capital

London, June 16.

At the annual meeting of the Dunlop Rubber Company, Sir Eric Geddes, the Chairman, said that the net profit in the past 18 months, after paying the interest on debentures, was £1,538,000, not including the deficit of £383,000 on the American Company in 1923.

Sir Eric Geddes emphasized that the proposed reduction of capital by writing down the ordinary £1 shares to 6s. 8d., and reducing the "C" Preference shares to 15s., merely expressed the relative values as now established. It represented no fresh losses. The net deficiency was £11,353,000. The report was adopted.

Referring to the fact that the parent tyre company was opposing the scheme to reduce capital, Sir Eric said that this was sufficient to block the scheme. Negotiations with a view to settlement had hitherto been unsuccessful.

Sir Arthur Ducros declared that under the reduction scheme holders of "C" Preference shares in the parent tyre company were asked to sacrifice £630,000, which would be made a gift to the ordinary shareholders, but they would co-operate in the friendliest way in discussing an alternative scheme.—Reuter.

AMERICAN REPUBLICAN CONVENTION

Attempt by Pres. Coolidge's Agent to Get Other Candidates Nominated

Cleveland, June 13.

President Coolidge and General Dawes form the Republican ticket for the 1924 election. President Coolidge was nominated with only a ripple of dissent from the Wisconsin and North Dakota delegations, but the nomination of General Dawes came after ex-Governor Lowden's refusal and after a short race in balloting with Mr. Herbert Hoover as his chief opponent. The official vote on the third ballot was: General Dawes 682, Mr. Hoover 234. The others secured only a few votes.

Mr. Butler, President Coolidge's manager at the Convention, indicated a desire when the ballotting began that Mr. Burton of the House of Representatives should be chosen, but the delegates disregarded the suggestion. Mr. Butler, after Mr. Lowden's refusal, again endeavoured to intervene in favour of Mr. Hoover, but the delegates refused to be swayed.—Reuter's American Service.

BRITISH EMIGRATION

Oilfields in North Borneo

London, June 16.

An interesting new experiment in temporary emigration within the Empire is reported from Lincoln, where a large number of young men who have completed their apprenticeship as mechanics in engineering works are about to sail for oilfields in North Borneo, where they will become assistant drillers and be trained in the work of obtaining oil for the propulsion of machinery.—Reuter.

ECHO OF THE RUSSIAN REVOLUTION

Fate of the Tsar and Tsaritza: Remains Taken to France

Paris, June 16.

Writing in the "Matin," General Janin, the former Chief of the French Military Mission in Siberia, relates how he brought back to France and handed over at Grenoble in October, 1920, to the former Russian Ambassador the remains of the Tsar, the Tsaritsa and their children. He had the bodies of other Russian princes buried in Peking.—Reuter.

TRAIN HOLD-UP IN ILLINOIS

$1,000,000 Loot: One Bandit Shot by a Companion

Chicago, June 13.

A daring train hold-up was perpetrated to-day in Illinois and a million dollars in bonds and currency stolen by the bandits, who overpowered the crew of the Chicago-Milwaukee-St. Paul train near Rondout.

The bandits uncoupled the locomotive, forced three mail cars, seized 40 mail pouches and escaped in a motor-car. One of the gang was killed by a bullet from a companion's pistol.—Reuter's American Service.

THE PEACEFUL PRUSSIAN

Berlin, June 14.

The ex-Crown Prince and numerous other princes and former generals, in full-dress uniform, attended the unveiling of a war memorial at Potsdam to 8,000 officers and men of the First Foot Guards. The ex-Crown Prince took the salute and there was a march-past of the former members of the Regiment and of the Reichswehr. Count Eulenburg, the last regimental Colonel, concluded a speech with the words: "May this memorial be a milestone on the road to freedom and vengeance."—Reuter.

BRITISH TRADE RISING

London, June 14.

The Board of Trade returns for May show that imports totalled £122,000,000, an increase of £36,000,000 as compared with April, and exports £70,000,000, an increase of £7,500,000.—Reuter.

NATIONALIST OUTRAGE AT DUESSELDORF

Paris, June 13.

The newspapers report from Duesseldorf that five German Nationalists attacked, bound and placed across a railway line a French inspector. The inspector by struggling fiercely contrived to fall flat between the rails. A few seconds later an express passed over him without hurting him. Near by were found papers bearing the seal of a Nationalist association.—Reuter.

FRANCE'S INCREASE OF REVENUE

Paris, June 15.

The French revenue returns for May totalled Frs. 1,968,000,000, exceeding the figures for 1923 by Frs. 329,000,000. For the first five months of 1924 the increase in revenue exceeds Frs. 2,700,000,000.—Reuter.

RECORD PRICE FOR PEARL NECKLACE

Paris, June 16.

SATURDAY'S TELEGRAMS

DETAILS OF DISPUTE WITH MEXICO

Statement by British Premier: Government Action There but Why not in China?

London, June 19.

That a woman was at the bottom of the trouble between Britain and Mexico appeared in Mr. Ramsay MacDonald's statement in the House of Commons to-day. He said that Mexico accused Mr. Cummins of writing insulting letters and demanded his immediate withdrawal. The letters, which Mr. MacDonald read, related to an attempt by the Mexican Government to dispossess a British subject, Mrs. Evans, of her farm. Mr. MacDonald said that there was nothing objectionable in the letters (cheers). If Foreign Offices objected to such communications, there would soon be no diplomatic relations at all.

The Mexican Government's behaviour was inexcusable. It threatened to break into the Legation of June 16, if Mr. Cummins did not surrender. Mr. MacDonald warned the Consul-General of the gravity of such a step and requested that action be suspended until the Hohler mission arrived. The Mexican Government refused and the United States Government, at Mr. MacDonald's request, arranged for the safe withdrawal of Mr. Cummins and to take charge of the Legation.

The Prime Minister, amid cheers, emphasized the necessity of protecting British subjects and safeguarding the dignity of the British Government. He was not quite sure as to what happened to Mrs. Evans, but he believed that she met with no harm. The whole story was most romantic. One of Mr. Cummins's letters said that she was left defenceless and was alone except for the assistance of a brave young American.—Reuter.

Mexico City, June 19.

President Obregon has ordered the stoppage of proceedings for the expulsion of Mr. Cummins, after learning that Britain will withdraw Mr. Cummins to-morrow.—Reuter.

AMERICAN DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION

Mr. McAdoo and Governor Smith Probable Nominees but Other Dark Horse Candidates

New York, June 19.

The Democratic Convention will meet at Madison Square Garden next week and is expected to be highly exciting. Mr. William G. McAdoo, former Secretary of the Treasury, and Mr. Smith, the Governor of New York, are regarded as the most likely Presidential nominees. The former had a triumphal tour from California to New York, where, in response to an enthusiastic welcome on his arrival, he asserted his belief that he would be nominated.

The dark horses are Mr. John W. Davis, former Ambassador in London, Senator Underwood, Mr. Albert C. Ritchie, Governor of Maryland, Mr. Samuel M. Ralston, Governor of Indiana, and Senator Carter Glass.—Reuter's American Service.

GOVERNMENT DEFEAT IN SOUTH AFRICA

No Question of Secession from the Empire: A Hertzog Ministry Certain

London, June 19.

The Nationalist-Labourite pact, which overthrew General Smuts's Government, was formed for the election only. It is noteworthy that the Labourites, who are predominantly British, imposed a condition, to which the Nationalists agreed, that the latter, if successful, would not raise the question of secession from the Empire during the lifetime of the new Parliament. The Nationalists are Dutch Extremists and are avowedly Republican. Their political views are diametrically opposed to those of Labour, but the latter probably hold the balance between the Nationalists and the South African Party.

In the new House of Assembly General Smuts lost most of his ablest supporters, the latest being the Minister of Finance, Mr. H. Burton, who was defeated at Ladysmith.

Reuter's correspondent at Capetown says that a Hertzog Government is now regarded as a certainty. The whole of the South African press congratulates the victors and hopes that everyone will do their best to help the new Government to continue the work of advancement and development of the Union.

London newspapers deplore the defeat of General Smuts, one of the greatest figures of the Empire, but emphasize the local nature of the issues involved. While speculating on the uncertainty of South Africa's political future, they declare that the Labour Party will be a useful check on the Republican Nationalists, while the latter are not likely to treat the Labour Extremists of the Rand with greater indulgence than the old Administration. The consensus of opinion is that responsibility in office will bring moderation and South Africa as elsewhere will benefit by new men and new methods.—Reuter.

FROM THE FOUR WINDS

EXPECTED COAL STRIKE AVERTED

The Agreement Between Masters and Men: But the Problem of Coal Not Solved Yet: Some Outstanding Features in a Perennial Dispute

From Our Labour Correspondent.

Manchester, May 21.

Nearly everyone in Great Britain expected a coal strike this summer. The miners have had a very long spell of terribly low wages and were known to be in an insurgent mood. The mineowners wages and have filled columns of space in our newspapers explaining how badly off they were, and how impossible it was for them to do anything for their employees unless the working shifts were lengthened. Everything pointed to a strike. And now we have the good news that the mineowners have had a conference with the miner's leaders, and the latter have consented to recommend the employer's terms to their members. Even the new communist secretary of Miner's Federation, Mr. Cook, has given the offer his blessing by saying that it is the best the men can hope for at present. We are expecting any day now to hear that Moscow has no further use for Mr Cook's services.

There is every reason to suppose that the leader's recommendation will be accepted, although the men in the worst hit districts will vote against them. Some of the latter are already expressing their determination to break away from the Federation and fight the employers. Their attitude is not so unreasonable as some people might suppose. Here in Lancashire a miner in pre-war days had about the wage standard of a builder, printer, or the worker in any other skilled trade. He works just as hard to-day for less wages than are paid to the men who tip the refuse cans into the Corporation dust carts. He will not be much better off if the employer's new proposals become operative.

Despite this agreement there are few far-seeing people in Great Britain optimistic about the future of the industry. The problem, like the boundary dispute between Northern and Southern Ireland appears to be almost insoluble. The only solution that will satisfy the working miners is one ensuring very high wages for very short shifts. As foreign competition precludes this ideal solution and there does not appear to be any "second best" acceptable to the contending parties the future appears to hold little else than a succession of strikes and lock-outs, and an increasing estrangement of a large section of the community from its fellows.

Education Opens Eyes.

The press in Great Britain devotes plenty of space to the disputes when they are pending, but rarely attempts to unravel the cause of the perpetual discontent. Yet many of them are obvious to any observant individual living in close contract with the miners. Among the most important is the improved elementary education now provided in our Board Schools. Twenty or thirty years ago a British elementary school was not a bad place to escape from into the more interesting atmosphere of a workshop or factory. Conditions are very different in the schools of to-day, and after eight or ten years in their stimulating environment it is only a very dull and imaginative lad who would tamely settle down to spend the greater part of his waking life in the gloom and squalor of a coal mine. The amenities of life in our factories and workshops have to some extent kept pace with these improved educational facilities, but conditions in the coal mines have either remained stationary or become worse.

A century ago, and for many decades after, the coal miner had a considerably higher standard of living than his industrial contemporaries. Plenty of good food was then looked upon as an essential requisite for a life of such hardship and danger. But as the easier worked seams of coal petred out and foreign competition increased these comparative advantages disappeared. In the last half of the 19th century, and the first decade of the 20th, a miner's wages were about level with any other artisans. But his work was more unpleasant and dangerous and he was fully conscious of the fact and determined to get adequate compensation for it. In the South Wales coalfields he thought he had discovered the short cut to a millennial dawn in the then popular Syndicalism. He talk wildly of seizing the mines and working them in the interest of the miners. The war came and spoilt that pretty dream.

All that most of the younger men wanted was to escaped from the mine. The war was an ideal opportunity and they jointed up in tens of thousands. A disgruntled minority, however, remained at home and kept the Red flag flying. Their efforts were half-heartedly supported by the elder men, who had little sympathy for extreme political views but a warm appreciation for the high wages the young Bolsheviks won for the industry by their indefatigable agitations.

The Nationalization Bill.

At the conclusion of the war it was said that the patriotic miners from the front would tear their seditious fellow workmen to pieces. They did nothing of the sort. Their disillusionment was also complete, and they joined hands with the Red extremists in increased demands for higher wages and shorter shifts. In 1920 the average wage of a coal miner was more than £5 per week.

The crash came when the Government de-controlled the coal industry in March 1921. Wages were roughly halved and after a long strike the men were hopelessly beaten. The Miner's Federation seemed in danger of disintegration through the thousands of men who withdrew from it in disgust at the bad leadership. The politically minded swung over to the extreme left and are now the back-bone of the British Communist party. The end of the Agreement saw a Labour Government in power and a member of the Extreme Left as Minister of Mines. The Employers offered a new agreement fixing their standard profits in relation to "standard" wages at 15 p.c. instead of 17 p.c., and increasing the minimum percentage to be paid on "standard wages" from 20 p.c. to 30 p.c. The men refused this and asked for more. No further offer was forthcoming at the time and the Labour Ministry agreed to fulfil its promise to the miners and bring in a Nationalization Bill. Mr. Hall, M.P. for Aberdare moved its second reading on Friday, May 16, before a sparsely filled House. It was rejected by 264 votes to 168.

No one expected any different result. There are a considerable number of miners' leaders who are strong advocates of Nationalization and there may be a few enthusiasts for it among the rank and file. But the average British workman has little use for, or interest in, such abstractions. Progress for him is measured by the amount of money there is in the week-end wage packet, and by the time the factory "hooter" blows in the morning and evening.

The Miner's Risks.

A Court of Inquiry was set up to inquire into miner's wages. It was a rather dull affair and did not excite much public interest. The star performers on the men's side, who caused such a sensation by their masterly handling of the ducal royalty owners and mineowners' representatives in the Sankey Inquiry, are now in the Labour Ministry and were not present to give evidence. The most sensational evidence was not strictly to the point. It was Mr. Herbert Smith's account of the terrible dangers of a miner's life to-day. He showed how in 1923, 212,258 men received injuries in the mines disabling them for more than seven days. In the same year, a fairly average one, 1,297 men were killed. "Marshal in one huge procession this army of bruised and broken humanity" said Mr. Smith, "four men in a rank, each a yard and a half apart and you get a procession stretching 45 miles. Every 15 yards of that tragic procession you would have an ambulance containing a man seriously injured and every 61 yards a hearse. This is part of the miner's wages, part of the price he pays in the struggle with natural forces that the people may have coal, and that he and his family may have bread." He said that the miners contended that no part of the procees of the industry should be regard as profit until a reasonable wage at the current cost of living had been paid to the workers. He contended that low wages were partly responsible for this high accident rate through the greater worry on the worker.

Lord Buckmaster, the President of the Court, put some searching questions to the owner's representative. He would not agree that it was a healthy industry and insisted that the miner ran "peculiar and horrible risks" which must be taken into account in estimating his wages. The Report of the Court recommended "The resumption of negotiations between the parties with a view to the modification of the terms of the Agreement of 1921."As a result of this the two parties at a further meeting settled on new terms in which the owners made a very small additional concession. These are to be balloted upon by the men and are likely to be accepted in most of the coalfields.

The Problem Still Unsolved.

The the problem will not then be settled. No passably educated youth will ever regard with equanimity the prospect of a life in the bowels of the earth at heavy and dangerous toil. No mother will ever, if she can help it, let her son start work in the mine. Labour would have done well to have proceeded with the great and practicable scheme for harnessing the tide at the mouth of the Severn, and erecting pithead plant for the more economical conversion of coal into power than in playing about with Nationalization dreams.

EASTER IN LONDON

The British Empire Exhibition

By Cynthia Maguire.

It is many years since I spent Easter in London, it is one's general inclination to get into green fields and leafy pleasaunces at this most wonderful of the year's festivals, but I could not have imagined there would be so much charm in London itself.

For one thing spring came in over the four Easter days; the calendar announced it four weeks earlier but there was scarcely a tree budding on Good-Friday eve, just a chestnut or two getting bulgy and lilac in faint leaf. By Sunday they were ablaze, elms and poplars and oaks and larches,—even the faithful London plane-tree, which sends its roots deep and is therefore the latest to feel the warm earth, was knobby at at twig-tip.

From my window overlooking Thames I could almost see the change take place, first a hawthorn would be green, then an almond would have burst into flower, and by the time I looked again an ash would have shaken its purplish buds into fluffy greenery. Fruit trees were all snowy before the holiday was over.

London at Easter-time was transformed. On Good Friday it might have been a Foreign City. In Fleet Street, Trafalgar Square and Whitehall I heard more French spoken than English. Bands of visitors, guide-book in hand, loitered in the Abbey Cloisters or fed pigeons at St. Paul's, packed char-à-bancs dashed dangerously through otherwise deserted streets, whilst guides, authorised and unauthorised, reaped a richharvest from eager sight-seers.

It is doubtless the opening of the British Empire Exhibition which has brought so many visitors to London. The buildings are magnificent and the whole things has been designed on a scale which is large and generous. The Hongkong section in particular appealed to me, with its green upturned roofs reminiscent of Peking. From the tea-house, where Chinese meals can be partaken of, came strains of music as I approached, real Chinese music such as I had not heard since I left the East. I have often wondered why London's Chinese Restaurants do not cut the jazz.

In Wembley's Hongkong are shops run by firms well-known to Shanghai-dwellers, "Wing-On," "Sincere" and others. You can get food-stuffs or furniture, umbrellas or Cloisonné ware, and prices are not so much above those I paid in Shanghai itself. I did not see any of those wooden figures which are so familiar in Hongkew (and which by-the-way are much prized by folk at home) but I did see a man fashioning little figures in wax such as they make in the Chinese City. I think I shall always take myself first to that corner of the grounds.

OUR PARIS LETTER

President of Chamber Not Permitted to Be Neutral: Duse, the Last Stage Genius

From Our Own Correspondent.

Paris, April 24.

So far, the only interesting feature of the French electoral campaign has been supplied by M. Raoul Péret, the President of the last Chamber of Deputies. He has represented the department of the Vienne for many years, and it was supposed that his re-election was a foregone conclusion, when, to the general surprise, he announced the other day that he did not intend to stand again. It seems that some influential electors in his department have been reproaching him with not voting and thus depriving the department of a voice in national questions. M. Péret, having followed the example of the Speaker of the House of Commons in remaining perfectly neutral and never casting his vote for or against any proposal, considered that he was discharging the first duty of a president, and he was so hurt and disgusted at being blamed for his impartiality that he made the announcement mentioned above. It was of course received with astonishment and regret. Offers poured in from all parts of the country, and M. Péret is sure of election wherever he chooses to present himself. It is nevertheless extraordinary that a man in his position should be driven from his old constituency because he preferred the judicial to the party spirit.

Voting Methods to Reform

There is a growing demand that the next Chamber shall reform its procedure, especially as regards voting. At present each deputy is supplied with a quantity of white and blue voting papers bearing his name. If he supports a motion, he puts a white paper in the urn; if he opposes it, he uses a blue paper. Sometimes both a white and a blue paper bearing the name of the same member are found in the urn. It is then considered that the two votes cancel each other, and the member is recorded as not having voted at all. It also happens that two white papers and three blue, bearing the same name, find their way into the urn. In this case the member is put down as voting against the motion. The system leads to all sorts of abuses.

All that an unscrupulous member has to do is to help himself to an absent colleague's box of papers and use them. This, of course, is very much like burgling, but it happened at least three times during the past legislature, and when the victims entered the tribune and complained, the Chamber laughed and the president delivered a nice little homily. Even when proxy voting is done honestly, it deceives the electors. The citizen who reads in his newspaper that Senator A and Deputy B have voted for such-and-such a measure is apt to suppose that these gentlemen, after carefully following the debate, discovered that their consciences called upon them to vote for the Bill. As a matter of fact, Senator A was playing dominoes at home and Deputy B was looking after his little affairs. It often happens that 600 votes are cast at a sitting at which only a dozen members are present in the flesh. It is a very convenient system for the members themselves—so convenient, in fact, that one very much doubts whether the new Chamber will have sufficient courage to break with it and go in for personal and tangible voting as practised in the House of Commons.

Eleonora Duse

M. Joseph Schurmann, the impressario, in an outspoken article published by the "Matin," describes the late Eleonora Duse as the last of the three women of genius whom he took round the world. Adelina Patti, Sarah Bernhardt and now Eleonora Duse have been removed by death. There are still left in Europe, he says, a few women who are great artistes but none who have genius. Of all stage geniuses, Eleonora Duse was undoubtedly the one who made the strongest appeal to the heart. Language was no obstacle; everybody understood her and shared the grief she expressed. Throughout her life she was a victim of love, both on and off the stage. Armand Duval in fiction and Gabriel d'Annunzio in reality dominated her existence. She was the last of the great lovers.

I first saw Duse, continues M. Schurmann, in 1881 while on a tour through Italy with Sarah Bernhardt. I was greatly struck by her interpretation of Alexandre Dumas' heroine in "La Femme de Claude" and offered to take her on a European tour. She looked at me in astonishment and replied: "Either you are making fun of me or you are making a great mistake. I am only an unknown Italian artiste, and nobody in another country would understand me. You cannot hold the attention of a foreign audience unless you have genius, and I have none. Let me try to perfect myself in my art, which I love passionately, and do not turn me from the path I have marked out for myself. Later on, if I succeed and gain confidence in myself, we will talk about it again." Not until 1894 did Eleonora Duse accept my proposals, thus enabling us to begin the series of tours that went on for eight years and delighted audiences all over Europe and America. From her point of view, the entire world was the same city, the same theatre and the same public. Plays by Alexandre Dumas, Victorien Sardou and Hermann Sudermann interpreted by her made an immense impression on audiences of all kinds. The receipts exceeded any previously heard of in the theatrical world.

Dominated by d'Annunzio

One day, she met d'Annunzio, who gradually took possession of her whole being. The public did not care much about the works of the Italian poet, which nevertheless filled about one out of every seven performances, although the author never succeeded in writing a rôle, except "Gioconda," that was really suitable to Duse. The growing love of the artiste for the author caused her to eliminate all others from her repertoire. Having the financial responsibility on my shoulders, M. Schurmann continues, I objected, but it was of no use. She wrote me: "You are probably right, but I am in love. I have to choose between heart and brain, and I am the heart." Much to my regret, I had to give way and cancel the contract. Eleonora Duse continued to play d'Annunzio. The millions she made during her tours slowly melted away. Being greatly in need of money, she undertook to make a final tour in North America, although she had already said goodbye to the stage, and now she has passed away in the city of iron and foundries. She was a great lady, a noble soul, a grande amoureuse and a dramatic genius.

Everybody Spending

Though railway fares have been raised 50 per cent. the number of Parisians who went away to the country or seaside this Easter, and of country people who came to Paris, was enormous. The weather was so fine that no one could resist the pleasure of an excursion. It may also be taken for granted that no one will give up smoking because the tobacco monopoly is putting up its prices—another item in the list of higher taxes. Nothing can discourage the consumer. Prices continue to mount and he continues to pay. Restaurants and cafés are crowded. Nobody seems to be afraid of the figures marked on the saucers on which drinks are served. The theatres, music-halls and picture palaces are taking fabulous sums—at least, so the managers say—the big department stores are constantly enlarging their premises, and the dressmakers, modistes, and dealers in silk stockings and other necessaries are overwhelmed with orders.

This prosperity is of course more or less superficial. The rank and file of employees, the "intellectuals," the people who used to be able to live on pre-war pensions or investments are having a hard time of it, but nobody worries about them. The peasants and farmers have made their pile, and the majority of city-dwellers lead a more varied existence than before. Probably the readiness to spend money is the outcome of a long period of manufacturing activity, fostered by low exchange.

OUNT ISA THE NEW SILVER-LEAD FIELD

Accidental Discovery: Sydney Party's Visit

BY SPECIAL REPRESENTATIVE OF THE "SYDNEY MORNING HERALD."

Cloncurry.

Queensland, the great north-tern State of the Commonwealth, h a territory exceeding the area any country in Europe except ssia, and with a population of le more than one person to ry square mile, sees to-day in newly-discovered Mount Isa er-lead field a new land of pro-se. Whether it will achieve all at is now claimed for it, whether one of those changes of fortune ich transform obscure places to the rich spots of the earth it ll become famous, the future one can tell.

At present Mount Isa is not on e map. Even if it had attained that distinction, however, the ad to Mount Isa by rail and by ad would be none the less tiring. is a long journey. The small rty which left Sydney for the lds on Wednesday afternoon last, d which included Mr. W. McRae, e of the directors of the Mount a Mines, Ld., and Messrs. Walter otts, T. R. McCulloch, Newman, d J. Verge will not reach Mount a until to-night, after only two mparatively short breaks, in isbane and in Townsville. They ill have been travelling for a little der a week.- It only shows what big place Queensland is.

A Long Journey.

There is nothing unusual in the ct that Mount Isa is not yet on e map, for it is not so long ago at it was discovered. To get to ount Isa one travels to Townsville Northern Queensland, the big rt of the rich outback country, d thence to Cloncurry, a distance all from Brisbane of about 1,300 iles. Then from Cloncurry there a long 130 miles run out to the lds by road, viâ Duchess. The ueensland Government has shown s interest in the discovery by anting Mr. E. C. Saint Smith, he Queensland Government Geo-gist, 12 months' leave of bsence in order that he may perintend the development of the ld as the temporary general man-ger of Mount Isa Mines, Ld. his arrangement, it is stated, was ntered into with the original com-any before the other companies ame into the field. The keen in-erest that has been manifested in he field has already given rise to he problem of communication and ransport. Action has been taken y the Main Roads Board to create he road from Cloncurry to the ield a main road within the mean-ng of the Act, and it is expected hat improvements will be taken n hand in the very near future. hen there is the question of rail-way communication. Some time go a deputation representing the estern pastoralists urged upon he Premier the need for a cross ection line linking up the various estern railways in Queensland, so to form a connexion between orth-western New South Wales nd ultimately Camooweal, in orth-western Queensland. The Premier then indicated that there was no immediate prospect of the suggestion being carried out, but that the State Government was giving consideration to the construction of a line from Dajarra, the present terminus of the line running west from Townsville, to the new silver-lead field at Mount Isa. The construction of that line, he believed, would be a big step towards linking up Camooweal with the present railway system. A flying survey of the proposed route to Mount Isa, a distance of about 60 miles, has been made, and further inquiries respecting the prospect are still being carried out.

The Discovery.

It was by accident, according to reports, that the field was discovered. A little copper staining along the prominent belts of the quartzite near the main ore channels is said to have induced a prospector named Miles to break some of the outcrop on the original prospecting area, and this led to the discovery of the field which has now created so much interest. A man named Simpson is also credited with the discovery, as well as the prospector Miles. One recalls in this connexion the discovery of the Broken Hill lode, attributed to a boundary rider, who is said to have pegged the area now known as Block 12 of the Broken Hill Proprietary Mine. The question, however, whether the prospector will live in the history of Australian mining as the obscure boundary-rider has done remains to be seen.

If the success that is anticipated for the field is borne out by development work it will give a much-needed impetus to the mining industry in Queensland. For some years the northern State has suffered a depression in the industry. Queensland is fortunate in having coal areas immediately behind big ports on the coast, while the coal-mining industry has advanced by development in the Bowne field, but Mount Isa is the field to which the move is going, in the hope that the State will have a rich and permanent field. Just now the mining industry in Queensland is completely overshadowed by the State's rich agricultural, pastoral, farming, sugar-growing, and other belts. This is illustrated by statistics. For the year ended December, 1922, the output in Queensland of gold, silver, copper, tin, coal, and other minerals was valued at only £1,825,280. Of this, the silver output was only 273,036oz. It will be seen how welcome some new and rich discovery will be.

The party now proceeding to the field will probably not be able to return to Cloncurry until Friday, and will, therefore, miss the return train to Brisbane from here on Thursday. Further heavy rains overnight on the big western plains between Townsville and Cloncurry have added to the freshness of this vast belt of country, which is looking good following upon the recent rains.

LIANG SHIH-YI LEAVES ENGLAND

Tribute to British Debt Paying: Mutual Trade Openings

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

London, May 22.

Mr. Liang Shih-yi left England this week for the Continent after a very pleasant visit. He certainly saw everything there was to be seen and he was one of the most energetic visitors we have had for some time. Everybody went out of their way to make his stay agreeable and I think on this ground he will have no complaint whatever. On leaving he issued the following statement:—

"I am deeply impressed with the great patriotism of the British people in willingly contributing, in the form of heavy taxes, to the refunding of the National War Debt to America and in maintaining British credit by not including in the Budget as revenue the War Debts due to them by the Continental countries. I have also noted that in the money market of the world London occupies a premier position, due to the co-operation of the British people and their Banks in maintaining this position ever since the conclusion of peace.

"One cannot fail to notice that the British people are principally industrial, while very few are agricultural, which makes it necessary to find markets for its manufactures and in exchange to import raw material and food products. Great Britain can find no better market for its manufactures and no better country from which she can get the raw material and food products required than China. In so doing it will benefit both countries financially."

Mr. Liang Shih-yi at Geneva

Geneva, June 17.

Mr. Liang Shih-yi arrived here to-day on a visit to the League of Nations. He was received by Sir Eric Drummond, the Secretary-General, and entertained to luncheon by Professor Attolico, the Under-Secretary-General, and other high officials of the Secretariat.—Reuter.

COVENTRY'S FATE

Ruin Threatened by Lapse of McKenna Duties: Workers in Arms

The seeker after truth, who wishes to understand the sacred principles of Free Trade, cannot do better than study the industrial history of the ancient but always enterprising city of Coventry. Renowned in the Middle Ages for its craftsmen, Coventry in the middle of the last century was the centre of thriving silk-weaving and watchmaking industries. Then came the triumph of Manchester and the orgy of industrial slavery that followed in its wake.

When the bicycle made its appearance Coventry was waiting with folded arms for industrial death. The bicycle laid the foundations of a new prosperity. The motor-car followed. The war brought money to Coventry, but it was not real money It was the McKenna duties that enabled the imposing structure of the British Motor Industry to be raised on the humble foundations laid by the safety bicycle. To-day there are employed directly or indirectly in the manufacture of motor-cars and motor-cycles in Great Britain about 200,000 workers of all classes. Of these considerably more than a quarter are in Coventry. The sum paid annually to these workers in wages is about 30,000,000 pounds. While unemployment is rife in other industries, and most particularly in other engineering industries, in the motor industry it is non-existent.

How Firms Have Grown.

The number of registered unemployed of all industries in Coventry to-day is 1,500—far fewer than the margin usually allowed for as unemployable by the industrial statisticians. Firms that before the war employed a mere handful of men, now employ hundreds. The larger firms have doubled and trebled the number of their workers. The Standard Motor Company, to take a single example, employed before the war about 500 hands. It now employs more than five times that number. Ninety per cent. of the Coventry Corporation electricity plant's output is taken by the motor and engineering works.

So much has protection done for the British motor industry. But what has happened to Coventry once may happen to Coventry again. Manchester doctrines ruined it before. Manchester doctrinnaires and their puppets may ruin it a second time. Last week the Coventry workers in the motor industry were preparing to demand an increase in wages. It seems likely that in respect to certain categories at least the demand would have had a sympathetic hearing. Now, instead of more wages, they get Mr. Snowden's well-flung brickbat. They were preparing to ask for more bread, and the Labour Government gives them a stone, and a very knobby boulder at that. It is the view of the motor manufacturers that if the McKenna duties are abolished 100,000 workers in the industry will go on the dole, or a proportionately larger number will go on part-time.

Fifteen millions a year snatched from the British workman's pocket—by a British Labour Government! It sounds British Labour Government! It is a wonder that the workers of Coventry and elsewhere are up in arms?

British Car's Supremacy.

Let us consider for a moment the present condition of the motor trade in regard to home manufacture and foreign imports, and how the abolition of the McKenna Duties will, in the opinion of the manufacturers, affect it. In the first three months of 1924 the importations of foreign motor-cars showed a decrease over the equivalent figures for the previous year This represents the definite supremacy of the British car, but the importation tide had already turned. From 1921-1922 the figures rose from £1,293,959 to £2,331,475. From 1922-1923, in which the total sale of cars in the United Kingdom enormously increased, the increase in imported cars was only from £2,331,475 to £2,764,709. Had Mr. Snowden not intervened as the friend—the traditional friend—of the foreigner, the latter's foothold in the British motor market was doomed

The export of British cars had in the same period assumed a new lease of life. From 1921 to 1922 it fell From 1922-1923 it again rose, and the figures for the first three months of 1924 are nearly two and a half times the figures for the first three months of 1923. Turn to commercial vehicles, which are not protected by the McKenna duties. Nearly twice as many were imported in the first three months 1924 as in the first three months of 1923.

This, then, is what the McKenna Duties have done for the British motor industry and for the British worker engaged in it. They have established an oasis of commercial prosperity in a desert of commercial depressin. They have put from 100,000, to 100,040 workers into steady and lucrative employment, and have paid about 75,000,000 pounds in wages into pockets of workers that would otherwise have been filled by the workers' empty hands. They have enabled an industry to be built up to whose potentialities there is practically no limit.

CAN DIAMONDS BE MADE?

Sir Charles Parsons Says "No."

For over 20 years Sir Charles Parsons, famous as the inventor of the turbine engine, has been seeking to solve the mystery of the origin of the diamond, and recently he confessed, at a meeting of the Royal Microscopical Society, that after spending thousands of pounds in his search for a solution he had been forced to the conclusion that the manufacture of artificial diamonds was impossible.

In the last 50 years many eminent scientists have tried to make diamonds in the laboratory, and some have claimed to have succeeded. The late Sir William Crookes, in language anyone could understand, gave the apparently simple formula for manufacturing diamonds when he said that the process consisted simply of dissolving charcoal (for a diamond is just charcoal, or graphite) in a liquid, and waiting for the dissolved substance to separate into crystals by slow evaporation. The ultimate crystals would, he said, be true diamonds. Nature thus transforms carbon into diamonds by subjecting it to enormous pressure and temperature in the earth.

The French chemist, Henri Moissan, subjected carbon to temperatures around 3,600 deg. C., and pressures exceeding 15 tons to the square inch, the carbon being enclosed in pure iron. The crucible containing the iron and carbon was then plunged into cold water, which had the effect of solidifying the iron, which enclosed the carbon in a giant grip. In this condition the dissolved carbon separated out as hard, transparent crystalline fragments indistinguishable from a true diamond. But the largest "diamond" Moissan was able to produce was scarcely visible to the naked eye: 50 side by side could be comfortably accommodated in the space of one inch.

Sir William Crookes himself was convinced that Moissan's crystals were true diamonds, and later repeated the French chemist's experiment with similar results. That was 18 years ago, but since then none of the many that have worked at the problem have succeeded in manufacturing a diamond big enough to compete with the smallest natural diamond. Sir Charles Parsons, after 20 years' labours, has admitted his failure, and he has expressed the opinion that the microscopic crystals obtained by Moissan and Crookes were not diamonds, but carborundum silicon compounds.

Probably Sir Charles Parsons will now abandon his experiments. But others will continue to seek the solution of one of the most fascinating problems of chemical science. The quest, however, is enormously costly, and attended by serious risks of explosions that may for ever end the career of some adventurous experimenter. The topaz, amethyst, ruby, emerald, and sapphire have all been made artificially, but the chemist has yet to imitate the methods by which Nature, in her laboratory beneath our feet, transforms a piece of black carbon into the most beautiful of all precious stones.

THE WHISKY RING

Startling Disclosures at Washington: Officials Declared Bought

That he bought up government officials almost as expeditiously as he acquired his properties was an implication to which he Remus, convicted bootlegger, clung unshaken throughout his examination before the Senate's inquisitorial body. He told the committee that his selling whisky as medicine was a mere pretext and that in reality he was the source of supply for bootleggers in a half dozen central states, the "financial" man of an organization referred to as "Remus and his men."

His "chief counsel" introduced him to Jess Smith in New York in 1921, Remus said, Smith knowing the witness as "a reasonably large operator in whisky," and Remus knowing Smith as "a man very close to the attorney-general." When the third party "retired gracefully" Remus testified that he passed over $50,000 in $1,000 bills. Then began a series of meetings, he added, which continued until the shadow of the penitentiary was falling over him, although Smith was promising even then that the "general," the term applied to H. M. Daugherty, was going to use his influence to obtain executive clemency for Remus. There was a "gentlemen's" agreement, pursuant to which, Remus said, he paid Smith large sums at intervals while "whisky was coming through" on the government permits that enabled the bootlegger chief to withdraw stocks from his distilleries and turn them into the distributing chain of drug houses.

Mr. Daugherty, Remus saw only at a distance. He would not charge that Smith had "double-crossed" him in the end, he explained, because when Jess Smith blew his brains out in Mr. Daugherty's apartment in the summer of 1923, Remus was still fighting his conviction in the United States supreme court. He told Smith when they last met, he added, that "Remus and his men" had remained quite in court, had never gone on the stand, and were entitled to consideration.

Double Service Is Alleged.

There was a double service the Smith was to give for the money payments, Remus said, and they was a double payment as well, the exact total of which he professed to be unable to give. In addition to the amounts paid for "protection," he testified, there was an understanding that "from $1.50 to $2.50 a case" additional on the whisky he handled was also to go to Smith. In a year and a half, he added, he sold about 800,000 gallons of whisky.

Remus asserted that he had a dozen lawyers, one time or another, although E. M. Zoline of New York, a law partner of Thomas B. Felder, also mentioned in the proceedings, was "chief counsel." James Linton, an Ohio attorney, now a special assistant to the attorney-general, was one of his lawyers, Remus said, and received $9,000 or $10,000 "as a fee," but took up his department of justice work after entering Remus' service, and on explicit understanding that he would not attempt influence there.

In Washington, New York, Columbus and Indianapolis, Remus testified, his hasty meetings with Smith were staged. Always the money was paid in cash. His check records, now concealed, he added, would show merely as being made out to "cash," with penciled initials "J. S." upon them. Nobody but himself could find these, he said, and the committee arranged to send him under guard to get the records. There was "no sentiment" in his relations with Smith, the witness added, and the meetings were held merely for the transfer of money.—"Oregonian."

A CURE FOR DEPRESSION

Notes of a Sermon Preached by the Rev. C. E. Darwent in Union Church, Tientsin, on Sunday Morning, May 18

Text: Hebrews I, 7 and 8;" And of the angels he saith,
Who maketh his angels winds,
And his ministers a flame of fire:
but of the Son he saith,
Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever;
And the sceptre of uprightness is the sceptre of thy kingdom."

This author, whoever he may have been, is writing to members of the Jewish race, who had become Christians. They seem to have been scattered about the world. And for some reason or other they were in a very depressed and doubtful state of mind. There may have been persecution by the Roman authorities and likely enough by their own countrymen. In any case they were scattered, low-spirited and depressed, and likely enough they were not sure, that they had taken the right step in abandoning their ancestral faith. This, one would think, must often happen to converts, both in ancient times, and in countries like China to-day. When times of stress and trouble come, there must be "great searchings of heart" to men who have changed their religion.

Therefore the problem for this writer, indeed it is the main purpose of the Letter, is to find some point of view which will cheer them up, get them up out of the mud of depression, out of all their doubts and fears and pessimisms. And no doubt, he thought well as to the line of thought he should take. We are often wrong in thinking, that because these men's books are in the Bible, they were thrown off with inspired ease and almost without effort. Nothing can be more erroneous. When, for instance, Paul says, that he "had determined to know nothing among men but Christ and Him crucified," it does not mean, that he made up his mind in a stupid obstinate way to make the death of Christ for sin the chief subject of his ministry. It means that he had gone over all he knew of Christ, and after mature reflexion on all the aspects of life and the teaching of the Gospel, he had come to the conclusion, that His atonement for sin stood first. So this writer must have thought well as to the line he should take in attempting to pick them up, and set them on their feet again.

The Dismal Jemmies.

And the line he takes is surely the wisest. He gets right to the centre. He tries to show them, that they had made no mistake at all, because Jesus Christ is so extraordinary and transcendant a Saviour. That is, the line he takes is to glorify Christ. He says, "O ye poor depressed people, look up! Try and see Jesus Christ and all He is, then you cannot be down-hearted." It is a very good line indeed, for one notices today, that the most "Dismal Jemmies" of pessimists as to the world and its future, such as Matthew Arnold, Clough, the poet, and Thomas Hardy the poet, and Bertrand Russell, are all men who have lost faith in Jesus Christ. Now wonder, they are "Dismal Jemmies." It does look as if it were cause and effect. It happens too frequently, that the men and women, who have lost the Christian faith in Jesus Christ are "Dismal Jemmies" for it to be a mere coincidence. People who talk about "The lost Radiance" of Christianity are very apt to have lost the radiance it sheds off all our life; life becomes a grey landscape, with little sun-gleam on hillside and rooftree.

There was the late Grant Allen. He was a most brilliant person. His name was at the head of articles on every kind of subject in the magazines, botany, geology, history, archæology; he was a Cyclopaedia of knowledge, which he could always convey in the most fascinating way. That was the bright side of him. But a friend of his, writing about him, says, "It is impossible to paint any portrait of Grant Allen without stating frankly, his outspokenness on the sex question. His friends knew that he was a free-lover as he was a free-thinker. He made no bones about it. He could not see that promiscuity hurt anybody. He was singularly blessed with a loving wife." Poor woman! It is time a little light was let in on some of these brilliant birds, who have "given up Christianity" and imagine the world can do better without it. We see what it so often comes to. In a world of men, like this, would there be any people at all? I should imagine that after a case like this, "loving wives" will prefer that their husbands should be the most orthodox of orthodox Christians.

Who Are the Backward?

One could go on a long time showing what the ultimate result of the rejection of Christian morals and of the influence of Christ comes to. Here is another of these advanced gentlemen, who have "given up Christianity." He is discussing the case of the backward races. And he has a cheerful proposition to make in regard to them. It is this; "A very good case can be made out by those writers who hold that races that cling incurably to barbarism ought to be painlessly extirpated or prevented from multiplying." Nice and cheerful for the backward races is that. I suppose this advanced thought writer is thinking of the "lethal chamber" into which the humane owners of unwanted puppies put them instead of resorting to the old and brutal method of a bucket of water. I think that if I belonged to a backward race I should prefer the method of the missionaries, who preach Jesus Christ, and who have sometimes waited 30 years before they have had a single convert, all because they had this singular faith, that this writer had, that there is simply no end to the grace and power of Jesus Christ. The consequence of which is, that it is absurd to be despondent about yourself, or about the poor "backward races," or even about "advance races," who seem sometimes to be repudiating the great Saviour to whom they owe everything, that has put them out of and above the category of "backward races."

The Illimitable Wonder.

This is the comfort, that this writer is trying to give to these depressed Hebrews. See how splendidly he puts it. He has fine things to say about the angels. He says of them, "Who maketh His angels winds; And his ministers a flame of fire." That is fine. To the ancients fire was a heavenly mystery and gift. They knew nothing about incandescent oxygen. Fire was to the most learned of them something divine. His angels are "fires"; marvellous, mysterious, awe-inspiring; what can they not do? Now, however, notice what he says about Christ;

"but of the Son he saith;
Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever;
And the sceptre of uprightness is the sceptre of thy kindom."

That is still finer, is it not? The writer has no hesitation in applying Psalm XLV verses six and seven to the Risen Christ. He makes no bones about it at all. He hasn't the mealy-mouthedness of some. Not he. He calls Him God. It is no use trying to whittle it down. He doesn't say he doesn't know who Christ is. And what he means is this, that as these people had put their faith in Christ they had put their faith in God. And he clinches it by the further statement, "Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever."

His meaning is simple and grand, that there is no end to Jesus Christ. You can't exhaust Him. He is like the ocean, illimitable in everything that the distracted individual needs, and in everything, that nations need or ever will need. We are pretty ingenious at raising problems for Conferences to solve; and human sin is still more ingenious at creating problems, that would beat those fires, the angels, but they are not beyond the Son. "Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever." There is no end to Jesus Christ. In referring your sinful self, and this sinful world to Him, you are referring them and yourself to an eternal and infinite Person. There is no possibility of exhausting Him. He is always equal to the occasion. That is what the text means. He is not like some of the mines, that old American writers on the first discovery of gold in California describe. Mark Twain is one of these writers. He tells how new-comers would buy a claim, and then have it explained to them by the seller, that the reef was poor at the surface, but the further you went down the richer it got. That was all very well, but the wretched buyers hadn't money to sink the mine a mile deep. It may have been a "bonanza." But you couldn't get at it. Christ is not like that. Touch Him at the surface, and "virtue proceedeth out of Him," as the poor woman, who touched Him in the press found out. Have a big faith in Him, as a Luther and a Bernard had, with heaps of learning as they had, and you find he is still like the ocean, illimitable, deep, all-sufficing; "Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever." That is the eternal quality in Him, that gives Him the right to the title of "Saviour of the world."

The Ever Fresh.

This eternal quality in Him is the marvel of the world. And it is this quality in Him, that the writer of this epistle asks the readers of it to consider, and then at once cheer up. Take plain facts, that are open to everyone and you can't deny an infinite quality to Christ. There is preaching. On whom else could we preach at all? Not only in a course of two or a dozen lectures, but steadily through the year? It does not matter whether we do it well or ill. There are thousands and thousands of men who preach, that is, speak about Him at length, all through the year to the same people, with a few strangers present, now and then, and they are not tired. Nay, the more you preach about Him, and not around Him, the better they like it. Try that on anyone else, no matter how eminent, and you will see where you are. In three weeks or less they would be sick of him or her, no matter whether you chose Plato, Shakespeare, or Bacon or anyone else. Is there a play or a piece of music, that can get an audience at all more than once in a while? If a play runs a year, everyone throws up his hands in utter amazement at such a marvel. But the story of the love of God in "Christ and Him crucified" never loses its charm. No. It never lacks an audience. No. Some superior high-sniffing musical ultra refined souls affect to look down on a hymn like "Tell me the old, old story." But say what they like, it never lacks men and women glad to sing it, and to go away with their spirit up in the heavens, where Christ is. This has gone on for over 1900 years. And in spite of all the prophecies of the "decay of Christianity" the fact remains that Jesus Christ has more property of incalculable value devoted to His service than any one or thing else; He has more men and women and children who are glad to gather in audiences, great and small, then anyone else; He has more, who stay away if He is'nt preached, and rally again if He is. It is the standing audiences, the never-fading away audiences that are the witness to the fact, that "His throne is for ever and ever." There is in Him what men, who seek to hear of Him, find to be eternal, perpetual refreshment to mind, soul, and even body, none can deny this fact Try, if you like to get an audience in every town and village in England alone every week on any other subject. Try astronomy, psychology music, art (with a big inflated A), and as I have said, you will find out where you are. Bring it down to "hard-pan." You will have rent and up-keep to pay, and collection box empty. But the church of Christ goes on for ever and ever. It is about the only concern in the world, that is'nt virtually on the rocks, as so many nations are. Why? Because the great Christ of the Church is infinite. There is no end to His love, His attractiveness, His, wisdom, His charm, His ability to lift the soul out of its doldrums into the clear air of the heavens of God. Spurgeon could say truly, that "no one had ever been able to build a chapel big enough to contain all the people, who wanted to hear him at one time." That was true. But why did the crowds flock in to here Supurgeon? Because he had a matchless power of enabling the plain man, rich or poor, to see and feel the grace and eternal love and charm of this Christ, who lived in Galilee and was crucified outside Jerusalem. There is no escaping the statement of this writer

"but of the Son he saith;
Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever:
And the sceptre of uprightness is the sceptre of thy throne."

The Life Eternal.

I might take another line. Take individuals. If they really know Christ, do they ever get sick of Him, or bored with Him? No but the people, who never think about Him are always getting bored with their new sensations, and can't live without new stunts. How is that? Because eternity is in Him and not in these other things In a weekly denominational paper I get I read in every issue of some man or woman who has been a deacon or a Sunday School teacher, or elder, or steward of some little church for 40 and 50 years. There is an old man at home I know very, very well. He joined a church of Christ just 82 years ago, and like a certain pers he is "still going strong." Eigh two years is a good spell as an perience. And if you were suggest to him that it is about t he made a change and sought i piration, help, interest in some else, he would be very surpris And there are millions like him all Christendom, in churches great diversity. Yet all agree, t there is no end to the life of eve kind to be drawn from this Chri They cannot all be mental deficien It is simpler to agree with t writer; "Thy throne, O God, if f ever and ever." One might purs this subject into the general soc and international realm. It generally agreed by all sensi social reform people that if th could only get hold of the christi idea of Society, our social proble would be solved. Jesus Christ is more exhausted than He was wh He rose from the dead. "His thro is for ever and ever."

BRUSH WITH CHINESE BANDITS

Grim Ordeal in Raging River: Death Walk Through Field of M

BY JOHN HILDITCH, F.R.G.S., IN THE "MANCHESTER EVENING CHRONICLE."

Mr. John Hilditch, the well-known Manchester authority and collector of Far Eastern curios, describes each week for the "Evening Chronicle" some of his many remarkable adventures while in search of specimens.

In the following article he tells of an encounter with bandits on a boat on China's biggest river and a grim life and death struggle through a treacherous morass.

* * *

Though the rivers of China generally are known as the Glory of China, there is one river at least that is known as China's Sorrow. That is the Yellow River, and it came very near to becoming my sorrow, too.

This river is too swift for ordinary navigation. In fact, it is too swift for either Mother Nature or human nature thoroughly to control.

The Yellow River is one of the world's wonders. It is thousands of miles long, and yet it flows through a land where even to-day, in all but the well-populated parts, the standard of living is but a bitter fight with the soil and water is ~~priced at fourpence and sixpence per~~ bucket.

We were in the Province of Kansu, and had already seen something of the might of the river that in the last two centuries is reputed to have carried away in its destructive flow not less than seven million people.

We had come to a point where the river, some miles from Niang-ho, divides two towns, and where is situate one of the few places in the river rendered passable, and that only by the keenness and agility of the boatmen, who watch the great river closely. For it is only at rare moments that the men can take their spring and venture their craft into the mass of seething water, and by dint of hard labour and disdain of fear contrive to get themselves, and whatever passengers are entrusted to them, across the rude waters.

There were only two of us, and we were waiting somewhat eagerly for this difficult and dangerous advantage. At last the opportunity came.

We stepped off the banks of golden mud at sound of the ringing cry of the boatman, and took our seats within the low wooden walls of the boat that looked like a cut-down railway wagon.

There were three men in charge, and there were two passengers, and it ocurred to me that I had never before met with boatmen of a nature so quiet.

The fares the men asked, with taels for tips, were paid in advance.

You cannot cut across a fast-going river in a straight line. You must ease your boat to the current, and you must zig-zag just as sometimes a tired horse is seen to do when pulling a weight uphill.

But it had seemed to me that at least we should be across in 15 minutes, provided we met no misadventures. I was mistaken.

When we had imperilled ourselves on the breast of the river for double that time, and when, as I thought, the men were still playing for safety, the quietude of the boatmen collapsed.

They took from the pockets of their slight tunics the money we had paid them, and by many signs and wonders endeavoured to make us see that it was not enough.

Chien-bi (money) Chien-bi Chien-bi they all cried in unisc with anger in their voices. I sto perplexed, but hardly dismaye until the first man let go his oar and then I realized that if that w to be the game the Yellow Riv was going to be our grave.

Chien-bi! Still the men shoute and my co-passenger, fello countryman of the brigands (for I now termed them in my mind stood like a figure carved by h country's great sculptors.

With the increased swirl a swell of the river the men saw the chance, and, as the waters thundere past, my co-passenger was sudden felled to the floor of the boat.

Alert as a sparrow, however, h regained his feet, and, springin upon his assailant, threw him dow and, planting his feet upon his bod took the oars in his own hand.

How the box of a boat kept righ side up was a mystery to me.

Difficult Landing.

The second man turned his ragin tyes upon myself. There was a ne grin, fierce, fiendish determinatio upon that boatman's face, he wh had previously looked so trust worthy.

In a moment the man had sprun upon me and was yelling Chien-bi. caught him and held him as in vice, and then I turned about th slippery creature and shook him a man was never shaken before.

Less mercy than that he certainl deserved, but who but the skille could get us across that river? was beginning to wish I had neve seen it.

But the brigand, after his attemp upon my own person, tried me n further, and settled to his ow task.

In that old tub little did I think we should ever land. When we di it was in a bed of quagmire, an only with extreme difficulty.

There was no firmness anywhere and when one foot went down int the softness the other had to g down after it because there wa nothing upon which it could kee up!

No man spoke, but the thick slimy composition, as foot after foot went in and out, yielded a soft clicking noise, wicked and irritating

The boatman who had been the first to take hand from oar in the boat was now embedded to the waist, and perspiration was flowing in wide streaks like potter's glaze over all his face.

I, with advantage in height, fared better, but all my fellows were in a weary plight.

It was a case not of sink or swim, but of sink or wriggle, and how long the wriggling must last no man knew.

We were facing a wall which even could it be reached could not be climbed, it being of smooth glazed titles. It had in it, however, a gateway, and this was our goal.

But while our aching limbs still tussled with the slime, evening began to dim the scene around us, and we knew that with darkness the gate would be closed.

The sandals or shoddy foot gear of the Celestials had long since been left in the mire, and their owners were the better off.

I, unfortunately, was wearing boots, to be able to dispense with which I would have given anything.

Through tops and through lace-holes the miry stuff had sunk, and

...ammed my feet that I could al-
...t feel the cessation of circula-

...wilight seemed to rush past us
...her than fall upon us, and soon
...were but dim receding figures to
...ch other.

At last the moon shone out and
...t a whitened shaft along the sea
...oud. It gave to one of the boat-
...n strength for a fresh effort, and the cost of what must have been tremendous pull upon every part his being I could see his head
...d shoulders slowly shifting on
...d on towards that gateway.

Soon there was a shout with a
...e of glee attending it, and I, who
...s now not very far behind him,
...w his body lengthen and his lower
...bs come into sight.

It was a tremendous moment. I
...outed and shouted, also with glee
...r my voice, but, as I did so, I
...opped into a fresh morass which
...ok me nearly to the neck. From
...is it took me long to recover my-
...lf, it being the deepest morass I
...d struck.

As I managed to drag up my body
...re came across that wretched
...aste the sound of a knocking, and knew that one man, at least, had
...ached the gateway. Indeed, I
...uld dimly see him, and beyond the
...all I could see, too, a tower with
...en windows.

It was well for us that the
...hinese have a mystical love for the
...oon, since to admire it that night
...lady with her attendants had
...scended the tower, from whence
...ecks were seen moving in the mud,
...d knocking heard at the gate.

It was thus came our deliverance.
...eliverance, that is, for those of us
...ho had so far delivered ourselves
...to drag our feet to terra firma.

But for one of the five—he who
...d been first to drop his oars—
...ere was no deliverance.

He had found his grave in that
...d of seething mire.

We slept that night upon the floor
...f a pagoda just within the gateway
...at had been our door of hope.
...he fingers of the clock had gone,
...deed, their full round before I
...woke. And when my eyes at last
...pened, it was to meet the smile of
...a Celestial in a painting which hung
...beside me on the wall.

Later I found that the lady who
...ad been our deliverer, never having
...een an Englishman, desired to ins-
...ect myself.

But later she changed her mind,
...inking, perhaps, the ordeal would
...vercome her. Yet still desirous of
...howing kindness to the foreigner,
...he sent her servant to my floor in
...he pagoda, bearing the ancient
...igure of the goddess Kwanyin, to
...hose help, doubtless, she attributed
...er share in rescuing me from
...eath.

"CRUEL ONLY TO BE KIND"

(TRANSLATED FROM THE CHINESE OF JUAN YI-TZU, B.C. 100, AT 71.2).

"Then he seized me by the collar,
"Cruel only to be kind,
"And to my exceeding dolour
"Gave me several slaps behind."
(Tom Hood)

It almost breaks my heart to tell
What tribulation sad befell
The naughty little Chu Chao Hsin
Who was so very expert in
The art of using verbal speech
In order to impress and teach
Something like truth—well, near enough;
In short, the merry art of bluff.
He took a lot of people in,
Did wily little Chu Chao Hsin,—
Old women dressed as diplomats
And mission folks and such like flats,
Who all unite to loudly bellow
"The Chinese is a splendid fellow!"
So with soft soap they gently eased
The humbug stuff which Chu was pleased
To scatter round to serve his ends,
Deceiving unenlightened friends.

But to this rotten paradise
There came a youth to whom the vice
Of humbug was the rag of red
That makes the bull charge right ahead.
And one day, at a soft soap dinner,
Thundered the youth to Chu, "You sinner!
"No more soft soap can Patience stand,
"We'll scour you well with Monkey brand
"Laid on with tongue that's rough and ready."
Poor Chu, with feelings most unsteady,
Rising as well as he was able,
Collapsed beneath the dinner table.
Old women shouted "Fie! Bad youth!
"No decent people tell the truth
"When truth is not polite to tell."
The youth just murmured "Go to Hel-
'singfors" (somewhere in Finland found);
And stood his anti-humbug ground.

E'en Chu's thick hide cannot withstand
The scouring rough of Monkey brand;
He on his bed of gall lies sore,
Lies as he never lied before
With soft soap ointment on the raw,
Soliloquizing "What a bore!
"The truth is very hard to bear,
"And if we don't take special care
"This Monkey brand, though impolite,
"May show us in our truest light!"

RABINDRANATH TAGORE'S MISSION

The Quest and Gospel of the Ultimate Truth: The Brotherhood of Man: The World's Need for Individuals, not Organizations: A Tribute to the Parsees

During his visit to Shanghai, Dr. Rabindranath Tagore visited the Parsee Social Hall as the guest of the Parsee community and delivered a most striking address. He was welcomed with the reading of an address drafted on behalf of the local Parsee community in which appreciative reference was made to him as "one of the most illustrious sons of Asia of the Twentieth Century" and he was hailed as one who followed the teachings of Zoroaster. Dr. Tagore, addressing his audience as Sisters and Brothers, said in part:—

I am expected to make a formal speech on a subject which in itself is so deep, the theme so intense, that I very often feel it is an act of impiety to be talking about it in a meeting of a formal character. My speech shall needs be with limitations. The Ultimate Truth, I feel to many, sounds so small, trival and insignificant, but in reality what sounds like children's work has a deep significance requiring profound thought to unravel it. In modern parlance it goes unheeded, regardless, and is considered something superficial. The idea is very great; it is all along with them but is too difficult to comprehend for those of us who are thickly surrounded by and move about in fashionable circles. Unfortunately for our age, we do not heed people who fearlessly strive to stand before us with some message to deliver, but we turn our backs to the message which arises from the heart of humanity. We live in this age, the age of Journalism, of cheap ideas and cheap glory and we forget the immense seriousness of life and lose sight of the great purpose of human history.

All the great countries had the basis of their greatness on the sound value of men. These were the great individuals upon whom has been built the great civilization and culture of the world. Now the time has come when our age, which has been a good deal dimmed and shrouded in externals, should strive to clip some of these externals. We cannot afford any longer to remain within our enclosures of national abnegation. All the great teachers of the world strove hard to bring to light the supreme truth which till then remained dormant in unexplored regions. One of the greatest and the earliest of these masters was Zoroaster. They appealed to men, aroused them from their deep slumber of ages to come out from their self-centred egoistic lives and exert their breath for the realization of Truth. Men have not lived up to the ideals and standards set by them. They raised their voices in vain and the world goes on in its boundless revolutions and disasters. And who am I? I have not the strength to utter. My voice is too feeble to arouse humanity from its stupor of slumber and its intemperance. We have not attained our goal. Materialistic ideals pervade the present atmosphere, but they are of no account. The successes of the powerful, the rich, the vainglorious cannot enter the higher field. The rich, the powerful, self-centred souls are rejected. They leave nothing behind them. They have not that illumination which may lighten and shed its lustrous beams on their onward path. Riches, which they strive hard to muster, die with them without any trace.

Realizing the Ideal.

Humanity has been struggling for centuries for the realization of the ideal and I feel the inadequacy of my strength and my voice. I am not able to convince men of the great truth of this mission—the realization of Spiritual Unity. For those who have a natural kindling of faith, who follow dictates of their nature, it is quite easy to love their own people. This is not of much moment, but the time has come when the links of the chain of fellowship and brotherhood of humanity should be strengthened and further cemented. We are in the open, and we have met together, and what path is there which can make us one, which can unite us together? That is the obligation resting upon us and which has tended to flow during the whole course of history. One after another great masters arose, taught people and vanished. The world still goes on its course, throbbing. Still it is on its way towards Spiritual Unity. Miseries and sufferings there are without number and the present age is aching with pain. Why is that the case? Because we have not attained the Truth. We are all suffering from the lack of that essential potent element—Truth. We are out of touch with reality. We are like shadows not in touch with light and grapple with common leaves which fall off and are of no account. We attach importance to ever-changing passing clouds which change their line and colour. But we have been gifted with souls, and that has its own illumination, but its horizon is all obscured by our selfish passion and indifference. A cloud of dust obstructs the vision. We lose our birth-right in this world—the edification of our soul. Only it has to be tuned, it has to be revealed. It pines for that and that must happen. The inherent voice is ever urging us to bring out the lamp which is vanishing, unnourished.

Due to such convulsions, the whole of nature suffered and is suffering. The Great War and the rivalry amongst the class divisions are producing conflagration and a spirit of hostility all over the world, which is but the sign of the failure of humanity to attain the supreme essential Truth. Are we going to languish in this state of affairs? Are we going to make bliss? We have not come in touch with supreme Truth and have no faith to approach it. We are doomed and rejected and swept off like drooping shadows and passing clouds. I do not know how to make it clear to you; how to call you out in the joint meeting when all depends upon individuals.

Never think that we as individuals are insignificant. The great history of men from times eternal has been founded on individuals. The Western culture also rests upon one individual. You have mentioned in your address the name of that great master and leader of men, Zoroaster; he was the one ardent soul who, with his dauntless efforts and teachings, has saved millions of men from utter futility and ruin. Truth is wailing for individuals and not for big organizations. You may be ignored by the fashionable, spurned by the powerful and clever, but any individual, although he has no name or fame, may find his soul higher and brighter by the touch of Truth and he is our leader without knowing it. We are waiting for such a leader who has all the ideals. My friends, do not ask me to make formal speeches about the subject, about people of weak faith and vaccilating minds. I think that it does not rest upon me to claim any result, if I hear the call of truth. I am responsible for the work (the University at Shantiniketan) for giving expression and shape to it and the rest is in the hands of the Almighty.

Parsee Enthusiasm.

My friends, before I sit down, I must express my deep-felt gratitude to the Parsee community. From the beginning, when my ideal was cherished by me, they have come out and have offered me their valuable help with real enthusiasm. I must say I am deeply grateful to them. Two or three years ago, I had no experience of Parsees, or of what they were like. It was because I was far away from that part of India, Bombay, where they live. I had no opportunity to meet you before and I am glad that this mission of mine has brought me in contact with you, and let me tell you are very near my heart. I feel at home with them, not because they are my friends, but some time before, when they failed to realize the ideal, they have helped me in its realization and for this I am deeply gratified and I take this opportunity to express my gratitude to you, though far away from India.

A SONG OF PEACH-BLOSSOM FOUNTAIN

(TRANSLATED BY WITTER BYNNER AND KIANG KANG-HU.)

The fisherman is drifting, enjoying the spring-mountains,
Where the peaches on both banks lead to an ancient source.
Watching the fresh-coloured trees, he never thinks of distance
Till he comes to the end of the blue stream and suddenly—strange men!
Its cave—with mouth so narrow that he has to crawl;
But then it opens wide again on a broad and level path—
And far beyond he faces clouds crowning a reach of trees
And thousands of houses shadowed round with flowers and bamboos. . .
Woodsmen tell him their names in the ancient speech of Han;
And clothes of the Chin Dynasty are worn by every one
Living on the uplands, along the Wu-ling River,
On farms and in gardens that are like a world apart. . . .
Peaceful stand their houses under pines in the clear moon,
Till sunrise fills the low sky with sound of dogs and fowl.
At tidings of a stranger, the people all assemble,
And each of them invites him home and asks him where he was born.
Boys and girls in the morning sweep his path of petals,
And fishermen and farmers bring him their loads at dusk. . . .
They left the world long ago, they came here seeking refuge
And have lived like angels ever since, blessedly far away,
No one in the cave knowing anything outside,
Outsiders viewing only empty mountains and thick clouds. . . .
The fisherman, unconscious of his great good-fortune,
Begins to think of country, of home, of worldly ties,
Emerges from the cave again, past mountains and past rivers,
Intending sometime to return, when he has told his kin.
He studies every step he takes, fixes it well in mind,
And never dreams that cliffs and peaks may meanwhile change their form. . .
It is certain that, t oenter through the deepness of the mountain,
A green water leads you, into a misty wood.
But now, wiith spring floods everywhere and floating peachpetals,
Which is the one to follow? Where is the holy fountain?

WANG WÊI.

SOUTHERN RHODESIA

SOUTHERN Rhodesia which was inaugurated as the youngest self governing Colony of the British Empire on October 1, 1923, and which had previously for 33 years been ably administered by the British South Africa Company possesses one of the finest climates in the world with long hours of sunshine, breezy temperate days and cool nights. For those who wish to take up farming or ranching in order to make the most they can of their capital, energy and technical knowledge, or for those who wish to retire from strenuous business or professional life and make a home, Rhodesia offers many advantages unequalled elsewhere. The business, social, sporting, educational and medical facilities bear favourable comparison with those of other countries. Native labour is plentiful and when properly managed is cheap and efficient. Taxation is light. Good land in healthy surroundings and amidst fine scenery is plentiful and not expensive.

Full information is obtainable on application to The Secretary, Southern Rhodesia Settlers' Board (attached to the Government of Southern Rhodesia), P. O. Box 372, Salisbury S., Rhodesia.

The giving of advice to prospective settlers will be facilitated if applicants will advise the Board in detail of their circumstances and the amount of capital they would be prepared to invest in a suitable venture.

BOOK NOTES AND NEWS

Mr. J. C. Squire is at present compiling an anthology of humorous verse. He is subjecting the poems to severe test, for he is determined to exclude any poem which is not calculated to make the reader laugh aloud.

A bronze statue of Sir William Blackstone, the celebrated author of the Commentaries on English Law published in 1769, is to be presented to the Temple by the American lawyers who are visiting England next month. Black-stone's "Commentaries" long remained the leading text-book on law, and, though it has been superseded, is still the foundation on which the various British and American treaties on English law are based.

The general political and economic situation, the presence of Mr. Snowden at the Exchequer and the stir caused by the presentation of Labour's first Budget, will doubtless send many readers—anxious to penetrate the mind of the present keeper of the nation's purse—to that interesting work, "Labour and the New World," by the Rt. Hon. Philip Snowden, M.P., a new and revised edition of which has recently been published by Cassell.

Messrs. Heinemann have just published "Augustus Carp, Esq. (Being the Autobiography of a Really Good Man), by Himself." This book is that rarity, a book of humour. The illustrations by "Robin" are an additional joy.

Mr. Oppenheim's inventive genius appears to be an inexhaustible fountain. Drink we at it never so often, its freshness, its inimitable sparkle, its exciting tonic qualities persist. His last book, "The Seven Conundrums," intrigues us as surely as any of its predecessors. The story gets into stride with the first chapter, in which a trio of destitute though respectable "buskers" are induced to sell their souls, for good or ill, to a mysterious modern Mephistopheles. The idea of employing this innocent little itinerant concert-party for a series of secret service jobs of the first importance is distinctly novel, and each of the seven conundrums in which they are involved has its own peculiar thrill.

The titles of some of his works—and not only those on mathematics—would surprise the people who only know Lewis Carroll as the author of "Alice in Wonderland" and "Alice Through the Looking Glass," and perhaps "Sylvie and Bruno." It appears, from one item, that Lewis Carroll was also the inventor of a game of circular billiards, which sounds rather like a collaboration between the author of "Alice in Wonderland" and the author of "Condensation of Determinants." It is still difficult to believe them one and the same person.

Mr. Eveleigh Nash is publishing a novel which, he thinks, takes rather original ground, and if that be so, why, it should be welcome. This ground is indicated by the title the author, Mr. Pearson Choate, has found for it, "The King Who Went on Strike." "Is it not strange," writes Carlyle somewhere, "that so few kings abdicate, and none yet heard of has been known to commit suicide? Fritz, the first King of Prussia, alone tried, and they cut the rope." Probably Mr. Pearson Choate got the idea for his story from this Carlylean passage. Anyhow, his text is, the fixity with which kings have stuck to their jobs and their thrones.

Good Johnsonians may think an abridged edition of Boswell's life of the master a laying of profane hands on a sacred literary covenant. There is probably, however, a public who would be glad to have the book in shorter compass. Anyhow, Mr. Archibald Marshall, the novelist, has made an abridgment, and it is now in course of being printed. He has always been a great student of Johnsonia. He knows the biography as few know it, and he has taken the greatest pains. By this, it is meant that he has omitted nothing which should be left in and left out nothing which could not be spared without hurt to the narrative.

"RACE" AND ITS AUTHOR

It must be very galling to an author to be told that he continually reminds his renders of Galsworthy, or Conrad, or Kipling, or May Sinclair, or someone else. Comparison in criticism is fatally easy. Sometimes it is justified: sometimes it is only a short and easy way of indicating the manner or style of an author; and often does him an injustice.

I imagine Mr. William McFee must have got tired of being compared with Conrad; though it must be admitted, in defence of harassed reviewers, that Mr. McFee's manner sometimes seemed to ask for it. And there is also the fact that both were in the merchant service. But perhaps a revulsion against the Conradian label has induced Mr. McFee, the novelist, to leave the sea for dry grund—and quite fresh ground.

His new novel "Race" is anything but Conradian, either in manner or conception. It has nothing to do with the sea; it is—if a label is any use at all—more the sort of crowded, leisurely book one would have expected from the late William de Morgan.

It begins in Barnet, in the spacious days when the tall safety bicycle was something new and very daring. It is about middle-class and very real people; but there seems, in the first few pages, to be such a lot of them.

This sort of story is quite unexpected from Mr. McFee; but the other and more familiar McFee manages to get a word in sometimes: as when we are told of his heroine, hearing a stanza from Keats for the first time, that she "had never heard poetry uttered before save when it was given out for parsing, and she trembled with the ecstasy of those to whom words are like shells from distant shores, smooth and lovely, and full of strange noises garnered from countless ages." There speaks the true artist in words.

I do not think Mr. McFee, either in this or his earlier vein, is as well known in this country as he deserves. They seem to think more of him in America. But the comparative few who do know his work are very faithful; and I should never be surprised to hear of the formation of a McFee Club, on the lines of the Aldous Huxley Club which I mentioned some times ago.

Mr. McFee, by the way, has been confessing to his American admirers that he "commenced author" while still at school, where the rumour that he had written a story caused him to be regarded with deep suspicion by his school-fellows.—"Evening Standard."

THE STORY OF FASCISM

ROME OR DEATH: THE STORY OF FASCISM. By Carleton Beals. 12s. 6d. (John Long.)

Success is its only justification; and there can be no doubt that Fascism, under the impulse of the dictator-demagogue, Mussolini, has succeeded amply. So ruthless and generally erratic an instrument of reform as autocracy in action is a dangerous weapon for most countries to use; but Italy, with its old dilatoriness and unsettlement, has proved able to benefit from the sharp medicine. How long Fascism will remain a force of effective government is a question it is unsafe to answer. Prophecy is impossible in the case of nations, especially of southern nations; but this is sure, that if the "black shirts" went to-morrow, their influence would remain and on the whole for good. They have cleared up Italy and given it a new energy and pride. The story of the origins, rise and triumph of the Fascisti is detailed in this book by an American. Mr. Beals was so closely associated with the movement, although from outside, that his volume opens with bloodshed in his presence. It happened to be the blood of a poor plodding and innocent ass; but there was plenty of good will or bad behind the shooting. Mr. Beals writes with enthusiasm and arouses interest.

INDIA

The Vast Problem Confronting Great Britain

"INDIA: A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW." By the Earl of Ronaldshay, P.C., G.C.S.I. (Constable. 18s.).

"As rivers of water in a dry place," so is this attractive volume. For there is nothing so dry as the arid deserts of pessimism, and of pessimism on the subject of India we have recently had enough. Has not "Al Carthill" been explaining to us that we have lost India and the manner of our losing it? Has not M. Romain-Rolland been assuring us that Western civilization has collapsed, and that the gospel of Mr. Gandhi alone can save us? It is refreshing, therefore, to find a very different thesis in this study by a far-travelled observer and an acute thinker, Lord Meston writes, in a "Sunday Times" review. Unshaken by the gusts of passion which are sweeping over India at the moment, he takes a wider vision of the country and its problems. He discovers no melancholy omens that we have lost, or are engaged in losing, India. He has mistakes to tell us of, and cautions to administer; but he is not ashamed of the British work in India, and the psychology of the people convinces him that they still continue to need our help and guiding. It certainly does not detract from the weight of his judgments that Lord Ronaldshay knows his India well, at first hand, and in various capacities, and that for five years he has governed the great province of Bengal with unostentatious and brilliant success. His bird's-eye view, as he modestly calls it, brings home to the thinking Englishman, in a way that no recent narrative has done, the challenge and the appeal of the Indian situation.

Yet it is in no sense a political treatise; nor is it a guide-book, or an encyclopædia. It selects and describes, vividly, as in a series of cameos, a few episodes in Indian history, a few phases of Indian thought, a few scenes in the Indian landscape; we read them, and all unawares we find ourselves with a clearer understanding of the chief preoccupations of India to-day. Some of the cameos—dawn on the frontier, the tragedy at Kerbela, the rainy season in Eastern Bengal, the Holi festival— are gems of word painting; and a number of excellent photographs add to the reader's pleasure.

Influence of Environment.

When a student of human nature sets out to describe a country and its story, he cannot keep human nature long out of sight; and the background of all Lord Ronaldshay's pictures is the influence of environment upon the character and temperament of the people. He quotes, not wholly without approval, the view that Nature, in the West a rugged power to be fought and overcome, in the East a garment of friendship, has made the European a utilitarian and the Indian an idealist. But whatever hand climate may have had in framing philosophies, climate and philosophies between them are responsible for the Indian outlook on life; for it is in malaria and Karma that the ingrained fatalism of the land has its roots. Malaria, carried by the mosquito from which no man escapes, accounts for an appalling death-roll, and saps the vigour and fecundity of the living. Karma, or the doctrine of the remorseles reincarnation of the individual soul until at last, by asceticism and meditation, it is absorbed in the Supreme Soul, produces a weariness of life and an indifference to life's healthy activities. The chosen few may vanquish these terrible handicaps; but with the masses they bar the way to what we should regard as the normal instinct of man to strive after betterment. For Karma Lord Ronaldshay does not venture on an antidote; Hinduism, with its profound speculations into the mysteries of the universe, has never been able to devise a sunny creed, and, if light is to come, it must clearly come from without. Of the fight against malaria, on the other hand, the prospects are more cheerful; an interesting chapter tells how the drainage of the Bengal swamps is being tackled and the breeding-grounds of the mosquito despoiled. The task, however, is gigantic, and means a revolution in the habits of the people.

India and Democracy.

Things being as they are, one question at once assails us: On such a foundation of malarial body and fatalistic mind can India ever hope to build up democracy and industralism? Lord Ronaldshay is obviously doubtful. Our incorrigible confidence in the superiority of our own political nostrums is, he hints, the only driving power behind our gift of the elective principle; whatever politicians may pretend, it has awakened no answering chord in India's secret ambitions. Similarly, he fears that the organization of power industries on a large scale is alien to the genius of the Indian people; "the workman's heart is not amidst the restless and tireless machinery alongside of which he toils;" and he is consequently doomed to inefficiency. If we are wrong in pressing representative institutions and industrial development on India, Lord Ronaldshay does not suggest alternatives. Perhaps they are reserved for the following volume which he promises, and to which we shall look forward with keen anticipation.

Behind the climate and psychology and the play of temperament, there stand two of India's gravest practical issues—her racial problem and her North-West frontier. It is the fashion to belittle the one, as it is sometimes convenient to forget the other; but they are both stark realities. How deep and fundamental are the differences between Hindu and Moslem is made abundantly clear by Lord Ronaldshay; and in five instructive chapters he traces the history and the increasing magnitude of the frontier question. Our first punitive expedition in Waziristan was with a force of 1,500 men: our latest required an army of 80,000. The Tirah campaign cost £124,000; the operations of 1919-20 cost £16,000,000. In some ways this is the most striking part of the book. It warns us that, whatever place we may allow for sentiment in the great political experiment which is proceeding in India to-day, we must keep a reserve of unfettered power to prevent the whole structure from dissolving in violence.

MR. SHAW

A Deeply Religious Man.

"BERNARD SHAW." By Edward Shanks. (Writers of the Day Series). Nisbet. 2s.

There are many books about Mr. Shaw—and one more, if we count that brilliant treatise which, under the title of "Bernard Shaw," Mr. Chesterton wrote about Mr. Chesterton. But there was room for another, and Mr. Shanks was the man to write it.

All subjects, indeed, are inexhaustible. Your true poet, if he is moved to write about the stars, is not embarrassed by the thousands who have done so before him; the essence of his poetic faculty is that what he has to say is unique, and could not possibly have been anticipated. So with your true critic. Mr. Shanks has something unique to say even about Mr. Shaw.

His analysis of his subject as novelist, critic, dramatist, "writer of prefaces" and philosopher, is thorough and acute Characteristically, he tells us,

> Mr. Shaw was born romanticist, and moralist and iconoclast at once; and therefore the only possible successful expression for him was in comedy.

And further:

> He is, in truth, a deeply religious man, and he has written of nothing so much as of religion. But he has suffered all his life under a handicap, which is that he is shy of using that word as he is shy of using the name of God, yet cannot find any proper substitutes for them.

This last reproach may, to some, appear to be refuted by "Saint Joan," on which Mr. Shanks has been able only to touch. But what I take to be its implication remains unrefuted. Certainly Mr. Shanks is right in saying that Mr. Shaw has "a real philosophy, in which he believes with all his heart:" certainly he is right in saying that Mr. Shaw is not a logical thinker. It must follow—as indeed was proved by "Back to Methuselah"—that the intellectual aspect of the Shavian philosophy is not the most impressive. The moral matters more to Mr. Shaw than the intellectual. He is prophet, hero, genius, wit, seer—last of the great Victorian romantics, inspirer of a high faith in the unpredictable future. Why should we ask him for a consistent philosophy?—"Daily News."

GILBERT AND SULLIV

THE STORY OF THE SAVOY OPERA. S. J. Adair FitzGerald. With Introduction by T. P. O'Con M.P. 5s. (Stanley Paul.)

There could not have been happier choice of an historian the Savoy Opera, for Mr. Ad FitzGerald has not only seen all operas from the start, but in days knew everybody who took in their presentation. Here he given an authoritative and ent taining account of the origin of operas, full records of everythi of interest concerning them, inclu ing the worries and triumphs author, composer and producer, enriched his chronicle with generous supply of delightful an dotes and the witty sayings of G bert who by turns could be the kin est and unkindest of men and spo according to his moods. The nume ous illustrations include portraits Gilbert and Sullivan, and the acto who became famous at the Savo and fascimile reproductions special programmes. Never has t story of the Savoy operas been to more fully, from the production "Thespis" in 1871 to the latest vivals, and never has it been to more interestingly or more ably. is a book that all good Savoyar will want, attractively produce and at a price that brings it withi everybody's reach.

A GREAT TEACHER OF MUSIC

Leopold Auer, the famous Hun garianborn violinist and a grea teacher of great artistes like Misch Elman and Jascha Heifetz, was bor 79 years ago, and his reminiscences "My Long Life in Music" (Duck worth, 21s.), cover a long an wonderful period in the history o music. He knew all the grea musicians and composers of hi time, and his pages contain interest ing references to such giants a Wagner, Liszt, Brahms (with whom he played at Hamburg), Joachim the Rubinsteins, Tchaikovsky, and Nikisch. The author lived for many years in Russia, his adopted country and in the Bolshevist revolution he lost all his possessions, including his library and manuscripts, but his memory has served him well in this volume, which is generously leavened with anecdote. There is a story of Rossini found by a friend studying the score of "Tristan and Isolde." "Ah," said Rossini, "it is a beautiful work!" The friend was dumbfounded to find that he was reading the score wrong side up. "You are reading the music upside down," he said. Rossini, who was no more an admirer of Wagner than were most other Parisians of his day, inverted the score and then said, after a glance, "Alas, now I cannot make head or tail of it!"

In the course of a tour in the Near East, Auer played before Sultan Abdul Hamid II., a great lover of music, and was told that on no account must he cease playing until the Sultan should deign to give the signal by an inclination of his head. The author played two or three small pieces, being careful to keep his eyes glued on the Sultan's face in case he gave the sign:—

> The Sultan, however, never moved; and before long—since it was very warm in the hall and the air was damp—I found it necessary to tune my violin. I had no sooner started tuning it than Aranda Pasha (head of the Sultan's orchestra) hurried up to me and in a nervous manner begged me to continue playing. I explained to him that my instrument was out of tune and that before I could go on playing I should have to tune it. In a great state of agitation, he hissed into my ear, "Cela ne fait rien; allez toujours."

Fortunately, it was not long after this that the Sultan smiled at Auer and gave him permission to withdraw, and subsequently he presented him with a Turkish order and a small leather bag containing one hundred Turkish pounds in gold.

An order for a million copies of their six-penny reprints of standard works such as "Oliver Twist" and "Robinson Crusoe," in the "Readers' Library" of the Readers' Library Publishing Company, has been received from Messrs. F. W. Woolworth. Is this a record for a single order for books from one firm?

A MAHJONGG LAMENT

Sing a song of Mahjongg—dragons green and white—
Four crazy women playing day and night
Bridge I like but Mahjongg I like far the best
Though my luck is rotten and my chips go West

I collect the East Wind, Circles or Bamboos
Characters and "Goofies" yet I always lose.
When I try for "No" Score some one has all "Cracks"
Making me so angry I could bite the racks.

If I want my own Wind someone pungs it first
Or they chow the rice bird when for it I thirst and
When I've got a good hand of dragons and a Kong
Someone tripes upon my left and promptly goes Mahjongg.

TENNIS TEAS

Why Men Love Mixed Doubles

BY ELIZABETH PEPYS.

Scene, a large shady verandah looking out upon a garden, in the centre of which are two tennis courts filled with players. There are perhaps eight people on the verandah, most of them industriously tucking away a highly superior tea. Enter Sybil Hillier, voguishly attired in a smart blouse of white worsted darned on heavy net, embroidered in red and black in near-Egyptian designs, a white flannel wrap-around skirt and the tiniest of white felt cloches. We believe she carries a tennis racket, but that is a mere detail.

In the ensuing greetings and introductions, Sybil, while murmuring polite banalities, unerringly selects the best-looking male and sinks into his chair with a look which starts him in the direction of a stool on which he seats himself at her side. Sybil continuing, "Yes, thanks, tea. It's such a comfort to feel that one is really entitled to tea when one is going in for strenuous exercise. I always allow myself at least a hundred extra calories when I'm golfing or riding. Really tennis ought to rate 150 extra, don't you think so? Yes, I'm sure you do by the sympathetic glance you cast at the buttered scones across the table. Could you? O thank you so much.

"Isn't it a treat to come to a tennis tea where people are actually playing. You always do? That's because you have decision of character. Of course you have. I can tell it from the way you eat a cream puff. It's not every man who who can appear so casual and yet have so complete a mastery of it. No, Mr. Considine, no indeed, I just say what I think, I'm so impulsive you know.

"You're not the Mr. Considine who won the finals last year? Not really? Yes, of course I remember you. It was a wonderful game, wasn't it? That's just like you silent sportsmen, but I think it was. I dote on tennis, simple dote on it, but I can't seem to find time to play. Isn't life positively galloping in Shanghai?

"Yes, I used to play a lot. Yes. O, not since I was in the school room. Last summer I was sailing so much, and summer before that it was polo. No, I wasn't exactly playing, but I was always on the club verandah.

"O, are they ready for another set? Why, we haven't had our ice-cream yet. You're going to play any way? O, well, of course I can have an ice later. No, I shan't mind waiting, thank you. No, no, I'm quite ready. It won't make you too conceited will it, if I tell you I'd rather play with you. You see though I used to play rather a crack game, one does get out of practice and I suppose there are new styles in tennis just as there are in tennis shoes. Don't you rather like these? They're strapped with real alligator.

"Do I stand here? How silly of me! You see I've not played before this year. No, no, I'd just as soon play as not. You can give me any suggestions and I'll carry them out. Just be frank in saying whether you'd rather have me play a smashing game or just place my balls so as to tire them out. And don't be afraid to criticize my style. I dare say you may be more in touch with the latest fads than I am.

"Our opponents look so business-like, don't they? I may be wrong, but I don't see why a girl can't dress attractively even if she is going in for sports. No, thank you, I don't think my skirt will be too long. Do you think buckskin or kid is smarter for tennis shoes this year?

"What? Are they ready? Certainly, partner. Oh, it is our turn to keep changing? Don't you think that's rather silly? Not that I mind the extra exercise but I should think the game would be just as good without it. Of course, if they're used to it, as you say. Yes. I'm quite ready.

"Sorry, partner. You see I thought that ball was going to go back to you, and then it didn't. You can't always depend on intuition, can you? Our game? Ready? I knew the game would come back to me as soon as I got a racket in my hand. We don't change this time? Of course not. What, their game already? Well, win and let win, is always my motto. My serve? Good! I always win on my serve. Try to place my second ball any way? I'm just fooling them now. You wait and see. What? Game? Do you think that score was right? Of course I never argue a point, but I don't see how it could have been their game.

"Another game? Come partner, we really must put our backs into it. That's better. Sorry! You might have hit that if I hadn't tried for it, mightn't you? I'm so impulsive. Do you remember the funny story they told about the semi-finals last year? Why, I wasn't ready for that ball; otherwise I should have returned it, of course. Is that quite fair? Of course I never argue, but—

"It's terribly hot, isn't it? Don't you like to stop between games? Yes, I suppose the others do want to play. Goodness knows any one could have had my place. I only played because the others insisted on it. That's ours? No? Well, I don't understand that, but I wouldn't dream of disputing.

"There are advantages to golf, though some players do push you right along as if they had a train to catch. And speaking of teas—Sorry! You should wait till I say ready. Set? Ours? No? Now what do you suppose put us off our game? Do you think this racket is right for me? My wrist is so small, though when I'm really in practice it's like steel.

"Now you'll have your ice-cream, Mr. Considine? O must you go? What a pity! Call me up any time you want to play singles. Yes, thank you, Mr. Grey. a large ice, please. It's been such a strenuous game!"

SHANGHAI TO NANKING

Y.W.C.A. Physical Training School Transfer.

By Abby Skaw Mayhew.

So much interest has been aroused in the announcement that the Y.W.C.A. Normal School of Physical Education and Hygiene is about to be incorporated with Ginling College, Nanking, as the department of Health Education and Recreation that Miss Abby Shaw Mayhew, the first director of the School, and now one of the advisers of the board of management has written for the "N.-C. D. N." the following history of the school and the reasons which make the change advisable.

In the early days of the development of the National Programme of the Young Women's Christian Association in China, the National Committee considered most carefully how it could start the work in health education and recreation so that it would put it on a permanent foundation, at the same time having it permeated with the spiritual ideal. One of the fundamental policies of the Association is to train leaders, and in accord with this ideal it was decided to establish a Normal Training School in Physical Education in which Chinese women could be trained to be teachers of their own people. After this decision was made it took three years before such a School was organized and the first class was graduated in 1918.

The Association felt that in establishing the Normal School of Physical Education and Hygiene it was doing a piece of pioneer work distinctly in its province, since no other organization was meeting the need and since there was a real demand on the part of the Chinese, especially from the Government Normal School, for this training. This School endeavoured from the first to give its students sufficient knowledge of the body to teach intelligently all forms of exercise and athletics with the aim of producing health and energy,—physical, mental and spiritual. So for six years classes of young women have been sent out from the School to teach in many of the largest and most important of the Girls Government Schools and in the Mission High Schools.

Since 1920 the School has been housed in buildings of its own adequate to the course being given at present and to the number who were able to meet the entrance requirements. Gradually the standard of the School has been raised, for the young women went out to fill difficult positions which required the best training and the broadest knowledge of the theory of the subject. The Y.W.C.A. committee for the school realized that in raising the standard of entrance and the quality of the course that of necessity, many who were to be teachers in the primary and intermediate grades were shut out from such an education. However the end seemed to justify this course since it was necessary in China, as it has been in other countries, to standardize physical education and place it on a par with other forms of education. For the sake of the future of this professon, a School established to train teachers must set the highest standard. And yet with all of this effort the Directors of the School felt that the time had come to enlarge the scope of the training and the equipment to make possible better courses in hygiene and better education in the fundamental sciences.

No Collegiate Course in Physical Education.

In the same year that this Normal School was opened, another important opportunity for women was offered to China. Ginling College was established giving to women a full College course. Gradually through these nine years a change of ideal has taken place so that girls who were once satisfied with going to Normal Schools or taking a two year course in physical education, are demanding a higher education. This was brought home to the Y.W.C.A. Committee when they discovered that out of the 80 graduates of the Y.W.C.A. Normal School, 12 are now attending Colleges, having stopped their professional work in order to get more education. Since no College for women in China offers a major in physical education and hygiene these girls take up other lines of study and are lost to the profession. Therefore, the Committe has seen the growing demand for a general higher education as a background to this professional work and life.

As it is not the province of the Young Women's Christian Association to do college work or to duplicate work which other organizations are doing, the only course open seemed to be the union with some College. After a careful study of the Colleges in China and conferences with several institutions the Committee of the Association and the Board of Control of Ginling College met with the result that the school becomes the Department of Health Education and Recreation in the College and the Association becomes a contributing member of that College. And as in other instances the Association having done a piece of pioneer work and having brought that work to a place where it could be better done through another agency, is glad to turn it over and help in a union work.

Y.W.C.A. Still Carrying on Health Education.

However, this highest form of education for training leaders of leaders is only one phase of the problem of introducing health ideals and recreation into the schools and homes and communities of China and the National Committee realizes this very fully. The National Secretary of Health Education and Recreation has many plans in her mind for the establishment of playgrounds and the furthering of the play movement and for the teaching of health in the lower schools, in the homes and community life; and with the cooperation of the Provincial Educational Boards and the Mission Educational Associations and other agencies who are seing the need, she feels that a far-reaching movement can be launched.

So while it seems that the Y.W.C.A. is losing a very important piece of work and means of service in passing the School on, it is only making possible a far more adequate trained leadership which China so much needs at the present time. At the same time the National Committee of the Association is fully aware of the great field still untouched which it hopes and plans to enter.

HOME HUMOURS

A Dry Tongue.

Two Scots were on a journey on a very hot summer day.

"Have ye got ony food wi' ye, Thamas?" asked one.

"Ay, a bottle o' beer. What have you, Jock?"

"Ou, a dry tongue."

"Guid! Then we'll gae halves wi' our proveesions."

The beer was divided and drunk.

"Noo for that dry tongue o' yours, Jock," said Thamas.

"Man," replied Jock, "it's no' dry noo!"

Peculiar?

Respectable Citizen: "Yes, I'm just taking my boy to the British Museum."

Perfect Ass: "Great Scott! Is that so? What is there peculiar about him?"

Sorrows of Parting

"Sistah Smith, I's sorry, but I needs must depaht."

"Oh, Mr. Johnsing—needs you must?"

Food.

Doctor (to patient's wife): "What you want to do is to feed him up."

Patient: "She's done that, doctor; she's done that."

Quite Likely.

Gladys (meaningly): "It's a good thing we can't see ourselves as others see us."

Softleigh: "You're right. I know, for my part I should grow beastly conceited, don't you know."

THE HOME CATERER

Hired Help for Harassed Hostesses

Hasting the other day to a neighbouring town to lend a friendly hand with the preparations for a coming-of-age party, I was surprised to find a smiling hostess meeting me on the platform with apparently unlimited leisure at her disposal. Lunch was served as usual in the dining-room instead of snatched, standing wherever one could find a corner to lay a plate; and neither in pantry nor kitchen was there the faintest sign of the usual orgy of sandwich-making that leaves the mistress of the house and willing friends with backs too sore to enjoy the festivities when they begin. As this particular paterfamilias rigidly sets his face against outside entertaining or the bleak, disappointing brilliance of a restaurant-purveyed supper, I thought the whole family had taken leave of their senses until the "find" was explained to me. This consists of an up-to-date young, middle-aged lady who, having little scope for exercising her great catering talent in her own life, places this, for a consideration, at the service of her acquaintances.

Stage I.—The date being fixed, Mamma spends an hour with the friendly caterer and leaves her with copious notes of the decisions arrived at.

Stage II.—On the auspicious day this "good-fairy-for-a-consideration" arrives two hours before the guests with a motor van containing everything practically ready for laying on the table, and within an hour she has departed with just a word of definite instruction to the maids or helpers as to the very few last minute preparations necessary.

Stage III.—Paterfamilias pays.

Result—a real old-fashioned party with home-made food of your own choice at just what it costs, plus a small profit, instead of the wasteful so-much-a-head system, for which you never feel you get full value.

THE SWEET YOUNG THING'S SUIT

At the first interview the client explains the nature of the entertainment, the number and average age of the guests, and gives an indication of how much may be spent. The caterer then advises whether to have set-down supper, running buffet, or both, what to include (i.e., with or without ices, claret-cup, sweets, etc.), and takes the greatest difficulty of all from the hostess's shoulders by telling from her experience exactly how many cakes, sandwiches, etc., will be required. The variety of sandwiches, cakes (home-baked and bought), and puddings is then agreed upon, china and cutlery discussed, and a list made of the supplies of these the caterer will bring with her. On the evening of the party the tables are arranged with cloths and decorations placed, before she arrives (for chairs and tables are not supplied, but only the names and prices of firms who will send them), and the hostess will probably enjoy helping to lay out the goodies under the expert's direction, gaining many a hint in the process, from the turning out of jellies to the saving of steps in serving. On the latter head, indeed, the caterer's advice is invaluable. She views your resources and then propounds just the best way of waiting the tables, keeping supplies of tea and coffee fresh, washing dishes between, and generally avoiding the muddle that the amateur buffet is apt to create.

A Part-Time Occupation.

Can you imagine a more delightful spare-time occupation for the clever girl who has always been at home and who finds time hang heavily on her hands as the family grows up and scatters. Her stock-in-trade need not be large—three or four dozen cups and saucers, tumblers, pudding plates, ice plates, tea spoons, dessert spoons and forks, a dozen each of sugar and creams, crystal jugs, trifle dishes, dividing spoons, plates for cakes and sandwiches, a couple of urns or boilers for tea and coffee, and of ewers for stocking home-made lemonade and "cup." If she is willing to take on a larger job she can undertake to superintend the buffet during the evening also.

THE BOLSHEVIK IDEA OF MAKING A GOOD IMPRESSION IN CHINA

Contrary to Moscow's belief, M. Trotzky's message of applause to the soldier Li, who is being tried on a charge of assaulting Mr. Campbell on the Peking City Wall, was very coldly received in Peking

NEW NORTHERN MOVE ON DR. SUN

A Move from Swatow: Fighting Reported on the East River Kiangsi Reinforcements

Peking, June 20.

Consular telegrams from Swatow report important moves on the part of troops hostile to Dr. Sun Yat-sen and apparently working out the Northern plan.

The telegrams say that fighting is in progress in the East River district near Waichow between General Yeh Chu's and General Yung Chi-ming's forces. The latter are mostly Yunnanese supporting Dr. Sun.

General Chen Chiung-ming is reported to have left Swatow for Waichow, apparently with the intention of supporting General Yeh, while General Lin Hu, from Laolung, is endeavouring to link up with General Yeh, and Southern Fukien reinforcements have been ordered to proceed to the East River. General Hung Chow-lin is also on his way to the East River.

Peking recently appointed General Yeh Civil Governor of Kuangtung and General Lin Tuli of Kuangtung.

According to reports reaching Swatow, Marshal Wu Pei-fu has ordered General Tung Shih-sheng to leave Hunan and General Fang Peng-jen to move out of southern Kiangsi in order to support General Chen. Thus it appears that the threat against Canton has begun to materialise.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

GEN. YANG SEN'S NEW APPOINTMENT

Chêngtu, June 9.

Gen. Yang Sen, acting Civil Governor of Chêngtu, has announced his resignation and has taken the title of "Tuli." It is said that he has done this at the instance of Marshal Wu Pei-fu, who has appointed Gen. Teng Hsi-hou to be Civil Governor. The latter is expected to arrive from Chungking shortly. Gen. Yang Sen's office of "Tuli" is described as "Director of Military Affairs and Reconstruction."—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE RUSSIAN ISSUE OF CHINESE 1913 LOAN

Combination of Holders to Press for Recognition: Britain and U. S. Assisting

London, June 20.

A committee has been formed to represent the holders of the Russian portion of the Chinese 1913 Reorganization Loan, whose bonds are at present unrecognized by the Chinese Government.

The "Times" City Correspondent says that the committee has the support of the British and American Governments, who are inviting China to submit the matter to the Hague.—Reuter.

PEACE NEGOTIATIONS IN KUANGTUNG

Terms on Which It is Reported Dr. Sun Would Make Peace with General Chen

A Hongkong telegram to the "Shanghai Journal of Commerce" gives the rumoured terms of peace as arranged between representatives of Dr. Sun Yat-sen and Chen Chiung-ming at Hongkong as containing the following five conditions:—

1. The union army of Yunnan, Kuangsi, Hunan and Kiangsi and the Forces of Chen shall actually participate in the punitive expedition against the North, subject to the orders of Dr. Sun.

2. Chen Chiung-ming shall tender Dr. Sun an apology, when the latter shall circularize a telegram, accepting his apology and declaring the restoration of peace.

3. The regions east of Waichow shall be occupied by Chen's forces and places west of Waichow by the Union Army.

4. The military governor of Kuangtung shall be appointed by Dr. Sun, who will, conjointly with the Governor, appoint all superior officers and officials in the Chao-Mei circuit.

5. The Peace Pact shall be guaranteed by Tuan Chi-jui and Lu Yung-hsiang.

THE ABOLITION OF THE TAOYIN

To Take Effect on July 1: Grades of Office in Local Administration

SIMPLIFIED SYSTEM OF LOCAL GOVERNMENT

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Peking, June 22.

In the permanent Constitution China abolished the office of Taoyin, or circuit intendant, and thus, eliminated all intermediate territorial offices in the local government of the country between Governor and Magistrate. Now it is announced that the abolition of the Taoyin will come into effect on July 1.

Formerly, there were three grades of districts in China's system of local government, hsien, chow, and fu, in an ascending scale. Then came the tao, and finally the province. With the establishment of the republic, all the districts were converted into hsiens. Foreigners, however, cling to the designations fu and chow with the same tenacity as they cling to the tael. How many people know that there is really no such place as Yunnanfu, Tsinanfu, or Hangchow; that these names according to the new system of nomenclature are Kunming, Licheng, and Hanghsien. Tao now goes the same way as fu and chow, showing that China is simplifying—officially, at least—her system of local government, and dispensing with the complicated machinery that has developed since the Ming dynasty.

The tao dates from the Tang dynasty (618-906), but in its modern form is traced to the Ming dynasty (1368-1643). During the latter part of the Ming dynasty, the country was divided into 13 provinces, later to develop into the Manchu model of 18 provinces. Each province used to be administered by one or two pu-chen-shih, who looked after civil and financial affairs, and an an-cha-shih, who was concerned with judicial affairs. As time went on, it was realized that the provinces were too large to enable these officials adequately to fulfil their duties from the provincial capital. It was obviously impossible to expect them to maintain personal touch with each of their districts. Therefore, assistants were appointed who were each to look after the affairs of a section of the province which was called tao. The sections created by the pu-chen-shih and the an-cha-shih were not necessarily the same, but were marked out by the officials without regard for each other's convenience. As, however, their functions did not conflict, there was really no need for uniformity.

The Early Tao's.

The tao's under the an-cha-shih were called feng-hsun-tao, which has almost the same meaning as circuit court. The office-holder was called an-cha-feng-shih. There were 41 taos in this system, and they were created as early as the first part of the Ming dynasty.

The assistants of the pu-chen-shih administered what were known as feng-shou-tao, or administrative sections. But the creation of assistants did not stop with this division of administration. There were tu-liang-tao's for facilitating the supervision of the transportation of rice and sometimes money to Peking. Special circuits were established in Kiangsi and Shensi for the supervision of registration records. Salt taotais looked after the salt monopoly in certain groups of districts, river taotais took care of river conservancy in certain sections of the country, education and mail route taotais sprang into existence, and so on. For all special matters concerning sections smaller than a province and larger than a fu, a special taotais was created. In this way China's local bureaucracy was created, each of the officers having some territorial significance, although really actual administration was vested in the magistrates of the fu, chow, and hsien, and the assistants who administered the tao's, and the provincial governors. It is not difficult to appreciate that this rapid creation of offices involved a more rapid creation of office-holders and expectant office-holders. By the end of the Manchu dynasty, the country was glutted with expectant taotais, whose only claim to notice was their official rank. They were petty kings without countries.

Taotai and Taoyin.

This complicated system officially came to an end when the Republic was founded, and the modern taoyin, the republican version of taotai (which means "His Excellency of the Circuit") became just the administrator of a section of the province. The abolition of this office, of course, does not mean that every taoyin will be "axed on July 1; that depends on the grace of the provincial authorities. But whereas the taoyin was formerly a Government official with an official rank, now if he is retained in that office by some perverse province, he will simply be an employee in the provincial government service, whose appointment is a violation of the Constitution. It is extremely doubtful whether any present-day taoyin contemplates his retirement with any degree of alarm, for China's capacity for absorbing limpets is well-nigh unmatched. So is her system of social responsibility, and these two factors are bound to combine to find a job for the dispossessed official, who therefore will not require our tears on the date of his official weeding-out.

Reversion to Ming Model.

After that date China will have reverted to the Ming model, so far as the lack of territorial connexion between province and district is concerned. In view of the area of the provinces and the higher degree of administration required nowadays, this may seem an impossible situation; but when one thinks of the growing territorialization of China's military commands, the increase of bureau machinery in regard to special phases of administrative work, and the development of provincial assemblies, there is no danger of China being less administered than before.

NEW ISSUE OF BONDS IN CANTON

To Be Released by Daily Drawings: Mint Again in Full Operation

From a Correspondent.

Canton, June 10.

The Canton Government Mint, in full operation again since June 6, is turning out many new 20-cent subsidiary coin pieces bearing the date of the 13th Year of the Republic. According to a recent official analysis, held in its plant in Canton in the presence of representatives of trade guilds and other public organizations, the 10 coins taken at random and examined gave a fineness of 70 and 17/100 per cent., and the public appeared satisfied, and the requirement was only 70 per cent. fine.

The Department of Finance of the General Headquarters of Dr. Sun Yat-sen in Canton is issuing military bonds dated June 1, 1924, to the amount of $240.000, Canton currency, in $100 and $50 denominations, bearing a monthly interest of 12 per cent. These military bonds will be redeemed within three months beginning July 1, 1924, by daily drawings. The Secretary of Finance to Dr. Sun will set aside certain proceeds from the stamp tax, the profit from the Canton Government Mint, and the fees to be collected from title deeds examination for the payment of principal and interests of these short-term military bonds. The newly organized Yu Kwong Native Bank in Canton will undertake the floating of the bonds and payment of principal and interest when due. These bonds may be used for payment of public revenue and accepted as legal tender in Kuangtung.

Peking, June 23.—President Tsao rejected Premier Sun's application for leave, and it is expected that Premier Sun and Minister of Finance Wang will both attend the meeting of the Cabinet to-morrow.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

ALLOCATION OF THE BOXER INDEMNITY

Anglo-Chinese Education Scheme as Proposed by Dr. Tsai Yuan-pei

An interesting memorandum with regard to the allocation of the Boxer Indemnity due to Great Britain has been prepared by Dr. Tsai Yuan-pei, Chancellor of the National University of Peking, and has been submitted to the Chinese Association for the Promotion of Education in London. The main points of the memorandum follow:—

I.—The principal portion of the fund is to be utilized for the establishment of a great and inspiring Science Institute, to consist of two departments: the one to contain machinery, models and diagrams, illustrating the different stages of development of the physical and chemical sciences, and illustrating the different stages of the evolutionary processes of the industrial arts, the other to contain natural history specimens, showing the genus and species of flora and fauna, leading up to anthropology.

II.—A portion to be utilized for subsidizing any well-known Universities or Technical Colleges in China for the express purpose of starting or extending certain special faculties or departments of sciences and technology, such as biology, textiles, engineering, chemistry, medicine, agriculture and forestry, etc.

III.—A portion to be utilized for establishing within some of our national Universities facilities for the study of the sciences, arts and literature of Great Britain. Foundation funds will be provided for (1) professorships, (2) purchase of English books on those subjects and works of art, and (3) scholarships for research students.

IV.—A portion to be utilized as a foundation fund for sending teachers and graduates of the Universities and Technical Colleges in China to the Universities and Technical Colleges in Great Britain.

V.—A small portion to be utilized for sending scholars from Great Britain to China to study Chinese literature and philosophy, etc.

VI.—A small portion to be utilized for purchasing Chinese objects of art to be exhibited in museums of Great Britain on condition that the former unworthy ones be removed.

VII.—A portion to be utilized for the exchange of professors between Great Britain and China.

The remission of the Boxer Indemnity Fund by any nation to China is generally appreciated by her people as an act of generous good-will to their country. Her educationalists propose, by the carrying out of the above-mentioned proposals, especially the first one, to have, thereby, a permanent memorial of the great friendly deed of Great Britain. It will be set up in order to create a spirit of reverence for science and industrial arts, becoming, when properly equipped with laboratories and other facilities, a great centre of research and reference.

What I have presented is not merely my personal view, but also represents a consensus of opinion in China. Such opinion, I am confident, will be taken carefully into consideration by all who are interested in this question.

TROTSKY'S INSULT TO CHINA

Sympathy Not Appreciated: How Moscow Tries to Excite Bad Feeling by Falsehoods

From Our Own Correspondent.

Peking, June 20.

Extraordinary as are Trotsky's repeated references to the soldier Li, they are no whit more extraordinary than the dispatches which are sent from Peking to Moscow dealing with the reception of those references in Peking. Here is a translation of a telegram sent from Peking on May 19 and published by the "Isvestia" on May 21: "The speech of Comrade Trotsky concerning the incident of the Chinese soldier, which was published by all the papers, created a strong impression in Peking. The foreign enemies of the Union strongly critieized Comrade Trotsky, declaring that he is instigating the Chinese people against the foreigners; but Chinese public opinion is very much satisfied with the speech."

The italics are not the "Isvestia's," but there is no doubt that this sentence was italicized in the mind of the Moscow warlord. And, judging by the latest reference, it evidently accomplished its purpose of "egging him on." He thought he had made a good impression with the Chinese, and all canons of taste seem to have been subjugated to that end in Moscow nowadays.

The writer took the trouble to turn up the Peking papers for evidence of the satisfaction noted by the Peking correspondent of the "Isvestia" but found only one comment on the Trotsky outburst. That was the "Yi Shih Pao," which in a well-reasoned editorial, labelled the speech both "false and insulting," comment which was borne out in sundry conversations which the writer had at the time with several Chinese of his acquaintance. If the "Isvestia" correspondent deemed that opinion an expression of satisfaction with his comrade Trotsky's speech, then he must have a peculiarly inverted sense of the value of words. The truth is that the sympathy that emanates from time is indeed insulting to China's intelligentsia, to whom the acts of the half-crazed soldier are as alien as the brotherly feeling of Mr. Trotsky.

JAPAN AND THE C.-E. RAILWAY

Further Note to Waichiaopu As to Acquired Rights and Interests

Peking, June 23.

A further Japanese Note, sent to the Waichiaopu on June 21 on the subject of the Chinese Eastern Railway, explains with regard to the Note of June 6 that the "reservation," mentioned in the Waichiaopu's reply of June 16, is a matter of course, hardly calling for a specific declaration by Japan. Japan, however, deemed it advisable to invite the attention of the Chinese Government to that phase of the matter in order to avoid unnecessary difficulties arising in the future.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Note.—The Japanese reservation referred to was that Japan's acquired rights and interests in the Chinese Eastern Railway should not be affected by the Sino-German Agreement. The Waichiaopu declined to admit this reservation, insofar as it implied interference by Japan in the negotiations between China and Russia.—Reuter.

RUSSIAN CONSULATE IN SHANGHAI

The Question of Handing Over to Soviet for Chinese Decision Only

Peking, June 24.

It appears that the Commissioner for Foreign Affairs at Shanghai recently approached the Consular Body regarding the handing over to the Soviet of the Russian Consulate at Shanghai. The Consular Body duly reported the matter to the Diplomatic Corps.

It is understood that neither the Diplomatic Corps nor the Consular Body make any objection whatsoever.

The former Russian Consulate has recently been used as the Bureau for Russian Affairs and is in the custody of the Chinese Commissioner, and therefore the question of handing it over rests with the Chinese.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

SINKIANG AND SOVIET

Proposed Commercial Agreement

Peking, June 22.

According to unofficial reports, the Cabinet yesterday discussed a further communication from Gen. Yang Tseng-hsin, Tuchun of Sinkiang, requesting the Central Government to sanction a commercial agreement between Sinkiang and Soviet Russia. Although Gen. Yang says that the proposed agreement would deal only with local commercial questions, it is not expected that the Government will give approval.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

ANKING MINT DEFIES ALL CONTROL

Huge Consignment of Debased 20 Cent Pieces for Shanghai?

The Kiangsu Association, it is reported, has informed the Shanghai General Chamber of Commerce that the Anking Mint, in addition to continuing to mint bad dollars, has since June 14 been making 20-cent Kuangtung coins containing only 40 per cent. of silver, a shipment of which is being sent to Shanghai.

Genuine Kuangtung 20-cent pieces, the Kiangsu Association points out, contain 60 per cent. silver, and the Association alleges that the Mint has just shipped 40 cases, each containing 11,000 20-cent pieces, in the str. Chensu to a spot near Nanking, to be afterwards consigned to Shanghai by train. Among the 40 cases are three filled with big dollars for the purpose of satisfying Customs examiners.

At the request of the Hangchow Chamber of Commerce and with the sanction of Tupan Lu Yung-hsiang and Governor Chang, the Hangchow Mint has commenced coining 10-cent pieces, the scarcity of which has caused much inconvenience to everyone. The new coins will probably be put on the market some time next month.

On the face of this coin, two national flags crossing each other will appear in the centre. Chinese characters denoting that the coin "is made in the Province of Chêkiang in the 13th Year of the Republic" will run around its border. On the obverse side. "10 cents Silver Coin" in Chinese will occupy the centre with corresponding English words on the border. The standard fineness fixed by the Government, namely 65 per cent. silver and 35 per cent. copper will be adhered to. It should be understood that this coin is not intended to substitute the subsidiary currency of the same denomination, 10 pieces of which shall be accepted as a big dollar, as mentioned in the National Currency Law, but to be taken at the same market value as the old 10-cent of other small silver coins now in circulation.

Chinese Bank Boycott

According to the Chinese Press, the Chinese Banking Association and the Native Banks' Guild have passed a resolution to the effect that their members shall not purchase bullion silver for the Anking (capital of Anhui) Mint. They consider this is the only effective way to prevent the coining of more dollars of an inferior quality.

The Ministry of Finance, in a telegram dated June 20, informed the two Associations that an official investgator had been appointed to proceed to Anhui to find out facts; that the matter would be dealt with after a report had been received; and that the Shuiwuchu had been asked to instruct all the Customs stations to detain all materials, including silver and copper, as well as coins, shipped to and from the said Mint on and after June 22, 1924, until further orders.

THE CIVIL WARFARE IN KUANGSI

An Armistice Proclaimed: A General Always Ready to Change Sides

Peking, June 21.

According to Chinese reports, an armistice between Generals Shen Hung-ying and Lu Yung-ting has been proclaimed. Gen. Liu is still at Kueilin and Gen. Shen has never succeeded in capturing the city. Gen. Ma Chi (formerly Chief of Staff of Gen. Lu Yung-ting) is now at Chuanchow, Kuangsi, and is endeavouring to bring about peace between the two rivals in power in Kuangsi. Gen. Ma suggests that Gen. Shen Hung-ying should be sent to Kuangtung to join in the attack on Canton. Gen. Shen has changed sides so frequently that it is taken for granted that he would again turn on Dr. Sun Yat-sen if it were made worth his while.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

M. Borodin, Soviet Envoy in Canton, returned to Canton on June 19.

MUKDEN AND THE SINO-RUSSIAN PACT

Fengtien Assembly Objecting to Agreements Made Without Its Knowledge

Peking, June 18.

The Fengtien Provincial Assembly and other public bodies of the three Eastern Provinces have sent out a circular telegram in regard to the Sino-Russian Agreement.

They state that they have no special objection to China's resumption of formal relations with Russia, but they are constrained to raise objection to the fact that Russia made an agreement with the Peking Government, which has no knowledge of the actual condition of Manchuria.

The telegram goes on to declare that they will never recognize any treaties or agreements which have been concluded by the Peking Government since May 1, 1911, and they feel sure that this unanimous opinion of the public in the three Eastern provinces will not be disregarded by Marshal Chang Tso-lin.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Clear Warning from Washington

Washington, June 21.

The State Department declares that, while it at present does not contemplate further steps in connexion with the question of the control of the Chinese Eastern Railway, the Peking Government is under clear obligations, dated prior to the Washington Conference, and will be held responsible for the protection of interests other than their own.—Reuter.

CONTROL OF THE TIBETAN BORDER

Dispossessed Commissioner Appealing in Person to Wu Pei-fu

Chêngtu, June 4.

General Chen Hsia-linge, the Tibetan Border Defence Commissioner, has definitely resigned and is reported to be proceeding to Peking to lay his case personally before Marshal Wu Pei-fu.

For some months he has been threatened from the east by General Liu I-chiu, and his troops have become disaffected owing to non-payment of arrears of wages. It is not yet clear what has become of these troops, though they are reported to have gone over to General Lan Tsin-chih, an old friend of General Liu I-chiu.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

RENDITION OF WEIHAIWEI AND MIXED COURT

Representations from Chinese Chambers of Commerce

Peking, June 22.

The Shantung Chinese Chamber of Commerce has telegraphed to the Government urging that the Sino-British negotiations for the restoration of Weihaiwei should be resumed as soon as possible.

The Shanghai Chinese General Chamber of Commerce has again telegraphed to the Government urging that it should hasten rendition of the Shanghai Mixed Court.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

MR. WANG KO-MING'S RESIGNATION

Refused by the President

Peking, June 20.

Mr. Wang Ko-ming's resignation was sent back to him by the President yesterday afternoon. It was carried by Mr. Wang Yu-chi, Chief Secretary of the Presidency, who informed Mr. Wang that the President declined to accept the resignation.

Further efforts are being made to-day to induce the Premier to resume his duties to-morrow, but the outcome is still doubtful.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, June 23.—The Cabinet Ministers and the higher officials of the Waichiaopu were present at an official luncheon given by Dr. Koo to the Soviet Representative to-day.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

BRITAIN AND THE INDEMNITY

June 23.

THE telegram which we published on Wednesday reporting that the House of Commons had passed the second reading of the bill providing for the remission of the surplus of the Boxer indemnity due from China recalls unhappy memories of the fateful year 1900. It is twenty-four years since the Boxer madness swept over China and those who have personal recollections of the tragic events of that time are an annually diminishing number. The chief actors in those dreadful scenes have, for the most part, passed to their reward and though there are still in China a very few who bear on their bodies scars, that are grim reminders of the horrors they suffered, to the most of us "the Boxer year" is of only academic interest. It is, perhaps, a tribute to our oft reviled human nature that the passions and animosities that were so deeply engraved in the hearts of those who endured the perils or shared in the anxieties of those dark days have gradually faded into a remembrance that is without bitterness. The chief reason for this, doubtless, is that we know now that the Chinese people suffered much more from the cataclysm than did foreigners. The Chinese Government of that day was truly guilty of one of the greatest crimes over plotted against humanity and amongst the people there were many who were but too ready to abet it in its evil designs. But there were also many, and those we are happy to believe were much the larger number, who had no sympathy with the bloodthirsty schemes of the Empress Dowager and her quondam advisers. As is usual, in such warfare, the innocent inhabitants of the route traversed by the avenging armies of the Allies were caught between the upper and nether millstones of the combatant troops and suffered from excesses of both forces. It is, we believe, the realization of this fact that has all but effaced the resentment so keenly felt at the time when the legations were besieged and news of the murder of foreigners in exposed situations was being chronicled in our columns every day. And so, with amazing ease, the bill for the remission of the balance of the indemnity has been passed by the House of Commons with hardly a dissentient voice.

We note with a good deal of pleasure that the bill was passed with no restrictions attached. There are a good many questions outstanding between the Governments of China and Great Britain and there was some attempt made to tack on to the bill a condition that certain of these questions should be settled in a manner satisfactory to us before the remission of the indemnity was carried into effect. The Government, very properly, declined to tarnish a good action by a selfish proviso. If the thing was worth doing this is the way it should be done; in a free and generous manner without any taint of bargaining. It has been said that some of the nations who claimed indemnities in 1900 asked and received much larger sums than they were actually entitled to. We know nothing of the truth or otherwise of these reports. They do not concern us and we do not care to discuss them. But we will emphasize that the claim put in by Great Britain for damages caused by the Boxer rising was based on a rigidly proven statement of actual losses sustained. We are not giving to China that which has cost us nothing but, as an act of sincere good-will, we are renouncing money to which we have an indefeasible moral, as well as legal, right. Doubtless there are those who will tell us that we are acting foolishly and will get nothing in return for our generosity. And to those we reply that they are possibly right, but we reserve to ourselves the privilege of being foolish now and then and, moreover, we have a sub-conscious feeling that the luxury of being generous is sometimes its own reward.

We have said that the remission of the indemnity was unconditional, yet it has this qualification attached to it that the money is to be used for educational purposes and in this limitation, we are assured, China most heartily concurs. There are many good causes to which the money, or part of it, might have been devoted. There are roads to make, bridges to build, railways to construct and many other schemes. But for these China is well able to find funds if she will but set her financial house in order. The American indemnity fund was devoted to the higher education of Chinese students and it has been a most fruitful investment. We could wish that the British indemnity was ear-marked for the wider provision of elementary education for the toiling millions. There is a National Phonetis Script the adoption of which, it is said, would so simplify education, by the elimination of the cumbrous character from elementary schools, that a working knowledge of books could be obtained in a fraction of the time now wasted in studying the difficult ideographs of the written language. An enthusiastic Chinese Y.M.C.A. Secretary, has devised a short cut to literacy through the acquisition of one thousand common characters. This summer hundreds of students will devote their vacation to teaching this system, without salary or hope of reward, to thousands of illiterate men, women and boys in many cities and villages. The eagerness of the toilers to study in the short hour there is left between the end of their darg, which lasts from dawn to dark of a summer day, and the time for sleep is pathetic. Perhaps something could be done with this fund to promote and encourage such movements for popular education. At any rate we sincerely hope the money will be used so as to bring the greatest possible amount of enlightenment to the greatest possible number rather than in over educating a favoured few.

THE SINO-RUSSIAN AGREEMENT

June 24.

THE full text of the Sino-Russian agreement received last week contains, so far as we can see, no essential difference from the terms as already published in summarized form. But it does not at all lessen the difficulties at once visible when the outlines of the agreement were first made known. One is struck at the outset by the joint declaration that "the Chinese Eastern Railway is a purely commercial enterprise." Presumably this is to pave the way for the abolition of the old railway area. But it makes all the more curious the large share in the management of the railway allotted to the Soviet, who get the right to appoint half the Board of Directors, three auditors out of five and the manager. As our Peking correspondent pointed out the other day, this is giving away China's sovereign rights with a vengeance. The length and elaboration of the clauses referring to the C. E. R. suggest that both parties realized there was likely to be trouble over this part of the agreement and tried to guard against it beforehand. And trouble has indeed come, from France who is financially interested in the railway, from America who claims a debt of G.$5,000,000 from it, and above all from Chang Tso-lin, through whose dominions it runs.

Another very curious declaration is found in connexion with the buildings and landed property of the Russian Orthodox Mission: "belonging as it does to the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics." Clearly Mr. Karakhan got this phrase put in in imperfect understanding by Dr. Wellington Koo of the true position. This land and buildings never belonged to the Russian Government even in Imperial days and certainly does not belong to the U. S. S. R. If it belongs to any corporate body, it belongs to the Orthodox Russian Mission, just like the land and buildings owned by other missions in China. In point of fact, this property in the Shanghai area stands in the name of a private individual and is registered in a foreign Consulate. In the next clause we read that "the Government of the Republic of China will at once take measures with a view to guarding all the said buildings and clearing them from all the persons now living there." The italics are ours. Again Dr. Wellington Koo must have given his assent in ignorance of what he was undertaking. On all the Russian Church property in China there must be thousands of refugees, living and being maintained by the Mission. If China is going to clear them all out, she must in common justice provide for them elsewhere. And this would be to impose on her an immense burden and responsibility which M. Karakhan would have very little right to put upon her, least of all in furtherance of a claim on property to which the U. S. S. R. have no title whatever.

This question of Russian Church property and the refugees whom it is supporting naturally leads on to that of the refugees generally in Shanghai. It may be recalled that after China broke off relations with Prince Koudacheff on September 23, 1920, and announced her intention of taking all Russians in China under her wing, the position of Russian citizens in Shanghai at once created a difficulty owing to the peculiar status of the Settlements and the inability of Chinese officials to function therein. Largely through the co-operation of the late Sir Everard Fraser and, it is but just to say, by the tact of Mr. Grosse, an arrangement was concluded in the following March whereby the old Russian Consulate carried on as a Bureau of Russian Affairs, with Mr. Grosse immediately in charge but as Assistant Commissioner, acting for the Chinese Commissioner. It is paying no undeserved compliment to say that this arrangement has worked very well: no one, we feel sure, would admit this more willingly than the Chinese Commissioner himself. During the past three years many thousand Russians have registered at the Bureau—themselves, their marriages, the births of their children, their business. Now the Chinese papers have been saying that the Bureau is to be shut up forthwith and the building handed over to the U. S. S. R. We do not think this is correct; but if it were, it would be no more than what is required by the Sino-Russian agreement.

And in the circumstances, one would venture to urge that fair time should be allowed to the Bureau to wind up its affairs and put them in a condition in which they can smoothly be handed over to the successor in the building, whoever he may be. To shut up the Bureau forthwith cannot but cause confusion and inflict hardship on an immense number of innocent people. Most of them do not recognize and are not recognized by the Soviet, whose agents moreover will have no extra-territorial powers, and in consequence the position of the refugees becomes one of the greatest uncertainty. Who, for example, would give them passports if they wished to leave China for another country? Where will they get papers of any kind or for any purpose? In countries which have not recognized the Soviet, there are organizations which act as a go-between, between refugees and the Government of the country, and one cannot but think it would be a good plan if, in view of the peculiar standing of Shanghai, a similar organization were allowed to be formed here. But in any case the good work and multiplicity of interests covered by the Bureau during the past three years and, we would add, the truly excellent conduct of the refugees as a body, are good grounds for its being allowed a fixed period of some months at least in which to wind up its affairs. The fact that a conference is to be held between China and Russia in which to work out all arrangements under the treaty, gives plenty of excuse for such a small concession.

THE CHEQUERS AND THE RUHR

June 25.

"THE conversations revealed a common determination to overcome difficulties by means of continuous co-operation." So runs the official communiqué regarding the conversations between Mr. Ramsay MacDonald and M. Herriot at The Chequers during the week-end. And then a further statement from Paris: "Everything possible was done to create an atmosphere of sympathy and confidence;" and to Mr. MacDonald Paris also attributes the assurance that "in case of German defaults Germany will find herself face to face with Britain, France and Belgium united inflexibly as during the war." The public have come to feel a well founded distrust of all official communiqués during and especially since the war. How many conferences there have been between Great Britain and France on the subject of German Reparations, how often the same fair-sounding official reports have been issued, only to result in nothing done and the breach between the two countries widened yet more, it would be a waste of time to recall. But there is something in the tone of the reports of the latest interview between the British and French Premiers which revives confidence and inspires hope that at last the two nations are standing shoulder to shoulder and that this time Germany will not be able to drive a wedge between them. The prospect of friendly co-operation will indeed be welcome to the British people as, we feel sure, to the French. The old saying that "kissing goes by kindness" applies nowhere more truly than in the case of France. Mr. Ramsay MacDonald has been persona grata with the French people since his first fair and frank letter to M. Poincaré, after his accession to power.

It is, however, only fair to admit that the way to an understanding between the two Premiers has been immensely simplified by the report of the Dawes Commission. The details of that momentous document may well be recalled. The first of its recommendations is that a new issue bank, or the old Reichsbank reorganized, should be established in Germany, with a monopoly over the issue of paper currency properly secured on a gold reserve, partly held abroad, while all existing paper should be withdrawn. The control of the bank would be in the hands of a German president and a Board of seven Germans and seven foreigners, Allies and others. An elaborate schedule of the amounts that Germany would pay year by year is then set out, but the Commission was not empowered to state the total amount which Germany will have to pay. The German railways should be handed over for fifty years to an international company, with a capital of 26,000,000,000 gold marks, of which the Reparations Commission would hold 11,000,000,000 six per cent. debentures, giving an annual yield after the fourth year of 660,000,000 gold marks. As in the case of the bank, half the Board would be appointed by the Reparations Commission. Certain taxes would also be controlled by foreign commissioners. As regards payments in kind, the Commission represents that in order to avoid upsetting the foreign exchange market these should be paid for out of the monies accruing in Germany to the agent for reparation payments. Two essential parts of the scheme are, first, that Germany must recover her fiscal and economic rights over the Ruhr; without which the experts emphasize that their plans would be futile; secondly, that Germany should issue in the first year a foreign loan of 800,000,000 gold marks in order to enable her to stabilize her currency and to finance payments in kind during the time of her economic recovery. It is further to be noted that in the Commission's recommendations the Allies should make no call upon Germany's budget revenues for the next two years, payment of reparations being provided for out of the foreign loan just mentioned and revenue from railways. The experts calculate that by the end of 1928-1929 Germany's financial and economic situation will have returned to normal.

The scheme when published at the beginning of April had "a very good press" even in France. The provision that Germany must recover her fiscal and economic control over the Ruhr is perhaps the most dubious point. On the other hand, it is to be remembered that when first going into Germany France fully intended that her occupation of the Ruhr should only be an invisible military one; and that the extension of her hold over all the industrial life of the district was forced upon her by the policy of passive resistance actively pursued by the German Government. Nobody expects that the military occupation will cease until Germany has at least paid up the bulk of what she owes. On this point there is no difference whatever in the opinions of Frenchmen, whether they be Royalists, Republicans or Communists. But if France is convinced of the active support of Great Britain in the terms of Mr. Ramsay MacDonald's statement quoted above, and if Germany can assure the Allies that she is ready to accept the Dawes Report and carry it out honestly, we do not believe that Paris will make difficulties about the economic side of the occupation. There remains the question whether Germany can pay the amounts demanded of her. Undoubtedly she can. Almost simultaneously with the appearance of the Dawes Report came that of the Experts Committee, which had been inquiring into the flight of German capital abroad, which estimated that the amount of money sent out of Germany was no less than 2,000,000,000 gold marks, without counting the profits, amounting to some thousand more millions, which German banks had made by selling paper marks abroad while there was still anybody to buy. Some commentators at Home remarked, in connexion with the Dawes Report, that the payment of £125,000,000 annually would be a severe strain on any nation. Where they get this figure from is not quite clear; it does not appear to correspond with any sum mentioned by the Dawes Report. But accepting it as an average, there seems no reason why Germany should not deliver it. It is considerably less than a sixth part of what the British taxpayer annually finds.

SHANGHAI HARBOUR DEVELOPMENT

June 26.

It soon will be three years since the Committee of Consulting Engineers, composed of seven of the foremost and most experienced experts on port development and conservancy in the world, foregathered at Shanghai, at the instance of the Whangpoo Conservancy Board, to investigate and report on the best means to be adopted to render the approaches to this port suitable for the entry, and the harbour adequate to the reception, accommodation and despatch, of the largest class of vessel which was likely to come to Shanghai for many years. The Committee laboured on the question from October 15 till November 30, 1921, and during that period went thoroughly into the whole matter. Supplied with an immense amount of data and information which had painstakingly been collected, compiled and collated during a long period prior to their advent, the members of the Committee went carefully into every possible scheme for the improvement of the harbour and its approaches, and at the conclusion of their labours submitted a report which left no relevant aspect of the matter untouched, and which embodied in its recommendations provision for every reasonable eventuality in the development of Shanghai, not as one of the greatest ports of the East alone, but one of the greatest and most efficient in the world.

An outstanding feature of the Report was that the Committee devised an admirable, reasonable and workable scheme whereby no call at all would be made on the troubled finances at Peking for any of the works. The whole of the work recommended would be entirely self-supporting and "the position of the Government safeguarded throughout the Committee's proposed scheme of development and administration and no burden placed on the national exchequer." The Committee further pointed out that its technical proposals for immediate execution represented a very conservative project, the estimated cost of which was (and presumably still is) well within the capacity of the trade, and had the further and very great advantage of readily lending itself to future extensions if and when the requirements of that trade demanded more accommodation. If the recommendations were adopted, a new board in absorbing the present Whangpoo Conservancy Board would succeed in ownership to works and assets of considerable value. The improvement and deepening which have been carried out and maintained with so much success, the dredging plant and appliances, the workshops and in fact all the belongings of the Conservancy Board, representing an outlay during the period 1906-1921 of fourteen million taels, of which ten million could be said to be capital expenditure, would become the absolute property of the new Shanghai Harbour Board without any capital liability. It is unnecessary here again to go into the details of either the technical or financial schemes propounded, in regard to which the Committee pertinently pointed out that the raising of capital and general financial success were absolutely dependent on the constitution of the new Board being such that there were ample guarantees as to the policy and efficiency of that Board's operations. In this connexion, it is interesting to note that the Committee did not recommend any definite number to constitute the Board, or the proportion of Chinese Government officials to trade representatives, but recommended only that the Board should consist of Chinese officials (one of whom should be Chairman), representatives of shipping and trade in Shanghai, and also to a limited extent representatives of the municipalities.

The Report was, we understand, forwarded to Peking at the end of 1921 and that appears to be the last that has been heard of the matter by the public. In any country but China such a thing would be unbelievable, but even in China, with its penchant for procrastination, it is coming to seem more than strange. Allowing for the fact that China is one of the most conservative nations on earth and one which refuses ever to be hurried, and that a scheme of such magnitude cannot be cut and dried, passed, ratified and brought into operation in five minutes, it is amazing that a matter of such vital importance, affecting not only Shanghai but China as a whole, and concerning the Chinese as much as the foreigner, should apparently have been shelved indefinitely, with no indication or prospect of its being accorded attention. We hesitate at any opinion that a matter such as this has been merged in the mire of politics; we are loth to imagine that the scheme has definitely been quashed at Peking; and we are equally disinclined to foster the belief which is held by some that one of the main reasons for the delay is jealousy of the part that the foreigner already has played in the development of Shanghai and the equally important part they conceive he would play if the scheme were adopted in its entirety. It cannot too strongly be emphasized that the scheme of the Consulting Committee calls for no abrogation of any Chinese sovereign or provincial, maritime or terrestrial rights. The Harbour Board that was recommended would be mainly a Chinese controlled body and under Chinese jurisdiction, and the only respect in which the authorities at Peking (or anywhere else) would be debarred from free influence would be in relation to the financial aspect of the undertaking. The scheme concerns Shanghai directly and the money would be found in Shanghai, though the benefits that would accrue would be felt not in Shanghai alone but throughout the whole of China. It is obvious that foreign trade and enterprise, to which so largely is due the actual existence and development of Shanghai's harbour, must benefit by further extensions and facilities. But the benefit which would also ensue to the Chinese is as much greater as the Chinese population is greater than the foreign.

Other ports in the Far East are going ahead in their plans for development—Kobe, Hongkong, Singapore, and even Tokio—but Shanghai stands as she has stood for many years, with only the labours of the Whangpoo Conservancy Board preventing its following the fate of Antwerp, which, hitherto one of the world's greatest entrepôts, bids fair to sink to the level of a fifth-rate port owing to apathy and neglect in conservancy. If the Chinese authorities at Peking have decided to quash the scheme of some of the world's greatest experts, let them say so; and if they have any alternative scheme or schemes which will provide in an equal degree for the development of this great port—a development which can be nothing but visionary till Peking issues its dictum and makes known its wishes—let them come forward with it without delay. They owe it as a duty to China, if to no other people, interest or consideration.

GENERAL FOWLER'S REPORT

June 19.

The pleasure of reading Major-General Fowler's report on his recent inspection of the Shanghai Volunteer Corps is enhanced by the fact that it is the third he has written. He is, therefore, able to use a comparative power of criticism which makes his observations as valuable as they are welcome. And he is certainly a most thoroughgoing inspection officer. Since his last visit the strength of the Corps has increased from 1,239 to 1,370 and in the parade at Bubbling Well 1,007 all ranks were present as against 898 last year. Writing of this parade, which was properly a converging march by three columns, Major-General Fowler says:

> The bearing and march discipline of the troops during this exercise was excellent, and gave a most favourable impression of the efficiency and strength of the force which could rapidly be concentrated on any threatened area.

Speaking of the infantry units, he comments:—

> The drill, turn-out and soldierlike bearing of the units was uniformly satisfactory, and in some units very good indeed. The officers appeared to have improved since last year in their knowledge of handling their units, and there was evidence of much careful training by N.C.O.'s and other instructors.

Of the Light Horse Co. we read that

> The turn-out of men and horses was excellent and they drilled with very fair precision. They were steadier than last year, and the horsemanship of the majority of the riders was good.

The turn-out of the Field Artillery "was excellent and maintains the high standard attained in previous years." This year has seen the formation of the new American Mounted Troop which forms a valuable addition to the Corps and with the American Infantry Co. gives the American community a showing in the Corps corresponding with their interests in the Settlement. Of the A. M. T. Major-General Fowler says:—

> The turn-out of the men and horses was excellent and the unit forms a valuable addition to the Corps. Much work has evidently been done in training, and though some movements were carried out at rather too fast a pace, greater steadiness will no doubt be attained.

The Maritime Co. receive praise as do the Engineers on their improvement since last year. The Machine Gun Co.

> Is thoroughly efficient, and the zeal of its members ensures that the Council is getting full value for the large expense that has been incurred in equipping the unit.

The newly-formed Public School Cadet Co. Major-General Fowler saw for the first time and he says:

> It is being well trained, and the boys were well turned out and keen. It is to be hoped that its members will eventually join the senior units of the Corps.

The Italian Co. made a small showing, and "cannot at present be considered efficient." It is understood that a reorganization is in view. Like Loudon Dodd, the Company "means to do better."

The inspection this year was carried out under unusual difficulties, Major-General Fowler's stay was short and the weather was wretched. It may not generally be known that there are two inspections to be made by the General from Hongkong every year: a preliminary one, at which each unit is separately inspected at its own particular work and target practice; then a parade of the whole Corps to which the public are invited. "Keep off the grass" at the Race Course prevented the thorough inspection of units to which they look forward and which Major-General Fowler would doubtless have liked to give. They were, therefore, inspected under varying conditions on race course pathways, the riding track and Rifle Range. All this emphasizes the need for pushing on with Colonel Marr-Johnson's scheme for making the Rifle Range a more or less permanent volunteer camp at which drills could be carried out, camps organized and a satisfactory inspection conducted at the General's annual visits. The land is there in plenty and only needs development. Major-General Fowler's recommendations for more help at Headquarters will, it is to be hoped, be acted upon. By this means better and more frequent instruction by professional N.C.O.'s would be available to units and a more consistent and general standard of efficiency be attained.

As usual the band did not escape without some acid comment by members of the Corps, though we believe it did not come under Major-General Fowler's purview. Yet it is, if we may say so, the Corps' publicity medium apart from its nominal duty of keeping officers and men in step. Of course the absurdity lies in expecting one and the same organization to provide symphonic concerts and military marches. The Corps ought to have a band of its own. It has the necessary material, we are told, scattered among its various units. Will not the Council arm them with the necessary weapons?

THE CHINESE SENSE OF GRIEVANCE

June 28.

"In a violently anti-foreign article," we were told yesterday, "the 'Shanghai Journal of Commerce' dwells upon what it calls the unreasonable and unfriendly attitude lately shown by the Powers towards China." It speaks of the "aggressive and overbearing air displayed by the foreign merchants," whom it is necessary accordingly to curb, the best means of doing so being by means of "an intensive campaign against all foreign goods": but first of all the "Journal" counsels the Chinese "to ascertain the source from which such a hostile policy is being directed and when discovered to deal with it as energetically as possible." By a rather curious coincidence there appeared, side by side with these quotations, reference to a Note which the Waichiaopu is said to be preparing for the Powers, in complaint of their delay in holding the conferences for the abolition of extraterritoriality and the increase of the Customs tariff "as embodied in resolutions passed by the Washington Conference," while they nevertheless urge the Chinese Government to respect the agreements concerning the Chinese Eastern Railway alone.

> "In the hope of securing fairplay in respect of both the rights and duties accruing to China, the Chinese Government would draw the special attention of the Powers to the fact that the two kinds of privileges conferred upon China by the Washington Conference have not yet been placed within her reach."

Here is the Chinese sense of grievance fully aired, both officially and journalistically: China is not receiving fair play; foreigners are behaving aggressively and overbearingly; it is necessary for the Chinese to take drastic action. All very unwelcome reading to put before the Chinese public.

Can the Waichiaopu and the "Journal of Commerce" be blind to the fact that the foreign Powers also have a very strong sense of grievance against China? We are sure they cannot. We take strong exception to the charge that they are "pursuing a hostile policy" towards China: if they were, things would have happened long ago which would effectually have prevented the "Journal of Commerce" from publishing inflammatory stuff of this kind. When we recall the events of the past few years in China, the increasing lawlessness and insecurity of life, the disregard of officials for all responsibility, the continuous and flagrant disregard of treaties, we may justly contend that the Powers, so far from acting with hostility, have shown the greatest lenience and toleration towards China. We admit frankly that their attitude is more chilly than it was at the Washington Conference; they are less disposed now than then to indulge in sentimental self-sacrifice for her behoof. But if the "Journal of Commerce" really cannot understand why this should be so, we counsel it to look at home. In the summer following the Washington Conference Ichang and Wuchang were looted by soldiers whose pay their superiors had purloined, and much damage was done to foreign property. No one has ever been punished and no compensation has ever been given. In the summer following that, namely in 1922, the brigands of Honan and Anhui looted cities, destroyed foreign among other property and carried off numerous foreigners. Again no effective measures to check or punish them and no one compensated. Twelve months ago the Blue Express was derailed on the most important railway in China, and thirty-seven foreigners robbed and kidnapped and held captive for several weeks. Once more no punishment and no compensation. Since then the tale of piracies, lootings, kidnappings and even murders has lengthened to such an extent that we have utterly lost count of them all. When we add to this the illegal taxation to which trade is subjected in many provinces and of many other articles than cigarettes, the flouting of transit passes and the utter and admitted inability of Peking to effect any redress, it is impossible that foreigners should not feel aggrieved and the Powers become distant and cold.

In answer to the two specific grievances of the Waichiaopu that the Powers have not called the projected conferences on extraterritoriality and tariff revision, Peking's memory appears to be failing and needs refreshing. During the summer following the Washington Conference, the Powers were actually engaged in discussing the formation of a Commission to come to China and investigate her fitness for abolition of extraterritoriality and at least one well known name was mentioned as that of a man suitable to be sent. Many foreigners in China were anxious for the Commission to be sent, some because they really believed that extraterritoriality should go, others because they saw an opportunity of fairly bringing home to their Governments the chaotic state of affairs in China. Before the personnel of the Commission was decided, Peking itself decided its fate. The Chinese Government sent a Note to the Powers saying that they were not ready for the Commission's visit and asking that it might be postponed. By her own act China has utterly put herself out of court in respect of the abolition of extraterritoriality, if not for ever, at least for an indefinite number of years. As for revision of the Customs tariff, it is only necessary to recall what has been said above of the illegal taxation now practically universal which the Waichiaopu has admitted its inability to stop. Can it be wondered at that the Powers, when invited to hold the conference, unanimously replied on the 11th of this month that they did not consider the moment opportune?

There are points on which China's treaties with foreign Powers might conceivably be revised. There are foreigners in China who think they should be revised. And there is no foreigner who would not be glad to see China under such a government that the treaties might go and even extraterritoriality be abrogated. For, contrary to what the "Shanghai Journal of Commerce" appears to think, foreigners in China are the very reverse of hostile to her and would only be too glad to see her taking that place in the world to which her ancient glories entitle her. But before old treaties can go or new ones be framed, let there first be respect for those existing. If the Chinese wish to get rid of the treaties, the first step of all is to convince the Powers that they are willing and able to observe them in all provinces.

"HONI SOIT QUI MAL Y PENSE"

Some ladies went on sport intent
To Henli for an outing,
Nor, did they dream, or so 't would seem,
They'd set the "old Dears" shouting.
The Shanghai Girl lives in a whirl,
She rides, she swims, she fishes,
Oh, fie! for shame! why should we blame
Her when she dons her breeches!
With healthy stride she'll walk beside
Her husband, friend or brother,
But in that stride she can't abide
A skirt—her legs to smother.
The years are past, thank Heav'n, at last

When clothes our sports need hamper,
'Twere sad indeed if there were need
The greatest prude to pamper.
Still, maidens dear, just in your ear
I'll breathe a word of warning,
When next you swim, consider him
That jolly summer morning.
He likes a pal—the modern "gal"
Can join him swimming, floating,
He'll like you all the more, I'm sure
If modest, when you're boating—
Think of the shock to Grundy's flock
Who linger near the water,
Oh, woe untold! your limbs uncloth'd,
They're glad you're not their daughter!
That jersey tight in full daylight
To all is not becoming
But when you've bathed, your figure swath'd
In cloaks, which now are stunning
You, if you please, can lounge at ease
Avoid the scandal recent,
Nor risk you run, when in the sun
You bask—and still are decent.

Here's to the Pearl—an English girl
To the lass who loves clean sport-s.
Who plays the game, nor soils the fame
Of any girl, in short-s.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

The Bible in Commerce

The Parable of the Talents works in most appropriately with a story coming from the University of Nanking College of Agriculture and Forestry, and which centres round the humble peanut—the delicacy of our boyhood days, and now so highly prized an article of commerce. The foreign peanut, by which name the large peanut now grown in China is commonly called, was introduced into China from the United States about 35 years ago by Archdeacon Thompson, of the American Church Mission. Archdeacon Thompson brought four quarts of peanuts to Shanghai and there divided them equally with Dr. Charles R. Mills, of the American Presbyterian Mission (North), who was on his way to Tengchowfu, in Penglaihsien, Shantung. This district was already noted as a large peanut growing section. Dr. Mills divided his two quarters of peanuts equally with two of his church members, on the condition that they should increase them for three years and at the end of that time for general distribution. One of the farmers at the end of the first year ate all his crop. The second farmer, however, fulfilled his contract faithfully and distributed them at the end of the third year. Because of their size they were acceptably received and grown as widely as the three years increase permitted. Hopes in the rapid spread of the large foreign peanut were somewhat shaken when, after trying to express the oil as was their custom by grinding up both the hull and the kernel previous to applying the pressure to extract the oil, it was found that the thick shell of the peanut absorbed practically all the oil. Then someone got the happy idea of shelling the peanuts before expressing the oil. This was done and the value of the foreign peanut was clearly demonstrated. This saved the day for the foreign peanut and ever since its production has been increasing yearly until at the present time it enters into China's foreign commerce to the extent of millions of dollars annually. The introduction of the peanut into Penglaihsien was considered such an important event that a large stone tablet memorializing the virtues of the foreign peanut was placed in the grounds of the Yamên of the Magistrate of the district.

German Gamble in Francs

An interesting sidelight upon what was described at the time as the German attack on the French franc, but which appears actually to have been nothing but a huge attempt to manipulate exchange and the price of lead, is provided in a report received by Lloyd's Bank Monthly from its Berlin correspondent, who states that the liquidation of the liabilities in French francs on April 30 resulted in very great difficulties, the grain and metal markets having particularly been affected. The franc-lead transactions have had far-reaching effects and have attracted particular attention. It appears that the metal dealers discovered an interesting method of realizing a handsome profit without risk by a form of arbitrage business in metals—chiefly lead. They sold francs against sterling for future delivery, and to obtain the requisite francs they sold lead for francs to the public. As it was not possible to sell francs against marks for future delivery, many firms in no way connected with the metal trade bought metal on these terms, hoping to pay with very much depreciated francs. With the appreciation of the franc, a large number of such operators found themselves unable to sell the metal bought or to purchase the requisite francs for delivery, and the metal firms who catered for the speculative public found themselves left in the lurch by their principals and were unable to purchase themselves the francs necessary to fulfil their own obligations. To complete their discomfort, the lawyers found—as lawyers will find—these transactions a very interesting subject for investigation, and many of them have advised the public, through the press, that the contracts entered into infringe on the German exchange laws, and that to fulfil their contracts would expose them to heavy penalties. In addition, many small private bankers are in difficulties owing to their customers not being in a position to deliver francs sold forward or to pay their differences, and this has led already to several failures.

Missionaries in China

The ground of attack on missionaries shifts so much from day to day and from letter to letter that it becomes difficult to keep pace with it. It began in P. O. Q.'s hands, looking very much like an attack on missionaries per se; it continues, variously, as an attack on Christianity itself and a denunciation of the friction and disputes to which Christianity has directly or indirectly given rise in every country in the world and as its Founder said it would do. The testimony of one who signs himself "Rationalist" and quotations from a woman like Mrs. Bradlaugh Bonner against mission work are obviously prejudiced, because the writers disbelieve in Christianity, and are therefore worthless. Of the quotations given yesterday by P. O. Q., that from Mr. Herbert Giles was too short to show what it meant and those from Dr. G. E. Morrison and Mr. Archibald Little were in no sense attacks on mission work but merely exposés of the difficulty of teaching Christianity to Chinese—which certainly no missionary diputes. And the fact that a freebooting Prussian Government at Potsdam annexed Kiaochou because two German missionaries had been killed, is not the fault of the missions. Our correspondent says nothing of the number of missionaries who have been killed, maltreated and robbed and no claim of any kind made on their behalf. We are far from saying that all missionaries are perfect or that they are always the best men for the work they have to do. Nor would any missionary make such a claim. The root of the matter is this: that in the main they believe something and, believing it intensely, they find in it something further which compels them to go out and endeavour to impart that belief to others in order that, as the missinaries are convinced, they may be benefited by it. Say what one may, that is a purely unselfish aim and in pursuit of it the missionaries expose themselves to sacrifice, discomfort and danger. It appears to us to be very poor work for a fellow-national to throw mud at them.

The Building Tyranny

A good deal more information is needed before we can get a proper idea of why the building employers in Great Britain are declaring a lock-out. But there can be no doubt that the public will pay the penalty. The sequence of recent events is also significant. On May 30 came the news that the second national ballot of building operatives had voted for acceptance of the employers' offer of an extra halfpenny an hour, and that a general strike was thereby averted. On May 31 we received the details of the Governments housing scheme which, it may be recalled, contemplates making a 15-years contract for the construction of 2,500,000 houses at a total cost of £1,376,000,000 of which the state will pay £926,000,000 and local authorities the rest. And now we are told that

> "the employers, in declining to endorse the settlement (of May 30) and breaking off negotiations, point out the continuous disputes and revolts throughout the country, particularly the strikes at Liverpool."

Obviously the employees, seeing what a fat and juicy contract their employers expect to squeeze out of the public, feel that they must get a bigger slice of the plunder than a beggarly halfpenny an hour. So much for Government contracts to private persons in "sheltered" industries at the taxpayer's expense. If memory serves which, during the war, could be declared of national importance and in which a strike could be pronounced illegal. Clearly housebuilding is such an industry and if the Government would deal with the building trade, which has been "sticking up" the whole country ever since the war in an intolerable manner, as it deserves, aright, there were industries it would earn the gratitude of Labour probably not less that of other classes. The example of the Canadian postal strike shows how a really democratic country deals with capricious strikers.

Gen. Yang Sen's Reply

We publish to-day an answer from General Yang Sen to the statements previously received from Mr. Elly Widler on his imprisonment, first at Chungking and then at Wanhsien. General Yang Sen appeals very confidently to foreign opinion in Szechuan in support of his action in arresting Mr. Widler, who, he says, would certainly have been shot in any other country. These, of course, are controversial matters. General Yang Sen is on surer ground when he claims friendship. and friendly dealing with foreigners generally in Szechuan. From all we have ever heard General Yang indeed enjoys a high repute among foreigners and Chinese. We have no intention of attempting to try the case: we have no means of doing so even if it were proper work for a newspaper. Where we venture to think Mr. Widler had cause for complaint was that he was kept in prison for a considerable time, without being brought to trial—and to say the least, Chinese prisons have not the reputation of being either healthy or comfortable. The case was complicated by Mr. Widler not being a "represented" foreigner. But whatever crimes were alleged against him trial ought surely to have preceded punishment.

Trademarks

Recent statements in various papers may have tended to convey the impression that at last all is peace with regard to the registration of trademarks under the new Chinese law. However, the matter is not yet settled by a long way. True, many foreign firms have registered their marks, but we are informed that as yet very few British houses have gone so far, preferring to wait until they have some further guarantees of fair treatment and an assurance of justice should it become necessary to appeal to the courts. Then again, there may be people who think that the whole business is a storm in a teacup and that after all there is little to worry about. Possibly very few realize to what a great extent trademarks enter into business out here and what an enormous number of them are in use. The piece goods firms alone could give the picture of a different mark to every man, woman and child in many of the provincial towns which in England we regard as of quite a fair size. Some of these piece goods "chops," which are highly artistic productions, date back to the beginning of Shanghai and the books in which specimens are kept for reference and record provide a very interesting study. One piece goods firm alone, if and when it considers circumstances justify the registration of its marks under the new Chinese law, will have to pay fees of $20,000, so it is not very surprising that the directors want to be fully secured. It will be remembered that, during the trial of one of the assault cases that has been agitating Peking, a foreigner complained that he was bruised as the result of a blow. The Chinese Judge said that, according to law, in such circumstances there must be a medical examination in court to prove or disprove the accuracy of such a statement, and an official expert there and then solemnly searched for a bruise caused weeks before and that, of course, had faded away! None of that sort of nonsense can be tolerated when one pays $20,000 for the registration of trade marks. One does not want, for instance, to be told that if an extra row of bricks is added to the picture of a house, even though all other features may be identical, there has not been an infringement.

The Farce of Conference

The juxtaposition of the two telegrams reporting the "suspended animation" of the Anglo-Soviet Conference and Zinovieff's speech on the prospects of creating a Communist party in England, and the comment they mutually supply, are suggestive. Curiously enough, too, these telegrams would appear to have arrived in the order printed. As regards converting England to Communism, with the disastrous example of Russia before the working classes of all countries, it will be entirely the fault of British Governments and upper classes if these doctrines ever gain a hold in Britain. As for the conference, is it not about time that the curtain was rung down on this ridiculous farce? We have been informed recently that for every claim made by British owners of property in Russia, the Bolsheviks retaliate with far greater claims for damage done by White counter-revolutionaries for which the claim on Britain is of the shadowiest nature, if it exists at all. While in return for the loan which is really all they care about, the Bolsheviks magnificently offer to abstain from anti-British propaganda in Central Asia, although it is clear from Zinovieff's speech that revolutionary propaganda in England is to be pressed as actively as possible. The plain fact of the matter is that the Bolsheviks are mad dogs (that is the most charitable description) and with such no man can deal. That their dominion cannot endure for ever is certain. Why attempt to treat with them on any lines, when it is extremely probable that their successors will repudiate everything they do and absolutely certain that they themselves will repudiate whatever undertaking it is their pleasure to despise?

Dublin Horse Show

When so much is being done to "boost" other countries as places for the tourist to visit, it is more than a pleasure to find an excuse—if, indeed, an excuse be necessary—to put in a word for our own countries. The world knows by now of the Wembley Exhibition, the greatest thing of its kind ever conceived, and apparently, to judge by the reports coming through every week, likely to be the greatest success in the way of exhibitions ever known. Ascot, Henli, the Royal Tournament and that amazing development of the late Mr. Walter Winans's hobby, the International Horse Show, all will be over before the home-going man from the East at this time will sight Dover's cliffs. Yet he will be in time for Ireland's greatest festival of the year, the Dublin Horse Show. We all know the Irish horse and the Irish horseman, both well-high incomparable, and certainly together a combination very hard to beat. This year, in August, from the 5th to the 8th, at the famous Ball's Bridge site, there is to be a Show greater than any of its wonderful predecessors. People who have seen Dublin Horse Shows will wonder how that can be possible: those who have not seen one should take the word of an enthusiast that if it was not quite up to the standard of previous Shows, even then it would be well worth a visit. Then, too, in August, there are to be the great Tailteann Games at Croke Park, outside Tara, a miniature Irish Olympiad, with the inclusion of the old Irish games. These two attractions, together with the unchanging glories of Ireland's marvellous scenic beauties, should draw people in thousands to the Emerald Isle. After all, though Switzerland, Brittany, Italy, Morocco and other places may have their delights, it is something to be able to say that one knows also the countries of one's own people.

Chinese at Wimbledon

The reference in this week's telegrams to a Chinese lawn tennis player, Mr. Woo, figuring among the competitors at Wimbledon awakes interest as to who he may be, as this is, we think, the first time that one of his nationality has competed at the headquarters of all lawn tennis. So far as we can learn locally, Mr. Woo belongs to the Ng family of Hongkong, Woo, or Wu as spelt in Shanghai, being the mandarin form of the Ng common in the South. This family counts several excellent lawn tennis players among its number, the leader of them, Ng Sze-kuang, having been champion of Hongkong. It is his brother, now an undergraduate at Oxford, we are told, who is playing at Wimbledon. It will be remembered that Mr. Lock Wei, the former Hongkong and Shanghai lawn tennis player, was appointed to choose Chinese to represent China in the Olympic Games, and when he left here it was to meet Mr. Woo and continue with him to Paris for the competitions there. Our informant as regards the above details is somewhat uncertain about them and we should be glad to hear from any reader who can give us further news of an interesting personality.

NEWS FROM THE OUTPORTS

GOVERNOR OF INDO-CHINA BOMBED

Shocking Outrage at Canton Dinner Party: Bomb Thrown through Window: Assailant Escapes into the River: M. Merlin Unhurt: Four Foreigners Killed

Three foreigners were killed and several severely wounded as the result of a dastardly attack upon the life of M. Merlin, Governor-General of Indo-China, at Canton on Thursday night of last week.

The first news of this sensational affair, which naturally caused grave concern among the French community in Shanghai, was received here about 9 a.m. last Friday in a private message, and upon receipt of this an urgent telegram was despatched to the Legation for further news. Authentic information available at the time of writing is that the Governor-General, who proceeded to Canton in the French man-of-war Craonne, was entertained by the French community, a banquet being given in his honour at the Hotel Victoria, Shameen. A bomb was hurled upon the dining table —by whom or in what manner is not yet known—but with the most disastrous results. M. Merlin and the members of his suite all escaped without injury, but three of the guests were killed on the spot, two were dangerously wounded, and others received more or less serious wounds. In this early telegram, three casualties were named, these being: M. Rougeau, a member of the staff of the Banque de l'Indo-Chine, Dr. Casabianca, acting-Consul at Canton, and M. Gérin (Manager of Gérin & Co. and brother-in-law of M. Madier, of Shanghai) who was seriously wounded.

Nationalists of Indo-China.

The opinion has been formed here that the attempt to assassinate M. Merlin was the work of political agents associated with the Nationalist party of Indo-China. Though upon a much smaller scale, the country is troubled with the same agitation and revolutionary propaganda as India, and little doubt is entertained but that the outrage is the work of revolutionaries. M. Merlin has held office for less than a year, and during his short term of administration has made no exceptional departure from the policy of his predecessors, and it is assumed therefore that the attack is against his office rather than against him personally.

It may be recalled now that, on the occasion of M. Merlin's recent visit to Shanghai, the French authorities had information that an attempt upon the Governor-General's life would be made here, and they treated the information as being of such importance as to justify special precautions. Thus it was that the distinguished visitor was carefully shepherded from the moment of his arrival until that of his leaving, and he was never abroad without there being half-a-dozen armed men and several detectives in close attendance upon him.

Assailant's Escape.

Further details of the affair are furnished by Reuter, as follows:

Hongkong, June 20.

The French community in Canton were giving a banquet in honour of M. Merlin at the Victoria Hotel in Shameen last night. During dinner an unknown Chinese threw a bomb amongst the party. M. Merlin was uninjured. Mr. P. de Maretz, Manager of the General Silk Importing Company of New York, and his wife and M. E. Rougeau of the Banque de l'Indo-Chine were killed. M. H. G. Gérin, a silk merchant, and M. Pelletier were mortally wounded, and five persons seriously injured. M. Merlin's A.D.C., Capitaine Bernard, was slightly wounded in the arm.

The assailant escaped, jumped into the river and was lost in the darkness of the night. No reason can be assigned for the outrage.

M. Merlin will arrive in Hongkong to-night. Mme. Merlin and her little son did not accompany her husband. They are guests at Government House.

Terrible Scene in Dining room.

Later.

A European who arrived from Canton this afternoon, interviewed, said that the outrage in Shameen occurred at 8.35 last night. Just as soup was being served the assassin flung a handbag with the bomb through a window and hit the end of the table. It seemed that M. Gérin was mistaken for M. Merlin and was aimed at. The bomb exploded with frightful results. The dininghall was soon reduced to a shambles. Mr. Demaretz was found dead seated on his chair, while his wife was lying on the floor. Dr. Casalranca, the acting French Consul, lost his left arm. Two or three Chinese waiters were injured in the head. American and British sailors and residents turned out as soon as the outrage was perpetrated and the bomber was chased. He was shot at with revolvers, but escaped by plunging into the river.

M. Gérin has died.

The Governor has sent a wireless message to M. Merlin stating that he is horrified to hear of the dastardly attempt, congratulating M. Merlin on his fortunate escape and expressing deep sympathy with the French community in their loss.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Terrible Scene of Destruction.

Hongkong, June 21.

M. Chatel, M. Merlin's Chief of Staff, interviewed, gave a graphic narration of the Shameen outrage.

"We had just taken our seats when a man dressed in a white singlet and a pair of white shorts came up to a window and threw a small handbag inside. Instinctively I shouted 'Down Down,' and we got under the table. Immediately there was a terrible explosion. I have seen many fearful sights in the war but nothing quite so terrible as that I saw after the explosion. Three persons were killed outright. Several were seriously wounded, lying on chairs or on the floor. The ladies were simply splendid. There was no panic of any kind. Everyone was quite calm and cool, and anxious to do all to help the unfortunate persons injured. The force of the explosion was such that it wrecked all the furniture in the room. The doors were blown open, tables and chairs were broken, and knives and forks were blown all over the room. Some of the knives were broken into several pieces, while forks were sticking to the wainscotting and walls.

"M. and Mme. Demaretz were killed outright. They were terribly injured in the head. They had only returned to Shameen from Home three days previously. M. Pelletier, who died later, had his head split open and his thigh amashed. Dr. Casablanca had one hand completely smashed like a mashed potato. From his back was abstracted the cap of the bomb. Mme. Rollin was wounded in the arm. Capitaine Bernard was wounded in the shoulder and breast. M. Fournier was badly injured in the head. M. Bozin was seriously wounded in the head and leg.

"The management of the Hotel were most solicitous for the sufferers. British, American and Japanese doctors were early on the scene; while American and British sailors rendered first aid.

"A detachment of French sailors was landed and with British sailors patrolled the district during the night."—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Protest by Chinese Students in France

Paris, June 22.

The papers state that they prefer to await precise details before commenting on the attempt made upon the life of M. Merlin at Canton.

Students of the Franco-Chinese Institute at Lyons, who are mostly Cantonese, have handed the papers a note protesting indignantly against the attempt of M. Merlin's life and condoling with the families of the victims. They declare that they will ask the authorities of Canton to conduct an active investigation into the matter and inflict severe punishment on the criminals.—Reuter.

Assassin's Body Said to Have Been Found in the River.

Hongkong, June 23.

The Canton authorities have sent the following telegram to Reuters:—

"The corpse of an Annamite, believed to be the assassin, was found in the river off the East Bund on June 21 with one unspent bullet of French make, three Hongkong dollars and a watch, stopped at 9 o'clock."

The Governor-General and Mme. Merlin left this morning for Saigon.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Civil Governor's Insolent Reply to British Consul's Protest

What is characterized by the Chinese Press as a most unreasonable and discourteous protest has been addressed by the British Consul-General to the Canton Government in connexion with the bomb outrage.

Nothing (the Consul is understood to have said) had been done by the Government to suppress anti-foreign agitations. In fact he doubted if it were not actually encouraging the lawless actions in the city, for which the government would be held responsible.

In reply, Mr. Liao Chung-kai, Civil Governor in Canton, wrote on June 23 in part:—"The Government of Canton, upon hearing of the expected arrival of M. Merlin, the Governor-General of Indo-China, made every preparation to give him a cordial welcome, this fact alone proving that both officials and people were pleased at M. Merlin's coming. But upon his arrival, M. Merlin went to Shameen Settlement without visiting the Chinese City. Therefore, you, the Consul-General, who are responsible for the peace and order of the Settlement, and who has nevertheless allowed a person to throw a bomb into the Hotel and to escape by throwing himself into the river, cannot, I am afraid, exonerate yourself from blame. As to your allegation that the perpetrator of the crime was a Chinese, what proof have you? This case clearly proves the incompentency of the Shameen police. The Civil Governor would suggest, and you the Consul-General will doubtless agree, that in future this Government may, whenever necessary, send its police force to Shameen to preserve peace and order there."

Will of Assassin and Photographs Published

Canton, June 25.

In connexion with the recent bomb outrage, a Korean named Hsu Shingya published in to-day's Chinese papers the photograph and name of the culprit, who was identified as an Annamite, together with his will.

In his will, after severely condemning the administration of French Indo-China, the culprit says that he has always objected to the French administration and endeavoured to free his countrymen from the yoke of France. He concludes that he will be at rest if the Annamite people can live peacefully on earth. The Korean, who has published the will referred to, pays a high tribute to the culprit, and compares him to Anju Kon, who assassinated Prince Ito at Harbin.

It is learnt on good authority that in view of this development the Consular Body will shortly issue a warning to the Canton Government, requesting it to control outlaws.—Eastern New Agency.

ELECTRIC CHAIR IN THE ORIENT

First Criminal Electrocuted in Manila: Chloroformed First

Manila, June 26.

The electric chair was used for an execution for the first time in the Orient yesterday, when Juan Buco, convicted of the murder of six persons, was executed at Bilibid.

The prisoner was submitted to an anæsthetic before the current was switched on.

Governor-General Wood refused eleventh hour requests for a pardon.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, June 23.—On learning of the bomb outrage at Canton the Chinese Minister of Foreign Affairs sent a secretary to the French Legation to offer his sympathy.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE CHINESE INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION WHICH UPSET MR. BENA'S PLAN

Something Tangible About It at Last: A Scheme Which has Hitherto Brought Nothing But $100,000 Loss to Promoters

From Our Own Correspondent.

Peking, June 19.

It has taken some time to find out the whys and wherefores of the Chinese International Exhibition which is accounted the reason for the non-cooperation of the Shanghai Chinese in the project initiated by Mr. Bena and his fellow-enthusiasts; but the writer has now run it to ground, at least its preparation bureau, which is tucked away inconspicuously in the East City.

The Usual Bureau

The preparation bureau owes its inception to a presidential mandate promulgated as far back as March last year, embodying an idea which has been on the tapis ever since the establishment of the Republic. The full title of the proposed exposition is the Chinese Republic Anniversary International Exhibition, and the director-general of the preparation bureau is a worthy senator by the name of Lee Chin-ho, who, working in conjunction with officials from the Ministry of Agriculture and Commerce, divided his bureau into four departments, general, editorial publicity, exhibit, and foundation fund.

The foundation fund department is the main department, of course. It has the job of raising the funds, and until it has done its work, there does not appear to be any reason why the general department, the publicity department and the exhibit department should not continue to tuck themselves away inconspicuously. For the exhibition itself hinges upon the work of the foundation fund department.

Raising the Capital

Although it is said in Shanghai that nothing has been heard about the proposed exposition, this particular department has not been idle. It was decided some time ago that the best way of raising funds was by means of premium bonds, to be secured on the property of and receipts from the exhibition itself. As a matter of fact, there was no need for this security, as there was to be no reimbursement of capital, simply the prospect of prizes. And this prospect was attractive enough —as shall be related presently.

The first issue sold in almost every province, and $300,000 was raised. The date of the first drawing came round, May 18, just about the time when the Chinese General Chamber of Commerce decided to withhold its support from Mr. Bena's scheme; and prize money amounting to $400,000 was drawn.

Dead Loss to Organizers

This was very fortunate for the investors, but disastrous for the organ responsible for raising funds for the International Exhibition. The result of the drawing meant a dead loss to the authorities of $100,000. It was a case of a mackerel to catch a sprat, with the sprat, for some unearthly reason, going off with the bait, and somebody else's as well.

This, of course, is not the way to finance a peanut stall, let alone an international exposition; and it discouraged the director-general so much that he has recently instructed the foundation fund department to close up.

The director-general is also faced with another complication in that Parliament is said to be enforcing a rule that none of its members shall hold an official position. It is reported that he contemplates resignation in consequence.

The writer should have said at the outset that the date for the exposition is set for 1926, in Peking, place as yet undecided.

NEW TAXATION IN CANTON

A Levy on Sugar, on Cosmetics, Articles of Luxury and Dancing Halls

From a Correspondent.

Canton, June 18.

A special war tax of two and one-half per cent. on sugar ad valorem, apart from the usual customs and transit likins, will be levied in Canton. The measure was made effective on June 17 by the assistant secretary of finance to Dr. Sun Yat-sen. Persons holding sugar on June 17 have been given an opportunity to report their stock in hand within seven days ending on June 24 in order to exempt their goods from this special assessment, otherwise they will be subject to the new special tax. The military authorities divide sugar into eight classes or grades, including white, brown, candy, refined, syrup, molasses. fruit juice or extracts containing sugar, and native plate sugar. Foreign imported sugar as well as native production is subject to the special war tax and a fine of five to 20 times the duty or tax payable will be imposed on persons attempting to avoid or failing to comply with this new measure.

In addition to the special war tax on sugar in Canton, the recently dropped proposal to levy a heavier stamp duty on cosmetics and toilet articles ordinarily considered as luxuries will be renewed by the military authorities. According to a recent estimate submitted by an official in Dr. Sun's headquarters some $1,700,000 to $2,400,000 a year may be raised from this source, by means of a 10 per cent. stamp duty on these articles.

Steps will soon be taken by the police authorities in Canton to regulate the so-called dancing halls conducted by Russian women, now numbering not a few in that city. These dancing halls are frequented mostly by sailors from foreign gunboats in Canton harbour.

Peking, June 22.—Mr. Chen Yi, former Resident at Urga, has arrived in Peking in response to an invitation from the Government to give advice regarding Outer Mongolia.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE CANTON ARSENAL CONTROVERSY

Loan of $1,500,000 Floated by Dr. Sun to Pay Balance of Purchase money

From Our Own Correspondent.

Canton, June 17.

The popularity or otherwise of Dr. Sun Yat-sen's foreign policy in Canton will be given a test in a small way during the next few days, when a bond issue of $1,500,000, local currency, will be put before the public. The proceeds are intended to pay the balance of the purchase price of an arsenal equipment, which still remains undelivered to the Canton Government in full, because the claim has never been settled.

It may be recalled that in 1920, when the Canton Government was in the hands of the Kuangsi militarists headed by Gen. Mu Yung-hsin, an arsenal plant was bought through Messrs. Davis & Company, a British firm in Hongkong, with Mr. J. A. Rabbitt, an American, as agent and engineer commissioned to install the machinery; and that the machinery was not fully paid for and delivered upon the outgoing of the Kuangsi military party in Canton. Early last May the vendors attempted to remove the plant from local godowns in Canton with Filippino labour in a Japanese vessel, but agents of Dr. Sun interfered, claiming that the goods were Cantonese property. At the same time Cantonese labourers interested themselves in the matter, asserting that the use of foreign labour in an attempt to remove Chinese property constituted an insult. After an unpleasant dispute over the matter, the vendors finally agreed not to remove the machinery on condition of payment of the balance and storage and interest charges. The Canton Government is issuing bonds to raise the sum needed, about $1,500,000, Canton money.

In a telegram to Mr. Yu Ya-ching, Manager of the San Peh S. N. Co., the Ministry of Communications replies that it is not willing to sell the two steamers Huata and Huali for less than $200,000, their market value estimated by a surveyor.

THE CASE AGAINST MR. WEATHERBE

Charged with Assaulting Peking Octroi Official: Formal Trial at British Legation in Presence of a Chinese Observer

Peking, June 19.

Except for those actually concerned in the case, three or four foreign correspondents and about the same number of Legation officials were the only spectators present when the hearing of the assault charge preferred against Mr. D'Arcy Weatherbe was begun in the British Legation Theatre at 10 o'clock this morning.

Mr. W. P. W. Turner, Britisn Consul in Peking, heard the case and he had on the Bench with him a Chinese observer. The complainant, Liu Kun-kuan, a member of the Octroi police, conducted his own case and the defendant, who entered a plea of "not guilty," was defended by Mr. P. B. H. Kent, of Tientsin.

The complaint against Mr. Weatherbe, as read out by his Honour, was that at about noon on April 23 last he committed an assault on Liu Kun-kuan, a Chinese citizen, by striking him violently on the face and the body. His Honour said at the outset that the case appeared to him to be one that could be properly dealt with under summary jurisdiction and it was, he took it, generally understood that that course would be applied.

Mr. Kent agreed to this, mentioning that he did not think there would be much controversy over the main facts. The defendant intended, he said, to call only one technical witness.

Complainant's Story

Liu Kun-kuan was then called upon to tell his story. He related that on the day in question at noon he was on duty at the Post Office. Mr. Weatherbe went to the Post Office and got a parcel and witness asked him to go to the Octroi so that the parcel could be examined for taxation purposes. Mr. Weatherbe refused and went to his car. He put his parcel into the car and then assaulted witness, striking him on the chest with his fist. Then Mr. Weatherbe tried to go into his car and witness got hold of his chauffeur. Mr. Weatherbe, who had in the meantime got into the car, slapped witness on the face, drawing blood, and afterwards a Chinese policeman came up and separated them. Taking the parcel out of the car, witness still tried to persuade Mr. Weatherbe to go to the Octroi, but the defendant, who still declined to do so, tried to drive away. The car began to move off and witness, who tried to prevent the car from leaving, was knocked down by it. Mr. Weatherbe drove off into the Legation Quarter, leaving behind his chauffeur and the parcel. Both were later on taken to the Chief of the Octroi, Mr. Tung.

The complainant was then cross-examined at considerable length by Mr. Kent and was occasionally interrogated by his Honour. This occupied more than two hours, in the course of which he recapitulated his story at least a dozen times.

Did Complainant Use Force?

Replying to Mr. Kent, he said that his injuries felt painful after the assault and he was under medical treatment for more than two weeks. He denied that he had ever pushed, struck or threatened Mr. Weatherbe and asserted that the greatest degree of force he employed was to beckon Mr. Weatherbe in the direction of the Octroi and pluck him by the sleeve. On two previous occasions, he said, Mr. Weatherbe had been to the Post Office and on those occasions, although the defendant had paid no tax, there had not been any trouble.

Mr. Kent suggested that on this occasion the complainant had made up his mind that he would compel Mr. Weatherbe to pay the tax and Liu Kun-yuan admitted that this was so. He denied, however, the suggestion that he had arranged for one or two colleagues to be ready to give assistance.

His Honour asked the complainant to state exactly what his duty was and the latter said that he was supposed to direct to the Octroi Office people who got parcels from the Post Office.

The first witness called by the complainant was the Chinese policeman who intervened towards the end of the dispute. This man said that he saw Mr. Weatherbe strike the complainant in the face, but could not say what happened before that. He was about 20 paces away and did not hear Mr. Weatherbe call for assistance.

The Court at this stage adjourned for tiffin.

Chauffeur's Alleged Confession

When the hearing was resumed this afternoon several more witnesses were called to give corroborative evidence. One of them, Mr. Shang Yen-sun, an Octroi inspector, bore out the statement earlier made by the complainant to the effect that Mr. Weatherbe struck him "more than 10 times." This witness said that a policeman told Mr. Weatherbe to stop hitting the complainant, but, in spite of this, Mr. Weatherbe still continued to assault him.

Mr. Shang handed up to the Bench a document which he said was a "confession" made by Mr. Weatherbe's chauffeur after he was taken to the Octroi office.

His Honour said he could not accept this as evidence as long as it was possible for the chauffeur himself to be called as a witness.

Mr. Kent mentioned at this stage that the police went to Mr. Weatherbe's house two days ago to arrest the chauffeur without a warrant and, for some reason, they demanded a guarantor. "As far as we are concerned," Mr. Kent declared, "no obstacle has been put in the way of this man's coming to give evidence. We have tried to get him to come and he does not want to."

It was stated that the chauffeur was somewhere about the premises and his Honour indicated that, if the complainant wished, the man could be called to give evidence.

The "Confession" Might Differ.

Mr. Shang then caused some amusement by suggesting that, if the chauffeur were called at this stage, it was quite likely that he would make a different "confession" altogether. The complainant eventually decided that he would dispense with this particular piece of evidence and the case proceeded.

During the latter part of the afternoon Mr. Shang, who had been frequently interjecting on the complainant's behalf, was permitted to sit near the latter and assist him. It had already been explained to the Chinese authorities, his Honour said, why it was not possible to permit the appearance of a Chinese lawyer.

The hearing will be continued tomorrow morning.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Evidence for the Defence

Peking, June 20.

Evidence for the defence was heard when the Weatherbe case was resumed at the British Legation this morning. The proceedings again attracted little or no public attention. On the Bench with Mr. W. P. W. Turner, British Consul in Peking, who presided at the trial, was Dr. Chang Yu-chuan, Counsellor of the Waichiaopu, who acted as Chinese Observer.

Opening the defendant's case briefly this morning, Mr. P. B. H. Kent indicated that Mr. Weatherbe would deny that he struck the complainant on the chest, but would admit that he struck him once on the face. His defence for this striking was that it was done under circumstances of strong provocation, in self-defence, in defence of his property and his servant.

Mr. D'Arcy Weatherbe, who described himself as a retired consulting engineer residing at Paomachang, then gave his evidence. He said that previous to the occasion under review he had collected parcels from the Post Office and had never paid any Octroi tax. When he collected a parcel on April 23 he was handed a paper and he supposed it to be written entirely in Chinese as had been the case always before. He did not realize that it was written in English until his attention was drawn to the fact two days later at the British Legation.

After paying the Customs duty on the parcel, proceeded Mr. Weatherbe, he took it away from the Post Office and threw it into his motor car. He then told his coolie (he had no chauffeur) to crank up the car. When he attempted to get aboard the complainant and at least one other person held on to his coat and tried to prevent him from getting in. Prior to that nobody, to his knowledge, had spoken to him. Just before he got in he noticed that one or two Chinese were following him. Pushing these two men aside, he got into the car and sat down in the driver's seat. He then saw that the coolie was held by two men, not including the complainant. Witness called on the coolie to start the car, but the others held on to him and prevented him from obeying. Witness then got out and protested, but he saw that it would be impossible to get the coolie away without a struggle. He therefore re-entered the car with the object of starting it with the self-starter and was seized by the men and violently pulled and pushed. He managed eventually to get into the car, but could not shut the door because these men crowded in after him. They continued to pull him about and, seeing that it was impossible to get the servant away, he jumped out of the car and rushed at them and they fell back. He struck at the nearest one, who happened to be the complainant, and hit him on the left side of the face. Witness struck nobody but the complainant, and him only once. The man did not fall down and Mr. Weatherbe remarked that he saw no blood. He explained that he struck the blow in order to get away from these men and he did not know of any other method he could have adopted.

Struck Twice by Complainant

Continuing, Mr. Weatherbe said that after he struck the blow he returned to the car and seeing there the policeman who gave evidence yesterday, he called on him to prevent these men from hitting him and to make them release the coolie. The complainant had struck him twice, while he was getting into the car, before he struck the complainant. The policeman took no notice whatever of his request and witness then jumped into the car and, managing to close the door, started the car. Several men, including the complainant, jumped on to the footboard and at least one held on to witness's sleeve. When the car started they jumped off and witness drove off into the Legation Quarter, leaving the car near the Chartered Bank and returning on foot to the Octroi in order to demand the release of his coolie and the return of his parcel, which had been taken from him. He saw the Head of the Octroi and complained of the assault made upon him. The official said that witness had brought it upon himself by running away with the parcel and he refused to let the coolie go. Later on he went to the British Legation and made a complaint about the incident.

When the question of the coolie giving evidence came up about 10 days ago, Mr. Weatherbe said, the man was very nervous and reluctant to appear. The coolie stated that when he was held prisoner in the Octroi he was intimidated and threatened.

His Honour said that this evidence could not be admitted and, Mr. Weatherbe having concluded his statement, he asked the complainant whether he wished to cross-examine. The complainant replied that he would like to ask a few questions and His Honour then decided to adjourn the Court for half an hour in order to give him a chance to prepare them.

Questions by Complainant

Following the resumption, after a number of questions had been put to Mr. Weatherbe by the complainant the former said, in reply to a question from the Bench, that he made no attempt to investigate the nature of the form handed to him. He would have had no object in doing so since the parcel had been delivered to him and apparently was free.

The only witness called for the defence was Mr. H. I. Prideaux-Brune, of the British Legation, who gave evidence to the effect that Mr. Weatherbe came to the Legation and made a complaint which was later put in writing. Mr. Weatherbe complained that he had an unpleasant incident with the Octroi authorities, who had taken away his coolie.

The complainant, when invited to cross-examine Mr. Prideaux-Brune, expressed a desire to see the written complaint, but His Honour pointed out that it was an official record and there might be some difficulty about producing it. He suggested that the complainant should question Mr. Prideaux-Brune as to its nature.

The complainant then mentioned an official despatch said to have been sent to the Waichiaopu. His Honour said he had no judicial-knowledge of this and Mr. Prideaux-Brune, when questioned, said that no despatch had been sent either to the Waichiaopu or to the Octroi. He added that the morning after the incident occurred he went to see the Superintendent of the Octroi, under instructions from the Minister, and communicated Mr. Weatherbe's complaint. He later wrote a private letter to the Superintendent asking for the relaese of Mr. Weatherbe's coolie.

At this point the hearing was adjourned to the afternoon.

Addresses to the Court

After tiffin, addresses were heard from both sides. Mr. Kent, for the defendant, suggested that the evidence for the prosecution was exaggeration and should be received with caution. It was inconceivable, he said, that a man of Mr. Weatherbe's age, experience and position should have committed the unprovoked assault alleged. No evidence had been called to show that the complainant's duties justified him in arresting or restraining people and Mr. Weatherbe was in any case technically within the law. Mr. Kent concluded by asking that the summons should be dismissed.

The complainant's submission was that Mr. Weatherbe had been guilty of assault and had also "forcibly refused" to pay the Octroi tax. He therefore asked that the defendant should be punished according to British law and should be made to pay compensation.

The Court reserved its decision, His Honour stating that the date of judgment would be communicated to the parties in due course.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Defendant Fined $25 and Ordered to Pay $25 Compensation

Peking, June 25.

Judgment was given in the Weatherbe case this afternoon. Defendant was fined $25, and ordered to pay the complainant the same amount. Mr. Weatherbe asked and was granted stay of execution to enable him to consult a lawyer with a view to appeal.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE Hankow Houhu Tax Bureau, which was instituted by Marshal Pei-fu several months ago, propose to pledge a tract of land some 320,000 fong in area to a certain capitalist syndicate in Shanghai. This Bureau is willing to allow foreigners to purchase land at the back of the concessions provided they are willing to pay the taxes and abide by the laws enforced by the Bureau, says the Chinese press.

"FOREIGN SUNDRIES STORES"

Shansi's Vogue in Western Feminine Adornments and Children's Playthings

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Kiangchow, Sha., June 10.

Commercial developments of all kinds are being discussed. This city at the moment is interested in the long-delayed cotton factory the capital for which is said to be now practically subscribed. An electric lighting scheme is under consideration notwithstanding the failure of the company in the rival city of Hungtung to produce any light. Then a branch motor road, and a large number of smaller and larger companies to develop textile manufactures and introduce mechanical power in various trades, are passing through the preliminary stages of talk.

The remarkable boom on trade around here augurs well for the possible consummation of a good many of these projects. One cannot go far afield these days without seeing evidence of prosperity and luxury, in remarkable contrast to conditions even in good years a decade ago. The village child who was content with mud pies then now wants boats of tin, toy motor-cars and indiarubber balls, while his big brother sports a tennis racket, and his sister strolls into city shops on a regular "shopping expendition" and with nonchalant air buys feminine etcetras which were totally unheard of until the recent advent of the "foreign sundries stores."

In answer to the question, "Where does the money come from?" the one reply seems to be the disappearance of opium and the increase of cotton cultivation.

Highway robberies took place recently on the motor-road and people began to wonder if Shansi was beginning to fall into line with other provinces. But immediately the Governor issued a pamphlet for the information of all village authorities and others, telling of the discovery of seven or eight of the bandit fraternity in a village in the Kuwo district, and reiterating his orders that not a single suspected household must be overlooked. Suspicious characters must not be tolerated in any circumstances in any community and Shansi must at all costs be kept safe.

For building New Prison	60,000
Total Taels	364,996

The above does not include expenses for Administration of the Customs, Army nor the amount required for the new Customs House, which will be commenced this year.

From the above it will be seen that there is a substantial sum accruing to the Government.

Last year the income was only Tls. 2,315,000.

It is expected that the sum of Tls. 494,000 (see Special Income) will not be paid in this year but this is easily covered by ready cash in the hands of the Government, which at the beginning of this year amounted to about one million Tls.

VOLUNTEER MOVEMENT IN KUANGTUNG

Defence Force Organized by Merchants to Keep Order on Unruly Days: Stringent Conditions of Membership: Many Recruits but Shortage of Arms

Hongkong, June 15.

Dr. Sun Yat-sen will review the Municipal Police, the Provincial Gendarmerie and the Merchants' Volunteer Corps on June 20.

The Merchants' Volunteer Corps of Kuangtung, a military unit of civilians for local defence, which is the only organization of this character outside the foreign concessions in China, came into existence in Canton in 1912 after the Revolution. The troops at that time were beginning to be autocratic, and the merchants had to co-operate in order to protect their property. One of the chief promoters of the movement was Mr. Shen Chu-pak, an insurance agent, who later became the first commandant of the corps. Mr. Chan Lim-pak, the compradore of the Hongkong & Shanghai Banking Corporation in Shameen, was also one of the prime movers. He is now Commander-in-Chief of the allied corps of the whole of Kuangtung. The charter to form the corps was issued by the Peking Ministry of War in the first year of the Republic. Since then the strength of the corps in Canton alone has risen from 400 to 13,000 men. More than 160 leading cities, towns and villages have organized similar forces, each community having a company varying from 36 to 126 men. Some towns, like Fatshan, have several regiments. On May 26 this year delegates from more than 100 volunteer organizations met in Canton and perfected the provincial organization, making the headquarters of the Canton Corps at Water Melon Garden, Saae Kuan, the provincial headquarters, and electing Mr. Chan Lim-pak, the commandant of the Canton unit, Commander-in-Chief of the Provincial Volunteers. The supreme control of the corps, however, is vested in a conference of representatives of the various units, which meets annually. A council elected by the members of the conference has charge of the affairs of the corps, but on active service the Commander-in-Chief, his staff and officers have full command.

Conditions of Joining.

In order to be admitted to the corps in Canton, a candidate must be a member or have a guarantee from a responsible firm. He must be able to pass a literary and physical test and to contribute more than $300 for his uniform and arms. He has to be willing to attend military drills for a period of six months. No one is allowed to carry arms until he has obtained a certificate of efficiency after a period of regular training. At the headquarters in Canton a staff of eight instructors, all regular military officers holding commissions from the Government, holds three recruit drills daily in the morning and evening and at noon, when businessmen can get away from their work for an hour.

The Canton corps is 13,000 strong, but not every member is fully equipped owing to the difficulty of purchasing arms. There are 10 regiments, each with its own barracks.

According to an officer of the corps, the property of the organization in land, buildings and equipment is valued at more than $2,000,000. The organization is similar to that of the regular Chinese army, except for slight differences in the ranks.

The Merchants' Volunteers have been regularly on duty every day since the present troubles began in Canton, assisting the regular police and have done much to restrain the mercenary troops.

The Volunteers in the districts are not so well equipped, but are daily growing in efficiency.

Marine Corps Against Pirates.

Shipping interests are considering the possibility of organizing Marine Volunteers Corps to cope with the present prevalence of piracy along the larger rivers in Kuangtung. There is talk of equipping and manning special patrol boats.

Mr. Chan Lim-pan in a public statement the other day said that the Chinese should not depend on their Government alone to bring them peace and order, but should labour for their own salvation.

If the Government is unable to restore peace and order soon, the citizens will have in the Volunteer Corps a fitting instrument through which to take the responsibility into their own hands.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PORTUGUESE AVIATORS AT HONGKONG

Landing on Kowloon Frontier, Macao Being Impossible by Bad Weather

Hongkong, June 20.

The Portuguese aviators landed at Samchun this afternoon.

Later.

Lieuenant Deires, interviewed by Reuter's correspondent, said that the aviators hopped off from Hanoi at nine this morning for Macao. they flew over the neighbourhood of Macao at 12.50 this afternoon, but, encountering bad weather, decided that a landing at Macao was impracticable. They endeavoured to proceed to Canton and descried the Canton-Kowloon railroad, which they followed, but soon after, ignition trouble developed, and the fliers were forced to land at Samchun market, on the frontier of the British New Territories, at two this afternoon. The aeroplane was slightly damaged. Captain Paes bruised his right arm and leg. The aviators then entrained at Samchun for Kowloon and arrived this evening at 7.15.

Captain Paes and Lieutenant Beires were welcomed by representative Portuguese and others on their arrival and warmly congratulated.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Macao Governor's Compliments.

Hongkong, June 21.

The Governor of Macao has sent a wireless message to the Portugese airman, Captain Paes, expressing his compliments and the pleasure of the Colony to learn of the landing. He says that there was enormous anxiety at Macao. A gunboat will leave Macao to-render services to the airmen and will arrive at daylight this morning.

Later.

The Portuguese aviators will go no further. The gunboats Patria and Macao have arrived and the airmen will leave Hongkong for Macao on Monday.

The Hongkong Dock Company has lent a European foreman, three Chinese fitters and 18 coolies to go to Chinese territory with the object of dismantling the Portuguese aeroplane and to transport it to Hongkong.

The villagers swarmed over the machine, tampering with it and damaging the wings. The Chinese district commander has now posted a guard of 50 armed soldiers to prevent further damage.

Transportation of the aeroplane is expected to be completed by to-morrow.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Hongkong, June 24.

The Portuguese aviators called on the Governor to-day and were congratulated by His Excellency.

This evening the Club Lusitano gave a reception in their honour.

They will leave for Macao on Wednesday on board the gunboat Patria.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE MORAL WELFARE OF HONGKONG

London, June 23.

In the House of Commons to-night, replying to Mr. John Harris, Liberal Member for North Hackney, Mr. J. H. Thomas, the Colonial Secretary, said that he was constituting an expert committee to advise him on the subject of maisons tolérées in Hongkong, and the proposed bill for registration and control of prostitutes, after which he would be able to make a statement to the House.—Reuter

HONGKONG LETTER

The Late Mr. A. R. Lowe's Will: M. Merlin's Visit: The Piracy Regulations

From Our Own Correspondent.

Hongkong, June 17.

The will of the late Mr. Arthur Rylands Lowe, member of the firm of Lowe, Bingham & Matthews, chartered accountants, was made public to-day. The gross estate is valued at $290,176. Chief provisions of the will, which was drawn up and signed while Mr. Lowe was lying ill at the Peak Hospital on May 26, two sisters appending their signatures as witnesses, are the bequest of $10,000 free of all death duties and all his personal effects to the widow; £50 to Frank Harold Lowe and the placing of his real estate into the hands of his trustees on the following conditions:—

(a) That all income from it shall be paid to Mrs. Lowe (the widow) during widowhood and a half of it to her during the remainder of her life in the event of her re-marrying.

(b) Subject to the widow's interest in the estate during her lifetime all of his children who attain the age of 21 (in the case of sons) and attain that age or marry (in the case of daughters) also the children of any deceased child of his under the same conditions, shall take that share which parent or parents would have taken.

Three executors and trustees have been appointed, Messrs. W. E. L. Shenton of the firm of Messrs. Deacons, solicitors, Mrs. Lowe and Mr. John Scott Harston. As Mr. Harston had renounced all probate, Mr. Shenton has applied for probate.

Indo-China's Governor

In honour of M. Merlin, Governor-General of Indo-China, a detachment of British soldiers were on parade, the Regimental Band struck up the "Marseillaise" and a salute was fired when he landed at Hongkong from the s.s. Hakone Maru this morning. The distinguished French Governor was met on the pier by the Governor, Sir Edward Stubbs, and many other Government representatives. After inspecting the guard of honour, M. Merlin was driven to Government House, but left shortly before eleven o'clock to attend a reception arranged by members of the Hongkong Annamite community at the Hongkong Hotel. Mr. Felix Yung, President of the Hongkong Annamite Society, presented an address of welcome and extended a toast to the Governor-General. M. Merlin, who is accompanied by Madame Merlin, was taken on a sight-seeing trip round the New Territories (Kowloon) this afternoon by Sir Edward Stubbs. After visiting Canton M. Merlin and his party are due to sail for Indo-China on Sunday by the str. Chantilly.

Young Man's Suicide

Another tragedy of the Far East is reported to-day. Like many other sad stories lack of motive seems to be an outstanding feature. Mr. William George Dowse was found with his throat cut in his bathroom this morning. The Chinese room-boy discovered the body at 8.30 this morning, near by was a razor. The late Mr. Dowse was only 23 years of age and came to the Colony in October, 1922, for the Hongkong police. Six weeks ago he purchased his discharge and joined the China Light & Power Company as electrician. When the police were inspected last week, Mr. Dowse was specially commended by the Governor for his plucky work in endeavouring to arrest armed robbers, who shot him in the breast a year ago. Not long after being discharged from hospital, Mr. Dowse fell ill with pneumonia and his life was despaired of, but he made a remarkable recovery. Among his late colleagues in the police, he was known to be a very retiring and modest young man and neither smoked nor drank. Two letters were found in his bedroom, one addressed to his widowed mother, who resides at Clapham, London, and the other to a person in Australia.

Sequal to Piracy

A sequal to the piracy of the river boat Tai Lee in January when the captain, Mr. Wilcox, was shot dead and the boat seized by pirates, is providing some interesting revelations in a charge brought against the owners by the Captain Superintendent of Police. The owners are summoned to show reason why the money ($5,000) secured in their bond under the Piracy Prevention Ordinance, should not be forfeited. The allegation is that the regulations were not being properly carried out at the time of the piracy. Appearing for the Crown, Mr. T. M. Hazelerigg submitted to the Magistrate at yesterday's hearing that the following were breaches of the regulations:—

1. That the officers had not been instructed to carry a revolver and ammunition in the danger zone (the usual routes between Hongkong and places on the river and on the coast of Kuangtung and Kuangsi.)

2. That the grille door was never kept locked in the danger zone and that, as a matter of fact, it was open at the time of the piracy.

3. That the equipment (rockets, etc.,) was not readily and easily accessible for immediate use.

The case has occupied the attention of the Magistrate's Court for more than a week and the verdict, which is expected to-morrow, is being eagerly awaited. It was over the piracy and the murder of Captain Wilcox that the recent storm of protest was raised in the local newspapers and by the energetic assistant secretary of the China Coast Officers' Guild.

ENEMY OF BANDITS AND OPIUM SELLERS

Gen. Ma's Triumphant Return to Anking After Punitive Expedition

From Our Own Correspondent.

Anking, An., June 16.

After careering about the province for nearly two months uprooting opium poppies, bandits and unprofitable officials, Governor Ma Lien-chia has returned triumphantly to the capital. This visit to most of the important places in the province north of the river, coupled with a few slashing strokes of reform has undoubtdly strengthened his position, locally at least. This is timely, if the reports from Peking are true that there are strong forces at work trying to have him removed. It seems that both Wu Pei-fu and Chi Shieh-yuan are trying to secure the governorship for one of their own henchmen, and that Peking is quite willing, but until they can agree between themselves which is to have this political plum the present incumbent is likely to continue in power.

Four weeks ago the peoples here feared that the continuous rain "would never cease." The sale of pork therefore, was prohibited in order to propitate the rain god. But this was not necessary. Not only did the rain stop, but for nearly a month not a drop fell until the pork vendors feared again for their trade. However, to-day the "sky is leaking" and everybody is happy.

Twelve-foot Snake!

If the appearance of snakes is a promise of rain even the rice farmers may feel confident judging by the size of one snake recently caught in the city. A professional snake catcher while prowling about the old Fan Tai (treasurer's yamen) came upon an enormous striped snake that was over 12 feet in length. He successfully took it alive and carried it to one of the large medicine shops near the west gate where he sold it for the handsome price of $200. A rival shop hearing of the sale, too late, offered an even higher price. After the eggs—considered very valuable as medicine—are secured the snake is to be pickled in wine and kept as a specific for all infirmities, it being necessary only to touch it to obtain complete cure!

Hope for the steady drinker! Dr. Raymond Pearl, head of the Department of Biometry and Vital Statistics at the John Hopkins University, addressing the convention of the National Academy of Science at Washington, said that moderate and steady drinkers had a better expectation of life at all ages above 30 than total abstainers, adding that heavy drinkers had the poorest expectation of life between 30 and 65, while after 65 heavy drinkers and total abstainers had about equal expectation. Dr. Pearl said that his findings were based on many years of study of the drinking habits of thousands of persons throughout their lives, the figures being computed on similar life insurance tables.

CANTON LETTER

First Labour Governor: Policeman Killed by Soldiers: The Arsenal Dispute

From Our Own Correspondent.

Canton, June 18.

The most important event of the last few days in Canton has been the appointment of the Civil Governor of Kuangtung. Mr. Liu Chung-oi, who held the post some time ago, has been appointed to the post. He is a leader of the Labour Department of the Kuomintang, and may be styled "Canton's first Labour Governor."

The case of the Arsenal machinery for the Canton Arsenal, which was mentioned in my last notes, has not yet been entirely settled but it is believed that an agreement will be arrived at with the Chinese Chamber of Commerce and the Seventy-Two Guilds to take up Bonds issued by the Government to the amount necessary to pay the final instalment. These bonds will be employable by the merchants for paying taxes and for purchasing rifles from the Government for the Merchants Volunteers.

On the East River front there have been movements of troops but still no serious fighting has taken place. The leaders of the various armies are now all at the front and it is said that serious operations will start very soon. The centre is composed of Yunnanese and Kuangsi troops under Gen. Lau Chan-wan, They are attacking Aichow. The left is under Gen, T'an Yin-oi, of the Hunanese, with the Shansi troops to help him. The right is composed of the Honanese and Yunnanese, who are in charge up to the Canton-Kowloon Railway.

The large parade of police and gendarmerie which was to have taken place on the 18th has been postponed for a few days. It is to be held on the North Parade Ground.

Strenuous efforts are being made by the police to protect the people against the actions of the soldiers in the City, who commit frequent robberies and murders. On the 16th one policeman was killed and a sergeant and two constables were wounded in an affray with soldiers who were trying to rob a pedestrian. The policeman who was killed acted very courageously in attacking the armed soldiers single-handed, and paid for it with his life. He was given a very fine funeral, attended by the Civil Governor, Mayor, and Chief of Police.

Operations against the pirates in the Delta are being conducted with vigour and there has been no small success attending the efforts of Gen. Li Fuk-lam to suppress these pests.

The Canton Mint has again started operations and the other day the merchants and bankers were invited to attend an analysis of the coins being minted. The results of the analysis showed that the average of silver in the coins was round about 70 per cent. well above the minimum allowed. The coins will bear the date of the 13th year of the Republic, and notices have been issued warning the people that anyone refusing to accept the coins will be dealt with severely.

On the 16th Dr. Sun Yat-sen went down to Whampoa for the purpose of attending the opening exercises of the new Military School which has just been formed there for the purpose of training officers. The school is under the charge of Gen. Chang Kai-shek, a well known military expert. The course is to be a six-month one.

Prosperity is returning to Harbin, says the correspondent of the "Peking and Tientsin Times." "To let" signs are no longer seen. New American, British and German offices are opening in all lines of business, an English paper finds it possible to exist and even flourish, amusements of all kinds are heavily patronized, racing has taken on a new lease of life. Foreign visitors fill the hotels, and Siberian expresses bring through passengers every week. In the country the area of grain cultivation has increased enormously.

BLOWING IN THE WALL OF KUEILIN

Second Massed Attempt to Take the City: Another Failure Before Strenuous Defence: 41 Days of Siege

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Kueilin, Si., May 21.

At 4.45 this morning the southern section of the city was shaken by a big explosion which occurred just east of the South Gate. A large section of the city wall fell in but the prompt resistance of the city soldiers prevented the attacking forces from gaining an entrance.

For weeks large enemy forces have been strongly entrenched in the large Changtai godown just outside the south gate not far from the city wall, and it is surmised that the enemy have been sapping from this shelter with the object of blowing up the wall. Repeated attempts have been made to burn the building but these have failed. Big native cannon have also been used in an attempt to blow the building down, but the massive brick walls, though damaged have stood firm and have defied every effort at destruction.

When the explosion occurred great quantities of earth mixed with stone and brick were cast high into the air, and the buildings in the near vicinity were so badly shaken that pictures fell from the walls and scrolls were moved from their places. The trench dug under the wall must have been a large one and the charge enormous for both inner and outer sections of the wall caved in for a distance of ten yards while the whole wall settled down about five feet.

Some of the soldiers stationed on the city wall were killed by the explosion while others were buried in the mass of earth and stones that caved in the opening.

Fierce Bombardment Follows.

The shaking from the explosion had hardly ceased before the enemy's big guns began to throw shells into the city, and at the same time the attacking soldiers rushed the wall. But the defenders of the city rallied at once and poured such a fusilade of rifle and machine gun fire into the face of the approaching troops that they were compelled to retreat.

Marshal Lu and Director of Forces Nan were soon upon the scene and encouraged their men to defend the gap, and directed a large corps of workmen who in the face of deadly fire from the enemy's guns, used huge water vats filled with sand and stone and soon had the breach stopped. Meanwhile Red Cross workers hurried to the scene and helped carry the wounded off to the hospital and Red Cross base for treatment.

The streets next to the city wall were at once proclaimed a forbidden area and civilians were warned against trespassing in that district. Later paving stones from the main streets were dug up and carried away to be used in re-building the wall and in other fortification work, and a company of military advisers visited the district with a view to deciding on how best to prepare for possible future attacks and conducting a successful defensive should the wall again be threatened.

Of the ten odd shells that fell into the city, two fell into a pond near the Fukien club house; two fell in a military yamên, one fell near the Chamber of Commerce, one fell in the old Fu yamên, and one in the magistrates yamên while the others landed in empty houses or private dwellings. A few of the shells went screaming over the city and exploded with a thunderous roar sending lead and pieces of iron in all directions and while a few civilians were wounded, none were killed.

An Interminable Strife.

When will the end come? Already the city has been besieged for 41 days during which time both sides have done their utmost to win the campaign. The attacking forces have tried every strategy they know to force an entrance into the city, while each time the city soldiers have successfully withstood them and have forced them to withdraw with much loss of life. But still the struggle continues. Ten thousand bullets are being turned out daily in the city and as the troops are not so reckless now in their use of ammunition it is estimated that they can hold out indefinately while waiting for the relief forces to arrive.

month and all classes of people are at peace as usual. Soldiers and civilians are living in harmony and 10 thousand hearts are as one in the utmost effort to keep the city. There is fire-wood, rice, oil, salt, and such commodities sufficient for the entire military and civilian population for six months, while we still have hundreds of thousands of rifle bullets. The soldiers are healthy and the rations plentiful, and along with the soldiers who guard the wall is a labour corps and together these are guarding every yard of the parapets and placing brass cannon in position, while others are preparing explosives. Everything is in readiness so that when you make another attack nine out of every 10 of the attackers will be slain. Moreover though you guard both within and without, in the daytime there is alarm, while at night you get no restful sleep, and your food is insufficient. Such suffering is not without reason.

"Ere long our relieving forces who are gradually approaching from every side and who are already within 10 li of the city will arrive. You doubtless know that, according to the report of our spies, are although you are daily sending out your forces to block the roads leading to the city, the relieving forces are strong in the right and their purpose is fixed, and it is impossible to hold them back. But even if you could close one road how can you close them all? Ask yourselves how many cartridges have your combined companies got, and how long will they last? When our relieving army arrives and we attack you from both sides though you had wings, it would be impossible for you to fly away.

Peace and Pardon

"My Command cannot bear the thought of your soldiers dying in vain and for this reason I am again addressing you in the hopes you may awaken and quickly stop hostilities. If you arouse yourselves My Command is stationed in Kueilin in order to exterminate robbers and bring peace to the province, which is a legitimate task, and if you can believe that I have no intention of injuring you, then come forward and surrender your arms and you will be treated with consideration. Those who wish to continue in the army will be at once enlisted, while those who do not wish to be soldiers any longer will be given expenses to return to their country homes. My Command emphatically instructs you for no other reason than a desire that you may understand right from wrong and protect your lives. Whether you do so or not, or whether you listen or not each must decide for himself.

"May you all conscienciously consider the matter and make up your minds lest later you have cause to regret it is what I earnestly desire."

THE COMMANDER OF KUEILIN APPEALS TO THE TROOPS WHO ARE BESIEGING HIM

In connexion with his above report of the siege our Kueilin correspondent sends the following letter from Marshal Lu Yung-t'ing "to the Troops of General Shen Hung-yin, who for Forty days have Besieged the City of Kueilin and have Battered in Vain to Gain an Entrance."

Kueilin, May 20.

"To the soldiers of General Shen. Let it be clearly known that at this time General Shen and you soldiers who are attacking Kueilin have allied yourselves to Sun Wen and are perversely listening to Shen's counsel which is deceiving you into devastating your country. Will you not consider carefully that this man is a turncoat by nature and is seeking after private gains and does not care for the lives of others. You are unfortunately listening to his orders through the various commanders, who in bringing you to attack Kueilin are leading you in the way of death. Do you not known that the city of Keilin is firm and cannot easily be broken down? Your battalions have attacked the city many times and the dead and wounded of your soldiers are numbered by hundreds, while the rifles you have lost to us are not few. Your wounded are lying in the open fields with no competent doctors to attend them and consequently have little hope of recovery, while the bodies of your slain soldiers are wet by the dews and as no one buries them the stench rises to heaven while worms fatten on their carcases. This is seen by your own eyes. Think a moment. Why is it thus? A great man always has an object in view either on behalf of the country or for the protection of the people before it is worth while to sacrifice a single righteous life. On this occasion Shen Hung-yin and his followers have no reason or object in causing you to attack Kueilin. Why will you listen to his commands and take the body which your parents gave you and throw it away in the open fields? Think! After you have been killed, who will take your place at home and care for your parents? To whom will your wife and children look to for support? In the silent night consider what you are doing is not according to the principles of right and after death you will be cursed by your fellows:

You Were My Soldiers Once.

"Remember that in former days most of you belonged to my command and I cannot bear to despatch soldiers out to exterminate you, but I have sennt you a printed letter to instruct your officers and soldiers, but you are still deluded and do not know it and as usual are listening to the instigations of your superior officers in coming to attack the Old Man mountain. The people in the city do not know where to hide and consequently unfortunately a few were killed by your stray bullets, and their relatives came weeping to the yamên to give notice of death. My command cannot but take to heart the condition of the people and I at once sent two or three hundred men who rushed out and drove you back. You were defeated by my soldiers and many of your men were killed and you lost of rifles not a few, and the hills which you had occupied were recaptured by my troops. Think again, if on the hills which you occupied and where many troops were stationed; where you had also trenches in close formation, and where you were on guard to the utmost, if under these conditions after fighting one battle your troops were defeated and retreated in disorder, how much less can you stand upon the plains.

We Are Unconquerable.

AEROPLANE MISHAP IN MANCHURIA

Forced Landing With a Cargo of Passengers Bound for Newchwang Races

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Mukden, June 22.

Capt. Mackenzie, piloting the Handley-Page machine on the passenger service for Newchwang Races, met with a mishap on his way to the races some two or three miles past Shaho, being compelled to make a forced landing with his 11 passengers. The engine started knocking badly a short distance past Shaho, and having observed a good landing place when passing over the station, he returned to the spot and effected a safe landing a few hundred yards away. The Chinese and Japanese passengers who formed the complement are lucky to have been deposited so near to an alternative medium of conveyance.

Mechanics were summoned from Mukden aerodrome, and their combined efforts succeeded in making the machine ready by Sunday morning at an early hour. Capt. Mackenzie took off at about 3.45 a.m. and by 5 a.m. the machine was in the hangar again.

The consequences might have been much more serious, if no landing ground had been available.

FAIRY OPERETTA AT KULING

Gallant Entertainment by American Schoolchildren: School Commencement Week

FROM A CORRESPONDENT.

Kuling, Ki., June 18.

This is commencement week at the Kuling American School.

The musical recital, with which were held the exercises on Saturday afternoon was a great success, 38 out of the 43 pupils taking lessons at the piano appearing in the Assembly Hall before an audience of pupils and parents. The same evening five of the more advanced pupils delighted their hearers with the following programme:—

Beethoven Sonata, Op. 31, No. 3, 1st movement (Valentina Tourchinsky); Chopin Prrelude, Op. 28, No. 17 (Frances Roots); Rubinstein, Kamenoi Astrow (Charlotte Littell); Chopin, Waltz in at Flat Major (Valentina Tourchinsky); Gottschalk, "The Spark" (Majory Tooker); Beethoven Sonata, Op. 57. Two Movements (Frances Roots); Chopin: Butterfly Etude and Hollaender: "Spring" (Valentina Tourchinsky); Schumann: "Soaring" (Charlotte Littell); Schumann: "Whims" (Frances Roots); Chopin: Nocturne, Op. 15, No. 2 (Charlotte Littell); Chopin: Military Polonaise (Valentina Tourchinsky); Beethoven Sonata, Op. 27, No. 2 (Charlotte Littell); Palmgren, Bird Song (Frances Roots); Nevin: Love Song and "Good Night" (Esther Keller).

One did not notice any straining after effect, the performance of each pupil plainly indicating a development both of feeling and technique.

Contest in Elocution.

On Monday evening the annual competition in oratory took place. Miss Hanna, the English teacher, was in charge and each pupil announced his or her subject—some famous speech which had been committed to memory. Esther Keller was the winner and received a beautifully bound bible for her spirited rendering of "Spartacus of the Gladiators." William Johnson, interpreting with dignity and feeling, Channing's speech on "War," was given a very close second place, Elizabeth Goddard, who chose an address by Dr. Van Dyre, was third.

The guests were much impressed as usual, with the attractive, well built edifice in which the pupils make a real home during the School year. The announcement was made by the presiding officer at the Graduation Exercises this morning that preparations are being made for securing in addition a class room building.

"The Lost Flower Queen.

June 19.

The Kuling American School distinguished itself again last evening when its pupils, under the direction of Miss Richardson and with the assistance of Miss Ditmars and Miss Hanna, gave the operatta. "The Lost Flower Queen" in the fine new Auditorium. As the delighted audience dispersed one heard laments that so-and-so was not yet "up the Hill" and so enabled to be present. and hopes that it might be repeated later in the summer.

From the moment William Johnson, Patrol Leader of the Boy Scouts, stepped to the centre of the stage to read the Synopsis of the play, till the last "weed" skipped into the wings in the final procession, there was not a dull moment. This was no doubt partly due to the spirited way in which Valentina Tourchinsky played the accompaniments. It is often said that an accompanist's difficult work goes unappreciated; but on this occasion, after the operatta was over, her name and that of Miss Richardson, of the School, was cheered by the enthusiastic audience.

The big stage had been lined with ferns and branches that rainy morning by the performers, who by the way, included every pupil in the School. A high dais in the centre held a double throne, occupied first by the Queen of the Fairies and later by the Queen of the Flowers. This fair Queen, so the story runs had been stolen by the King of the Weeds and his retinue who looked, by the way, "wild" enough to frighten any farmer. These came boldly in to announce to the gentle flowers the capture of their queen and to gloat over their anticipated victory over all the Flower kingdom in case the Queen were not found within a day's time. The consternation into which the Flowers were thrown by this news was mitigated by the cheery counsel of "Johnny-Jump-up."

The help of the Fairy Queen is sought, the message being carried by two gorgeous heralds, clad, in scarlet with pheasant plumes streaming from each cap, and "silver" trumpets wherewith they sound the summons. Her Majesty comes escorted by a band of most winsome little fays who dance and sing and search everywhere for the lost queen, but all to no purpose.

Though these reports are discouraging, Johnny-Jump-Up still persists with his message of hope. And, sure enough, hope appears in the person of a band of Boy Scouts who report that, as the result of a campaign against their enemies, the Weeds, their Troop had defeated and captured the King of the Weeds and has rescued the Flower Queen. The Weeds are brought in and the Flowers call angrily for their immediate execution, but the Boy Scouts suggest that instead of killing the Weeds they should be sent to the Wizard of the West that he may change them to plants which will be of use to the world.

The whole show went off very well and put the whole community very much in the pupils' debt for providing such a joyous evening.

EXPLOSION IN MUKDEN

Fireworks Factory Blown Up but Only One Casualty

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Mukden, June 18.

A heavy explosion followed by a series of minor detonations disturbed the otherwise tranquil hour at noon to-day, and shook several houses in the foreign quarter considerably. Knots of boys and coolies gathered along the roads looking apprehensively towards the West city gate, as if expecting some appropriate sequel to the cause of the disturbance, but the more thoughtful of the community inclined to the conclusion that it could not have been the arsenal.

Investigation showed that a firework factory, just near the mud wall of the Chinese city, had blown up, luckily without serious consequences, and with but a small blaze. One casualty resulted, however, Hsueh Tzu-chin, who was painting the building, losing his life. He was still lying among the ruins at 6 o'clock this evening awaiting removal.

Very little debris was to be seen; only a few smouldering rafters and littered fireworks being strewn over the courtyard in which the building was situate, which protection must have localized the effects of the explosion not a little. The loss falls on one Teh Tsung.

Since the Banks were closed there has been no resumption of exchange operations.

NEWCHWANG RACES

An Interesting Innovation: Aeroplane Service from Mukden: Expert Pilots

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Mukden, June 18.

The Newchwang races will be held or the 20th, 21st, and 22nd instant inclusive, and the Handley-Page machine of the Fengtien Aerodrome will arrange to carry passengers on the above dates as follows:—

June 21, Saturday, at 5.30 a.m. from Mukden to Newchwang.

June 22, Sunday, at 6.00 p.m. from Newchwang to Mukden.

Single trip, Mex. $15.00.

Return trip, Mex. $24.00.

Tickets may be obtained at Fengtien Aerodrome.

The aeroplane will also fly above the Newchwang racecourse to obtain a bird's-eye view. Mex. $5 will be charged, tickets in this case being obtainable at Newchwang racecourse. The expert pilots whose services have been secured for the trip are Capt. Mackenzie, who has made a personal reconnaisence of the landing ground to ensure safety, Col. Chao Tzu-feng, Lt.-Col., Pei Yi-su, and Lt. Ma Shou-tung.

THE NIGHT SHOPS OF TOKIO

A Relic of Old Japan That Time Cannot Stale

By Alfred E. Pieres.

Tokio, June 18.

Despite exclusion laws, agitators and suggested boycotts, there is a part of Tokio's life that flows on calm and unruffled, as it has done for decades, nay, for generations. This is the Yomisé, or the night shops of the capital, an institution that existed long before Commodore Perry knocked at the closed doors of this land, and which form one of the most delightful links binding the bustling, hustling, modern Tokio of to-day with the Yedo of Old Japan when feudal Shoguns exercised supreme sway. As the name suggests, these night shops commence business after day has fled, and practically the entire neighbourhood surges about in the narrow streets, laughing, merry, hunting bargains, meeting friends.

Memories.

To one who has lived a fair length of time in Tokio, especially to one who has endeavoured to enter into the lives and spirit of the people, these Yomisé (night shops) are replete with cheerful recollections.

One treasures a little tray, the only thing saved from the earthquake's destruction, because it came from a particularly happy Yomisé jaunt. One remembers how the first actual bargaining, on the Japanese language, with the aid of that little handbook that the firm of Kelly & Walsh issues, raised many a good-humoured laugh as one dived again and again between its tiny covers to get the right word or phrase, determined to do the bargaining in the Japanese language and unaided. Can one forget the silvery peal of laughter that rang out in a combined callenge-invitation, as a pair of dark auburn eyes mischievously flashel mocking mirth, devoid of any malice, at the crude attempts of the stranger to talk the lingo of Dai Nippon? And at the Yomisé, all this comes back in pleasant retrospection Truly, "there's not a joy the world can give like that it takes away."

In the company of an Australian friend whose conversation is as alluring and instructive as it is pleasant, we mixed and mingled with the surging, jostling, pushing, laughing, chattering sea of humanity. The Yomisé is one of the Edokko's (indigenous inhabitant of Tokio) greatest relaxations, and a splendid relaxation it really is for both mind and body. In the moonlight, the children, in their multi-coloured summer kimonos, looked like gigantic butterflies. In the mental oppression caused by alleged discriminations, boycotts and rumours of boycotts, one felt that it would be a merciful dispensation of Providence, if one didn't have to become more than a child, if there was no adult creation which so often wrecks the wonderful fashionings of the Master Architect.

Flowers.

Right up to a flower seller we went. It was a job what to buy. Children in Christmas toyland could not have been more perplexed than were we. Despite Shakespeare, the lean man and the man who hath no music in his soul may yet be fit for better things than treason and stratagem, but what hope is there for him who loves not flowers? My friend was casting covetous looks at a beautiful clump of azaleas, of the kirishima variety, blossoming in a bamboo bowl, its crushed-strawberry hues out-rivalling anything that the skill or knowledge of man could even fancy.

My thoughts went back to South China where, for a paltry five cents, you can get a bunch of violets or a "posey" (rose) with maiden hair fern that simply sends you into transports of delight, and thought with Pagan Omar:

> I wonder what the florists buy
> One half so pretty as the things they sell.

And in many lands, under various climes, I have never yet passed a flower shop without telling myself that these creations from the garden of Eternal Love were never meant to be used in sordid commerce, like pretty women put up for sale to the highest bidder in some slave market. In Japan, however, this feeling becomes immensely softened because the Japanese loves his flowers with all his heart and soul, talks to them as though to his dearest friends, and seeks inspiration from them.

Doditsu.

The time was creeping round to mid-night and the Yomisé was getting ready to close up. Through its "unshoppy" atmosphere—for it does not seem as though the buyers realize that they are making purchases—we got out into the work-a-day world with tramcars clanging, motors honking and cycle bells ringing. The sea of humanity that filled the street where the Yomisé were held now flows homeward.

On the midnight breeze floats the shrill voice of a woman, perhaps a geisha, singing, in the melancholy music of Japan, a dodoitsu (lyrical ballad of the ordinary Japanese.) We listen:

> Tsuki no tsukashite
> Moshi to mireba,
> Matsu wa ureshiki
> Nushi no kaho.
> Eager for you, I looked
> As the moon shone on the pine
> And when I saw your face,
> Then instant joy was mine.

May the Yomisé of Tokio never retreat before the onrush of "progress," and may they continue to cheer and inspire in the future as they have done in the past, said my friend and companion from the land of the Southern Cross.

OUTRAGE ON THE UPPER YANGTZE RIVER

Mr. E. C. Hawley's Death After Affray with Junkmen: Action by British Gunboat

Peking, June 22.

A wireless message to the American Legation from Wanhsien, confirming the death of the American, Mr. E. C. Hawley, following a dispute with junkmen, states that the commander of the British gunboat Cockchafer, acting with commendable vigour and promptitude, under threat of bombardment of the city, compelled the leading military officials to follow Mr. Hawley's cortêge on foot to the grave and also to execute two of the principal junkmen.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

H.M.S. Cockchafer's Action Applauded in New York

New York, June 24.

Commenting on the action of the commander of the Cockchafer in compelling, under threat of bombardment of the city, the leading military officials at Wanhsien to follow the cortège of Mr. E. C. Hawley, the American murdered by junkmen, and to execute two of the principal junkmen, the "New York Times" says that, although there is no doubt that the Commander violated international law, he is not likely to be denounced by the United States Government or censured by the British Government. Foreigners are often in dire peril along the Yangtze, the paper declares, and it is useless to appeal to Peking.

One reason why the Navy Department was concerned at the Senate's failure to pass the appropriation for new gunboats, according to the "New York Times," was that on Chinese rivers Americans are often dependent on the protection of British or Japanese naval craft.—Reuter's American Service.

JAPAN'S PREFECTURAL GOVERNORS

Tokio, June 24.

At the Cabinet meeting to-day, the following officials were appointed as Prefectural Governors:—

Mr. Takesuke Shirane, Gifu Prefecture;
Mr. Gonshiro Matsubara, Aomori Prefecture;
Mr. Hideo Ikeda, Akita Prefecture;
Mr. Makoto Kinoshita, Tottori Prefecture;
Mr. Sotaro Beppu, Shimane Prefecture;
Mr. Takeo Mimatsu, Yamaguchi Prefecture;
Mr. Saburo Asari, Kagawa Prefecture;
Mr. Mitsumasa Kamei, Okinawa Prefecture;
Mr. Chotaro Kiyono, Kanagawa Prefecture.—Eastern News Agency.

THE CAPTURED WUCHOW MISSIONARIES

Advice Disregarded: Statement by Department of Foreign Affairs in Canton

With reference to the recent piracy at Taikwong, Kuangsi, of the American Mission motor-boat Roanoke and the capture by bandits of the party of missionaries who were on board on a relief expedition to succour a number of missionaries besieged at Kueilin, the Department of Foreign Affairs, Canton, having now received full particulars from the military authorities in Kuangsi, has issued the following statement summarizing the facts relating to the unfortunate venture:

"Upon learning unofficially last month of the intention of some missionaries at Wuchow to proceed on a relief expedition to the assistance of the missionaries stationed at Kueilin, the Department of Foreign Affairs strongly discouraged the venture. Department Officials pointed out in the first place that if the missionaries at Kueilin desired to or could get out, they would have done so of their own accord, whereas if they would not or could not the proposed relief party consisting of only four missionaries from Wuchow was not likely to serve any useful purpose, since it was in no sense a sufficiently large and properly equipped expedition. Furthermore, it was pointed out that the region all along the Fu River between Wuchow and Kueilin was infested by innumerable bandits, and was also the war zone of contending military factions without being under the clear and exclusive jurisdiction or control of any faction. Consequently, without likelihood of rendering any service to their beleaguered brethren at Kueilin, the Wuchow missionaries would merely be exposing themselves to unnecessary danger in such circumstances.

"Even after the Wuchow missionaries, disregarding the advice of the Department, had embarked on their venture, the voyage would scarcely have turned out so sadly as it has done, if the advice of the military escort, which had been provided for the Roanoke, had been heeded. The missionaries would not wait for the completion of the arrangements which were being made for their safety and started before the appointed hour without the full escort. It appears that even when the Roanoke party was first held up by the bandits at Taikwong, the boat could have turned back without mishap, but the missionaries insisted on parleying with the bandits and decided to land and go off in person to negotiate with the bandit chief. They therefore deliberately and with open eyes walked into the bandit lair and, as was to be expected, were made prisoners.

"While the fullest sympathy and regret will be felt at the unfortunate out-turn of the Roanoke venture, it ought to be stated that had the missionaries acted with less precipitancy and complied with the advice repeatedly tendered, they would at least have avoided complicating the situation in Kuangsi by their courageous but ill-conceived attempt to negotiate with the bandits.

"Two of the captured missionaries, Messrs. Jaffray and Hiller, have been released by the bandits, and are now back at Wuchow.

"Meanwhile, the military authorities under the instructions of this Government are not relaxing their efforts to secure the release of the remaining two missionaries."

Further News Received

Further information was received in Shanghai last Friday as to the missionaries in the besieged city of Kueilin, the following telegram being sent to Mr. Bailey, of the Church Missionary Society, from Yungchowfu:

Wilson, Blands, Baileys, Scantler and Mrs. Cunningham arrived. Others well. Still besieged.

The people referred to are: the Rev. J. R. Wilson, the Rev. R. N. Bland and Mrs. Bland, Mr. H. S. Bailey and Mrs. Bailey, Miss Scantler and Mrs. Cunningham, widow of the Rev. J. R. Cunningham, who was killed during the siege. The "others" referred to as presumably being still in the besieged city are: Bishop and Mrs. Holden, Dr. Charlotte Bacon, Miss Watkins and Miss Bin.

56 RIVAL GENERALS IN SZECHUAN

All Wanting Fat Jobs: General Yang Sen, Military Governor; His Popularity

From Our Own Correspondent.

Chêngtu, June 3.

General Yang Sen has received official word from Peking that he is appointed Tuli for the Province. This disposes of the problem for the present as to who shall be the first man in the Province. If General Yang's own wishes had been consulted he would have chosen to be Civil Governor rather than Military Governor, but there is no doubt that he is the man eminently fitted for the position, and will do all in his power to give Szechuan a time of peace and prosperity. Ten Sieh-hou is to be Civil Governor. It is not decided yet whether he will remain in Chungking with his office or come to the Capital.

The other leading generals Liu Hsiang, Liu Tsen-hou and Yuan Tsu-ming seem to be satisfied with their appointments as Border Chieftains. It remains to be seen after all the plans and change of plans, whether the present arrangement is really satisfactory to all concerned. One can hardly think so in West China where the change of office has become a habit, and a dangerous one.

There is little wonder that it is difficult to keep peace very long here when we know that there are 56 eligible generals roaming about the country, most of them with an eye on the best positions. Of course Hsiong Keh-wu and Tan Mao-shin are eliminated for the time being, but if reports are true and they are purchasing millions of dollars worth of arms and ammunition from France and other places, then it is quite possible that they will make an effort in the near future to regain prestige here.

CHRISTIAN COLLEGE COMMENCEMENTS

Soochow University

From Our Own Correspondents.

Soochow, June 24.

The commencement exercises of Soochow University, School of Science of Science and Arts, are to be held on Friday, the 27th instant. The commencement week programme was initiated last Sunday by the Rev. J. W. Shen, of Nanking Theological Seminary, who preached the Bacclaureate Sermon. The class day exercises in which the graduating class bid farewell to schoolmates and faculty was held on Wednesday evening. On Thursday a play, "Lady Windermere's Fan," translated into Chinese, will be performed by the departing seniors. The chief speaker on the programme on Friday will be Mr. J. M. Van, the editor of the "Association Progress."

There will be six candidates to receive the degree of Bachelor of Arts, three Bachelors of Science and five Bachelors of Science in Chemistry. An honorary degree of Doctor of Laws will be conferred upon Mr. Wang Ching-kui.

The Alumini day, instead of being held sometime this week, has been postponed until the autumn, when the new Science Hall will be formally opened. The China medical Board Fund providing for equipment and supplies in the science departments is now available and orders for same have been sent out.

The teaching staff of the science departments will be increased by the arrivals of Dr. White, Mr. Tomlin and Mr. Tsai. Dr. White will join the department of chemistry, Mr. Tomlin physics and Mr. Tsai Biology.

St. Faith's Girls' School, Yangchow.

Yangchow, June 23.

The Commencement Exercises of St. Faith's Girls' School are being held to-day. There are two who graduate from the Middle School, four from the Higher Primary and ten from the Lower Primary departments.

Yesterday afternoon a piano recital was given by Miss Hsu and Miss Chen, two girls who are receiving diplomas to-day. They are the first graduates to have taken the entire course in St. Faith's School, opened 10 years ago, and this year's exercises have been of unusual interest on this account.

SWALLOWED A LIVE CENTIPEDE

As Anti-Foxin: Chinese Woman's Ordeal: Dragon Festival at Mienchow

From Our Own Correspondent.

Mienchow, Sze., June 9.

A few days ago a Chinese woman in the city was extremely ill. She went to a local doctor and he prescribed a centipede, charging her three dollars, and instructing her to eat it. It was a poisonous variety and the idea seems to have been that it would act as an anti-toxin to the poison in her system. It made her very ill. Her face and lips swelled to such an extent that she eat no food for five days.

This is only one of many examples that might be given which show that the ordinary Chinese is still living in a world that belongs to a far distant past.

The Boxers, or Red Lantern Sect to use the expression of a formant, are busy in the neighbourhood of Chungpa. They write certain mystic characters on paper, burn it and sprinkle the ashes in water, they then drink the water and suppose that they are immune from bodily damage. I have even heard that sometimes soldiers refrain from firing at them supposing it would be a waste of good ammunition. These people are doubtless much the same type as the Shuen Tien-chiao whom I mentioned sometime back. There does not appear to be any specially anti-foreign element in their attitude.

The Dragon Boat Festival.

The Dragon Boat Festival this year was a great success. The military took it in hand, and there was quite a regatta on the River Fou, with crowds of spectators on the large concrete dyke and along the shores of the river. Several boats were pavilioned with vari-coloured calico, and one gorgeous effort was canopied with red silk. There were soldiers, and their ladies on all these boats. Athletes from among the rank and file paddled canoes swiftly up the river, dived for ducks and otherwise enjoyed themselves. Successful divers were ornamented with a red band round the head.

The Dragon Boat Festival of course commemorates the historic suicide of Ch'oh Yuan, a statesman of the Chow dynasty who drowned himself in the Tongking Lake as a protest against his sovereign's bad government. The repentant monarch went to find him in a boat. He would be a bold man, however, who dared to a categoric statement of everything the Chinese do believe in connexion with the feast. The name by which it is most popularly known up here is Tuan Yang, although T""i'en Chong is also heard occasionally. Tuan Yang connects it in natural sequence with Ching Ming, and alludes to the end of the Yang period in the year's progress, and the immiment approach of Yin which arrives at Hsia Chih, or the Summer Solstice. Yang is the period of Earth's impregnation: the time when the crops are sown; Yin is the period of gestation when fruitful Earth brings forth her treasures. The Chinese here say that the present local peace results from the keeping of the feast.

We have had a lot of rain. On the 7th the river rose considerably beyond the bridge. It is now below the bridge once more. Seldom does the water remain so low up till June.

LABOUR IN JAPAN

Geneva, June 24.

With reference to the protest of Mr. Suzuki, the Japanese Workers' Delegate to the International Labour Conference and his proposal for the Conference to institute an inquiry into the question of liberty of association of workers, the Japanese Government delegate stated that the Japanese Government had shown goodwill towards the development of workers' associations and observes and fully appreciates the principle of freedom of association of the workers, but will oppose Mr. Suzuki's proposal on various grounds—Reuter.

THE RECENT INVASION OF A TOKIO HOTEL

Now Effectively Shown to Have Been a Farce Staged by Young Men Desiring Notoriety: The Danger of Exaggerated Views

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Tokio, June 11.

When I wrote in a previous communication that the so-called raid on the Imperial Hotel during its regular Saturday night dance, on June 7, by a band of thugs masquerading as patriots had nothing really serious behind it, except that it was an unpleasant and unwarranted intrusion, I did not know that my observations, based on the knowledge of the Japanese character gained during a period of many years' intimate co-operation with them and on conversations which I have since had with people of this country in all walks of life, both official and unofficial, would be so soon confirmed.

It is now fully proved that the "invasion" of the hotel ball room was a farce, planned to play on the ignorance of foreigners here—and the greater portion of the foreigners in Tokio to-day are those who have come here since the earthquake and do not purpose staying, once reconstruction demands have been fully met—and to force themselves into the limelight. In the latter objective, the irresponsible youths, who masqueraded as patriots, have succeeded beyond their most sanguine expectations, if one may judge from the cables received here of the headlines said to have been carried by the British and American newspapers. This is exactly what these youngsters wanted to secure, according to confessions made by them to the police, who have the whole gang under lock and key, and they were immensely aided by some of the foreign correspondents, who lost their nerve and could not size up the situation in its proper perspective and proportion.

The hotel management has decided not to have any further dances for a time, and these "patriots" have been enabled to stick another feather in their caps thereby, though the wisdom of the decision of the management is hardly to be questioned. It is not only the Americans and other foreigners who suffer through this temporary interdiction of dancing in the Imperial Hotel, but also several Japanese who looked forward with longing to these functions for some pleasant relaxation.

Need for Temperance

Feeling is still tense, though; but there are already ample indications of the feverheat of anger having passed its zenith. The students here—like the Chinese students—feel that on their slender shoulders depends the wiping out of the "insult" suffered by Japan, and they continue, and will continue, to make demonstrations and indulge in soap-box orations. I have listened to several of these. The main theme was that American goods should be boycotted. The listening audience was almost uninterested in the capitulation of thread-bare sentimentalities. There is an element of drama in street-corner harangues and the dramatic attracts youths and the more bovine, intellectually, of the grown-ups. The gatherings listening to the fulminations of the students-orators were for the most part composed of students themselves and of the lower classes. Occasionally, an individual of the black-coated, middle class, would stop, listen awhile and pass along with a grin on his face.

On notable feature of the agitation is that those participating have taken a pledge to abstain from "hot and rebellious liquors" while the campaign is on. This is a tremendous asset to all concerned, for a drunken orator can easily make trouble.

Puerility of the Agitators.

Dancing in Tokio is not, by any means, at a complete stop. I went yesterday to a cabaret behind the Ginza, Tokio's main shopping street, and found things just as usual. In fact, there were more people than ordinarily go there. The Japanese were, by far, in the majority, but there were also British, French and one Hollander. At the entrance was posted a notice:

"American Ladies and Gentlemen will please oblige by not entering."

I thought the tone in which the prohibition was made deserved every praise. Evidently this is merely a sop to the agitators and does not represent the feelings of the cabaret management or of those who go there. Dancing was done to the strains of a Victrola and American jazz records.

The puerility of the agitators and the absurd lengths to which they are trying to go—lengths that are already bringing trouble on themselves from their own countrymen—was strikingly borne on me yesterday as I was riding in a street car. In walked a coy Japanese maiden attired in Occidental clothes. As the car clang-clanged along, a couple of youths walked up to her and demanded to know whether she was a Japanese woman.

"Certainly," came back her reply.

"Why do you then wear American clothes? Why not wear a kimono?" was the next question.

"How do you know these are American clothes?" she flashed back. "These may be French, English, Italian. What do you know about clothes anyway?"

The motor-man shut off the power, the conductor came where the debate was going on and all in the car listened attentively to the verbal passage at arms between the fair passenger and the two husky youths. Then another young man stepped forward, walked up to the two and asked: "What clothes are you wearing anyway."

There was no reply. These two pestering "patriots" were also clad in Occidental garments—and the rescuer of Beauty from the "patriot beasts" appealed to the passengers to prevent such displays of asinine stupidity as would make Japan the laughing stock of the whole world. The passengers saw the point and firmly, yet politely, ejected the two young men. The conductor, with a twinkle of humour in his eyes, gave them each a transfer ticket.

This episode shows that it is not fair to judge of what is transpiring here merely through the medium of sensational news such as the Imperial Hotel incident.

Boycott of Canned Goods.

A boycott of canned goods has been commenced by an organization of housewives. This is really not an anti-American development and is not, in fact, even a new development. It has gained headway and headlines in the newspapers since it coincided with the recent untoward demonstrations, but the boycott of canned goods was agreed on weeks before the Japanese Ambassador, Mr. Hanihara, sent his now historic note to the secretary of State Mr. Hughes.

The canned goods boycott began when it was discovered that the tin-cutter, that ubiquitous aid in kitchens all over the world, was making inroads into purses that were far from elastic and that, so the men at least claimed, was making okusan (the housewife) lazy since she had proportionately much less cooking to do.

I understand that Japan takes more tinned meats from the Argentine Republic and Australia than from the United States so that to characterize this as an anti-American move is again incorrect. Japanese manufacturers of tinned meats and tinned stuffs find this a splendid opportunity for popularizing their wares and are putting forward all the possible propaganda for the purpose.

IF the plans of the Waichiaopu materialize a Chinese consulate will be shortly established in Indo-China. It is said that the subject was broached during the visit of Governor Merlin in Peking and that the latter expressed himself in favour of the Chinese proposal, promising to bring the matter to the attention of the French Foreign Office.

THE League of Nations will hold an international opium conference in November this year. A preparatory committee meeting will be opened at Genoa on June 27. The question of inflicting penalties for infringements of the Opium Convention in China will be discussed. Mr. Chu Chao-hsin, Chargé d'Affaires in London, will attend the Conference, representing China.

ARMED ATTACK ON HANKOW STORE

Escape of Robber Without His Booty: Consternation in Business Circles

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Wuchang, June 19.

Last week, in Hankow, a daring attempt at robbery was committed. It was not a success; but the thief was so nearly successful, that the shop-keepers and bankers of this centre have been given furiously to think, wondering how their establishments can be protected against similar attempts in the future. It was a cloth-shop on the busy First Mat'eo, the most crowded and busiest street in Hankow. The attendants were preparing to put up the shutters at the end of the day, and the day's takings were being counted preparatory to being placed in the safe. One of the assistants, having counted several bundles of notes, placed them upon the counter for just a moment. Immdiately, a man sprang in, seized the notes, and was out of the shop again almost before any-one had realized what had happened. Chase was given at once, and became so hot that the thief was glad enough to drop his booty and get away. It is said that he fired a revolver at one of his pursuers, but no-one was hurt.

The very simplicity of this kind of robbery, and the ease with which the thief can make his escape, whether successful or not, has caused something like consternation in commercial circles. The bankers of Hankow have met together to consult what measures can best be taken to avoid a danger of this kind in the future. A reward of $500 has been offered to any-one who can effect the arrest of the criminal, and $1,000 is promised to the relatives of any-one who should lose his life in trying to bring about the arrest. Special detectives are to be employed to watch shops where wealth is likely to be displayed in such a way. The simplest way would be to forbid shop-assistants to place any bundles of notes on the counters, or in any positions where they could be seized by a sudden dash from the street. But such a prohibition would probably be useless!

Electric Light and Water Supply.

It is rumoured that the streets of both Hankow and Wuchang are shortly to be lighted at night by electricity. It is difficult to see how this most desirable thing is to be done,—on this side of the river at any rate,—for the power at present supplied by the Wuchang Electric Lighting Company is barely sufficient for its present uses. Seeing that the Governor's yamen, the military barracks, and every Government school in the city, have all to be supplied with electric light free of charge, and that there is naturally no idea of economising in power in these institutions, it is evident that the Company starts with a heavy handicap before it can begin to make any profits. Consequently, the light used by merchants and private citizens is both expensive and dim, and has often been know to fail altogether. Two or three years ago, an extra power station was added, outside the city on the north-west side, and this has done a good deal to relieve the situation. But the lights are still not satisfactory, and not always to be depended upon for a continuous supply. Owing to this fact, more than one institution has preferred to incur the expense and trouble of installing its own electric lighting plants, rather than rely on the public supply. Boone University, has been running its own engine for three years; and two years ago Wesley College invested in a 1½ kilowatt Delco engine.

Water supply is another problem, which institutions that aim at efficiency have had to try to solve for themselves, because the public authorities will do nothing. Wuchang is surrounded by a chain of lakes, and has the Yangtze half encircling it, so that a system of water-supply could easily be erected, were the money forthcoming and honest men ready to control it. If a company were formed, and the works put in good hands, it would pay for itself over and over again. But no such thing! Every-one in the city and outside it has to be content to draw their water from wells; and when the wells run dry, then to pay coolies to bring water in buckets from the river, even if it is a distance of two or three miles. Wesley College has five wells, which give a sufficient supply except in times of drought; Generally in the autumn the wells run dry, and then it becomes necessary to hire the right to dig pits in the fields in some low-lying land outside, and to employ coolies to carry this water into the compound. Finally, when the pits become dry, the last resource is to send men to the river, more than two miles away. A strong man can make four journies in the day, carrying two buckets each time, and each load costs four hundred cash.

Boone University have recently built their own water-tower. The engine which is used to supply the electric light is also used as a pumping-engine to pump the water from the well into the tanks at the top of the tower, and from this the whole compound is supplied by means of pipes. The big hospital of the American Church Mission has recently sunk an artesian well in the middle of their compound. From this, a fairly good supply is obtainable, but not so much as was hoped for. During the sinking, more hard rocks was encountered than had been bargained for. Consequently, it has been found impossible to drive the bore so deep as was originally intended, and the big supply has not been tapped.

DISASTROUS FIRE IN YUNNANFU

Surroundings of New Memorial Gate and Part of Building Itself All Destroyed

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Yunnanfu, June 6.

It is only a week or two since we chronicled the opening by the Governor, Tang Chi-yao, of the improved South Gate of Yuannanfu with its circle of shops and central gardens.

Now we have to record a disastrous fire which broke out in a candle shop a few yards away and destroyed about 300 shops and dwellings including about one-third of the new buildings. How the fire actually originated is not definitely known but within a few minutes of the outbreak in the candle shop a number of buildings were ablaze.

The fire rapidly spread to the beautiful "chung ai" pai-fong and this was soon a mass of flames, forming a bridge by which it spread across the main street and ignited the buildings opposite.

There had not been rain for several months and water was very scarce but the fire brigade and many willing helpers did their best to arrest the spread of the fire with what water could be got and by pulling down buildings in the vicinity.

It was obvious from a distance that a big fire was in progress and the aviation school, which is situated a few miles outside the southern suburb in the country, after sending an aeroplane to reconnoitre, despatched their fire engine to assist in fighting the flames.

It appeared at one time as if the whole of the new buildings and gate would be destroyed, but thanks to the absence of wind, a most unusual thing at this time of the year, the area of the fire was limited.

Suicide of the Candle Dealer.

The owner of the candle shop who was not on the premises but arrived soon after the outbreak, when he realized that the origin of the fire was in his shop, threw himself into the flames and perished.

It is reported that four other people lost their lives in the fire.

The area all round the southern approach to the new gateway is now a mass of ruins.

The deputy of foreign affairs was early on the scene and made a careful inspection of the devastated area.

A subscription list for sufferers from the fire was opened and received good support, the B. A. T. heading the list.

Many of the shopkeepers lost everything that they possessed and were on the verge of starvation.

They have now been helped with one to two hundred dollars and booths are being rapidly erected to enable them to start their business again.

KIDNAPPING TERROR IN CHEKIANG

Inrush of Defeated Soldiers from Fukien: No Violence Yet But Much Panic

FROM A CORRESPONDENT.

Yenchow, Chê., June 16.

Some of the rich homes in certain quarters of this region have been stirred to panic excitement. It appears there are several roving bands of brigands who are bent on kidnapping and holding to ransom. Two wealthy homes have already been plundered with loss of life and a young boy of each family carried off with no trace, thus far, as to their whereabouts. Proclamations have been posted offering big rewards for the capture of the ruffians who are supposed to hail from the gangs operating in Chenghsien district.

Added to this scare, great consternation has arisen through the news of the Fukien defeated soldiers making their way back to the province through a corner of Kiangse and Chêkiang. It appears that part of this defeated army made their way out to the Kuangsi river and had, more or less, to fight their way up from Hokeo to Kuangsinfu and Yushanhsien. Outside the latter city a stand was made and for 20 hours heavy firing continued with loss on both sides. Eventually, crowds of the retiring troops reached the city of Changshan. The officials there became panic-stricken and together with the business people, large sums of money were collected and conveyed by a deputation who went out some distance to meet the incoming soldiers. It appears there are a great many sick amongst them and some died on the road. Many city people, fearing for the worst, fled to the country. Everyone seems to be on the tip-toe of expectation as to what may happen next but no violence has been shown simply because food and money have been freely given by the people. It is said that the soldiers on reaching the city freely bought from the shops with the money they had received, even watches and rings, but chiefly cloth to make fresh clothes.

They have hired all the folks they could get hold of to wash clothes for them and attend to their immediate needs. The tailors are having a busy time and almost every household has lent tubs for warm baths and the tea shops provide tea. It appears these retreating soldiers have pledged themselves not to burn houses or kill and steal and they have given their word that no woman shall be molested. The majority of the men who reached Changshan are young fellows, in their twenties. The first batch numbered some 300 but now they are well over a thousand strong. A large detachment from the Chuchow garrison has been sent up to maintain order.

GUNBOAT TURNED PIRATE

After Surrendering to Freebooters: Sensational Piracies

A Hongkong telegram to the "Shunpao" reports a sensational coup by pirates on the Chinese gunboat Kiangtah, probably with the connivance of the crew of the man-of-war, who were discontented for having received no pay for a long time.

Pirates were concealed on board the Kiangtah, the captain and sub-commander were overpowered and bound up, and the gunboat was forced to proceed to the Heungshan District.

Three boats on the Hongkong-Shekki run, and a dozen or more boats carrying silk and five or six boats carrying other cargoes were systemetically pillaged by the gunboat. The total value of the booty is estimated to amount to between $700,000 and $800,000. It is believed this was the biggest case of piracy committed in the Canton delta in recent years.

Upon the approach of a British gunboat, the pirates made off in a launch they had commandeered, taking with them the Captain as hostage and most of the armament of the Kiangtah, including some machine guns and a Maxim gun. The Kiangtah then returned to Whampoa on the afternoon of June 21.

THE JAPANESE CHURCH AND EXCLUSION ACT

A New National Move: Christian Pastors' Indignation at the Senate's Discriminatory Action

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tokio, June 17.

With the object of establishing a pure Japanese Christian church and shaking off the "monetary yoke" that the parent missions in America are alleged to have saddled on Christian organizations here, a meeting, attended by the leading representatives of over 150 churches throughout the country and 200 different Christian scholars, was held in Tokio to decide what steps should be taken to break the bonds now linking the Christian churches in Japan with parent missions in the United States. Heated discussions ensued and a committee of ten was appointed to go into the matter thoroughly and to formulate plans for independence.

The aim to establish a Japanese Christian church, untrammelled by dependence on missions abroad, is no new thing. This has been the subject of discussion at annual mission synods long before the immigration question came to have the large part in the life of the Japanese nation that it has to-day. At that time, however, the proposal for securing complete independence also aimed at carefully preserving all other bonds of union and co-operation. The elevation of Japanese pastors to the episcopal chair was regarded as a step in the direction of permitting the Christian Church in Japan to stand on its own feet, and the parent missions were in full sympathy with the aspiration of the young Christian church here to carry on the work of evangelization unaided. To-day, the exclusion law has been further availed of to press home the move for independence and has also included within its scope, at least in so far as many individual Japanese missionaries are concerned, something akin to non-co-operation with American missions so long as the exclusion law remains on the statute books of the United States.

"U. S. Commercialized Christianity."

The Christianity of America was severely censured at the meeting, elderly Japanese pastors declaring that "besides the exclusion law being un-Christian, insulting and discriminatory, the Christianity of America to-day commands no respect, and America is responsible for commercializing the faith preached by Jesus Christ."

One of the speakers, the Rev. Naomi Tamura, waxed both indignant and belligerent, and, in the course of his speech, declared that the time will yet come when Japan and America will have to fight, if the United States "continues to maintain her present attitude towards the coloured races. One hundred years from now," he shouted, "all that territory west of the Rocky Mountains will be Japanese."

Open With Prayer.

The meeting of Christian pastors and scholars, which has proved to be one of the stormiest yet held in connexion with the passing of the new immigration law, commenced in orthodox fashion with prayer and meditation. The debate was launched by the Right Rev. Bishop Uzaki who declared that the exclusion bill would have far-reaching effects in the future, and that it not only put the Japanese residents in America in an ugly position, but that it also formed a source of acute embarrassment to the entire Japanese people. "There were several ways of reaching a solution," he said, "but the Senate preferred to insult and despise us, and this action was based on racial grounds. As Japanese, we cannot accept this without demur; as Christians, we must protest or it would be acqui scing in the wrong and bolstering up a falsehood. It is time for us Christians in Japan to awaken our fellow-Christians in America to the dangerous current on which their country is drifting. There is no racial prejudice in the eyes of Jesus Christ and no room for it anywhere, however camouflaged, in His doctrines. Japanese Christian missions should forthwith organize and coalesce into one strong federation, and carry on their evangelical mission without relying any longer on monetary aid from America."

Quotes First Treaty.

The Rev. Kanzo Uchimura, who has been a Christian pastor for 47 years, read passages from the first treaty concluded between Japan and the United States shortly after Commodore Perry's arrival here.

"The first article in this treaty," he said, "declares that 'There shall be perfect, permanent and universal peace, sincere and cordial amity, between the United States and Japan. . . . without exception of persons or places.' The American Congress has not hesitated to tear this treaty to pieces, just as it has done to so many others.

"We cannot keep silent at this juncture. It would bring on us the rightful accusation that we are being bribed by the American mission boards. If we fail to combat this un-Christian trend of the United States we shall be wanting in duty towards ourselves and shall be betraying the spirit of the Gospel."

Splits into Two.

The discussion was, at all times, fast and, occasionally, even furious. The gathering split into two camps, one demanding extreme measures such as the immediate severing of all bonds binding the Christian church in Japan to the American missions abroad, while the more moderate wing asked that further time and consideration be given to the matter before any drastic measures are taken. The result was the appointment of a committee of ten to investigate and report on the situation.

Those in favour of complete independence from the parent missions, quite apart from the smart of the immigration ruling which has brought matters to a head, declare that the Christian church in Japan has outgrown the stage of a "young industry" and ought to set up house for itself, and that financial assistance should not be accepted from abroad because such would be the securing merely of the shadow instead of the substance of independence.

JAPANESE RECEPTION OF AMERICAN NOTE

Empty and Theoretical: Japan's Main Contention Unanswered: Public None the Less Calm

Tokio, June 20.

While generally appreciating the friendly tone of the American reply to the Japanese Note of protest against the Immigration Bill, the morning newspapers practically unanimously stamp it as empty and theoretical. They criticize it for failure to answer Japan's contention that the Immigration Law does not conform with the spirit of true friendship and is a violation of international comity and morality.

Rather than urging that the question should be followed up, the tendency is evinced by many commentators to recommend that the matter should be dropped and Japan's future policy conformed to the changing conditions of international relationships.

It is stated on reliable authority that Japan does not propose to send another Note at present, but it is indicated that she will send an acknowledgment and attempt to keep the question open until a more favourable opportunity offers, apparently until after the American elections and the assembling of the new Congress.

Officials are quoted as approving the friendliness of the Note, but being somewhat disappointed, though appreciating the difficulties under which it was written.

Protest Meetings General

Meanwhile protest meetings continue to be held in different parts of the country, and resolutions are being adopted, the principal tenor of which is building up the national strength and prestige.

Evidences are accumulating that the attempted anti-American boycott is losing ground, especially in face of the increasing opposition and condemnation of traders and others who have a recognized right to speak.

The Minister of Commerce this morning condemns such a movement as dishonourable and likely to prove a boomerang. He says that the Government are opposed to an anti-American move, but are ready to encourage the exclusion of luxuries, if this opportunity is seized, to inculcate habits of thrift and simplicity of life as well as for the development of domestic industries.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Yokohama, June 25.

Yesterday afternoon, prior and during the arrival of the President Madison, foreigners, particularly Americans, were subjected to an unusually rigorous examination by a petty Customs official. He went the length of ordering them to take off their boots and stand in their stockinged feet on wet floors. Receiving a complaint, higher officials intervened and apologized for the unnecessary discourtesy. The offender has been dismissed.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Tokio, June 25.

Christian workers in Japan, American as well as Japanese, who are sitting in conference here, today passed a resolution of their firm determination to co-operate for the solution of the American-Japanese question. The meeting was characterized by a spirit of sympathy, which, it is stated, has removed any likelihood of a breach amongst the churches of Japan.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE ADVANCEMENT OF EDUCATION

National Convention to Meet at South-eastern University in Nanking

Nanking, June 21.

The convention of the National Association for the Advancement of Education will be held at the National South-Eastern University from July 3 to 9. About 1,000 delegates will be present. The resolutions reached at the Convention are expected to have a wide national influence.

The World Federation of Educational Associations, of which Dr. A. O. Thomas (America) is President and Drs. P. W. Kuo (China) and Sainsbury (England) are Vice-Presidents, will hold its second convention in Scotland during 1926. The Convention was held in San Francisco last July and was a notable success, and hopes are entertained that the second will be of still greater value. Chinese educators, under the leadership of Dr. P. W. Kuo, are already making preparations for the Chinese delegation.

Next Wednesday, June 25, will be a red-letter day in the history of the National South-Eastern University. Besides the commencement exercises, the new Library will be formally opened and the corner-stone of the new Science Building will be laid. Both the Military and Civil Governors of the Province have consented to speak on the occasion.

The new Meng-Fang Library was named in memory of the father of Marshal Chi, who donated $150,000 for its construction, besides a large collection of books. The building is of reinforced concrete in the Greek style and has a capacity of over 1,000,000 books.

The new Science Hall is to be built on an even larger scale, having a frontage of 250 feet and an area of about 18,750 square feet. The building will be three-storeys high and will cost about $200,000 for construction, wiith an additional $50,000 for equipment and $30,000 for staff. Half of the total sum of $280,000 has been donated by the China Medical Board of the Rockefeller Foundation, and the other half by the Chinese Government.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

It is reported that Mme. Wu Pei-fu, accompanied by her eldest son, arrived by train in Hankow on Tuesday afternoon last. She is now living in a private residence in the native city.

At Merchiston, Banff, on May 5, Mr. Robert Campbell Edwards, late of the Hongkong & Shanghai Bank, Yokohama, was married to Heather Abercrombie (Harry), daughter of the late Dr. E. P. Macfarlae, Japan.

CLASSIC "WEN LI" RESTORED

Mukden's Superb Contempt for the New Learning: Text Books Scrapped

From Our Own Correspondent.

Fakumen, Man., June 18.

A curious retrograde step in education has been taken by the authorities in Mukden. The school text-books based on "Kuo Yü," or colloquial Chinese, which are national in scope, are to be scrapped, and in their stead, an entirely new set is to be introduced, the language of which is to be the classical or "Wen Li." The causes of this change of front are two-fold: (1) Manchuria still asserts its independence of Peking and the Government there; (2) The Civil Governor, who is immediately responsible for making the change, is not an expert in the new education and evidently hankers after the great days of old.

From every point of view, such a reactionary ukase is deplorable. The "Pai Hua," or ordinary spoken Mandarin, has become the recognized tongue of the Government and people. Thanks to the heroic campaign of Prof. Hu Shih his colleagues of the National University of Peking, the battle for freedom from the fetters of the past was won in a four years' fight against tremendous odds. What in the realm of language Luther did for Germany by translating the Bible into common speech, and Wycliffe did for England, and Dante for Italy, has been accomplished by these far-seeing and self-sacrificing scholars, in order to bring culture to the people and raise their tongue to the level of literature. The battle is over, and will not be fought again. As Dr. C. I. Cheng has said: "What the missioners failed to achieve in the work of a hundred years, has been gained in four year by the New Thought Movement."

And now with the enthusiasm for Night-Schools for the illiterate, inaugurated by Mr. James Yen (of the Y.M.C.A.) and his brilliant idea of a set of Four Books teaching 1,000 of the most useful characters, China is awaking to the real problem of Republicanism—How are the masses to learn to read?

Countering the Movement.

Manchuria, therefore, to the utter disgust of the school teachers and the educated youth of the stricken area, is turning its back on the present day and ignoring the needs of the coming generation. The only remedy perhaps is, in the words of a local official of the County Education Office: "Let the Churches and Y.M.C.A.'s go ahead with colloquial language teaching and pay no heed to the new curriculum emenating from Mukden." Possibly also, a wave of zeal for night schools may result. Outside one of our local Government Schools, notices have been posted, announcing Night-School classes and inviting pupils regardless of age to join the classes gratis. It will be a real calamity if one man in high position, unfamiliar with the facts, is able to put back the hands of the clock.

Good Work in Drug Suppression.

The power of Chinese officials for good or evil is remarkable. Because a new Police Superintendent is installed in Fukumen, opium and morphia are being suppressed. In itself that is a notable event. But when policemen are stationed outside Japanese morphia dens, ready to arrest Chinese frequenters as they come out, then we know that a new broom is at work. Whether a clean sweep will be made, remains to be seen. Starving out the Japanese dens would obviously be an ideal policy, which could hardly lead to friction. One never can tell, however, how long an effort at social reform will persist. "Five minutes of hot heart," is the Chinese modern quip anent their own tendency to impulsive action devoid of staying power.

As an outcome of the recommendations made by the Hongkong Marine Court of Inquiry on the foundering of the Loongsang during the disastrous typhoon of August last, 17 90-ton concrete blocks are to replace the present buoy anchors in the harbours. Each block is 13 feet square and 7½ feet high, with a suction cavity at the bottom. It is hoped to lay from four to six this season.

TSINGTAO AS EDUCATIONAL CENTRE

Suggestion that American Indemnity Funds Be Used to Start Technical College

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tsingtao, June 17.

The American remission of the Boxer Indemnity has created a stir here. In educational circles suggestions of various kinds, as to the best way to make use of the money remitted, are being advanced. There is a strong plea for the establishment in Tsingtao of a university of high technical and professional training. At a dinner given in honour of Mr. T. C. Chu, the retiring Vice-Managing Director of the Kiaochou-Tsinan ailway, on Monday night at the International Club, there was a heated debate on the subject.

Dr. D. Y. Lin, the chief of the Forestry Department here, an authority on educational matters, in an interview with me before the dinner, said he had no intention whatever to minimize the importance of those proposals which had already been made, but he felt he was entitled to advance a suggestion, which was that there should be established here in China a university of high technical training similar to the Tsing Hua College in management. Such a university should be modelled after the Massachusetts Institute of Technology of Boston or other technical colleges of recongnized standing in America. It should specialize in different branches of engineering, mining, agriculture and forestry, and arrange to give the students a thorough training along such technical lines. In view of the vast resources in China awaiting development, said Dr. Lin, the importance of such training became evident. The fact that every year there were hundreds of students going from the different provinces to Europe and Amrica for higher technical training was sufficient proof that there was a great need here for a university which he had in mind.

"The Tsing Hua College in Peking as we all know has done splendid work during the last 14 years or so by preparing and sending students to America, and such work has certainly filled a special need and should be continued. But if an institution of high technical training is started here in China, it will mean that these Tsing Hua students or at least those who wish to specialize in technical studies, need not travel several thousand miles for their education."

The following reasons were advanced in favour of Tsingtao as a centre for such an institution:—(1) Because Tsingtao is a city of international significance:—(2) because Tsingtao is a modern city easily accessible and is bound to become the port for North China; (3) because Tsingtao has all the necessary technical facilities such as harbour and municipal works, railway workshops, factories, agricultural and forestry experimental stations and such facilities could be used for practical work for students; (4) because the present Tsingtao administration has already set aside a group of splendid buildings for a university scheme and would welcome any plan whereby the returned indemnity might be used to carry out the scheme and to make it a success. The buildings set aside are ideally located iin the residential section of Tsingtao, and according to estimate would easily accommodate 1,500 to 2,000 students. It should be mentioned that these buildings were formerly occupied as a barracks by the German troops and are solid structures and fit in every way to be used for educational purposes. If built to-day, they would easily cost a million dollars.

Foreign residents are on the whole in favour of Dr. Lin's scheme and so are, it is understood, Mr. Walter Adams, the American Consul, and Admiral Washington who, when here, displayed great interest in the matter.

At the dinner to Mr. T. C. Chu, Dr. Lin, Mr. Li, of the Salt Gabelle, and others spoke strongly in favour of a determined effort to secure the indemnity for the purpose heretofore outlined. The opposition, chiefly led by Railway employees, was against the diverting of any funds from the Tsing Hua College. One speaker said there was always the fear that the money would fall into the hands of politicians.

INSURING SHENSI AGAINST FAMINE

A Great Irrigation Scheme to Protect and Revive Grain Areas: Over 1,400,000 Mow to be Saved in 2½ Years for $1,750,000: A $2,000,000 Dam to Irrigate Twice as Much Later on Preparations are being made by the China International Famine Relief Commission and the provincial authorities of Shensi for putting in hand an extensive irrigation scheme which will bring new life to the food-producing region of Shensi and practically insure the province from future famine, states the "Chinese Economic Monthly. The area is called the Wei Peh region, and comprises over four and a half million mow of land. At present, owing to the gradual deterioration of irrigation machinery which existed in times gone by, only 35,000 mow of this extensive tract of land are irrigated. Shensi's granary is therefore dependent on the vagaries of Nature, with disastrous consequences sometimes to life and crops. By the scheme initiated by the Famine Relief Commission, the price of land will advance by no less than $30 a mow. Unirrigated land in the province sells for $10 a mow, while the land comprised in the 35,000 mow of irrigated territory fetches $40. Thus it will be seen that from the point of view of land values alone the undertaking will mean an addition to the provincial wealth of many millions of dollars. The crops raised in this region are wheat, beans, millet, and cotton, wheat comprising about 60 per cent. of the production; and it is anticipated by the Famine Relief Commission that as a result of systematic irrigation, present crop returns will be doubled. This does not seem an over-optimistic estimate when the extent of the scheme is realized, as well as the existing state of the region, which depends almost solely for its water supply on intermittent spring rains.

The project is divided into two parts. As a result of the first scheme over 1,400,000 mow will be irrigated. This will cost about 1½ to 1¾ million dollars, and will take about 2½ years to complete. The southern part of the Wei Peh area will be irrigated first, and the project will include a low head dam 40 feet high with a detention reservoir for settling the worst of the mud deposits, a long line of ditchwork which will take the water over the plains, one main canal with laterals, and a tunnel nearly 2,500 metres in length.

A Monster Dam.

The second project will be in the nature of an extension of this work, with a high dam, a reservoir at the lower end of the tunnel, and a high canal leading over the northern part of the territory. Over twice as much land will be irrigated by the second project, and the cost will be in the neighbourhood of two million dollars. For the time being, however, plans for this half of the work have not been worked out, the Commission wishing to concentrate on the initial scheme in all its bearings. It is expected that it will take another two years to complete the second enterprise.

The finances of the first scheme have been tentatively budgeted, and, it is said, have been approved by the Governor of Shensi province. The Commission, in addition to supplying the brains of the work, will advance half a million dollars at 10 per cent. interest for three years. The Governor has agreed to be responsible for the remainder of the money, about a million dollars. The whole of the cost is to be borne eventually by the irrigated district. A condition of the scheme is that the million dollars apportioned to Shensi is to be raised within two years.

It is only due to the neglect of modern times that the Wei Peh region is so ill provided for. Irrigation works are recorded as far back as 246 B.C. This was the Cheng Kuo Canal which was completed by the great engineer, Cheng Kuo, and which watered the great plain for 130 years. The canal ran from the mouth of the King valley, crossing the Tsing, Yeh and Cho rivers, and then joined the Lo river which flowed to Tungchow. The main channel was 300 li long and the irrigated area 4,000,000 mow. This canal served for 130 years, but the slope of the King river was so steep and the current so swift that the rocky river bed soon wore out, with the result that the Cheng Kuo dam fell over, leaving the river water too low to reach the mouth of the canal.

In 95 B.C., an engineer of the Han Dynasty, named Pe Kung, built a canal at a place 135 feet above the mouth of the Cheng Kuo canal, flowing to the Wei Ho, a distance of 200 li. The irrigated area was 450,000 mow. In the T'ang Dynasty the people along the canal began to erect mill wheels, which hindered the free passage of the canal, and in 770 A.D. the irrigated area had diminished to 6,000 mow. Until the year 965 the people used kaoliang, brush and timber piles to dam up the river for irrigation purposes. This of course, improved the condition a little, but they had to be repaired after every summer storm and eventually proved impracticable.

In 1107 the Feng Li canal was dug 280 feet above the Pe Kung canal with its bed five feet below the water level of the river. This new canal was cut into the rocky hillside for a distance of 3,141 feet, with a section 12 feet wide at the bottom and 14 feet wide on top by an average depth of 30 feet. The canal then ran through the earthy strata for 42,200 feet to join the old canal. Two stone culverts and two locks were built for regulating the water supply. This canal did not last long, and in the year 1308 an investigation into the change of the King river bed revealed the fact that the mouth of the Cheng Kuo canal was 30 feet higher than the water surface, that of Pe Kung canal 11 feet and that of Feng Li canal seven feet. In 1339 Wang Yu Shih shifted the canal 510 feet farther up the river. The mouth of this new canal was three feet above the water level in the King; and to force the water into the canal a low dam about 15 feet high was built across the river with 110 stone baskets. The bank of the canal broke as time went on, while the muddy King water began to silt up the canal. Therefore, in the Tsing Dynasty it was decided to change the irrigation scheme altogether. Springs along the hillside were utilized for this purpose, and the entrance of the former canal was closed to prevent flooding from the King. This project is known as the Lung Tung canal, which has now an irrigation area only a hundredth part of the Cheng Kuo scheme. It irrigates only 35,000 mow. The new project will again provide a continuous water supply over the whole of the plain, 4,000,000 mow in extent; and its successful completion will provide China with its most ambitious irrigation undertaking of modern times.

Insurance Against Famine.

Mr. O. J. Todd, engineer representative of the China International Famine Relief Commission, recently investigated the Wei Peh region. His report, refers to the scheme in detail, and also affords an interesting glimpse of the economic conditions prevailing in the province. He says in part:—

"The matter of finances is, of course, the thing that concerns all of us and this has been discussed with both the Governor and with Gen. Tien, whom I met in Sanyuan on April 4. At that time I suggested to him that he should figure on forming a reclamation for irrigation district and call a meeting of the leading farmers and merchants most vitally interested to get them to pledge financial support by buying reclamation bonds. In this way Gen. Tien should raise $750,000 within less than two years in the Wei Peh region. Governor Liu should raise another $750,000 from general revenues. It is estimated that the work will take two and a half years from the time of completing all financial arrangements and actually beginning work. Half of this sum should be in reliable banks in the name of our Commission or subject to our drafts for this work by January 1, 1925. The other half should be ready by January 1, 1926. This matter of money must be attended to before orders can be given for equipment or cement.

"It seems likely that this district is the key of the food-producing area of Shensi, and the regulation of the water supply should mean practical insurance against future famines, for after all the Wei Peh district is the granary of the province and is the centre of the population. From this standpoint there seems no doubt as to the practicability or necessity of carrying this project through to completion at the earliest possible date. With good co-operation the work of completing the first unit to function for 1,400,000 mow of land should not require more than two and a half years.

"More encouragement should be given to the planting up of gulches, not only with willows such as are found in the valley of the Yen Shui east of Yenanfu, but also in putting in poplars and locusts, which will soon produce thickets that will have a decided effect in holding the toes of slopes. To plant the hilltops with trees is out of the question, due to the great amount of watering required to get them started and keep them alive the first few years. All through the province there is a tree planting campaign along the main roads, but no large portion of these trees will live unless a large amount of labour is put on, keeping them alive with water. In the valleys along the streams there is no difficulty. As a rule the willow is being planted by the road side. Pines are almost unknown from the Wei River north as far as we travelled. Cedars are grown successfully around temples wherever water is used in starting them. So important is this matter of renewing the timber supply that it is quite likely that we may include in our work programmes for future famines a certain amount of intelligent tree planting, with an understanding that the community receiving the benefit will keep them watered and protected from attacks of all kinds.

"In places we found the country so cut up by weathering that not over 50 per cent. of the country was tillable. In other places great care had been taken to plow and plant hillsides with 45 degree slopes. Here the planting was done like corn in hills 18 inches apart. But despite former brigandage that has driven people from the region and laid towns waste, the people are keeping all tillable land under cultivation and apparently raising more grain than they consume. Though all the plateaux and hill sides are doing dry farming, the river valleys are all carrying on irrigation by the use of small ditches, each farmer handling his own water supply. In no cases did it appear that a community ditch of any size was being maintained.

"This is the region that furnishes grain for parts of Shansi and Honan. It was to tap this region that the Red Cross road from Fenchowfu to the Yellow River was built in 1921. No carts are now used in this part of Shensi, and transport is almost all by donkey until the Yellow River is reached. The lack of roads makes it difficult to get this grain supply out to districts that used it. Without either telegraphic or road connexions, this country remains isolated and backward, and of little use to the rest of China. Even the coal that is being mined east of Yenanfu has but a limited local use."

THE DREAD HUAI RIVER

Conservancy Commissioner Sent from the Capital to Investigate

Peking, June 21.

Mr. Chang Jao-kuai, Director of the National Conservancy Bureau and Vice-Chariman of the Yangtze Commission, will leave here shortly for Nanking, where he will discuss with Marshal Chih Hsieh-yuan matter related to the conservancy of the Huai River. Mr. Chang Jao-kuai will also visit Mr. Chang Chien at South Tungchow.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

ARRIVAL OF MR. REX RAY AT WUCHOW

Peking, June 23.

A Consular telegram from Wuchow reports the arrival of Mr. Rex Ray, the American missionary who escaped after being captured by the bandits who raided the American hospital-boat Roanoke.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE GREAT MOULE BROTHERS

Subscription Opened for Hangchow Memorial Cathedral

An appeal has been launched by Bishop Molony for funds to enable a start to be made on Hangchow Cathedral, to be erected in memory of Bishop G. Moule and Archdeacon A. E. Moule, two brothers who gave half a century's devoted missionary service to China. These two brothers came to China in 1857 and 1867, and started work in Ningpo. There they passed through the great dangers of the Taiping Rebellion. After it was over George Moule moved to Hangchow, where the rest of his missionary life was spent until his death on a visit to England in 1911. He was Bishop in Mid-China from 1880 to 1907, and built the present church, which it is now proposed to replace by a Cathedral. Arthur Moule worked chiefly at Ningpo and Shanghai and became Archdeacon in 1880. He was an indefatigable worker and writer.

A sum of over £100 for the new church has been collected in England, largely among relatives and friends of the late Bishop and Archeacon. The making of an appeal in China has been delayed owing to other urgent claims, such as famine relief.

The Committee have now decided on a general plan: The total length of the church will be 144 feet (nearly as long as Holy Trinity Cathedral, Shanghai), and it is hoped to build in brick faced with Soochow stone. The cost of the apse and six bays, which will probably be erected first, will be about $40,000: the remaining bay and the two towers will cost another $20,000. This is a large sum, but the Chinese are collecting and the Committee wish to begin building as soon as possible. Contribution will be gratefully received by Bishop Molony, Ningpo. Cheques should be crossed "Hongkong and Shanghai Bank." Church collections will be specially gratifying as representing the offering of the poor for whom these two brothers spent their lives.

The Brothers' Work in China.

The lives of these two brothers were wholly given to the evangelization of the Chinese, and the building up of what is now the Church and Diocese of Chêkiang. Sons of the saintly and gifted Henry Moule, vicar for more than 50 years of Fordington, Dorchester, George Moule, born on January 28, 1828, and Arthur Moule, born on April 10, 1836, enjoyed the early training and holy influences of that home which their youngest brother, the late Bishop of Durham, has so beautifully described in his "Memories of a Vicarage."

It was only 14 years since the first two missionares of the C.M.S. to China had sailed for that distant land, when, at the age of 30, George Moule, with his wife, joined the pioneer missionaries who had reached Ningpo 10 years previously. The first two converts had been baptized seven years before, and in 1858 their total number did not exceed 100, all of them in and around the city of Ningpo. Three years later his younger brother, also bringing a devoted wife, was added to the missionary band.

Their earlier years were marked by the great upheaval of the Taiping rebellion, but as soon as the storm had passed, vigorous evangelization was recommenced, new out-stations were opened, and converts gathered in, till in 1864 George Moule moved to Hangchow, the first missionary of the C.M.S., or of any Protestant mission, to take up permanent residence in an inland city of China.

Meanwhile Arthur Moule remained at Ningpo; and at that time the converts of the Mission had grown to about 300.

In 1870 the Shaoshing mission was opened, and in the following year medical work was begun in Hangchow; while in 1872 the pioneer missionary of Ningpo, and friend and guide of the two brothers, W. A. Russell, was consecrated bishop, with the title of Bishop in North China.

Developments rapidly followed this important step. In 1875 Sing Eng-teh, the friend and fellow-evangelist of Arthur Moule was ordained deacon, and in the following year three other Chinese, all of whom had been pupils of the brothers, were also admitted to Holy Orders. In this way began that succession of faithful Chinese clergy which George Moule in later years did so much foster and guide.

Luke Chow's Conversion.

Just at this time George Moule returned to England, and Arthur was transferred to Hangchow. To him it was given first to carry the Gospel into the great district of Chuki, 70 miles distant from Hangchow. The story of Luke Chow's conversion, and the commencement of the Great Valley mission, is well known to students of missionary history in C.M.S. fields.

In 1897 Bishop Russell died, and it was felt that one of the two brothers must succeed him. Eventually the elder was appointed, and consecrated in 1880, with the title of Bishop in Mid China—the younger brother becoming his archdeacon.

During the 27 years' episcopate of George Moule the Church in Chêkiang, which was his main charge, was greatly enlarged and strengthened. The development of Chinese pastorate and church councils, and the establishment of a diocesan synod, were due to his initiative and wide guidance. His was the leading spirit also in those meetings of bishops which led up to tthe union of Anglican Churches in China in the Chung Hwa Sheng Kung Hwui.

Four years later George Moule resigned his bishopric, and was succeeded by H. J. Molony of one of the Society's Indian missions, with the title of Bishop in Chêkiang. Dr. Moule continued, however, to serve as a private missionary up to the end, placing all the store of his own experience and knowledge at the service of his successor. The same may be said of Arthur Moule in his office of archdeacon, which he continued to hold. The last years of his missionary life in China were filled with evangelization and itineration through every part of the widely-spread Church which the brothers had done so much to found and to foster.

Ready to Return at 90.

In 1911 Arthur was at length persuaded to leave the foreign mission field for the charge of a home parish, on the express understanding that he stood ready to return to his beloved field whenever required, up to the age of 90. George Moule, left a widower during the last three years of his life, reverenced and beloved by all his Chinese flock, and very many friends throughout the world, blessing and being blessed to the last, died at the age of 84, at Auckland Castle, his brother Handley's home, on March 3, 1912, during furlough in England.

Arthur Moule passed away on August 26, 1918, in his 83rd year, in the vicarage of Damerham, near Salisbury, the home of one of his sons, a place where his earnest messages at the time of the National Mission left a lasting impression.

CHANGSHA'S NEW Y. M. C. A.

Foundation Stone Laid

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Changsha, Hu., June 14.

The foundation stone of the new Y. M. C. A. building was laid this afternoon by Dr. F. C. Yen, the Chairman of the Changsha Board. A large gathering assembled to take part in the proceedings, at which Mr. M. K. Hsiao presided. A representative of the Governor and a representative from the provincial Assembly both read messages of greeting and congratulation.

The U. S. Consul also addressed the meeting. Mr. Meinhardt was able to speak not only as the representative of his country, but as an active co-operator in the work of the Y. M. C. A., especially in the building scheme.

The site was purchased by Chinese contributions. The building was to have been erected by funds from America, but improvements and enhanced cost of materials and of labour, have led the building committee beyond the very handsome contribution from the U. S. Association. An additional gold $12,500 is promised if Changsha will add an equal amount. Mr. Tan Hsin-i, the senior Chinese secretary, made an able appeal for this amount.

SPIRITUALISM IN THE CHINESE CITY

Art by Unseen Hands: Conversations with Confucius and Shakespeare

[illegible] for Psychical Research would be in their element were they able to attend the proceedings of the Five Religions' Society just now attracting numbers of Chinese to the picturesque gardens of the Grain Merchants' Guild in the native [illegible] gardens have been thronged with Chinese and there has been a curious mixture of sacred and profane activity, private devotions being paid at various shrines hard by groups of visitors indulging in the gossip of the day and taking their modest refreshment. The principal attraction undoubtedly has been the demonstrations of "spirit" writing and painting, carried out under the auspices of the Shanghai Spiritualist Society. These afford matter for interesting speculation and are of at least as much, perhaps greater, intrinsic interest than some of the "manifestations" which have claim[illegible] investigators in Europe. Two may be described.

On the floor of a room, and facing the shrine of Confucius, there was laid a sheet of white paper, measuring 15 feet by ten, with two strips of yellow paper on either side. The writing instrument consisted of a huge brush, weighing 48 catties (about 60 lb.) suspended from the entre of a bamboo pole, in length about the width of the paper. Standing on the yellow strips of paper, two Chinese took hold of the bamboo pole, one at each end, and at just sufficient height to allow of the brush touching the paper. The brush having been dipped into a bucket of indigo ink, the unseen writer did his work, producing a huge character, in firm bold outline and taking just under 10 minutes to perform the operation. The character produced was that meaning "soul," and when this had been written down, the date was added and the name of the writer, one Toong Faung. According to a learned Chinese, Toong Faung is known to history as a very high official who flourished in the days of the Han Dynasty, 2,100 years ago.

The second experiment resulted in the production of a couple of landscapes, not of any very great artistic quality, but showing fair brush work, accuracy of design and correct blending of colour. Both would have "passed" at the recent exhibition. These were produced in the following way:

The instrument used was a bamboo hoop about 12 in. in diameter, to which was affixed a Chinese writing brush, while on the table there was a sheet of white paper, framed, and a palette of four colours against it. Two Chinese, standing one on either side of the table, took up the hoop, holding it lightly by the fingers with the brush touching the paper and then, the "spirit" moving, the brush was dipped into the colour and the painting began, with the result already stated.

Both demonstrations were preceded by a prayer, and the men who held the brushes were selected by the "spirit," a list of members' names being laid upon the table and two of them being mysteriously "ticked off" for performance of the office. In one of the rooms the visitor may see displayed half a dozen pictures produced in this way, and two of them represent brushwork of no ordinary distinction. The most casual inspection of these impresses one with the fact that, if it were possible to practise deception in their production by means of the bamboo ring, then the men holding it must exercise an uncanny degree of skill. This, however, is not an "investigation;" merely a record of what the Chinese saw and what they most firmly believed was the work of compratriots revisiting the glimpses of the moon.

Engli-h or French, Please!

Yesterday the programme was to consist of "foreign writing" by means of the planchette. Last year—these gathering are an annual event—writing was done in script ranging from the most beautiful Chinese character to letters which no man could understand, some, we believe, even in old German text! To ensure that the writing shall be decipherable, the following prayer has solemnly been offered:

"We humbly pray Thee who to-day graces our gathering with Thy presence and comes to give us Thy counsels, to make use either of the English or French language in Thy communication."

In the most matter of fact way, as though he were merely commenting upon the rain pouring down at the moment, a member of the Society assured a "North-China Daily News" representative that among those who were expected to communicate on Thursday was Shakespeare!

It remains to be added that the Chinese in attendance take these proceedings seriously, some of them, children and women noticeably, performing devotional exercises before the various shrines in the manner of the most devout. There is no distinction of creeds. What more tolerant than a temple in which there are shrines of the Christian faith—which has its conventional picture of the Good Shepherd—of Taoism, Confucianism, of Buddhism, and of Mohammedanism? Lest the righteous be troubled, we shall not say which one of these it was—a little retreat beautiful in its simplicity—where, against a censor giving forth fragrant perfume stood a box advertising somebody's brand of cigarettes.

CHILEAN SUBJECTS IN SHANGHAI

Despute As to Status Between Chinese Commissioner and Consular Body

Action by the Chinese authorities in connexion with the Chilean Consulate in Shanghai was reported in the Chinese press on Thursday. It was stated that the Commissioner for Foreign Affairs has addressed the following letter to the Senior Consul.

"It has been ascertained that the Consular Body has resolved that cases involving Chilean citizens should be dealt with by the Chilean authorities, who will send an Assessor to the Mixed Court. I have already referred the matter to the Waichaopu for instructions, and have also written to you requesting that the Consular Body be urged to revoke this decision."

After pointing out that Chile has no extraterritorial powers, as was clearly indicated when the certificate was issued to the new Chilean Consul in Shanghai, the letter proceeds: "Moreover, as this is a matter which concerns Chile and China alone, no third party has any right to deal with it. Apart from notifying the Doyen of the Diplomatic Body at Peking, the Waichaipu has instructed me to lodge another representation with the Consular Body and to communicate with the Chilean Consul informing him that he is not entitled to the privileges of Consular jurisdiction. I therefore have now to request that the Consular Body be advised to revoke their former decision."

AT an entertainment given at 712 Dixwell Road by Miss A. Spalding, General Secretary of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of China, the North China Women's Christian Temperance Union was formed. The following officers were elected: -President, Mrs. Ching Yi-chen; Vice-President, Lucy J. Webb; treasurer, Mrs. Pai Sung-lee; secretary, Mrs. Hung C. A. Chen.

MEMORIAL TABLET TO DR. N. MACLEOD

A Tribute to a Worthy Man and his Valuable Services to Shanghai Generally

A memorial tablet to the late Dr. N. Macleod was unveiled on Wednesday at the Shanghai General Hospital by Cav. de' Rossi, Italian Consul-General. Amongst those present were Mr. E. S. Cunningham, U. S. Consul-General Mr. Yada, Japanese Consul-General; Mr. Fessenden, Chairman of the Shanghai Municipal Council; Mr. W. P. Lambe, S. M. C.; M. Le Bris, president of the French Municipal Council; Mr. John Prentice and Mr. D. E. J. Abraham, old friends of Dr. Macleod; Dr. R. J. Marshall, Dr. J. B. Fearn and a large number of the hospital staff.

Before the unveiling of the memorial Dr. Marshall made a brief speech in appreciation of the work of his late partner, especially in connexion with the hospital.

"We are here to-day," he said, "to assist at the unveiling of a tablet to the memory of the late Dr. Neil Macleod in recognition of the many valuable services he rendered this hospital during his lifetime. As the present senior member of the staff and one who has had the privilege of being Dr. Macleod's friend and associate for 22 years I have been asked to say something about him before the [illegible].

"His memory is still too fresh to make it necessary for me to say much to remind you of what he did for Shanghai and this hospital, and therefore I shall be very brief. For a quarter of a century he was officially connected with the Shanghai General Hospital, first on the staff, of which he was senior member till he retired from practice in 1913. He then became Governor, was appointed Chairman in 1915, and continued so until 1920, the year preceding his death. This hospital was entirely built in his time, thanks to his initiative and persistence. It is no exaggeration to say that the X-ray department was the work of his own hands.

"Dr. Macleod was a great and interesting personality. One could not be long in his presence and fail to be impressed by the keenness and enthusiasm with which he tackled whatever he had in hand. He was wonderfully well-informed on practically every branch of his profession, and, in fact, on any subject out of it that interested him. An indefatigable worker, and a great reader, he kept himself well abreast of the times. His manner to his younger associates was always most kind and considerate, and it was a positive education to consult with him. He was such a storehouse of knowledge and experience. I think his most notable quality was his thoroughness, and when you find thoroughness, combined with outstanding ability, as in Dr. Macleod's case, it means success. As a physician Dr. Macleod was undoubtedly a success. He was master of whatever subject he cared to specialize in. He at one time did some very valuable work in bacteriology, and by his knowledge of this subject was often of great service to the Health Department here. The radiological work he did in this Hospital was acknowledged by the greatest experts in England to be of the very highest order, even at a time when the apparatus at his command was of a comparatively primitive character. He kept pace with the advance of this science and we owe it entirely to him that we can now boast of a Radiologinea Department that any hospital might be proud of.

"Dr. Macleod was one of the finest citizens that Shanghai ever had. By his death the medical profession here lost its greatest ornament. The benefits that this community derived from his presence in many cases only recognized by the few, will be enjoyed by all for generations to come. No man deserves more the tributes now being paid to his memory."

Cav. de' Rossi, after a few brief remarks in which he expressed the regret that none of Dr. Macleod's family were present, then unveiled the memorial. The memorial is situated in the entrance to the building, and consists of a handsome tablet in bronze and marble, with a medallion of Dr. Macleod, under which the inscription reads:—

Erected by popular subscription in memory of Neil Macleod, M.D., Edin. Born at Greenwich on 15th January, 1847, Died at London, on 19th May, 1921. For 44 years a prominent citizen and a distinguished medical practitioner of Shanghai. He held the appointment of visiting physician to the staff of this Hospital from 1896 to 1914, and radiologist from 1913 to 1920. He was elected Governor in 1913 and was Chairman of the Board from 1915 to 1920. A keen student and leader in the science and art of his profession, the present extension of this Hospital and the X-Ray department stand as his memorial.

The memorial was designed by Mr. Spence, of Messrs. Stewardson & Spence, Shanghai, under the direction of Dr. Macleod's daughter in London.

TUNG CHIH COLLEGE, WOOSUNG

Proposed Conversion into a School for Navigation: The Navy's Claim

Peking, June 22.

In connexion with the recent report that the Ministry of Communications wanted to take over the Tung Chih College at Woosung and convert it into a Navigation College, it is now reported that the Minister of the Navy has drawn the attention of the Cabinet to the fact that the area in question was first given to the Ministry of the Navy, and that, while the Tung Chih College has recently been in possession of the College buildings, a large compound attached to the College has been used by the Ministry of the Navy as a Naval aviation experimental station.

In a memorial to the President, Admiral Li Ting-hsin makes no objection to the Ministry of Communications taking over the College, but urges that the aviation compound shall remain under the control of the Ministry of the Navy, which will establish on that site a Marine Survey Bureau.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

HONGKEW FLOODED

And Parts of Central District under Water after Thursday's Downpour

The heavy downpour of the last few days has resulted in floods in Hongkew and some parts of the French Concession, and considerable inconvenience to both the foreign and Chinese population in the affected areas.

In Hongkow on Thursday evening the streets were entirely submerged from the Hongkew market to Haining Road and in Woosung Road. Shops were flooded out while in many parts the water was over a foot deep. All sorts of refuse was floating around generally adding to the unpleasantness of the flood, and getting about in any comfort was impossible for all but the bare legged coolies.

It is an ill wind that blows nobody any good, however, and the ricsha coolies have been doing a roaring trade. Tramcars have been able to get through with comparative ease and crowds have made use of them, but the ricsha has been the most popular form of conveyance. In the French concession the lower part of Rue de Consulat was flooded, and the Hotel Parisien, Rue Montauban, stood out like an island in a miniature lake. Ricshas had to go right up to the inside of the hotel door in order to deposit their charges safely and drily.

We understand that in some parts of Hongkew foreigners have been driven from their homes by the invasion of water and have had to seek shelter in the hotels.

MR. W. W. Lockwood, associate general secretary of the Shanghai Y.M.C.A. was given a farewell luncheon by the newly-formed Shanghai chapter of the Y.'s Men's Club (affiliated to the International Y's Men's Association, Toledo, O.) last Friday at the American Returned Students' Club, prior to his departure for the United States on furlough. The president of the Y's Men's Club, Mr. Wm. Yinson Lee, was in the chair.

THE KU KLUX KLAN ARRESTS

Americans Handed over to U. S. Consulate: Detained 24 Hours by Chinese

In connexion with the raid by the Chinese police on 7 Henpeng Road, Chapei, the office of Ku Klux Klan organ, "The Klansman," and arrest of Dr. S. S. Ching and Mr. William Tung, its American promoters, it is now learnt that the police visited the premises to secure advance copies of the paper, which was to made its appearance this week. In addition to taking into custody Dr. Ching, who is a doctor of medicine practising in Seattle, and the other Chinese-American, the Chapei police arrested two Chinese. A third foreigner, Lawrence K. Kearny, also an American citizen, is reported to have been on the premises at the time.

Dr. Ching and Mr. Tung were released on Thursday afternoon, having been handed over to the U. S. authorities. No charge, it is stated, will be preferred against them.

Following their arrest on Wednesday night, friends of the two men immediately communicated with Mr. J. P. Davis, Executive American Consul, who at once informed Mr. S. K. Chen, secretary to the Commissioner of Foreign Affairs, what had taken place. The prisoners were accordingly ordered to be released, but it was not until the middle of Thursday afternoon that they regained their freedom. Shortly after noon they were tranferred from the [illegible] pei police station to the ci[illegible]. Here they were closely [illegible]. Satisfied that they were of American citizenship, the authorities sent them under escort to the U. S. Consulate-General.

"Detained" not Arrested.

Realizing apparently their mistake the Chinese police now do not claim to have arrested but merely "detained" Ching and Tung.

Dr. Ching and Mr. Tung are the typical soft mannered returned students, quiet in their speech and nothing like the red-hot clansmen one might imagine them to be. There is nothing out of the way in their gospel, it could be that of the ordinary student. They both wish to purify the laws, abolish opium smoking and rid the Government of corruption. This was to be accomplished by a moral crusade.

It is not certain whether they will proceed with their original plan of holding a meeting in the country on Sunday. It would seem that the qualifications for belonging to the organization include the wearing of a gown and hood.

There is no information at hand whether the remainder of the party, the Chinese citizens, have been released.

SHANGHAI LIBELLED

The following appears in a recent issue of the "Manchester Guardian":—

To the Editor of the Manchester Guardian.

Sir,—In noticing my book "Far Eastern Jaunts" your reviewer says that in Shanghai I "saw no industry but that of the lotteries." This statement grotesquely misrepresents what I said and I trust you will let me correct it. In the passage in question I was writing of one particular street in one particular quarter of Shanghai. In that street I did not see the "marvellous silk shops" mentioned by your reviewer, for the very good reason that there are none. I may say that I have more than once already been in hot water over my published criticisms of the city of Shanghai, and do not wish to get into further hot water over criticisms I never made.—Yours, etc.

GILBERT COLLINS, Author of "Far Eastern Jaunts."
11, Woodside Road, Bournemouth,
April 26.

[Our reviewer writes:—I regret exceedingly the mistake referred to in Mr. Collins's letter. I have no copy of the book within reach, but I accept, without question, his correction that he was speaking of one street only, and not of all Shanghai, as occupied exclusively with lottery business. I apologise freely for a careless slip in reading a book most interesting from its fresh outlook on present-day China and Japan.—ED. "GUARD."]

THE vernacular press reports that Rear-Admiral Nagano, Imperial Japanese Navy, is to arrive in Shanghai by the Shanghai Maru on Sunday. After visiting this port, he proposes go on to the Yangtze cities and Peking.

WEDDING

White-Cooper

A very pretty wedding was solemnized on Saturday afternoon at St Joseph's Church by the Rev. Father MacDonald when Miss Monica Mary Cooper, daughter of Mrs. A. Cooper, of Dulwich, London, was married to Mr. Harry Augustus White, the son of Mr. and Mrs. H. O. White. The church was elaborately decorated with green and white flowers by the Lewis Nurseries for the ceremony.

The bride, who was given away by her brother, Mr. T. A. Cooper, looked charming in a handsome gown of silver lace, trimmed with pearls and tulle. The long veil, which formed a graceful train, was caught into a cap shape, and fastened at either side with orange blossoms. She carried a sheath bouquet of white lilies, with long ends of fern-fronds and ribbons reaching to the ground. The bridesmaids, Miss Clara Talbot and Miss Dorothy Eveleigh, wore picturesque frocks of green organdie and silver tissue, trimmed with roses, and hats to match. The little flower girls, Maria Augusta Silva and Olga Silva, were also dressed to harmonize with the green and white colour scheme with lace hats, and each carried a basket of flower petals. Masters Harold Bidwell, Albert White, Mario Simoes and Augusto Aquino, wearing white suits, shoes and socks, acquitted themselves well in the responsible duties of pages.

Mr. Edward Silva attended the bridegroom as best man, and Messrs. A. Ferguson, F. C. Clarke, J. Mahon and J. Pote-Hunt were ushers. A very enjoyable reception, attended by a large number of relatives and friends, was held at "Whyteleafe," 603 Avenue Haig, the residence of Mr. and Mrs. H. O. White. The house was beautifully decorated and the strains of a string band added to the enjoyment of the afternoon. The bride's health was proposed by Mr. A. Eveleigh. Mr. and Mrs. White left later for Tsingtao, where the honeymoon will be spent, the bride wearing a smart costume of white crêpe-de-chine with a green hat.

THE PRESS IN CHINA

Plea for School for Journalists out of Indemnity Funds: Rotary Debate

An appeal for a portion of the remitted American share of the Boxer Indemnity to be used for the establishment of a Chinese School of Journalism was made by Mr. Jabin Hsu, editor of the "Shanghai Tribune," at a meeting of the Rotary Club on Thursday.

After tracing the history of journalism in China, which he said began somewhere about 200 B. C., when the literati had the laws of the land published in bulletins and distributed throughout the Empire by couriers, Mr. Hsu said that the Press in China although young was becoming powerful.

But its troubles were many. Most of the papers were unable to operate independently and forced to subsist on official patronage or subsidy.

Editors were generally underpaid and uneducated, and subscriptions and advertising rates were too low to make papers profitable enterprises. It was difficult to induce good men to go into the profession because of its lack of standing and opportunities.

If a portion of the American share of the Boxer Indemnity could be used in the establishment of a school of journalism, Chinese young men could be educated in accordance with the ideals of journalism prevalent in America and Britain and much good would result. "Journalism is a public service," he declared, and reminded both Chinese and foreign business men the value of legitimate advertising, not only for the purpose of increasing business, but in enabling the Press to become independent of outside influences.

LOCAL agitators for the return of the Mixed Court to China believe that they have a firm friend in the British Consul-General, according to the Chinese Press. They propose to invite him to a dinner at which the strongest pleas are to be urged in favour of the proposed rendition. At the same time various bodies intend publishing a manifesto in English to endeavour to enlist the sympathies of the Consul-General's fellow countrymen.

THE JOYS OF HOUSE-HUNTING

PRIZE DAY AT ST. JOSEPH'S INST.

Interesting Display by Girls of Well Trained Talent

Prize Day at St. Joseph's Institution was a very interesting occasion, not only for the school girls themselves, but also for their relatives and friends who filled the large school hall, which was tastefully decorated with gay yellow sun-flowers and green garlands festooned from pillar to pillar. The Mother Superior, with Rev. Dather Maúmus, the Superior of St. Joseph's Church, and M. Wilden, the French Consul-General presented the prizes to the fortunate recipients, each of whom received a laurel wreath, as well as her prize book. The students filled the stage, with the guests of honour on the front seat of the auditorium. A well arranged programme which displayed the abilities of the pupils varied the presentations, the numbers being as follows. Opening chorus by the school, "Labor Omnia Vincit" (the school motto); address of welcome in French by Marthe Moisson; pianoforte overture, "Diamande de la Couronne," (2 pianos, organ and violin); Chorus by the school, "Lilac de Platen"; violin solo, "Simple Aveu," Dorothy Cosier; Song, by the youngest pupils; pianoforte duet, "Hungarian Danse," Una Smith and Grace Clark; Final March, Schubert, 2 pianos and orchestra.

So large a number of prizes were given out that it is impossible to mention all the fortunate recipients and only a few outstanding awards can be mentioned. The Senior Cambridge Examination honours were won by Maudie Tebbutt, with Vera Allen leading in the Junior Examination. The girls passing the general Cambridge Examinations were Maudie Tebbutt (with Distinction in French) Freda Narrados (Distinction in French) Lilian Fowler, Kathleen Barentzen, Julia Remedios. Prizes for Conduct were awarded to Virginia Sullivan and Wilhelmina Bigel of the boarders and to Freda Barradas, Maudie Tebbutt, Carmen Kupsch, and Aurea Marques and in the Second Division to Tatsuko Matsumoto, Cecile Logers, Monica Johns, Carmen Victal, Lilian Johns, and Odette Hibert. Honours in the French Examination were won by Lucia Luciani.

In the smaller classes the students winning the greatest number of prizes in all subjects were as follows: Class, II, Jimmy Cumming; III, Phyllis Murray; IV, Edith Tebbutt; V, Lucy Dalder, (2d div.) Mabel Remedios; VI, Gladys Head, (2d div.) Margaret Oliviera.

THE new building for the Chinese Fire Brigade at Nantao was formally opened on Sunday afternoon. Many foreigners and Chinese were present, and several felicitous speeches were made. Mr. Pett, Chief officer of the International Settlement Fire Brigade, addressed the gathering.

JUNE SETTLEMENT

Speculation in Langkats Leads to Severe Difficulties

The June Settlement has proved a very unsatisfactory one and the arrangements made by no means amount to an actual clearance of the quarter's business.

It was practically a Langkat settlement. Business in cottons, docks, wharves and rubbers has been normal, but there has been a great deal of speculation in Langkats. The speculators were carried over December and March and the big drop in prices principally accounted for severe difficulties which had to be faced on Monday.

Explorations had gone down from Tls. 15 to Tls. 8, Loans from Tls. 7½ to Tls. 5, and Langkats from Tls. 15 to approximately Tls. 6, so that after March purchases had been made at about Tls. 35 for June, the price for combined shares sagged away to approximately Tls. 19 or Tls. 20. One large firm of outside brokers very heavily engaged compromised to the extent of paying 85 per cent., and hope to be able to pay the balance in due course.

On the whole, it may be said that there has been a fairly free exchange of promissory notes and, while a very considerable amount of business has been put through normally, it may be said that the position generally is a very unsatisfactory one. Hongkong has been but slightly concerned in the settlement.

OBITUARY

Mr. James Howard Moore

Old-timers in China, as well as in Siam and the Malay States, will regret to learn of the death of Mr. James Howard Moore, who passed away on May 17, in Queen City, New York. He was best known in Shanghai through his connexion with the British-American Tobacco Co. and the Tobacco Products Co., having been associated with the former firm at the time of its transfer to British registry. So far as can be ascertained he left no heirs.

"Admiral" Moore, as he was called, was very popular because of his lovable character and because he was a clever raconteur with a skill in recounting incidents of his adventurous career which reminded his hearers of Conrad. In Siam he enjoyed the friendship of the King and held a large teak concession, in which he employed a large herd of elephants for hauling the teak trunks out of the forest

[illegible] astic collector of Chinese curios and his assortment of Chinese snuff bottles was said to be the largest private collection in [illegible] for [illegible] Moore [illegible] an currency [illegible] sed of at a small profit. He confirmed the magnate in his estimate of its value and took occasion upon his return to China to make diligent search among Kiu[illegible]ng's antiques, being fortunate enough to secure the mate to the first vase. For this, indeed, he had to pay $25 but as he was able to dispose of it to the same London merchant for £250 it was a profitable transaction. "Those were the good old days," he would add. "Collectors could hope to pick up some finds in those times."

SHANGHAI'S YOUTHFUL CRAFTSMEN

Woodwork Exhibition at the Thomas Hanbury Schools

The annual exhibition of wood carvings by public of the Municipal Schools opened on Tuesday at the Thomas Hanbury School for Boys. Some interesting carvings by boys and girls from various schools in Shanghai were shown. Perhaps the most interesting were a sewing basket with carved stand, and an inlaid chess board.

It is hoped by Capt. Hansen, instructor of manual work, that woodwork will play a more important part in the curriculum of Shanghai schools in the near future and that the subject will be embraced in regular school hours, which should add more enthusiasm to the work and tend to more scope and opportunity. It is also hoped through the generosity of a Shanghai resident, Mr. David Petersen, to have ready for occupation in September a centre for metal work and light handicraft. This centre should prove a welcome boon to the amateurs in wireless telegraphy, telephony and other hobbies requiring machined parts and fittings.

PURE MILK

Early in the year Mr. Ellwood Varney, manager of the Liberty Dairy, offered $20 as prizes for the best essays on pure milk, to be competed for by pupils in the Shanghai American School. The contest was conducted by the "S. A. S. Nooze," the school's bi-weekly publication and the results have been announced by the Editor, Mr. F. Rawlinson. In the High School five essays were submitted and two prizes have been awarded, $6 going to Marjorie Billing, of Foochow, and $4 to Helen McCracken. In the grades, over 40 essays were submitted and three prizes have been awarded, $5 to Ida Gorelkina, $3 to Mary McCracken, and $2 to Elizabeth Wallace.

MR. Huan Chun, Senior Magistrate of the Mixed Court, has been granted six months' leave, commencing on July 1.

GENERAL YANG SEN AND MR. ELLY WIDLER

Reply by General Yang: His Statement of Reasons for Which Mr. Widler Was Arrested and Put in Gaol

We have received from General Yang Sen, Commanding the Second Szechuan Army and Acting Civil Governor the following statement in answer to the recent charges published by Mr. Widler. We take no responsibility in the matter but as the imprisonment of Mr. Widler attracted much attention at the time General Yang Sen is entitled to state his side of the affair.

"During the past months reports have appeared in the Press purporting to be the facts concerning the treatment of one, Elly Widler, who was arrested last September by General Yang Sen, General Commanding the Second Szechuan Army. As these reports have emanated from one source only, and do not give the facts as they are, the undersigned respectfully asks for space to present this statement of the truth regarding Elly Widler.

"This name has been before the public in Szechuan for a number of years. While most foreigners in China have very excellent reputations, and conform to all the laws of their own country, as well as to the laws of China, it is so much more remarkable when any one, claiming to be a foreigner, breaks the law, that the case is known far and near.

"Surely no official, or military officer, in China, has more interest in foreigners than the one who writes this letter. Whether in Luchow, Chungking, Wanhsien, or more recently here in Chêngtu, I have sought to be friends with all foreigners and foreign institutions—missionary, as well as commercial and official— and have supported every one that has appealed for funds, or for any other assistance.

"It was therefore entirely against my nature, and against my inclination, to arrest a man who claimed to be a foreigner. The man, Widler, was arrested because there was no other way to stop his conduct, he had been well-known in this province for years."

The letter then alleges that Mr. Widler conducted a business in fox skins at Tachienlu, advertising them for sale in Shanghai at $30 apiece, but that nobody got the skins. And it continues:—

"The circumstances of Widler's going to Tachienlu, the fact that he had no foreign passport, and the nature of his business, compelled the Chinese authorities to take action.

The reason, as given by Widler, for his expulsion was that Tachienlu is not an Open Port and that a foreigner could not do business there, but the facts are as stated here.

Quarrel With an Official.

"When he reached Tachienlu he rented, in an irregular manner, a house that had been confiscated some time before and retained as an official headquarters for soldiers. At that time the Kangting Magistrate was not at home, being away in Tibet on official business. After his return to Tachienlu he was one day out on a tour of inspection and noticed a pile of refuse in front of a house. He went in to inquire about the matter and was standing below (Tibetan houses are two-storied) instructing some natives how to clean up when the "foreigner" appeared at the top of the stairs and demanded in a very rude manner what he was doing. Widler then ordered his workmen to eject the official. They, naturally, refused to do so, so he went down himself, threw the official's chair into the street, and forcefully ejected him.

"This matter was taken up by the Commissioner for Tibetan Affairs, General Cheng Hsia-ling, the Taoyin of Tachienlu, the Taoyin at Yachow, the Foreign Office in Chêngtu (from which this is record), and the Foreign Office in Chungking. The latter reminded Mr. Widler that he had not been given permission to travel beyond Yachow when he left Chungking, as the country was then in disturbance due to the rebellion of a military officer in Tibet. Mr. Widler was then ordered to vacate the house that he was retaining irregularly. This he refused to do so he was forcefully ejected. None of his goods were confiscated. He was also ordered to leave Tachienlu and return to Chungking. When he refused he was arrested by soldiers, and the Foreign Office in Chungking was asked to watch his movements.

The letter then alleges that while in Chungking at this time Mr. Widler tried to establish an insurance company and sold shares to the amount of thousands of dollars and that when his office was closed down he said all the assets of the Company were destroyed, so that the shareholders got nothing. "Widler then opened a club. He made himself agreeable to Chinese and foreigners alike; and I, myself, was pleased to treat him as a friend, as I do all foreigners. I feel sure, however, that the foreigners in Chungking will be able to state that my estimate of the character of the man is not far wrong.

"After his arrest no foreigners came to me on his behalf, though all knew well that I am always approachable in such matters. The fact is that many foreigners have declared to me, and to others, that the man ought to have been severely punished.

The Charge of Gun-running.

"During the Civil War in this province in 1923 there was some attempt at "gun-running" on the Yangtze River. All who read the papers are familiar with these stories. The same things have occurred in all countries, especially where there is civil war. It is well-known by every one, especially by those who engage in the traffic, that capture by the enemy means the death penalty at dawn. When any one engages in such traffic they must reckon accordingly. Widler was not the only one apprehended in this traffic. It is well-known that two boat officers belonging to another nation (where they have proper credentials as citizens of that nation) were captured by my enemies in the act of gun-running. These officers have suffered worse hardships than Widler suffered. They were in custody for a much longer time while the Consuls of that nation, and others, did all they could to effect their release. We feel sure that those men consider themselves very fortunate in coming out of the episode with whole skins.

"The guilt of Elly Widler is even greater than that of the officers mentioned. Any person might justify their action in trying to supply war materials to a regular army, though they would know that the enemy would condemn them. But guns were being supplied to irregulars and bandits who were able to pay outrageous prices for them. It was when we had proof of this that Mr. Widler was arrested. We understand that he was selling for as high as $800 small arms that cost him about $80 in Shanghai. About 300 automatic pistols were taken by the Customs authorities in one shipment. They were contained in beer boxes.

"When it was found that this shipment of pistols had reached Wanhsien, the Customs authorities reported the matter to the Customs authorities in Chungking. It was supposed at that time that the matter would be adjusted through the Foreign Office. But when the Foreign Office asked the different Consuls in Chungking where Widler was registered they replied that he was not registered in any Consulate. It was therefore necessary for the Chinese authorities to deal with the case and Widler was arrested. In this matter the Customs authorities were consulted, and his arrest was as much at their instance as at mine.

The Question of Nationality.

"While he was in prison we wired to Peking to see if Widller had any standing as a foreigner. The reply from the Waichiaopu stated that there had once been a man registered in China under the name of Widler, but he left China years ago, his name was removed from the register, and no one has any knowledge of his whereabouts. We cannot tell whether this is the same man or not."

"It has been known among all foreigners in Szechuan for years that the man called Widler had no standing as a foreigner. Most foreigners have discussed him, and no one was able to find out what nation he belongs to. It is understood that he has posed at different times as a German (before the War), as an American, and as Brazil, and where not. This is, of course, a very serious matter, and lowers the prestige of all foreigners who maintain proper relations with their own Governments.

"While Widler was in prison in Chungking he wrote to certain friends in Shanghai asking them to see if they could get him registered as a Swiss citizen. While no proof has come to us to show that the attempt was successful (and even if it were) it must be held to be irregular), his friends wrote to him saying that they had been able thus to register him. The letter was intercepted by the Second Army, as Widler was then a prisoner in their hands, and is now in our possession. It did not contain a certificate of registration, nor a passport for a Swiss citizen. Furthermore, no representation has ever been made to us on behalf of this man Widler by the Consular authorities of Switzerland in China.

"This being the case his arrest by Chinese authorities was entirely regular. If he had been registered as a German (as now they have no extraterritorial privileges) it would be regular. And it is much more so when it cannot be proven that he is registered anywhere.

The Treatment in Gaol.

"As to the alleged mistreatment while in gaol, this is largely a matter of the way in which Widler would look at it. Of course he did not have foreign food. But Chinese food would be no hardship to a man of his experience in China. Furthermore we were in a state of siege in Chungking and we suffered as well as he. When we were obliged to retire to Wanhsien we took him with us as we did not wish him to fall into the hands of our enemies and furnish them with guns. The journey was doubtless hard on him. When we reached Wanhsien he was turned over to the Wanhsien Magistrate with instructions to look after him and provide for him well. It was not a palace, and he doubtless had much to complain of, but we doubt there being any real suffering, more than the circumstances demanded."

The letter goes on to allege that "as there is sufficient evidence to prove that the man was guilty of a very serious crime in trafficking in arms, and as that evidence may be found in the records of the Customs authorities in Wanhsien and Chungking; as the foreign Consuls in Chungking know fully the history of this case; it is not necessary for us to go into details here. In any similar case in any land, in time of war, the man would have been shot with little ceremony. In treating him as we did we thought we were showing Widler very great courtesy. Considering that this was the first time he had been guilty of such a serious crime, and hoping that he might be led to reform, we preferred to show him clemency. His attitude in reporting the case as he has done through the newspapers, and trying to make absurd claims for damages, shows that he was not worthy of such clemency.

The Release.

"After the Second Army reached Chêngtu and we were feeling happy over our great victory the Wanhsien Magistrate wrote to me suggesting that Mr. Widler might be released. As we felt like being generous at that time we agreed and he was set free. Up to that time there had been no representation by any foreign Consular authority in behalf of the man. It was entirely a matter of our clemency toward him. We treated him thus as he claimed to be a foreigner, and we have always tried to treat foreigners in a friendly manner. This friendship would be seriously affected if we found that many such incidents occurred. Fortunately for us, as well as for the reputation of all foreigners in China, this is an isolated case in many years of dealing with foreigners in this province; and we trust that we may not have another such for many years to come.

YANG SEN.
(Seal)-General Commanding the Second Szechuan Army and Acting Civil Governor.
Chêngtun, Sze., June 2, 1924.

MR. WIDLER'S REPLY

We have received from Mr. Elly Widler a copy of his letter to General Yang Sen in answer to the latter's statement. We publish the portions essential to Mr. Widler's defence on the points raised by General Yang Sen.

Sir,—I have seen a letter written in English, dated Chengtu June 2, and signed in type by you addressed to the foreign press in China, worded in a slanderous manner, which appeared in a Hankow and Shanghai newspaper, and I am replying to this letter so that you may know that what you termed to be "the truth regarding Elly Widler" is nothing else but falsehood and fabrication. You made a very great mistake by ordering my arrest in September last and you have no one else to blame but yourself that my case has aroused so much interest, causing the foreign press in China to take the matter up, and numerous articles derogatory to yourself appearing in the foreign press in America and England regarding this matter. Had you taken the advice of General Yuan Tsu-ming, your ally and fellow general at Chungking, in September last, you would not have ordered my arrest, and you would then have avoided all the publicity detrimental to yourself in connexion with this case. You say in your letter that I was arrested because there was no other way to stop my vicious conduct, and in reply, I thank you for this compliment."

The Fox Skin Business.

Mr. Widler then alludes to Gen. Yang's charge that he formerly ran a fox skin business in Tachienlu but that only would-be purchasers got "skinned" and he says:—

"In the first instance, you are mistaken regarding the price I offered fox skins for sale, and in the second instance, there is not a single buyer who can claim that he was "skinned." It is a great surprise to me, General Yang Sen, that you, who have known me for so long, would allow your name to be signed to a letter containing such a childish statement as this. If you intend to infer that I "skin" people for small amounts, why is it that you yourself, only a few months prior to my arrest, offered me large sums of money, which I refused to take from you? If I was a cheat, and your remarks regarding the fox skins can infer nothing else, then why did I not "skin" you for $30,000 or $50,000, when you yourself were willing to pay me this money, and which I refused to take? You will distinctly remember how you sent for me several times, and refusing to call at your headquarters, you did me the honour by calling yourself at the Cosmos Club. You offered me large amounts of money, and which amounts you were not afraid to trust me with, yet I refused to accept your money, knowing that I could not execute your wishes; and this is the thanks I get for treating you in an honourable manner.

The House at Tachienlu.

Your description of the circumstances of my trip to Tachienlu, the irregular manner in which I rented a Tibetan house and my affair with the Tachienlu magistrate, is interesting reading. The facts are that I left Chungking with a regular passport issued by the Chungking Foreign Office and signed by Mr. Chen, the Commissioner of Foreign Affairs, and in this passport it was clearly stated that I was a Swiss citizen. The Commissioner of Foreign Affairs explained to me that since the country was in an unsettled condition he would issue the passport for as far as Yachow only. I received a further document from the Chungking Chinese Maritime Customs and in this document it was also stated that I was a Swiss citizen; it contained a description and quantity of merchandise which I was carrying with me and stated therein that my destination was Tachienlu. This document was countersigned by Mr Chen, the Commissioner of Foreign Affairs and Superintendent of the Chinese Maritime Customs. It pleases you to state that I rented a house at Tachienlu in an irregular manner, but the fact is that I rented the house from a Tibetan and paid the rental regularly. The fact that it so happened that this very house was "confiscated" by the Chinese military was no concern of mine, and this matter would never have been brought up if it were not for the fact that the Chinese authorities were prejudiced against me."

The Dispute with the Magistrate.

With regard to the alleged throwing out of doors of the Tachienlu magistrate Mr. Widler says:—The facts are that the Kangting magistrate (Kangting being just another name for Tachienlu) walked into the house which I had rented and caused a disturbance in my compound. If you claim to know anything about the foreign law, you will know that no man has a right, whether he be civilian or official, to go into another man's house and create a disturbance. I was therefore quite justified in ordering the Kangting magistrate, Mr. Han, to leave my premises. Your remarks that I forcefully ejected the magistrate is not true. I, however, made it quite plain to the magistrate that he must leave my compound and made it clear him that if he desired to come into my premises in a regular way that I would only be too pleased to receive him.

"During the eight months which I stayed at Tachienlu the officials were working unceasingly and putting every possible obstacle in my way with a view of getting me out of the Tibetan frontier, and in which, as you know, they eventually succeeded. My stay there appeared to have caused a great deal of uneasiness in various circles. An excuse had to be found to get me out of Tachienlu and it started with informing me that I had no right to live at Tachienlu as that town was not a treaty port. When I pointed out to the local officials that other foreigners were trading at Chêngtu, the provincial capital of Szechuan, at Atungtse in Yunnan Province, at Peking and in a number of other centres which were not treaty ports, it semed to have no effect on the Chinese decision that I must leave Tachienlu. I wrote a letter to the Swiss Minister at Tokio inquiring whether or not Swiss citizens in China enjoy extraterritorial rights. I pointed out my position in my letter to the Swiss Minister, addressed to Tokio, and mentioned that I had for many years been registered at the French Consulate at Chungking as a Swiss citizen, and that living in Tachienlu, without consular protection I wanted to know my exact status with the Chinese. In due course I received a reply from the Swiss Minister at Tokio in which he informed me that the Swiss government had a treaty with China, in which Swiss citizens shall enjoy the same privileges as are, or may be, ceded to the most favoured powers.

"I used to object very much to the treatment that the local Chinese and Tibetans were subjected to and every time a Tibetan or a Chinese was bambooed at the magistrate's yamen at Tachienlu, I used openly to voice my objection. I could not help hate the few Chinese officials who were in power at Tachienlu for the bambooing the local Chinese and Tibetans on the very slightest pretext. One of my neighbours was taken into the yamên and bambooed. . . because he was standing upright when the magistrate passed the small narrow street in which we lived. I publicly objected to this kind of treatment and I pointed out, in the streets in Tachienlu, to the Chinese and Tibetan civilians that China was now a republic and that according to republican rule this kind of treatment was not allowed."

Mr. Widler goes on to show that with the Tibetans he was on the friendliest terms, and he continues:—

"It is quite an easy matter to invent stories about any particular person when it is desired to do that person harm. Here at Shanghai I daily meet a considerable number of Chinese from Szechuan, men who are citizens of the same district in Szechuan as from where you come, and these men accuse you of a great number of unlawful acts, but it is not for me to write and tell you, or cause it to be published through the press, what other people say about you.

The Alleged Insurance Co.

Mr. Widler then deals with the charge that he started an insurance company in Chungking which failed and nobody got their money. "In all my twelve years at Chungking I never established any insurance company and your report in this connexion is absolutely without foundation. What you probably tried to infer was that whilst at Chungking I established a Savings Society and finding that I had received opposition from the Chinese press at Chungking regarding this Savings Society, I dissolved the company and the shareholders, all and everyone, received back their money.

The Charge of Gun-Running.

Mr. Widler then takes up the charge that he went in for gun-running and supplied arms to bandits and he says:—

"You don't mention what proof you had, but you intimate that 300 pistols were found in beer boxes and that the Consular Body in Chungking and the Chinese Maritime Customs at Wanhsien and Chungking are fully acquainted with the details of this affair. The fact is, as you must know, that the pistols which were found in the beer boxes were claimed by the First Army. The fact that these pistols were found in these beer boxes and that the beer boxes were consigned to the Cosmos Club does not necessarily mean that the pistols were being sold by me to irregulars and bandits as outlined in your statement. No doubt, the circumstantial evidence, without a proper investigation, would throw suspicion on the Cosmos Club; but, as you know very well, the fact that the First Army (South) claimed these pistols, proves that the accusation of my connexion with this matter is false. "It is very difficult to comprehend what you mean by a regular or an irregular army in the Szechuan compaign. You must remember that you yourself were an officer in the First Army under General Shen Kea-wu, and that it is only recently that you have decided to join the faction fighting for the North. So, whilst it pleases you to call the First Army an irregular army, and refer to them as bandits, it gives them an equal right to refer to your army as being irregular when they defeated you on October 16 last.

"It cannot be regular for you to accuse me of being guilty of any infraction of the law without giving me a proper chance to defend myself. At no time during my arrest and during the six months' detention in your hands was I given a chance to make any statement in defence of my case. Both at the trial at the magistrate's yamen at Chungking and at the court martial at your headquarters prior to your retreat of October 16, I was intimidated with threats of death and was accused of having supplied thousands of rifles to the First Army, and later I was accused by your soldiers and officers of being responsible for the defeat of the Second Army on October 16. If at any time this matter has to be brought up, it is not for me or for you to declare whether I was innocent or guilty. This matter is a. subject open for a proper, judicial investigation where I can be properly represented and defend myself without being afraid."

Swiss Citizenship.

Mr. Widler then devotes a good deal of space to showing that at the time of his arrest he was duly registered as a Swiss citizen; but a few months after my arrest, when it was necessary for the Swiss Consul General to refer this matter to the government in Switzerland it appears that documentary evidence of the Swiss citizenship of my father was required by the Swiss government. Since my father had been dead some twenty years, there was some difficulty in obtaining such documentary evidence, and it did not appear that there was any great need for this, and before my actual release could be effected, the Swiss government in Berne notified the Swiss Consul-General at Shanghai that the investigations made by the Swiss government failed to establish, to the satisfaction of that government, the Swiss citizenship of Mr. Elly Widler. But this doesn't alter the fact that at the time of my arrest I was duly registered as a Swiss citizen, proofs of which exist to this day; and therefore, it is absolutely clear that my being kept a captive in your hands for six months and four days was irregular.

Confiscated Property.

Mr. Widler denies in toto that he ever posed as a German citizen. About his treatment in gaol he says he has prepared a statement which he will publish later.

"As regards the confiscation of my money, goods and other property. My claim is not in the least exaggerated, nor is it absurd. Everybody in Chungking, both civilians, civil and military officials and foreigners alike know that for weeks boat loads of goods, articles and furniture, etc., were being moved from the Cosmos Club, over to the city of Chungking to the Bureau of Foreign Affairs. There is irrefutable evidence, as I have letters here in my possession written by Mr. Kenneth Wang, Chief Secretary of the Bureau of Foreign Affairs at Chungking, offering my billiard table and other articles of furniture for sale and mentioning that all my things have been "confiscated." You try to lay great stress on the fact of my being an unrecognized foreigner. If you publicly proclaim that because I am an unrecognized foreigner you are permitted to confiscate all my money, goods, etc., then how do you expect all the foreigners who at the present time enjoy extraterritorial rights will view this incident with regard to the much desired abolition of extraterritoriality?"

SILK WORKERS' STRIKE

Also Cigarette Shops Agitation against Tax Stamps: Ink-makers Leaving Shanghai

The strike at the Chapei silk filatures continues, and the majority of the factories are now closed. According to the Chinese press, the manufacturers are not very much concerned, trade being dull at the moment, but they are making efforts to effect a settlement.

In view of the obstinate attitude of the women workers, the masters, it is stated, have decided to stop work altogether and for an indefinite period. They will not re-open until they can get an assurance from the workers not to cause any more trouble. Outside the factories, a notice has been hung up, calling on the workers to come and get the balance of wages due to them.

Cigarette shops in Pootung are still holding out for a more liberal discount of the tax stamps sold them by the tax office. Ten days have elapsed since they walked out and their position remains the same as before. The Tax Office contends that as it has been officially decided that the revenue stamps shall be sold to the shops within the nine sections of the Pootung district at 75 per cent. of their face value, the office cannot reduce the rate to 45 per cent., at which rate the stamps are sold to shops in the Chinese police jurisdiction of Shanghai and Woosung.

The ink-makers on strike hail from different parts of Anhui. They have decided to sever their connexion with the Shanghai shops for good, and will return home as soon as they have received their back pay. About 400 men have signified their willingness to abide by this decision by signing a paper. An application has been made to the Hui-Ning Guild (whose members are natives of Huichow and Ningkuofu) for permission to let the men live in the guild before departure, the men undertaking to provide food for themselves.

The silke filature women returned to work on Thursday. Condititions of the sttlement are thtat no more heavy fines will be imposed upon defaulters, working hours are to be decreased during the hot weather, and the granting of a special weekly bonus is to be considered at a later date, while the women's demand for higher pay has been deferred until business improves.

THE SUMMER DISEASES HOSPITAL

The Chinese Hospital for Summer Diseases at 316 Tientsin Road on Sunday was formally opened for the season. This institution was founded by the late Mr. Shen Tung-ho, President of the Chinese Red Cross Society, and it is at present managed by Dr. W. L. New, assisted by his brother, Dr. W. S. New, Dr. Y. R. Hwang, Dr. S. B. Lu, Dr. M. Hwang, Dr. C. T. Neal, and a staff of 16 nurses, men and women. The hospital is capable of accommodating 100 patients, and has two extra wings and a central hall, which were used during the epidemic of 13 years ago. There are three classes of patients for which the hospital is open and the third class receive all medical treatment free of charge. Last year the total number of resident patients was 638, of whom 359 were cholera cases. There were also 1,984 outpatients.

Credit is due to Mr. Chuang Tetse for his very able work in organizing a financial appeal, to which the public has responded splendidly. The hospital in the past has done excellent work in relieving the sickness and distress which necessarily arises in the hot weather.

EIGHTY students were graduated on the second commencement day of William's College, on the Chinese Bund, on Wednesday afternoon, Nineteen received diplomas from the high school department of the college and 61 from the preparatory department. The Domestic University scholarship was won by Mr. Chiang Tsahwa. Mr. Dzao Liktse, former Minister of Education, addressed the graduates, and Dr. William Liu, President of the college, delivered the opening address.

THE Mokanshan Summer Resort Association's Bulletin again contains much interesting information which those about to spend a holiday on the "foothills of the Himalayas" cannot afford to be without. It is noticeable that the journey, which never took longer than one day from Shanghai to the top of the mountain, can now be performed under more comfortable conditions on the last stage from the Sanchiaopu Rest House. The old and narrow road, with many steep and dangerous steps, was always somewhat trying to delicate nerves. A new road, built in 1920, and now owned by the railway, has none of these terrors. Beginning with this season, chair coolies, who characteristically prefer the old road, must now take the new unless otherwise requested by their fares. The turning point to the new road is clearly marked by a large white sign and new comers should watch for it. Visitors may obtain the bulletin from Messrs. Edward Evans & Sons.

To Mercury, on the New Post Office

I.
Oh Mercury! how can you sit
Taking your dolce far niente
While postmen have to haste and flit
With heavy bags of mails in plenty!

II.
A truly bad example, you,
Dallying there among the ladies!
What do they represent, those two?
Explain and tell me what their trade is.

III.
Your proper attitude is that
Prescribed for you throughout the ages,
Dressed simply in your wingéd hat
Skipping along in graceful stages.

IV.
Is it the "Poste Restante" that you
Are meant to typify? If no,
Let's hope your slackness isn't due
To featuring the C.P.O.

V.
But when arrives the torried heat
Which in the summer is Shanghai's,
You'll find it hard to keep your seat,
For Mercury's the first to rise.

CORRESPONDENCE

KU KLUX KLAN

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Regarding your article about the Chinese K.K.K. copied from the "China Times" we beg to inform you that you were wrong in some parts as follows:

We are not a club and have no club rooms, we have a headquarters for the order and where only business pertaining to the order is carried on. The meeting places are at such places where a klan is located, but not club rooms.

Chinese is the only language that is used in the initiation of members, and Chinese is the official language of the order. We have numbers of members, especially officials that have a good knowledge of the English language and we recomend that wherever possible the English language be used, so that members will become familiar with it and help them keep in practice what they learn in the schools and in business. All members are Chinese and we do not know of any fat Chilean who is a member or even a visitor.

We have no club in the French Concession.

We are starting a paper, the first issue will be on the press Saturday, June 21, 1924, and will be available on Monday. It will be issued weekly.

We have grips and signs the same as the Masons or any other foreign secret order or society. We have no secrets that we hide and the "China Times" reporter must have had a pipe dream.

The klans are growing fast and we will say that the reporter dropped at least one cypher in the number of members and some of the other figures were also wrong.

Naturally, the first question will be, Are we anti-foreign? We will state that we are not. We are neither anti or pro anything. We are only for China and the Chinese.

The reporter of the "China Times" could never have been to the headquarters or he would not have said that the leader was a Cantonese prominent in a foreign firm, because we have many Chinese who are holding very big positions in both foreign and Chinese firms. Who are they? Well ??????, he don't know that is sure.

Thanking you and trusting that you will correct the article in question and assuring you that we have great respect for the really best morning paper in China, and that you will make your own investigations,

We beg to remain sincerely,
THE GRAND KLAN.

THE RECENT INVASION OF A TOKIO HOTEL

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—In his contribution, appearing in to-day's issue, your own correspondent at Tokio writes:—

It is now fully proved that the "invasion" of the hotel ball-room was a farce, planned to play on the ignorance of foreigners here,.....according to confessions made by them to the police, who have the whole gang under lock and key."

If the whole gang is under lock and key then, unless your own correspondent has had access to them in gaol (which I very much question), the foregoing information has been given to him by the officials. Some of us have lived in Japan for very many years and have a great deal of sympathy with them at this juncture, but speaking for myself I object to have my intelligence rated at such a low ebb as the foregoing farrago of piffle would seem to imply.

Once again may I ask you to conform to the universal spelling of the name of the capital of Japan? No person or firm in Japan writes the name as "Tokio" and I take leave to doubt if your own correspondent heads his letters "Tokio" although you print it in that form. It is one of the first things one learns on becoming resident in Japan. Another thing one very quickly learns is not to refer to the people as "Japs" although one frequently hears that expression outside.

I am etc.,
MARUHODO.

"THE TAINT OF FRANCE"

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—On reading the remarks of Bishop James Cannon published in your issue of to-day, respecting American boys and girls staying out all night, drinking bootleg hootch, breaking human and divine laws, etc., etc., one is at a loss to know how such a rambling statement should be taken.

To blame France for such a state of affairs as existing in America at the present time is not only a slight on our gallant allies, but the height of discourtesy. Does this Bishop try to tell us that had America waited a little longer before deciding to cast in her lot on the side of right, and eventually been too late, that the Land of Liberty would to-day have been a real paradise, with no drinking of bootleg liquor or bobbed haired bandits No Bishop, you are wrong, and incidentally this is one of the most paltry excuses ever put forward in respect of prohibition law breaking.

If America is tainted with "the taint of France," what is the state of the British Isles, whose sons were on French soil for three years before the Americans? What is really meant by the "taint of France"? It would be well for the Bishop to remember that France is not the only country in the world where loose women are to be seen at every corner.

Where the real business was being done in France there was no time for wine shops, free living or loose women. To one who saw a good deal of fighting in France, who has nothing but great admiration for the French people, and who has always been generously received by the French, it is really nauseous to read such cant as vomitted by this irresponsible Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

GEN. YANG SEN AND MR. WIDLER

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—With reference to the article which appeared in your paper this morning under the heading of "General Yang Sen and Mr. Elly Widler," I have the honour to draw your attention to the Swiss Consul-General's letter of February 27, published in your issue of February 28, in which it was stated that the Federal Government have refused to recognize Mr. Elly Widler as a Swiss citizen on the ground that he was unable to establish his claim to Swiss citizenship.

I shall feel obliged if you will cause this letter to be published in to-morrow's issue of the "North-China Daily News."

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
For The Swiss Consul-General:
F. KAESTLI
Acting Vice-Consul.

"S.M.C. AND NEW ROADS"

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Why is it that our neighbours can lay down beautiful broad roads in the outside districts, whilst very little in the way of opening up new roads is being done in the International Settlement. I hope that our City Fathers who have decided on new roads will bear in mind that if there is one thing that ratepayers will support them in spending money freely on, it is roads.

It is far better to pay a few thousand taels more a mow than considered a fair price, rather than wait until prices are away up and we have to pay through the nose and curse our City Fathers.

I am, etc.,
A RATEPAYER.

MISSIONARIES IN CHINA

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Is is good that "A Business Man" has championed the cause of the missionaries in China as it takes two at least to continue an argument and I am therefore afforded by his letter (and with your permission) an opportunity, to offer some more authorities as evidence in support of my contention. I may say at first that it is also more than twice 18 years since I first landed in the Far East where missionaries operate, but it does not take more than a small portion of that time for one to gain sufficient knowledge of the subject and form his ideas as to the necessity or otherwise of missionaries in China.

I did not answer your comment on my last letter as you did not rise above quoting your amah as a shining example of one converted to the Christian Faith. Neither did I answer the letter of Miss I. O. Nary, for her letter was silly and childish. Her query as to whether I am the type of foreigner who delights in belabouring his neighbour's ricsha coolie is sufficient to show that argument with her would be futile. The question I hoped to set in my first letter was whether religious missionaries in China were necessary or not and my contention is they are not.

"A Business Man" believes they have as much right here as the merchant. I would tell him that commerce and religion have no parallel. There is mutual benefit when the foreign merchant engages in an exchange of goods with the Chinese, but it is a onesided affair when a missionary foists a new religion on a weakminded Chinese.

I would remind "A Business Man" that it is not necessary that one should be a Christian in order to be upright, honest, kind-hearted and just. The teachings of Confucius are quite as lofty and ideal as those of Jesus Christ, but the unfortunate part is that people do not live up to the teachings of their respective religion or philosophy.

In my former letters I have quoted eminent authorities to show that the activities of religious missions in China have cost her millions of lives and dollars. To me the opinions of those already quoted and of the late Dr. G. E. Morrison, one-time Political Adviser to China, Mr. Herbert A. Giles, M.A., probably the greatest sinologue the World has known, the late Mr. Archibald J. Little, merchant, traveller and writer and many others too numerous to mention are convincing testimony; and to those who are ready to see things as they are, it must be apparent that the religious missionary is better out of China. Let me quote what the late Dr. G. E. Morrison has recorded:—

"Look, for example, at the difficulty there is in telling a Chinese, who "has been taught to regard the love of his parents as his chief duty, as his forefathers have been taught for hundreds of generations before him—the difficulty there is in explaining to him, in his own language, the words of Christ, 'If any man 'come to Me and hate not his father, he cannot be My disciple. 'For I am come to set a man at variance against his father."

Also, "Talk to the Chinese of religion, of a God, of heaven or hell, and they yawn; speak to them of business, and they are attention."

And the late Mr. Little:—

"It is one thing to convert African savages or Polynesian fetish worshippers, and another thing to spend millions of money in attempting to convert Chinese who possess an ancient and admirable system of ethics of their own."

Also Mr. Herbert A. Giles:—

"From time to time a few scientific treatises are translated by ambitious members of the missionary body; but such only tend to swell the pastor's fame among his own immediate flock; they do not advance civilization one single step. The very fact of their emanating from a missionary would of itself be enough to deter the better class of Chinese from purchasing, or even accepting them as a gift."

One more example of the cost of the Foreign Religious Invasion of China to this country—

KIAOCHOU. In brief the story is as follows:—

On November 1, 1897, two German missionaries were killed in Shantung by some irresponsible villagers who were strongly opposed to the missionary propaganda. Germany promptly required Kiaochou as a naval base and regarded as the legitimate hinterland of Kiaochou, the province of Shantung with its 128,000 square miles of area, its 37,000,000 of inhabitants, and its profoundly sacred character as the birthplace of Confucius and Mencius. It is to China what Palestine is to the Christians and Mecca to the Mohammedans.

The subtle rudeness of "A Business Man" does not avail and abuse is no argument. But when he tells me to use my thinkpan I surmise the little grey matter he possessed has gone to the frying pan.

I am etc.,

P. O. Q.

Shanghai, June 20, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Some days ago you published a letter from "A Business Man" who stated that "there is no power in the hands of the missionaries to compel any Chinese to accept Christianity," but I question whether anybody has ever made such a claim. But has your correspondent never heard of "the power of the purse?" It is well known that in Great Britain alone over four million pounds sterling is raised every year for the conversion of the heathen, and in the United States and Canada the total for that purpose is about G.$18,000,000. We do not know exactly how much money is spent in China by Protestant missionaries, but it is estimated to be about a quarter of the total amount or say roughly 20 million silver dollars per annum, and add to this an equal amount spent by the Roman Catholic Church and we then see what enormous power the missionaries have. It has become a huge vested interest. The total converts in China are claimed to be about two and a half million, accepting the claim of the R. C. Church that they have two million converts in China. Does this huge amount of about 40 million dollars per annum not exert some influence? It is a well-known fact that it pays the Chinese to become Christians. I could, if I wanted, give details on this point. I remember one remarkable case where a mission obtained several hundred "converts" through feeding starving people. However, the excuse is often made that the missionaries are doing good in educating the Chinese, but even on that point the best Chinese thought holds the opposite view. In this connexion I would refer you to a book "Christianizing the Heathen" by Mrs. Bradlaugh Bonner (Watts & Co., London) where a survey is made of the whole missionary field. My attention has been drawn to a very able article written by Pan Han-lien, published in the "Hsueh Teng," and which I translate as follows in part:—

"We Chinese must not overlook the fact that in many of the Christian schools our children are taught in a wrong direction, and we non-Christians find the result is absolutely unsatisfactory. Some people argue that better teachers are required, but this is an empty dream as the sole object of the Christian missionaries is to make converts. Do you think that these Christian schools will sacrifice the influence of God in order to improve Chinese education? If you investigate this matter you will find that these students spend a lot of time every day in repeating such words as God and Our Saviour. The prospectuses of these schools always state that a study of the Bible is compulsory. Chinese girls in these Christian schools are said to be "young women of purpose and noble ideals who are hoping to go abroad to complete their education, but what does it result in except an extravagance of dress, and denationalization? Many of our young men point to many of the returned students who are now occuping important positions, and in order to get such jobs they become Christians and follow in their steps. This of course is most ridiculous, but yet it is a common way of looking at things. Even if these Christian schools employed better Chinese teachers it would only result in more converts as the teachers would see the importance of a stable income, thus ensuring rice for their families."

I am, etc.,

RATIONALIST.

Shanghai, June 23, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Further to my last letter may I ask "A Business Man" and others of his ilk why it is that the Editor of every self respecting journal deprecates anything approaching a religious controversy and closes his columns against such? Is it not because a controversy of this nature arouses, or would arouse, ill-feeling and conflict between an otherwise peaceful community? And for the same reason the descent of thousands of foreign men and women upon this country, men and women whose object and aim and business is the attempt of conversion in religious beliefs, of the people, is responsible for nine-tenths of the trouble between China and the Foreign Powers.

The Chinese merchant who visits say, England, is afforded every protection that a law-abiding person should expect; but if Chinese were to invade England in their thousands for the express purpose of converting some of the inhabitants to a belief in the teachings of, say, Confucius, it is certain that those responsible for law and order would not undertake to guarantee the safety of the intruders. It is more likely that they would not even be allowed a landing. Why, therefore, should China continue to countenance this intrusion, this invasion of a misguided horde of trouble-makers, whose energies could more profitably be spent in their own country? There is no reason why this moderate toleration, this passive acquiescence should continue, and it will be the beginning of the end of one of China's curses when she finds strength and moral courage to give marching orders to the army of religious missioners who have cost her so many millions in men and money.

P. O. Q.

Shanghai, June 21, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Allow me to support what you have said in this morning's Notes and Comments in regard to the missionaries in China. I have just come back from a two months' trip around China, where my work brought me into contact with missionaries and their institutions. I am on general principles opposed to proseletizing, and have, moreover, a high regard for the culture of the Chinese, and the spiritual and moral value of their religions and philosophies. I can therefore appreciate what some of your correspondents have to say in opposition to missionary institutions. As regards the missionaries themselves, however, I must say that I was impressed with their devotion to real uplift, with their intense desire to be of practical, moral, and spiritual service to the people, whom they genuinely love, and to whose needs they try to respond as well as they can. I was struck with the conditions under which they live, far removed from kith and kin, in dirty, unsavoury cities and villages, toiling away under great difficulties sometimes, always true to their ideal of service, often struggling along on a meagre pittance. I have listened to the conversations they have among themselves; one doesn't hear much of how many converts they have made, but always their talk is of practical work: education, hygiene, sports, community service, relief, 24 hours in the day. Their life seems saturated with the idea of service; of their devotion and unselfishness there can be no doubt. We may not agree with the practical benefits they bring to China, but men and women who toil as I have seen them toil, with personal disinterestedness and at the cost of personal discomfort, to say nothing of occasional danger, must have the profound respect of every thinking man. Let us discuss by all means whether or not the missions have brought any benefit to the Chinese, but let us do so impersonally, without disrespect to the personnel of these missions. Even if they are in the wrong they deserve our utmost sympathy.

I am etc.,

A. HORNE.

Shanghai, June 24, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Under "Notes & Comments" in your issue of this morning you make the assertion that the testimony of your correspondent "Rationalist" and quotations from a woman like Mrs. Bradlaugh Bonner against mission work are obviously prejudiced because the writers disbelieve in Christianity, and are therefore worthless.

Ergo, the only persons entitled to an opinion are Christians who believe in mission work, and whose opinion, of course, (the italics are mine) are not prejudiced. Oh, dear, no.

All argument is a form of prejudice, otherwise why argue? But if your puny little discharge of abuse is your un-prejudiced contribution to the argument then I should be tickled to death to see some of your prejudiced arguments. They ought to be really funny.

I am not a Christian but I would like to ask one question. Have you not, in common with the majority of persons, an instinctive distrust of a convert?

I am, etc.,

OLD NICK.

Shanghai, June 24, 1924.

*In answer to the last question, no certainly not. The question of whether Rationalists are likely to be the right kind of people to criticize the operation of a religion to which they are antagonistic, we leave to our readers. The correspondence on this question is closed.—Ed.

DISCIPLINE IN HONGKONG UNIVERSITY

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—In every Mission or other educational institute throughout the whole of Chnia, the one thing upon which parents can rely is the excellence of the discipline. We have known parents who are not specially interested in Christianity, but who have withdrawn their sons from Government schools and placed them in missionary institutions solely on the ground that the control is such that the parents can enjoy peace of mind. It is therefore very unfortunate that in such a splendid institution like the Hongkong University confidence in its discipline is being shaken. The rumours of students failing to keep hours and of tutors who attempt to enforce rules being left without adequate backing—and, it is stated, there are cases where zealous tutors have been threatened should they persist in their cleansing of the stables—are very disquieting. We don't wish to raise any controversy in this matter, but as we are British we feel an intense interest in the Hongkong University and would very much like to know if there is any foundation for the stories of successful resistance to the imposition of the rules, and if it is true that teachers are so fed up with lack of proper support from their superiors in the matter of enforcing discipline, that they are inclined to let things rip.

Enclosing my card,

I am, etc.,

CONCERNED.

Peking, June 15, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Having recently come to Shanghai from Hongkong where I stayed for over two months on a visit to my brothers and fifty odd friends who are students of the Hongkong University, I believe I am in a position to answer your correspondent "Concerned."

No fault is to be found with the discipline of the H.K.U. In fact the discipline there is of a far superior kind to that of a great many so-called colleges and universities scattered all over China insomuch as there is much difference in the constitition and training aimed at. Most of the students of the H.K.U. hail from Malaya and the Dutch Indies, places where self-government for the student body is the practice. Consequently we would expect to find the students there given opportunities whenever practicable and advisable to govern themselves with one of the professors standing by to give any aid required.

This being the case the 'Varsity may be justly proud that her students have never intentionally abused the freedom granted them. My statement may give occasion for the question, "Is it better thus?" All educationalists who had tried this method of control would without doubt reply in the affirmative.

The hostel chairman (elected annually) assisted by a committee of eight, is responsible for calling the roll of his hostel, morning and evening—absences are reported to the Warden. There is, I think, only one case on record of a student failing to observe regulation hours after having been warned. Does this not show the general conduct of the students?

Tutors of the H.K.U., so far as I know, are broadminded men of experience who know better than to treat the students like school boys to hard and fast regulations like the rules of the twice one are two table.

For many years I have been greatly interested in the H.K.U. and during the time no word reached me of students openly coming into conflict with their tutors.

"Concerned" should write for the catalogue of the 'Varsity and subscribe to the Hongkong University Union Magazine, should he really wish to know fully the conditions existing there, for I can assure him the rumours he heard are unfounded.

The H.K.U., Magazine is wholly managed by the students in the interests of the students. On the cover are these words or something similar, "Give me leave, a chapter as large as the wind, to blow on whomsoever I please."

CHINESE PLACE NAMES

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—I note with satisfaction that the Royal Geographical Society of London and other kindred institutions have adopted the appellations for place names in China in accordance with the Chinese Post Office List which is the only standard work on the subject hitherto published.

There is one exception however and that is the ex-German Port of "Tsingtao," as now spelt. The character means " a rocky Island in the sea and is rendered by all sinologues as "Tao" and not Tau.

The Chinese Post Office might do worse than follow its system consistently and substitute "Tao" for "Tau," which latter is not used in any other standard list of place names.

Why China should retain a name given to a place by an alien Power is a mystery to me, because I imagine she would be only too glad to adopt its own recognized standard to transliteration.

I am, etc.,

J. B. BRADLEY.

QUESTION FOR SINOLOGUES

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—I am desirous of obtaining information as to the history and date of "The old man of eighty-two." He is said to be a certain Shih Liang Hou (石良瘤) well known as an historical personage, who was still studying at this age, and lived, I believe, near Hangchow.

There is also another man Wang Shih Chun (王石軍) who has some historical significance as a henpecked husband, about whom I am trying to get some information.

If any well-informed reader can give me any information through the columns of your paper I shall regard it as a great favour.

I am, etc.,

SIR,—One of the names inquired after by your correspondent is probably 王右軍, not 石軍 as written. An account of this individual is to be found under 王羲之, no. 2174 in Giles' Biographical Dictionary. He lived A.D. 321—379 and was both student and soldier, but is chiefly remembered for his marvellous skill with the pen.

WHAT ARE HIVES?

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—May I ask if someone will kindly tell me what to do for "Hives"? I think that is the name. Their first appearance on children is just like a flea bite, speedily forming a small blister which breaks, leaving a sore; they come in pairs or groups and are very irritating. Will someone please tell me their cause, prevention and treatment?

Silver.

The price came yesterday at 34 1/16d. ready and forward, against 34⅛d. ready and 34 1/16d. forward a week ago, showing declines of 1/16d. and ⅛d. on the respective prices. Both India and China are reported as sellers, whilst the Continent bought, but apparently there has been very little support to the market.

Bars in stock, 2,638, including Silver Yen 10 lakhs. Stocks of Sycee and Dollars amount to Tls. 376 lakhs and $382 lakhs, against Tls. 360¼ lakhs and $379½ lakhs last week, and Tls. 211 lakhs and $290 lakhs on June 26, 1923.

Exchange.

Exchange left off last week with the official quotation T.T. 3/3⅛d., where it remained until Monday, when it opened at T.T. 3/3⅛d. It opened at the same rate on Tuesday, when, with some demand and few bills offering, the rate was dropped a further ⅛d. to 3/3d. during the forenoon. At this level it remained until opening on Thursday afternoon, when it was raised to 3/3⅛d., where it remains. The market is entirely a speculator's one, with little genuine merchant business of any kind doing yesterday morning the market opened quiet with sellers T.T. 3/3⅛d. and Gold $71 June/August, 3/3 1/16d. and Gold $71⅛ September forward. Following the speculator's operations these rates soon improved to T.T. 3/3 1/16d. and 71⅛ for near delivery, but fell back shortly before the tiffin interval to the opening quotations.

THE SILVER MARKET

A Healthy Reaction: Rising Rates Expected: Demand for Silver Dollars in Manchuria

Reporting from London on May 14, Messrs. Samuel Montagu & Co. state:—

After the steady advance of prices during the last week or so, there has been a healthy reaction. This is but natural considering that on the whole there is really an absence of competition. Only the recurrence at intervals of bear covering contends at the present time with the inquiry for the Continent, as China and India do not figure as buyers. Moderate selling takes place occasionally from China. It has not been difficult at the higher level of prices to obtain silver from America, but even if the market continues mainly of a "one-horse" character, the undertone is likely to keep good, and, should competition from India or China set in, rising rates can be expected. A feature of the week has been considerable Continental sales, which, however, found a ready market.

The China correspondent of the "Capital," Calcutta, thus dealt with the movements of silver coin in Manchuria and Mongolia:—

"The demand for silver dollars in Manchuria is still to a certain extent unsatisfied, silver dollars at the present time going to a great extent to Manchuria and Dairen. In this connexion it is interesting to note that the Japanese yen notes have superseded Russian rouble notes in Manchuria, which prior to 1919 were current in North Manchuria. For instance, the Bank of Chosen notes in North Manchuria at the end of last year were estimated to be nearly 100,000,000. It is stated that Chinese bankers in Tientsin are objecting to the transport of silver specie to Urga, the capital of Mongolia, and also have protested against the levying of the 20 per cent. tax by the Russian authorities on imported and exported goods from Urga. In the long petition that they have sent to the Peking Government the bankers pointed out that some 3,000,000 dollars are exported every year from Kalgan to Urga, thus creating a diminution in silver stocks not only in Tientsin but also in Peking. It is contended that this is eventually finding its way to Russia. It would be interesting to note how an exported quantity of 3,000,000 dollars could have such a serious effect on the monetary markets of North China as the Tientsin merchants try to picture. . . . Just how much of this silver goes into Russia proper for hoarding it is difficult to state, but reliable despatches from the Consular bodies at Kalgan seem to lean to the view that most of it is used legitimately and in the financing of trade. The Mongolians, no doubt, are addicted to hoarding silver currency, but in this respect they are certainly not unique, for the people of China are similarly given to hoarding silver, a very pronounced feature in many interior parts.'

The silver quotations to-day for cash and two months' delivery are respectively ⅛d. and 1/16d. above those fixed a week ago.

Rising Prices.

May 21.—Supplies have not been freely forthcoming and prices have had to rise in order to attract potential sellers. A certain amount of competition now exists, owing to bear covering from India and China, and there have also been some purchases for shipment from the former quarter. A higher level of prices would therefore appear to be justified, and the undertone may be regarded as favourable. Continental sales have not been in evidence, and the price still seems considerably below the figure which would elicit sales for forward delivery on China account.

The silver quotations to-day for cash and two months' delivery are respectively ⅜d. and 1/16d. above those fixed a week ago.

Heavy Continental Buying.

Reporting from London on May 22, Messrs. Mocatta & Goldsmid state:—

The bullish feeling referred to in our last circular has developed during the past week and caused a fairly sharp rise in the quotations, the price to-day being 34 1/16, as against 33 1/16 a week ago. The recent heavy purchases for the Continent are now beginning to have their effect and with a continuance of these purchases for more than one quarter of the Continent, the market has a very hard undertone. India and China, with the exception of covering part of their bear commitments, have recently not given much support to the market, but, on the report that the Canton Mint will shortly re-open for coinage, the possibility of China buying seems much nearer; this has been reflected in the Indian bazaars, where the price of silver has become much nearer to London parity than it had been for some time. Since the Continental demand is chiefly for forward delivery, the difference between the spot and forward quotations has been comparatively small, but stocks in London are not too large and seem likely to be absorbed in the near future. At the higher level of rates, America has been disposed to sell moderately, but the market is very dependent on New York for supplies and should the buying continue on the present scale a further rise would seem inevitable.

THE GOLD MARKET

Stabilization of Currency Best not Only for United States but all the World

Reporting from London on May 7, Messrs. Samuel Montagu & Co. state:—

The Bank of England gold reserve against its note issue on the 30th ult., amounted to £126,295,715, as compared with £126,291,545 on the previous Wednesday.

The larger proportion of the fair amount of gold available this week has been taken for the East. Gold valued at $5,350,000 has arrived in New York—$3,500,000 from London and $1,850,000 from Germany.

May 14.—The Bank of England gold reserve against its note issue on the 7th inst. amounted to £126,345,760, as compared with £126,293,715 on the previous Wednesday.

The Indian bazaars hav taken a large share of the moderate amount of gold offering in the market this week. Gold valued at $4,080,000 has been received in New York from London.

The Transvaal gold output for April amounted to 768,923 fine ounces, as compared with 795,671 fine ounces for March and 743,651 fine ounces for April, 1923.

The United Kingdom imports and exports of gold during the month of April were as follows:—

The Dawes Report.

The report of the Advisory Council to the U. S. Federal Reserve Board on the finding of the First Committee of Experts (the Dawes Report) has now been published. It draws attention to the advisability of finding ways and means to permit the gold reserves and banking strength of America being applied to benefit countries striving to put their houses in order and to rehabilitate their currencies. It emphasizes the danger to the United States of gold saturation and the advantages that would accrue to the United States from a return to an effective gold standard on the part of European countries in which it remains in abeyance. It adds, "In the opinion of the Council, the sooner Germany can be placed on a gold or gold exchange basis, the sooner can England and other countries also return to an unrestricted gold standard, while if Germany were placed on a sterling basis, England, in returning to an unrestricted gold basis, would have to pull not her own weight, but that of Germany also." To sum up, the Advisory Council in our letter the wisdom of the policy which we ventured to outline in our letter of April 23 last, namely, that loans for the stabilization of currency systems, when a judicious opportunity arrives, would appear calculated to serve the true interests of the United States as well as that of the world at large.

SHANGHAI MARKET REPORT

A Very Dull Week: Heavy Declines in Piece Goods: Cotton and Yarn Prices Down

June 28.

Dull as the markets were last week, they have been even worse this week and only the most gloomy reports can be obtained all round. It had been hoped that the slump in piece goods was only temporary, but the situation has grown worse, owing to the combined influence of the drop in cotton prices, the wet weather and the work in the fields whenever there has been a chance to do any. The position looks even worse now that several mills, owing to the shortages of supplies and the unsatisfactory prices, have decided further to reduce working hours.

Piece Goods.

The inquiry has been so small and clearances so poor that trade during the week may be described as practically at a standstill. The majority of the dealers are simply standing by, waiting to see what happens. A trifling second-hand demand has been noticed, but money is very tight and only the most pressing trade orders are being met. The northern ports have shown slightly more interest, but even they will not go beyond Whites. Local values now are barely steady.

Cotton, Yarn, etc.

China Cotton.—There has been an average drop of about Tls. 1 during the week, but very few purchases are reported. The undertone is much easier as a consequence of more favourable crop reports and the reduction of operations in several of the mills. The closing quotations on the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange yesterday morning were:—July, 46½; August, 45.55; September, 42.40; October, 39.50; November, 39.10. Spot quotations were:—Shensi, Tls. 46.50; Hankow, Tls. 44.50 to Tls. 45.

Yarn.—There has been a lack of business in this market and poor clearances. Prices are about Tls. 2 down on the week. The closing quotations on the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange yesterday morning were:—June, 177; July, 174.60; August, 172.90; September, 170.70; October, 165.80; November, 164.30.

Produce.

Slightly increased interest in the produce market is reported, although business in most commodities continues featureless. European buyers have been inquiring for groundnuts, but on account of the low stocks the local market immediately strengthened and practically no sales have been effected. Rabbit skins are in good demand and considerable purchases have been reported. Easier exchange rates are assisting in making business prospects more favourable than they have been in the past few weeks.

THE TEA MARKET

Heavy accumulation of stocks, both in the American and European markets, due to shipments of very inferior and undersirable grades, caused a complete stagnation, and prices accordingly showed a decline for all China growths. A lower basis was naturally expected on the opening of the local market with business on a small and conservative scale. The early reports regarding the quality of the Black tea crop unfortunately proved to be only too true on the arrival of the early musters. The cold and wet weather experienced during the early spring had its effect on the leaf. A large proportion of the Keemun, Ningchow and Hankow crops may be described as tainted and rain damaged. This is true too of some of the Green tea districts, although too few musters have been shown to offer a decided opinion.

Business during the first month of the new season has been of a restricted nature, and consuming markets are doubtless anxious to see musters of early purchases before operating on a normal scale. In any case, the volume of business will in no way compare with last year.

RESTRICTION OF RUBBER OUTPUT

Petition for Abolition from Chinese in Malaya

London, June 24.

Commenting on the fact that Chinese rubber interests in Malaya are petitioning the Straits Government to abolish the rubber restriction scheme, the "Financial Times" emphasizes that there is not the slightest prospect of annulment of the scheme at present. It says that from August 1 onwards there is now practically certain to be a further five per cent. cut in production, followed by an additional five per cent. every three months until the average price of rubber reaches 15 pence.—Reuter.

The much discussed June Settlement was apparently carried through on the 24th instant to the satisfaction of all those who were fortunate enough to be on the right side of the book but it is generally known that many were unable to fulfil contracts and in consequence several of the regular large operators had great difficulty in arriving at a settlement and in a few cases liquidations resulted. Business has not as yet resumed normal conditions since the Settlement.

COMPANY MEETINGS

SHANGHAI EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT CO., LD.

Call for Tls. 3,000,000 Increase of Capital: Shareholders' Questions: Resolution Carried Despite Opposition

The annual general meeting of the Shanghai Exploration & Develop- [illegible] No. 1 the Bund last Friday afternoon. Mr. P. S. F. McBain, Chairman, presided, supported by Messrs. John Prentice, A. W. Burkill, and W. R. McBain.

The Chairman, after reading the notice convening the meeting and the auditors' report, said:

From the accounts you will have noticed that there was a loss on working at the Mentoukou Mine from July 1 to December 31, 1923, but of course during the greater part of this period the production was small, and for about two months the mine was closed down completely. Even when the mine is closed our expenses are fairly heavy as the amount of water to be dealt with is great and the overhead charges still continue. Every precaution has been taken during the year to guard against the possibility of having to close down again during the forthcoming wet season, and it is very likely that we shall be in a position to work right through, but of course one can never be quite certain about things of this sort. I think I can safely say that excluding special and capital expenditure the mine is working at a profit at the moment, but it is impossible for me to give you reliable figures showing the cost of production and prices at which the coal is sold as these vary so very greatly. The cost of production is governed to a great extent by the quantity produced, water to be pumped, etc., etc., and the sale prices vary from month to month. When we first came into the market, prices were very good, but our production, added to the quantity already available in the Peking-Tientsin area, proved to be rather too much for the consumption, and prices were quickly forced down by our competitors, and eventually reached low level just before last China New Year, as that is the time when many of the native pit owners are forced to sell, and buyers naturally take advantage of the situation. Since then the market has improved gradually and recently we have been able to sell all that we have produced at fair rates. However, we have not been able to dispose of our large stock of lump up to now, and the present is a bad time of the year to try, but we have several parties interested and anticipate before very long we shall be able to dispose of it. In any case buying for the autumn market starts about August, and we should be able to find a market for it then, if not before.

Increase of Capital

With regard to the proposed increase of capital of which a notice has been sent you, I wish you to know that this matter has had the earnest consideration of your directors for some time past, and although it is possible that we are asking for more than we shall require, it was decided that it was advisable to place the company in a thoroughly strong financial position and able to meet competition, if required to do so. With funds available to take any steps the directors may consider necessary for the improvement of market conditions. It is conceivable that we might wish to purchase coal if thrown on the market at very cheap rates. Also we may be forced in the future to purchase our own trucks in order to be in a safe position with regard to the transportation of our coal to the points required.

The development of the T. W. Concession has also to be considered, as we may be able to make the necessary arrangement to work it at any time, and it is, in the opinion of our engineers, a very valuable property.

Lastly, there is the further development of the Mentoukou Mine to be thought of, for, as you are aware, our present equipment is not capable of handling more than 1,500 tons daily. In addition to the foregoing there are many other minor reasons for our recommending you strongly to pass the resolution which I shall propose later on.

Increased Output.

Since our last meeting our output has gradually increased from about 300 tons to between 500 and 600 tons a day. As we have the equipment to deal with at least 1,500 tons per day, our engineer-in-chief expects in due course a gradual increase to that figure.

During February our output dropped owing to the Chinese New Year Holidays.

We must not forget that in this mine where we are dealing with large quantities of water, it is essential that precautions are taken to tap this pressure of water before allowing the miners to work the coal, otherwise the pressure would cause the coal to collapse on them.

We are now working in our 320 ft. level, but are sinking to the next 500 ft. level. At present we have reached a depth of 420 ft., but we have stopped further sinking temporarily as the rainy season will soon be here, and our engineer does not wish to run the risk of overloading his pumping capacity should he strike water.

A great deal of preperatory underground work has been accomplished since our last meeting. Besides making a new underground pump room, sumps, and stables, we have tunnelled 2,137 ft. through rock, and 19,352 ft. of rises and cross-cuts were made in our first coal seem.

We are at present working in our "A" seam (Tse Erh Tsao) estimated to have a workable average thickness of 12 ft. Recently we reached our "B" seam (Hei Mei Tsao), which has a thickness of three feet. The coal of this seam has the reputation of being of better quality than the "A" seam, and we are at present having a sample analysed. We are now driving to seam "C," (Pei Mei Tsao), but do not expect to reach this seam before the rainy season.

We are working our mine in three shifts of eight hour each; our miners are well housed and free medical attendance is provided. Owing to the approach of the harvest and the recent commencement of a railway in the neighbourhood, we have experienced a great shortage of labour; in fact it has seriously interfered with our output. We are making every endeavour to recruit more labour.

Native pits have caused our Engineer-in-Chief much anxiety as a great deal of reckless tunnelling has been done in the past, and no records kept of the direction in which these tunnels have been driven. Moreover, no precautionary measures have been taken to fill pockets after the coal has been taken out, and during the rainy season rainwater drains into these pockets, and percolates into our workings. We are making every attempt to safeguard our position by negotiations with the native owners, and by building concrete walls.

During the rainy season the mine had to suspend work for two months. This was a precautionary measure to safeguard ourselves from flooding as we had not then a reserve of pumping power to justify our carrying on with our excavations. Since that time we have been installing a new electric pump of 2,000 gallons per minute capacity, which will be ready before the next rainy season. With the addition of this new pump our margin of safety during the rainy season is very much higher than it was last year.

Railway Difficulties.

Owing to the shortage of cars on the Peking-Suiyuan railway line we were placed in a difficult position up to February of this year. They were scarcely able to supply us with more than 250 tons per day. This caused our stocks of coal to accumulate very rapidly at our mine; but in February we succeeded in making arrangements for an additional 500 tons per day; unfortunately, this arrangement is not permanent, therefore in the opinion of your directors we must own our own trucks. This of course will require the tying up of several lakhs of capital.

We have also experienced a great deal of difficulty regarding weights, both with the railway authorities and our contractors, and hope now that we are having our own weighbridge installed this will be eliminated.

Our Engineer-in-Chief reports that in his opinion we need now have no great anxiety during the wet season regarding supply of electric power. The Peking Power Company has recently put into operation a new 5,000 kilowatt generating set, and we can now be supplied from three independent units. In the case, therefore, of a complete breakdown of one unit, we can be switched on to either of the other units. To make our position as safe as possible we have authorized our engineer to carry out his recommendation of protecting the high tension transmission poles where they cross the Yung Ting Ho River, by building reinforced concrete bundings round the foot of each pole.

Before closing my remarks I should like to say that I think the thanks of the shareholders are due to our Engineer-in-Chief, Mr. Mamet, and all his staff for the good work they have done during the past year—often under somewhat trying circumstances.

I should also like to make a few remarks about the valuable help the directors have received from Mr. W. R. McBain. He has spent a great deal of time during last year and this year at the mine and in Peking on the business of the company, and has arranged many of our various difficulties satisfactorily. He has been very helpful in negotiations with officials of the government and the railways, as well as in organizing the marketing of our coal at different centres. These, as you can imagine, are not easy matters to deal with and the able way in which he has tackled them deserves the thanks of the shareholders as well as the directors. (Hear, hear.)

Before I put the resolution which is proposed by myself and seconded by Mr. Prentice I shall be pleased to hear any remarks that any shareholder may care to make and to answer any questions.

Mr. D. M. Gubbay asked how it was the auditors in their report stated they had received no information as to the value of expenditure on the T. W. Concession.

The Chairman replied that the money had been spent, but it really came to nothing, and the auditors had thought it better to draw the statement up in that way. They had struck a 13 ft seam, but they had not continued the working yet.

Mr. Robertson's Catechism.

Mr. Horatio Robertson wished to know what was the company's policy regarding Mentoukou Mine. Could they sell 250 tons of the 500 tons they mined per day?

The Chairman—I have told you we are selling it.

Mr. Robertson—Can you sell your output without the slightest trouble?

Mr. A. W. Burkill replied. He stated that he had been to Mentoukou after an absence of some years and he was very favourably impressed by all he saw there. Before he went north he had heard a good deal of criticism regarding that mine, but he was glad to say the critics had since turned round and they all believed the company had a very valuable concession. As regards the selling of the coal, there was at first a good deal of trouble, but they had to remember that they were coming in on a market that was more or less a close preserve and consequently they had a good deal of competition to face. He was glad to say, however, that not only was the 500 tons they were producing each day going regularly into consumption, but they were asked for more and more if they could possibly produce it. Unfortunately they could not owing to difficulties in organization and labour. As regards the T. W. Concession he believed they had a valuable mine with a good future before it. If they expected wonderful things right away then they would be disappointed, but the progress could be relied upon to be slow but sure.

Mr. Robertson said they did not look for everything in five minutes, but he had asked them whether they could sell the 500 tons they produced daily. Could they assure the meeting that they could get a firm or a man to contract with them for 10,000 tons of their coal if they could produce it.

The Chairman said there was no doubt in his mind that they could market the full amount they could produce.

Mr. Robertson then wished to know what were the calls on their stock. Was it consumed industrially, domestically, by the railways or what?

The Chairman said it did not seem to matter a great deal what it was used it for once they had sold it.

Mr. Robertson begged to differ. He pointed out that if it was only used for domestic purposes they were up against every little Chinese pitman who liked to scrape for coals in that area. He had every right to do so and no overcharges. All he did was to scrape it together and ship it away on camels.

The Chairman—I do not think it is entirely consumed by domestic users.

Industrial Demands.

Mr. Burkill replying to a further question from Mr. Robertson, said it might be of interest to the meeting to learn that the native coal miner was not a very serious obstacle. It cost them—the native miners—$2 per ton to get their coal to Peking by camel. Industrial concerns would take all the coal they could get at Peking, but it was no use their attempting to go in and get this demand from industrial sources, as they easily could, because they would not be able to cope with the orders.

To Mr. Robertson's question as to whether they had now the rights over the T. W. Concession, the Chairman replied in the affirmative.

Mr. Robertson said if the property was their's why not get on with the work?

The Chairman—That is what we want some of the money for.

Mr. Robertson—Then let us have a programme as to what you are going to do. We cannot go on from year to year, there is a limit to everything. Let us know what you are going to do. I want a more definite programme as regards T. W.

The Chairman replied that it had taken them some time to work Menkoukou, and that was much nearer and easier to work than T. W. They could not do very much more with that latter concession than they had done already.

After further questions on the same lines, Mr. Robertson again pleaded for a policy. "Let us know what you are going to do," he said, "instead of making these spasmodic calls for more money, more money."

The Chairman—I said in my speech, Mr. Robertson, that we probably should not want all the money we are calling for.

Mr. Robertson—Then don't call for it with the state business is in in Shanghai. There is too much of this sort of thing altogether in Shanghai. Let us have a policy in regard to T. W. We are entitled to information, we have waited long enough, five years.

The Chairman—There is no doubt we shall do something with it, Mr.

Heads I Win; Tails you Lose.

Robertson. We will consider the matter.

Mr. Robertson.—When, when, when? In the time of our great grandchildren?

After further discussion the matter was allowed to drop, albeit reluctantly on the part of Mr. Robertson, and there being no further questions the resolution was put to the meeting.

On the proposition of the Chairman, seconded by Mr. John Prentice, the report and accounts were adopted.

The following resolutions were also carried:—

That the appointment of Mr. W. R. McBain by the directors to fill the vacancy on the board caused by the retirement of Mr. J. K. Tweed be confirmed.—Proposed by Mr. Ellis Hayam, seconded by Mr. W. G. Pirie.

That the appointment of Mr. R. S. F. McBain as a director of the company be confirmed.—Proposed by Mr. Kenneth Martin, seconded by Mr. Ellis Hayam.

That Mr. A. J. Welch be re-elected a director of the company.—Proposed by Mr. A. Woods, seconded by Mr. D. M. Gubbay.

That Messrs. Lowe, Bingham & Matthews be re-elected auditors for the ensuing year.—Proposed by Mr. R. L. Ellis, seconded by Mr. Gensburger.

Extraordinary Meeting

An extraordinary general meeting followed, when, on the proposition of the Chairman, seconded in each case by Mr. John Prentice, the following extraordinary resolutions were carried:—

"(1) That the capital of the Company be increased to Tls. 3,000,000 by the creation of 350,000 additional ordinary shares of Tls. 5.00 each ranking for dividend and in all other respects pari passu with the existing ordinary shares of the Company.

"(2) That of the said additional shares 250,000 shall be offered in the first instance at par to the members of the company in proportion to the number of ordinary shares held by them respectively in accordance with the company's register of members as on July 31, 1924 (the transfer books and register of members to be closed from July 25 to July 31, 1924, both days inclusive) and upon the footing that the amount of each share taken up shall be paid to the company as follows:—

Tls. 2 upon application.
Tl. 1 on August 30, 1924.
Tls. 2 on October 30, 1924.

Shares taken up and not paid in full before the expiration of one week from October 30, 1924, shall be forfeited by the directors and deemed to be the property of the company.

"(3) That of the said additional shares 100,000 be offered in the first instance at the price of Tls. 600,000 to the Shanghai Loan & Investment Co., Ld., and upon the footing that the full amount of such price be paid to the company on acceptance of the offer.

"(4) That such offer to the shareholders and to the Shanghai Loan & Investment Co., Ltd., shall be made by notice specifying the number of shares offered and limiting the time within which the offer if not accepted will be deemed to be declined and that the directors be empowered to dispose of the shares not taken in response to such offer as they consider to be expedient in the interests of the company."

An amendment proposed by Mr. Horatio Robertson that there should be no further issue of capital till they could conceive a policy with regard to T. W. failed to find a seconder.

There was no further business.

ASSURANCE FRANCO-ASIATIQUE

The annual general meeting of shareholders in this company was held at the head office 7 Avenue Edward VII, on Tuesday, June 17. Rev. Père Sallou presided, supported by Messrs. M. Speelman, R. Fano, J. Sauvayre (directors) and other shareholders. The notice convening the meeting having been read, the Chairman said:—

In conformity with the articles of association of the company, your directors beg to present you for the fifth time with the accounts of the company, and submit for your approval the balance sheet and profit and loss account for the 12 months ending December 31, 1923.

The premiums received, after deduction of reinsurances, in respect of fire, marine and motor car and general insurance, were Frcs. 6,481,549.49, being an increase for the year of Frcs. 396,540.73. The claims paid and to be paid amounted to Frcs. 3,631,516.42. After adding interest and other credit balance and deducting commissions, general expenses, etc., there is a credit balance of Frcs. 3,351,856.76, out of which reserves for unexpired risks amounting to Frcs. 2,923,902.07, a reserve for commissions payable of Frcs. 115,399.48, and a reserve for fluctuation of investments of Frcs. 21,648 have to be provided, leaving a balance of Frcs. 290,907.21, which your directors recommend to allocate as follows:—

20 per cent. to legal reserve (Art. of Assoc. Art. 43, VII) Frs.	58,181.24
To write off 20 per cent of the furniture and fixtures carried at Frcs. 163,679.46 in the balance sheet	32,725.89
To carry to the reserve for bad and doubtful debts	100,000.00
To carry forward to 1924	99,990.08
Frcs.	290,907.21

During his stay in France, your managing director, Mr. Speelman, after carefully studying the question with your Paris manager, decided to open the accident branch, writing all forms of accident insurance. The necessary authorization for the establishment of this branch was given by the Ministère du Travail, after the security required by law had been deposited. The funds necessary to establish the reserves have been transferred from the special reserve of Frcs. 1,000,000 established on December 31, 1922, and we ask you to give this decision your approval. The accident branch has been doing business since the beginning of January, under the management of Mr. Grieb, assisted by Mr. Baudot. The offices have been opened in the company's building, 85 Rue St. Lazare, Paris. The initial deposit was settled at Frcs. 400,000; securities have been deposited, valued at the time of deposit at Frcs. 430,125 leaving an excess of guarantee furnished of 30,125. There remains a balance of 569,875 to be applied as the business required.

Before proposing the adoption of the report and accounts, I shall be glad to answer any questions to the best of my ability.

No questions were asked and the following resolutions were carried unanimously:—

Proposed by the Rev. Père Sallou and seconded by Mr. Fano:—That the report of the directors and statements of accounts for the year ending December 31, 1923, as presented, be accepted and passed. That the special reserve be transferred to provided the accident insurance funds. That Frcs. 58,181.24 be carried to the legal reserve. That the furniture and fixtures be written off to the extent of Frcs. 32,735.89. That Frcs. 100,000 be carried to the reserve for bad and doubtful debts. That Frcs. 99,990.08 be carried forward.

Proposed by Mr. Donne, seconded by Mr. Straetmans, that Rev. Père Sallou, Messrs. J. Beudin and Li Sheng-tai be re-elected directors.

Proposed by Mr. Speelman, seconded by Mr. Sauvayre, that Messrs. Seth, Mancell & McLure be re-elected auditors for the year 1924.

Proposed by Mr. J. Thesmar, seconded by Rev. Père Sallou, that Maitre A. du Pac de Marsoulies be re-elected legal advisor for the year 1924.

"THE annual reports of the Shanghai Municipal Electricity Department have been for years of a nature to arouse admiration, if not envy, in the minds of station engineers in this country, and to cause ordinary people to wonder when we shall be able to record a corresponding progress in any of our own areas of supply," states "Engineering." Shanghai uses coal for generating purposes, as we do, and although it has a large cotton-mill load it cannot have advantages in this respect over certain parts of Lancashire. If Shanghai had no electricity supply at all, or at best a little antiquated plant, one could find many reasons why matters should be thus; but when we find a town in the unchanging East easily surpassing any municipal undertaking in this country in output of electricity, we have little cause for self-congratulation."

LAW REPORTS

INDIAN DEPORTEE'S PROPERTY

Claim on Former Friend for Tls. 1,000, Furniture and Photographic Stuff

In the Supreme Court on Wednesday Sir Skinner Turner gave judgment in the case of Gaya Deen v. Daba Pudun Das, a claim for Tls. 1,000, together with a quantity of photographic materials and some furniture, said to have been deposited with defendant during plaintiff's enforced absence in India—a wartime deportee—and then alleged to have been wrongfully detained. The value of the photographic materials was placed at £87 and $870 and of the furniture $323.

His Honour, in giving judgment, said the defence put in was that the Tls. 1,000 was actually transferred to defendant for cash; that defendant did have the care of certain photographic materials—but of nothing like the value alleged—and that these had been handed back, while there was a complete denial as to the furniture.

The facts shortly were these, his Lordship continued: In June 1918 plaintiff was arrested in Shanghai, under the powers which existed at that time, with a view to being deported to India, and he was deported in August of that year. He was in Shanghai for a period of six weeks at least before leaving for India. He returned to China in August, 1920, and nothing at all was heard of this matter, so far as documentary evidence was concerned, from the date of his return until the beginning of this year. At the time of his arrest plaintiff's wife, children and brother-in-law were in Shanghai, and for the purpose of winding up his affairs he signed a very full power of attorney, dated July 8, in favour of his brother-in-law who from that time on had full power to deal with plaintiff's property and affairs in China. Plaintiff left Shanghai at the beginning of August, and at a little later date was joined at Hongkong by his wife and family and his brother-in-law. His Lordship did not know whether they ever came back, but they were not here now and had not appeared to give evidence.

Furniture and Photography.

Plaintiff claimed that the furniture handed over by him to defendant had never been returned, but defendant denied this altogether and said he had no property of plaintiff's in his possession at the present time. There was no evidence that plaintiff or his attorney ever handed any furniture to defendant. If anybody had charge of it, it was the man who held the power of attorney, Santa Ram, and his Lordship could not see that there was any evidence at all to support the statement that this or any furniture was handed over by anybody to defendant. The fact that defendant might have been present when some of it was removed did not carry the case any further, for it was quite possible, the parties then being on very friendly terms, that defendant did assist Santa Ram to remove the furniture. Nor did the statement of plaintiff that he saw some of the furniture in defendant's house when he came back carry the matter any further.

With regard to the photographic materials, said to be of very considerable value, his Lordship said he found himself in the same difficulty. There was very little evidence that this enormous amount of very valuable photographic material was ever in defendant's possession. There was evidence that he had some—and defendant admitted this—but no evidence that he had all. Defendant said that he was given about $60 worth of it but that he could not sell it at that price and afterwards returned it. His Lordship concluded that there was no reason why the defendant's story that there was some sort of settlement some time after plaintiff's return from India should not be believed.

The Bank Deposit.

The third item was more difficult. There was no doubt that at the time of his arrest plaintiff possessed a bank deposit receipt from the International Banking Corporation for Tls. 1,000, expressly marked "not transferable," and they knew from the Bank what happened. Upon going to India and taking his wife and family with him, plaintiff not unnaturally wanted money. He handed the deposit to Santa Ram and, according to his own statement, he was told by Santa Ram that he handed it to the defendant because, for some reason or other, he could not get cash for it. But they now knew from the Bank that there was absolutely no reason why the deposit note should not have been cashed at the time, at any time up to August 1918, though perhaps with some loss of interest. Plaintiff endorsed it in blank and its subsequent history was quite clearly known. It was handed to defendant by Santa Ram and nothing more seemed to have been heard of it until its due date in January, 1919, when it was to all intents and purposes cashed by the Bank when handed to them by defendant and bearing the true endorsement of the depositor. Defendant took out a deposit receipt in his own name for the same amount of money and that amount remained until January of this year. In September of last year the Bank informed plaintiff what had happened to it, but it was not until January that application for the money was made to defendant through a lawyer. Defendant's explanation was that he purchased the deposit note for cash and an i.o.u. No documentary evidence existed at all, defendant explaining that the parties had a general statement after plaintiff came back and that all documents existing at that time were destroyed. If it was impossible for plaintiff to cash the deposit receipt in Shanghai before he left for India, his Lordship saw no reason why plaintiff should not have taken it with him, this Bank having branches in India.

A Point for Defendant

An important point was the admission by both sides that what defendant said was correct, that he did in fact purchase from the bank a draft of rupees for the plaintiff and members of his family. It was a point in favour of the defendant that he quite openly kept the money in his own name. If he had wanted to cheat the plaintiff out of his Tls. 1,000, the obvious cource would have been to cash the receipt in January, 1919, and it would have been very difficult to trace the position afterwards. But he re-deposited it, treating himself as the true owner. There was urged against the defendant a letter which he sent to India in February, 1919, in which he spoke of "your deposit receipt" and said "you will be glad to know it is being kept safely on for next year," but defendant's answer was that this letter referred only to the balance which he owed. Nothing seemed to happen when plaintiff returned from India. He lived with defendant for some time on quite friendly terms, and he could easily have discovered what had happened to the deposit receipt had he gone to the bank. Instead of that, he allowed it to lie idle from August, 1920, until January, 1924. The admissions said to have been made in the case were very doubtful and were entirely outweighed by the long delay and the absence of written communications, and against this there was the affirmative story of defendant and plaintiff's admission that he received a draft in rupees.

His Lordship came to the conclusion that plaintiff had failed to prove his claim, and gave judgment for defendant with costs.

Mr. P. W. Goldring appeared for plaintiff and Mr. L. K. Kentwell for defendant.

SIKHS' HOTEL VENTURE

Are the Partners' Liable for all the Tradesmen's Claims?

The affairs of the Imperial Hotel again occupied the attention of his Honour Judge Grain at H. M. Supreme Court on Monday, when the three partners, Gujam Singh, Bishan Singh and Sucha Singh, had two more claims against them. Dah Tuck & Co. claimed $75.65 for fruit supplied to the hotel, and Chen Kee $321.56 for meat and vegetables.

Plaintiff, a Chinese owning both businesses, gave evidence that the goods had been ordered by the hotel manager, Mr. da Silva, between January 11 and April 11.

Gujan Singh, speaking for the partnership, said they did not know how many more of these claims would crop up. They had not been allowed to go into the hotel for some time and did not know what had happened?

His Honour observed that he had given judgment against defendants in other cases because of the deed of partnership, but recently it had come to his knowledge that da Silva had turned them out of the hotel and would not allow them near it, and it appeared a little doubtful whether the goods were ordered by da Silva or by the partnership. He was not at all sure that the defendants were liable.

Mr. V. MacDonnell, for plaintiff, raised the question as to when da Silva's power as manager was revoked.

Gujam Singh said they had not taken any part in the management of the hotel since January this year.

His Honour adjourned the case for the production of letters written to da Silva on defendants' behalf.

LANDLORD AND TENANT

H. E. Whiddett Again in Court: Committal Order Asked For

H. E. Whiddett appeared before his Honour Judge Grain on Monday on a judgment summons taken out by Messrs. Akgar & Co. for payment of Tls. 300 and $50.25 costs.

Mr. Tycho Wing, for plaintiffs, said that on March 3 judgment was given against defendant for Tls. 300 and $50 costs. Nothing was paid and on April 10 defendant was ordered to vacate plaintiffs' premises, which he occupied, by the 17th of that month, otherwise he would be committed, and costs were assessed at $85.25. Defendant promised to pay Tls. 100 a month. He afterwards moved to another address and could not be found, and an advertisement was put in the newspaper calling upon him to appear in court. He had paid nothing. Counsel asked for a committal order.

Defendant pointed out that he paid Tls. 100 on giving up possession of the premises, and Mr. Wing, on looking through his documents, admitted that this was so and the payment had been overlooked.

His Honour adjourned the case until July 7, defendant explaining that he was unable to pay anything but might be in a better position at that date.

HONGKEW SHOOTING DRAMA

Lester Again in Court Charged with Attempted Murder: Sensational Evidence

W. N. Lester, the engineer residing at 24 Seward Road, who is charged with attempting to murder John Welsh, an unemployed seaman, by shooting him with an automatic pistol, made his second appearance at H.M. Police Court last Friday befor Mr. G. W. King. Lester is alleged to have shot a man named Welsh in the Wayport Rooms shortly after four o'clock on the afternoon of the 13th instant after accusing the latter, who is now in the General Hospital, of stealing his clothing.

Mr. E. T. Maitland prosecuted for the police.

Chief Det.-Insp. Cruickshank was called to repeat the evidence of arrest he gave when defendant first came before Judge Grain, presiding in the absence of the Magistrate.

Dr. N. Hay Bolton was called. He stated that he attended Welsh in the General Hospital on the 14th instant, and found him suffering from a bullet wound which penetrated through the abdomen where it joins the thigh, and after taking a downward, backward and outward course finished inside the body, where the bullet, which inflicted the wound, still remained. The reason the bullet had not been removed was that to do so would be a dangerous proceeding. It was doing no harm where it was.

Just Missed Femoral Artery.

Questioned by Mr. Maitland as to whether he would describe the wound as serious, witness replied he would so describe it, owing to the fact that there was a remote danger of death. The bullet had only missed the large femoral artery by a fraction of an inch, and it was possible the wall of the artery had been damaged, in which case there would be danger of death. There were no signs of this, however. The wounded man would have to keep to his bed for the next three or four weks.

Formal evidence regarding the taking of certain photographs of the Wayport Rooms was given by Inspector G. W. Gilbert, of the Finger Print Department of the Municipal Police.

Mr. Eigurl Schack, a Norwegian, manager of the Wayport Roms, described the alleged shooting as he saw it. He stated that he was sitting on a bench in the rooms on the 13th instant in the afternoon, and shortly after four o'clock the accused came in. He sat down by witness and ordered a drink, and witness said to him. "What, drinking again Lester?" Witness asked this question because Lester had told him he had given up drink for a time. Accused replied, "No, I want to steady my nerves." Shortly afterwards Welsh came in and walked over to the billiard table. Lester called out to him by name and Welsh said, "What do you want?" Lester replied to this, "Where is my gear?" and Welsh shouted back, "Which gear." Lester answered, "My clothes." Welsh said he had not got the man's clothes, and with that Lester pulled out a gun, said "You haven't Then we will see." With that he fired, and witness saw Welsh fall to the ground clutching his hip. Witness went out to look for a policeman, but had to go to Hongkew police station before he was able to get anybody. When he returned to the Wayport Rooms in company with some detectives Lester had gone and Welsh had been removed upstairs.

"Next Time Through the Head"

Hughie Dennis McCauley, an American deck engineer, who was also in the Wayport Room at the same time, bore out the previous witness's story. He added that Lester shot Welsh with a .22 automatic pistol, and then went over and kicked him three or four times, passing the remark, "You son of a ——you, next time I ought to give it you through the head." Witness then went out to get the police, but he met Schack on the same errand and so returned, putting the injured man to bed upstairs and telephoning for an ambulance.

Nicholas Rusesky, manager of the Astor Bar, told the Court that the accused went to the Astor Bar at about half past four on the afternoon of the 13th instant. He appeared to be rather nervous, and he went into the back office and borrowed a piece of paper from witness, with which he made a parcel out of something. In view of his excitement witness asked him what was the matter and he replied, "Oh nothing much, I've just shot a fellow in the Wayport Rooms." With that he laughed and went out, leaving witness to look after the parcel he had mentioned till he returned. Later in the day some detectives came in and made inquiries about Lester and when they had gone he opened the parcel and found it to contain an automatic pistol and some cartridges.

Det.-Sub.-Insp. Schmidt gave evidence of going to the Wayport Rooms on Schack's information and finding no-one there. He stated that the pistol and cartridges were brought to Hongkew station by Schack, together with a spent cartridge case which had been picked up on the floor of the Rooms.

McCauley, recalled, said the cartridge in question was picked up by the boy.

Accused was remanded until Monday.

Lester Committed for Trial

Accused appeared on remand before Mr. G. W. King at H. M. Police Court on Monday. Upon completion of the case for the prosecution, conducted by Mr. E. T. Maitland, accused was committed for trial.

Tsu Sung-ling, a boy employed at the Wayport Rooms, gave evidence as to finding the empty cartridge case.

Lester asked if it was regular for the prosecuting solicitor to take a witness before the arrival of the Magistrate in court, and show him the evidence and ask him questions?

Mr. Maitland explained that he had not had an opportunity of seeing the witness before he came into court that morning.

Lester—He showed the boy the cartridge and asked him if it was the right one. Is that a proper thing to do?

His Worship said he did not think it necessary to give any ruling on the point. He imagined it was not absolutely irregular.

Lester—Supposing the witness [illegible] the cartridge before?

Witness said that the cartridge case which he found behind the bar on the day in question was similar to the one then shown to him.

The court then adjourned in order that the Magistrate might visit the General Hospital and take the evidence of the injured man.

"Told Lester to Cheer Up."

When the Magistrate visited the hospital, a full story of the affair was told by Welsh, who is making favourable progress. He stated that he visited the Wayport Rooms on the afternoon of the 13th shortly after 4 o'clock, and saw Lester there, having a drink. They spoke, and upon Lester saying that he did not feel very well, witness advised him to cheer up. They each went out for a few minutes, and when witness returned he saw accused talking to the Manager. Witness was leaning against the billiard table smoking a cigarette when Lester called out to him, "Where is my gear?" "What gear?" witness asked, and accused repeated: "Where is my gear?" Witness answered that he did not know, and pointed out that he had only one suit of clothes which Lester had given to him. "Well, we will see," said accused, and upon this he fired at witness, discharging a revolver which had been hanging outside his hip pocket. Witness received a wound in the groin and fell, Lester then coming across the room and kicking him several times. "I should kill you," accused said. "Bill, you're off your head, you don't know what you are doing," said witness, pleading with him.

"Behaved Like a Madman."

Witness went on to say that he had been on friendly terms with the accused and his "coming like that" all of a sudden made him think the accused was mad. He did think Lester intended to shoot him, but not to kill him. Accused had had a lot to drink and behaved just like a madman.

Lester appeared in court again in the afternoon, and a charge was then framed against him, viz., that he wounded Welsh with intent to do him grievous bodily harm, or to maim, disfigure or disable him.

Upon receiving the usual caution, Lester said he did not wish to say anything, or to call witnesses, and he would reserve his defence.

Accused was then committed for trial.

RIVER POLLUTION BY WASTE OIL

New Engineering & Shipbuilding Works Charged in Police Court

Infringement of harbour regulations in the matter of river pollution was the subject of a case in H. M. Police Court on Tuesday, before Mr. G. W. King. The New Engineering & Shipbuilding Works were summoned "for that on the 18th instant they discharged oil or oily matter into the Huangpu River and/or that such oil or oily matter found its way into the river from the premises of the company at Yangtszepoo Dock, contrary to section 39 B of Harbour Regulations for the Port of Shanghai, dated February 1, 1923, and King's Regulations No. 7 of 1923."

Mr. M. B. Brown appeared for the Customs, who prosecuted through the River Police, and Mr. A. C. Holborow represented the defendants.

An Oil Tank Ship.

Mr. Brown informed the Court that on the morning of the 18th instant a sergeant of the River Police on patrol duty was passing Yangtszepoo Dock when he saw two coolies emptying a bucket of oil from the jetty into the river. He went ashore and made inquiries, finding that the oil tank ship Natica was in the defendant's dry dock having her forward tanks emptied of oil, and he was given to understand that the Dock Company were carrying out the work and that the ship's crew had nothing to do with it. The Dock- [illegible] this and said it was the ship's crew who were doing it. At all [illegible] quantity of oil in the river. About 11 a.m. the same day a telephone message was received from the Shanghai Waterworks complaining of there being oil in the river opposite the Company's intake. The police made further inquiries and learned definitely that the ship was in the hands of the Dock Company and that they were responsible for cleaning out the oil tanks. A police officer took photographs showing the oil on the river, and next day it was found there was still a quantity of oil in about the same spot. It was a serious matter for the Waterworks Company, whose intake was less than half a mile from the Dock, while oil was rapidly carried down by the tide.

Mr. Holborow observed that defendants fully recognized that the presence of a considerable quantity of oil on the river might be of serious consequence to the Waterworks, but the only present issue was the responsibility of the defendants under the regulations.

Oil for Half a Mile.

Sgt. Visser, of the River Police, gave evidence bearing out counsel's opening statement, saying that he saw two coolies empty a bucket of oil into the river, and two more of them dump on the foreshore a bucket of waste saturated with oil. There was an almost continuous stream of oil for half a mile down the river from the Dock.

After Supt. Woodfield had given evidence of his investigations into the case. Mr. Holborow observed that the Company did not dispute that they were in charge of the work on the Natica and were responsible for any oil which escaped.

Statement by Waterworks.

Evidence in support of the case for the prosecution was given by Sgt. Cavanaugh, Sgt. Hess, and Mr. C. B. Ogilvie, Works Engineer of the Shanghai Waterworks, the latter saying the result might be most serious if oil got into their tanks. If oil were taken in at night when it could not be observed, quite possibly Shanghai would get no water on the following day.

For the defence, Mr. Holborow submitted there was no case to answer, because the charge had definitely been limited to one bucket of oil and it had not been proved that the two coolies were servants of the defendants.

His Worship, however, overruled this submission.

Mr. Holborow then said that infringement of the river regulations was the very last thing his clients were likely to countenance. If the oil in fact escaped from the Dock, the only possible explanation they could offer was that, in order to save labour, coolies engaged in cleaning out the ship's tank had taken out a plug at night and allowed waste to flow into the well of the dock, whence unwittingly it would have been pumped out in the ordinary course. The well was covered in, and the engineer in charge of pumping could not know that there was oil there.

A Fine of $20.

Mr. Archer, the Dock foreman, explained the method by which oil was removed from the ship's tanks prior to repairs being undertaken, and supported Mr. Holborow's statement as to the possible manner in which the leakage occurred.

Mr. G. McMurdo, Dock Master, gave evidence that all precautions were taken against the escape of oil into the river, and added that there were very strict orders to the staff on the subject. As soon as he saw oil in the river, he thought possibly it might have come from the well, and gave orders to stop pumping.

His Worship accepted the suggestion of the Company's witness as to the oil having come from the well of the dock, but went on to say that defendants were liable for the negligence of their servants and therefore in law were guilty of negligence. The presence of oil in the river was a serious matter, and he must impose a fine of $20.

CARLTON BUILDING DISPUTE

Judgment for Architects: Defendants Held to Blame for Delayed Construction

Judgment was given by Judge Purdy at the U. S. Court last Friday in the action brought by the architects of the New Carlton against the builders. Plaintiffs, Dowdall & Tulasne, were awarded Tls. 4,583.33, which they claimed from the Shanghai Building Co. as balance of the amount due for supplying the plans. Defendants had originally agreed to pay plaintiffs Tls. 14,000 in six separate instalments for their services. Upon completion of the work in 1922 defendants were still indebted to plaintiffs in the amount claimed. Defendants refused to pay this sum on the ground that the plans had not been prepared and furnished by the plaintiffs within the time agreed upon, and because some of the plans were defective and did not comply with the requirements of the Shanghai Municipal Council. By reason of such delay and such defective plans, defendants contended they sustained damages which were more than sufficient to offset the balance.

In the course of his judgment, his Honour said: There are manifestly but three questions of fact for consideration and determination by the Court. The questions of fact are as follows:—(a) Have the plaintiffs made out a case on their second cause of action for the reasonable worth and value of additional plans and calculations alleged to have been furnished to the defendants? (b) Are the defendants entitled to damages as an offset for and on account of delay in furnishing the plans and calculations to them under their original contract? (c) Are the defendants entitled to damages as an offset for cost of undoing certain work and scrapping certain material by reason of changes which defendants were required to make by order of the Commissioner of Public Works of the Shanghai Municipal Council?

It plaintiffs furnished certain plans to the defendants which did not meet or fulfil the requirements of the building regulations of the city of Shanghai, they certainly had no good cause to complain if they were required to furnish other and additional plans which did fulfil and meet such requirements. Plaintiffs are not entitled to recover on their second cause of action.

Plans Ready in Time

I find no evidence which would justify me in reaching the conclusion that the plaintiffs failed to furnish to the defendants the plans with reasonable promptitude. It is true that defendants' final letter of acceptance contained the statement that "an early completion of the buildings is the essence of this contract." There was nevertheless no time specified within which the plans should be furnished. The buildings were in fact completed and in readiness for occupancy within practically nine months from the day on which this letter was written. I am, therefore, constrained to find that the defendants were not damaged as a result of any delay on the part of plaintiffs in furnishing the plans in question.

Defendants next claim for damages as an offset is based upon alleged defective plans. It is contended that the plaintiff furnished a set of plans for the roof of one of these buildings, which the Municipal Council did not approve and certain defective plans relating to staircases or fire escapes, and that the defendants, by reason of having used the same, were damaged in the sum of Tls. 3,000.

P. W. D. Objections

The changes and alterations which were required to be made by the Commissioner of Public Works on account of defective plans relating to staircases and fire-escapes, were not, in my opinion, due to any fault or negligence on the part of the plaintiffs. It does not appear that the plaintiffs made, or were required to make, under their contract, a survey of the land, or parcel of ground upon which these buildings were to be constructed. The plans were prepared largely if not solely, upon information furnished the plaintiffs by the defendants. After certain progress had been made in the preparation of these plans for the theatre building, which was the last building to be constructed, the defendants' contractor and builder informed the plaintiffs that they had more land by some two or three feet than they had at first supposed, and, thereupon plaintiffs were ordered to enlarge the plans of the theatre building so as to utilize such additional ground. The changes so ordered resulted in not affording, by some two or three feet sufficient space for the staircases or fire escapes in accordance with the originally approved plans. —that being impossible by reason of the lack of sufficient space. The defendants were thereupon required by the Commissioner of Public Works Department to alter and change the improperly constructed staircases, which was done at considerable expense to the defendants, and they are now attempting to charge up such expense against plaintiffs as an offset.

Defendants Responsible for Their Losses

In my judgment such damage and loss to the defendants was primarily due to the fault of the defendants' own building contractor, and not to any fault or negligence on the part of these plaintiffs. The defendants should have then suspended work upon the staircases until new plans could have been prepared instead of going ahead with the work in disregard of the plans which had been approved by the Municipal Council. They apparently preferred to take a chance that the staircases would pass Municipal inspection, and when they failed to do so, they had no one to blame but themselves.

SAVED FROM PRISON BY EMPLOYERS

Office Boy's Amazing Series of Forgeries: Tls. 3,900 Involved

The mercy of the Mixed Court, coupled with the goodness of the complainants and restitution of a major part of embezzled funds by kind-hearted relatives, saved Tsha Kyung-dzen, self-confessed forger, from 18 months in prison on charges arising out of 44 cases of imitated hand writing on compradore orders. The youth who had been in the employ of Messrs. Harrisons, King & Irwin, made a practice during the past two years of forging the name of Mr. B. W. Gale to these orders, and did it so cleverly over this time that the suspicions of the compradore were not aroused until a month ago, when he mentioned to Mr. Gale that abnormal amounts were coming through his orders.

An investigation was ordered and the Municipal Police were called in. In the drawer of the boy was found a chit book full of signatures, which he admitted having practised upon his return from a "sickbed," after having been absent from the office for 10 days. The accounts were balanced and it was found that 44 orders amounting to Tls. 3,900 had been forged, mostly in amounts ranging from $50 to $100.

As the orders had no serial number upon them, there was no absolute check, though the members of the firm usually wrote in both figures and words to sums desired. No counterfoil, however, was retained.

After filling the order, the youth usually got a coolie to cash them. When a coolie became suspicious another was procured.

Brought to the Court on May 27 a two week's remand was asked for by Det.-Sgt. Tinkler, who had charge of the case, to permit of further inquiries and to ascertain the guilt of the messenger. He denied all complicity, so the charges against him were dropped. At the resumed hearing on Tuesday complainant said now that nearly a full financial reimbursement had been made. He did not wish the boy to go to prison, so it was ordered that 17 months out 18 months imprisonment ordered be remitted.

LAWN TENNIS

International Ladies' Match at Wimbledon: Davis Cup Competition

London, June 19.

In the ladies' international lawn tennis competition at Wimbledon to-day, Britain beat America, winning the first four of seven matches.

Miss McKane (Britain) beat Miss Wills (America), 6-2, 6-2. Miss McKane was superior in all departments.

Mrs. Covell (Britain) beat Mrs. Mallory (America) 6-2, 5-7, 6-3; Mrs. Beamish (Britain) beat Miss Goss (America), 6-1, 0-6, 6-3; and Miss Wills and Mrs. Wightman (America) beat Miss McKane and Miss Colyer (Britain), 6-2, 2-6, 6-4.

Britain won by 6 matches to 1.—Reuter.

Paris, June 19.

In the last two matches of the Davis Cup tie between India and France M. Cochet (France) beat Mr. Sleem (India), 6-4, 0-6, 6-4, 2-6, 6-0. Jacob (India) walked over M. Lacotste (France), France thus wins by 4 matches to 1.—Reuter.

Japanese Player's Success at Roehampton

London, June 21.

In the final of the Roehampton lawn tennis tournament, which is one of the recognized preliminaries to the Wimbledon tournament, the Japanese, Mr. Okamoto, defeated Mr. Condon, a member of the South African Davis Cup team, 6-4, 6-4. The game was brisk. Mr. Okamoto was more accurate and had better control of the ball. Mr. Condon missed valuable points through inaccuracy.—Reuter.

Wimbledon Tennis Tournament

Wimbledon, June 23.

The Lawn Tennis Championships opened here to-day in glorious weather before a huge and fashionable crowd. Ten thousand spectators viewed the matches on the Centre Court, while thousands were around the outer courts.

The first match on the Centre Court was between the American, Mr. Vincent Richards, and Mr. Park (? J. C. Parke). The American, who is favoured as a finalist, was not extended in defeating his opponent with a score of 6-1, 6-1, 6-0.

This was followed by a very exciting and brilliant match, the Frenchman, M. R. Lacoste, disposing of the young Japanese, Mr. S. Okamoto, 6-2, 4-6, 6-3, 6-4.

The Spaniard, Senor Manuel Alonso, beat Mr. J. Gregory, 6-1, 6-3, 6-4.

The meeting of two prominent British competitors resulted in the elimination of Mr. O. Turnbull by the Davis Cup player, Mr. J. Gilbert, 6-3, 6-4, 6-4.

The British players, Messrs. Lycett, Greig, W. Crawley and Clole-Rees, won comfortably, but the Davis Cup player, Mr. L. Godfree, went down before the American, Mr. W. Washburn, 6-4, 6-0, 7-5.

The Frenchmen, MM. Borotra and Feret, and the South Africans, Messrs. Spence, Condon and Raymond, scored victories.

The Chinese, Mr. Woo, has a "walk-over."

The Japanese, Mr. Fukuda, beat Mr. Browne, 6-4, 9-11, 6-3, 6-2.—Reuter.

Several Foreigners Enter Third Round

Wimbledon, June 24.

The second round of the Lawn Tennis Championships was played to-day in glorious weather before a crowd of 15,000. The spectators included a large proportion of women, attracted by the first appearance of Mlle. Lenglen and Miss Wills. The scene was brilliant, with sunshades of all colours and wonderful dress creations. The day was one of thrills and surprise. Wimbledon has never seen finer tennis than that in the match in which M. Lacoste defeated Senor Manuel Alonso, 2-6, 6-2, 13-15, 6-3, 6-1. Lacoste showed himself versatile and untiring. His passing shots were brilliant. Alonso gave a magnificent exhibition of forehand net-work and volleying, but tired after the third set.

The Australian, Mr. J. Bayley's, defeat of Mr. Randolph Lycett, 7-5, 6-4, 3-6, 6-3 was the surprise of the day.

The three Americans, Messrs. Hunter, Richards and Washburn, entered the third, as did the British players, Mr. Gilbert, Col. Kingscote, and Messrs. Greig, Leighton-Crawford and Wheatley.

Mr. Hunter beat Mr. J. Hillyard 6-0, 6-3, 6-2. Mr. Vincent Richards beat Mr. R. Dash, 6-0, 6-4, 6-3, and Mr. Washburn beat the Canadian international, Mr. H. Mayes, 4-6, 6-4, 6-0, 5-7, 6-4.

The Frenchman, M. Jean Borotra, beat Mr. Max Woosnam, 6-3, 7-5, 2-6, 6-4.

Mr. Harada (Japan) beat Mr. E. Crawshay-Williams, 6-2, 6-1, 6-4, and Mr. Fukuda (Japan) beat Mr. T. Mavorgordato, 1-6, 7-5, 6-4, 6-4.

In the first round, Mr. Norris-Williams beat Mr. E. Maguire, 6-1, 6-4, 6-4.

The Ladies' Championship

In the first round of the Ladies' Championship, Mlle. Lenglen beat Miss Lumley-Ellis, 6-0, 6-0. Miss Wills beat Miss Scharman, 6-1, 6-0. Miss Ryan beat Mrs. Bouverie, 6-0, 6-0. Mrs. Mallory beat Miss Harvey, 7-5, 6-3.—Reuter.

Wimbledon, June 25

Twelve thousand people were present at Wimbledon to-day, when the second round matches began. The weather was very hot and the crowds round the courts were a blaze of colour. Turned-up sleeves and panamas were the order of the day for the players.

The first match on the centre court was between the Australian veteran, Mr. Norman Brookes, and the Cingalese, Mr. D. Rutnam. Brookes won, 6-2, 6-2, 2-6, 6-1. His uncanny anticipation and skilful placing kept Rutnam on the run. He showed no signs of tiring and was at his best in the fourth set.

Miss McKane beat Mrs. Mallory 6-1, 6-0. Miss McKane won the first five games and only lost the sixth by venturesome play. Mrs. Mallory was outclassed in the second set. Mlle. Lenglen beat Miss Clarke, 6-0, 6-0. Miss Wills beat Miss Dransfield, 6-0, 6-2.

The American, Mr. Norris Williams, beat the Frenchman, M. Feret, 6-4, 4-6, 8-6, 6-4.

Mr. S. Hadi (India) beat Mr. K. Hooihye (Japan), 7-5, 6-3, 6-2.

Men's Doubles

In the first doubles match played to-day on the centre court the Americans, Messrs. Vincent Richards and F. L. Hunter, defeated the Hon, F. M. B. Fisher and Mr. J. Peacock, 3-6, 7-5, 6-4, 6-3.

On an outer court Messrs. Okamoto and Hooihye (Japan) beat Messrs. L. Owen and W. Aitken, 6-2, 6-2, 6-2.

The British players, Mr. Gilbert and Colonel Kingscote, beat MM. Roupell and Duminy (France), 6-4, 6-3, 6-2.

Messrs. Fukuda and Harada (Japan) beat Messrs. E. Lamb and G. Crole-Rees, 3-6, 6-3, 6-4, 6-2.—Reuter.

BRITISH OPEN GOLF CHAMPIONSHIP

Result of the Qualifying Round: Taylor First with Score of 142

London, June 23.

With a record entry of 277, the qualifying rounds of the British Open Golf Championship, which began to-day, had to be split over two courses, half playing at Hoylake and half at Formby. They will change over for the second round to-morrow. There is a formidable American contingent, including the ex-champion, Hagen, Sarazen, MacDonald Smith and Jim Barnes. There are also two Spaniards and half-a-dozen Frenchmen. Both course records were broken.

George Gadd (Roehampton) headed the Formby score with 70. MacDonald Smith made 72, Sarazen 75, Ray 76, C. Whitcombe 77 and Abe Mitchell 78.

In the Hoylake half, the veteran, J. H. Taylor (Mid-Surrey), made a course record of 70. Havers, the holder, scored 72, Tolley 77, Wethered and Duncan 78, the American, Nicholls, 79, Barnes 81, Hagen 83. The two last-named need excellent rounds to-morrow to gain a place amongst the first 80, who will compete for the championship proper at Hoylake on Thursday and Friday.—Reuter.

London, June 24.

The qualifying stages of the Open Golf Championship concluded to-day in glorious weather. All the native Americans qualified. Taylor with 142 and Gadd with 147 led the respective fields. Havers followed Taylor with 146, and the order was then Tolley and the Frenchman, Boomer, 149: Duncan 151: Wethered 155: Hagen 156: Barnes and Nichols 157.

At Hoylake, Frank Ball followed Gadd with 148: Compston's score was 150: Sarazen 151: Braid 152: MacDonald Smith and Mitchell 153: C. Whitcombe 154: Ray 157.

Those who did not qualify include Ockenden, Vardon, Douglas Grant, and the Spaniard, De La Torre.—Reuter.

In the inter-'Varsity polo match at Hurlingham to-day, Oxford beat Cambridge by 7 goals to 5.—Reuter.

GOLF LONG-DRIVING CHAMPIONSHIP

Hoylake, June 25.

The golf long-driving championship was won by J. Smith of Canteluppe with the best aggregate of three out of four drives. His distances were 236 yds. 0 ft. 2 in., 247 yds. 2 ft., and 244 yds 1 ft. Abe Mitchell's aggregate was 666 yds. 1 ft. 6 in., and Duncan's 653 yds. —REUTER.

Volunteer Corps.

Annual Inspection.—The Report of Major-General Sir J. S. Fowler, K.C.M.G., C.B., D.S.O., Commanding H. M. Forces in China, upon his recent Inspection of the Corps, is appended, together with letter of acknowledgment:—

Hongkong, June 9, 1924.

SIR,—I have the honour to forward herewith my Inspection Report on the Shanghai Volunteer Corps.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
JOHN S. FOWLER,
Major-General,
Commanding British Forces in China.

E. S. B. ROWE, Esq.
Acting Secretary.

REPORT OF 1924.

1.—At the invitation of the Chairman of the Shanghai Municipal Council, I carried out the annual inspection of the Shanghai Volunteer Corps between May 20 and 23.

2.—Appendix "A" gives a list of the units inspected and their strengths, also the numbers on parade on various occasions.

From this it will be seen that the total number of enrolled members was 1,370. The corresponding number at the same time last year was [illegible].

This increase is partly due to the inclusion of the American Troop and the Cadet Company since my last inspection.

3.—The condition of the arms, equipment and stores in possession of the Corps is satisfactory. They were inspected recently by the Chief Ordnance Officer, Hongkong.

4.—On account of bad weather the usual ceremonial parade of the Corps on the recreation ground could not be held, and a concentration march of the whole Corps, moving in three columns from their assembly posts to a point in the Bubbling Well Road, was substituted.

The movement of the columns, protected by the Armoured Cars, was well carried out, and all arrived at the time laid down. The concentration having been sucessfully accomplished, the whole force marched past along the Bubbling Well Road.

The bearing and march discipline of the troops during this exercise was excellent, and gave a most favourable impression of the efficiency and strength of the force which could rapidly be concentrated on any threatened area.

A very good opportunity was thus given to the residents of Shanghai to see the Corps as it would turn out when called upon.

The numbers on this parade were 1,007 in all, as against 898 last year.

5.—Inspection of Units.—This was carried out in accordance with the programme given in Appendix "B."

(a) Infantry.

The infantry units in the Corps are as follows:

"A" Company, British.
"B" Company, British.
Customs Company.
American Company.
Portuguese Company.
Japanese Company.
Chinese Company.
Shanghai Scottish Company.
Reserve Company.

These were all seen either at drill, at musketry or carrying out a tactical exercise. The drill, turn-out and soldierlike bearing of the units was uniformly satisfactory, and in some units very good indeed. The officers appeared to have improved since last year in their knowledge of handling their units, and there was evidence of much careful training by N.C.O.'s and other instructors. I was glad to see that much attention is being paid to Lewis gun training, and that a good number of men are trained in the use of this important weapon.

(b) Mounted Troops.

The Light Horse.—The turn-out of men and horses was excellent and they drilled with very fair precision. They were steadier than last year, and the horsemanship of the majority of the riders was good. It appeared to me that the new pattern of saddle would be improved, for a long day's work, by having a blanket carried under it.

The signal section is a most useful addition and has attained a good standard of visual signalling. Musketry has much improved, and the machine gun section has evidently been well trained.

The American Troop.—This Troop only started training as a unit last October. The turn-out of the men and horses was excellent and the unit forms a valuable addition to the Corps. Much work has evidently been done in training, and though some movements were carried out at rather too fast a pace, greater steadiness will no doubt be attained in the future. The bitting of horses and fitting of bridles and saddles can be improved.

Field Artillery Battery.—The turn-out of men, horses, and equipment was excellent and maintains the high standard attained in previous years. The addition of a motor lorry to the battery, for the transport of men and ammunition, and, when required, of a howitzer on the lorry, enhances its mobility. The arrangement for getting the howitzer on and off the lorry is ingenious. A howitzer can also be towed at a moderate pace.

The musketry of this unit has much improved.

(c) Machine-gun Units. — The machine-gun units in the Corps are as follows:

The Machine Gun Company.
The Maritime Company.
The Italian Company.

Of these the Machine Gun Company, with its armoured lorries, forms one of the most important units of the Corps. I consider that it is thoroughly efficient, and that the zeal of its members ensures that the Council is getting full value for the large expense that has been incurred in equipping the unit.

The Maritime Company.—This company is well trained and in good condition.

The Italian Company.—This company, which is armed with the Fiat machine gun, has decreased in strength from 40 to a nominal 32 since my last inspection. Of this number only 13 were present at the unit inspection. The unit cannot, at present, be considered efficient. I understand that it is contemplated to take steps to remedy matters.

(d) Engineers.—The Engineer Company has improved, both in numbers and efficiency since last year, and its training has become more practical. It is a good unit and would be very useful in an emergency.

(e) The Public School Cadet Company.—This company has been newly formed and was inspected by me for the first time: it is being well trained, and the boys were well turned out and keen. It is to be hoped that its members will eventually join the senior units of the Corps.

6. Tactical Training.—More attention has been paid to this most essential part of training since my last inspection.

At a tactical exercise in Jessfield Park units moved smartly, and with a good idea of the tactics that should be employed. The nature of the ground made the exercise, as a practical example of what would occur if there were bullets in the rifles, somewhat unreal. The difficulties of combined training in the vicinity of Shanghai are fully realized, but in spite of this I consider that there has been considerable improvement.

7. Mobilization Scheme. — The new scheme of using strong mobile Columns enables the Commanding Officer to keep his forces better in hand, and meets my comment of last year on the risk of dispersion without adequate reserve.

8. Musketry and Rifle [illegible].—A great improvement has been made in the Musketry of units armed with the rifle. There are now 483 first class shots in the Corps as against 334 last year, and an even greater proportionate increase has taken place in the number of marksmen.

The rifle range is in good order and the range discipline in this important part of the training of the Corps is well carried out.

9. The completion of the Hutted Camp on the Ranges will facilitate the training of the Corps.

10. Headquarters of the Corps and Permanent Staff.—The Corps headquarters is well and efficiently run, and the Staff have carried out their duties with great keenness. The work is heavy, and it is for consideration that with increasing numbers in the Corps, the Staff should be increased.

11. This is the third time I have had the honour of inspecting this Corps. I have been much impressed by the keenness and amount of time that is given by individuals to its training, and I feel sure that the Corps is keeping up its high reputation and will acquit itself well when the occasion arises.

J. S. FOWLER.
Major-General,
Commanding British Forces in China.

Council Chamber,
June 23, 1924.

SIR,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of June 9, transmitting your Report on the Inspection of the Shanghai Volunteer Corps.

In reply, I have the honour to convey to you an expression of the Council's thanks for your kindness in carrying out the Inspection, and for your very thorough Report thereon, to which, in its opinion, considerable value attaches, in that it will be of great assistance to the Commandant and the Council in maintaining and furthering the efficiency of the Corps.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
E. S. B. ROWE,
Acting Secretary.

Major-General Sir JOHN FOWLER,
K.C.M.G., C.B., D.S.O.,
Commanding H. B. M. Forces
in China, Hongkong.

Mixed Court Report for May.

Criminal Cases.—8012 persons were charged with criminal offences during the month, and, in order to cope with the large number of important cases the Court on several occasions sat until 1.30 p.m. and in addition remanded several robbery and murder cases for special sessions. 8 persons were dealt with on charges of murder, and 11 persons for robbery; of this total 5 were sent to the Arsenal Authorities with the proviso that if not executed they were to be returned to this Court to be dealt with.

Corporal Punishment.—In passing sentence on a gang of seven men charged with robbery and murder, the Assessor repeated what has been stated by the Court on several occasions previously, i.e. the Court considered that if it had the power to inflict corporal punishment, that punishment would be far more effective in reducing crimes of violence than any of the sentences authorized under the present code.

Unrepresented Foreigners.—On May 2, five Russians were charged with stealing jewellery to the value of $1,000 from 545 Taku Road and other offences, three were subsequently sentenced to 18 months imprisonment and expulsion, and two to 3 months and expulsion. An Austrian was sentenced to 3 months' imprisonment (suspended) on May 6 on a charge of False Pretences. The total number of foreigners charged before the Court was 38, an increase of 13 over the previous month.

Foreign Defendants.—Counsel for O. M. Matias, a defendant detained in a foreign civil case, having made certain statements in Court regarding the treatment of foreign debtors, the Assessor was asked to investigate the conditions under which foreign defendants were confined, and, as a result of his investigation, announced in open Court that in his opinion everything possible was being done for such defendants. Counsel later stated that his protest was directed more particularly against the system which made it possible to imprison a man for debt. The Court pointed out to him that conditions in Shanghai were perhaps different from those in any other place and that in certain cases it was necessary to take steps to prevent debtors leaving the jurisdiction of the Court.

Foreign Civil Cases.—77 Petitions were filed during the month and 67 sessions of the Court were held and disposed of 89 cases leaving 82 cases on the hearing list, 33 of which are awaiting a first hearing, a decrease of 28 in the cases pending.

Of the cases dealt with 37 related to money lending by Indians. Owing to the peculiar nature of the transactions the hearing of these cases takes up a considerable amount of the time of the Court. The amount involved is usually small, being anything from $20 upwards, and the manner in which these loans are negotiated is very unsatisfactory; generally the defendant states that he has only received one-half of the amount mentioned on the promissory note, and although the note only calls for 2 per cent. per month the defendant in nearly every case claims that he has paid 5 per cent. per month; as however the borrowers are usually of the poorer class of Chinese, no receipts are demanded, resulting in many cases, so it is alleged, of extortionate demands being made by the plaintiff. The only way to prevent this abuse is to license the plaintiffs as professional money lenders and to have all loans registered. It has now been arranged that special sessions be arranged for the hearing of these cases; by this means the Court will have more time at its disposal to sift the evidence adduced, which is generally uncorrobrated and of the most contradictory nature.

Chinese Civil Cases.—113 Petitions were filed and 69 sessions were held during the month, 312 cases being dealt with; at the end of the month there were 167 cases awaiting a first hearing and 42 part heard cases on the hearing list, a decrease of 49 on the figures for the previous month. The decrease is due to the fact that the temporary courtroom has been in partial use for the greater part of the month, and this will undoubtedly become a big factor in wiping out the congestion prevailing in this department during the earlier part of the year.

THE INTERVIEW AT THE CHEQUERS

A Preliminary to an Inter-Allied Conference: Belgium and Italy to be Conferred with: Desirability of Participation by America: Dominions to be Consulted

London, June 21.

M. Herriot, accompanied by the French permanent Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, arrived in London to-day, bound for the Chequers, where he will meet Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, accompanied by Sir Eyre Crowe. High hopes centre in the week-end conversations, which will take place in the most favourable atmosphere, and are expected to prove an important first step towards settlement of Europe's outstanding problems.

The fact that General Nollet accompanied M. Herriot as far as Calais in order to explain the exact position of France's security, a question with which is bound up that of the control of German armaments, indicates that this is likely to be a prominent topic. Application of the experts' report will likewise be discussed.

Mr. Herriot, interviewed by Reuter's representative, expressed the greatest faith in the Entente, for which he had worked whole-heartedly. He declared that close Franco-British relations were essential both now and in the future for the peace of the world.—Reuter.

Germany Driving a Wedge

Paris, June 21.

"Le Journal" publishes a report from Berlin that the German Government has made a demarche to Britain with a view to securing a formal undertaking that the Ruhr towns of Duesseldorf, Duisburg and Ruhrort will be evacuated as soon as the Reichstag has accepted in legislative measures to give effect to the experts' report. The question will be discussed by Mr. Ramsay MacDonald and M. Herriot at Chequers.—Reuter.

Improved Relations Between Britain and France: The Dawes Report

London, June 22.

There has been a distinct advance in relations between Britain and France as an outcome of the Premiers' conversations at the Chequers, with which, it is stated, M. Herriot is much pleased. It is understood that the talk of the two statesmen was very frank. Both desired a personal understanding and this was attained without either conceding any vital point.

M. Herriot on his return to London laid a wreath on the Cenotaph and also on the grave of the Unknown Warrior in Westminster Abbey. He will leave for Brussels to-morrow, where he will interview MM. Theunis and Hymans, the Premier and Minister of Foreign Affairs.

A communiqué states that M. Herriot and Mr. MacDonald had a friendly, informal discussion at the Chequers during the week-end on questions arising from the Dawes report and the measures to put it into execution. A definite conclusion was not reached, pending consultation of the Italian and Belgian Governments. The conversation revealed general agreement of the British and French points of view and a common determination to overcome difficulties by means of continuous co-operation. It was agreed, subject to the convenience of the other Allies to hold a conference in London not later than the middle of July for the purpose of definitely settling the procedure to be adopted.

The two Premiers agreed to pay a brief visit to Geneva together for League of Nations in September.—The opening of the Assembly of the [illegible]

Paris, June 23.

A [illegible] agreed to the interview between Mr. MacDonald and M. Herriot says: "We aimed to conclude a pact of [illegible] co-operation."

The two Prime Ministers did everything possible to create an atmosphere of sympathy and confidence. Mr. MacDonald repeated his assurance that, in case of German default, Germany would find herself face to face with Britain, France and Belgium, united inflexibly as during the war.

Mr. MacDonald's undertaking, it is believed, will help to facilitate the military evacuation of the Ruhr.

The statement assumes that the United States will be invited to participate in the next London conference.—Reuter.

Required Check on Germany

Paris, June 23.

The "Matin's" special correspondent in London states that the guarantees asked by M. Herriot before the Ruhr can be militarily evacuated include the possibility of sending troops to the Rhine in the event of German defaults. This would involve absolute control of certain strategic lines.

Strong representations will be made, according to the correspondent, with regard to disarmament. The Conference of Ambassadors will demand the drawing up of a full inventory and the inspection of German armaments by the Inter-Allied Commission.

The correspondent states that the Germans will be invited to the drafting of a protocol, which will be signed with them for the initiation of the experts' scheme.

It was also agreed that France and Britain should each appoint two experts to examine the question of debts with a view to finding a settlement without awaiting the participation of the United States.—Reuter.

London, June 23.

M. Herriot left for Brussels from Victoria station this morning.—Reuter.

Mr. Ramsay MacDonald's Statement in the House of Commons

London, June 23.

In the House of Commons to-day, replying to Mr. Stanley Baldwin, Mr. Ramsay MacDonald said that the purpose of his interview with M. Herriot, the French Premier, was to discuss the technical arrangements necessary in order to put the experts' reports into operation and also to discuss certain matters in which co-operation between France and Britain seemed desirable in order to promote security and peace in Europe. The Prime Minister said that this must not be taken to mean that it was intended to make any exclusive arrangements between any two Powers. The discussion would be reported to the Prime Ministers of Belgium and Italy, to whom M. Herriot and Mr. MacDonald were anxious that no decision should be presented as already taken. The talk was preliminary to an inter-Allied Conference in London, probably on July 16. The communiqué issued covered the ground of the conversation.

Replying to Mr. Lloyd George, Mr. MacDonald said that it was most desirable that America should be represented at the Conference on July 16 (cheers). A communication to that effect would be made to America immediately. Representation of Germany had been discussed, but it was obvious that an inter-Allied agreement was in the first place essential with regard to what they were prepared to do to give effect to the report. It was felt that the report imposed certain obligations on Germany somewhat outside the obligations of the Treaty of Versailles. The question remaining for consultation with Belgium and Italy was how best they could make Germany a willing partner in sharing these obligations.

The Inter-Allied Debts

Mr. MacDonald said that the business of the inter-Allied Conference would be the Dawes report. As soon as all the machinery was [illegible] in order to put the report into operation, the Conference would proceed to discuss and, if need to arrange other outstanding questions between France and Britain, including inter-Allied debts, but he emphasized that the debt question would not be mixed up with putting the report into operation.

Replying to Mr. W. M. R. Pringle, Liberal Member for Peniston, the Prime Minister said that the question of the proportions in which the Allies shared the payments from Germany would certainly not be reopened.

Replying to Mr. Ronald McNeill, Unionist Member for Canterbury, Mr. MacDonald said that the Government was communicating with the Dominions. He gave assurance that the Dominions would be completely consulted, so that they might feel that they were partners with the Government in everything the Government did (Opposition cheers). He emphasized that in settling the question of putting the Dawes report into operation the Government would take no responsibility which would lead to Britain or her Dominions being mulcted in seeing it carried out.

In reply to Mr. Lloyd George, Mr. MacDonald said that Germany would be asked to come in to make good the final arrangements for putting the Dawes report into operation.—Reuter.

Collective Note to Germany

Brussels, June 23.

It is authoritatively stated that Mr. MacDonald and M. Herriot at the Chequers decided on the terms of a collective Note to Germany, after the anticipated Belgian approval has been obtained, drawing Germany's attention to the interest she has in giving material guarantee of her good will and good faith, if she wishes for the restoration of normal relations with the Allies. The Note will insist most urgently on the necessity for Germany giving all assurances on the vital question of disarmament without delay.—Reuter.

Attitude of United States.

New York, June 23.

With regard to the MacDonald-Herriot meeting, it is indicated that there is no likelihood of deviation from the Government's policy of no formal participation in European discussions, but, as a matter of course, the United States will expect to be represented in some way at the inter-Allied Conference.

It is remarked as a coincidence that this meeting will probably be held at the same time that Secretary of State Hughes will be in London with the American Bar Association.—Reuter's American Service.

UNITY OF THE ALLIED POWERS

Measures to be Taken to Carry Out Experts' Plan with Regard to Germany

Brussels, June 24.

In the course of long conversations, M. Herriot communicated to MM. Théunis and Hymans the details of his conversation with Mr. Ramsay MacDonald. According to a subsequent statement by M. Théunis, these conversations permit the hope of close co-operation between Britain, France, Italy and Belgium with a view to carrying out the experts' plan.—Reuter.

Berlin, June 24.

It is understood that a personal message from M. Herriot and Mr. MacDonald was communicated this morning to the Chancellor, Herr Marx. It points out that very disquieting reports are reaching the British and French Governments of the increasing activities of Nationalist militarist associations. It urges the German Government in its own interest to facilitate such an examination of armaments as will dispel suspicion.—Reuter.

Brussels, June 25.

Belgium has agreed to attend the conference on July 15 with a view to putting the experts' report into operation. The conference will be of an inter-Allied character, and it will not be necessary to call German representatives. The Ruhr will not be given up until Germany has given proof of her willingness to accept the experts' plan by giving guarantees. Whatever Germany may reply to the note of the Conference of Ambassadors, Belgium is as firmly decided as France to claim the complete disarmament of Germany.

Washington, June 25.

Mr. Frank B. Kellog, the United States Ambassador in London, has been instructed to attend the forthcoming conference of Prime Ministers on the subject of the Dawes report.—Reuter's American Service.

MILITARY CONTROL IN GERMANY

German Cabinet's Discussion of the Allied Note

Berlin, June 25.

The Cabinet to-day discussed the Allied Note with regard to military control. It is expected that a reply will be sent at the end of next week. There is no doubt that it will accept the Allies' demands, provided the proposed military investigation is really the control commission's last action and after that the League of Nations will take charge of the matter.—Reuter.

GOVERNMENT TWICE DEFEATED

Combination of Conservatives and Liberals Regarding Housing Bill

London, June 23.

The Government sustained another defeat in the House of Commons to-night by the sustantial vote of 315 to 175, in consequence of an Opposition and Liberal combination in favour of a motion to refer the Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill to a Committee of the whole House, instead of a Special Committee, as the Government sought to impose. The defeat, however, was on a question of procedure not of principle. No political significance is, therefore, attached to it, and other business proceeded.

Prior to this incident, the Bill, which embodies the financial resolutions, had already passed the second reading, after an Opposition motion of rejection had been defeated by 269 votes to 206. The Opposition argued that it was unsound in theory and practice and that its finance was thoroughly bad. The Liberals also expressed some discontent and it was the Liberal, Mr. C. F. G. Masterman's motion, that ultimately resulted in the discomfiture of the Government.—Reuter.

London, June 24.

The novelty attaching to Government defeats in the House of Commons is somewhat wearing off. For the sixth time they received a set-back to-night, when an amendment to the Traffic Bill was carried by 195 votes to 168 by the Conservatives and Liberals. The amendment pressed the Transport Ministry to adopt a certain arrangement for submitting regulations to Parliament. which, the Minister objected, would hamper the work of his department. The defeat is regarded as unimportant.—Reuter.

THE ANGLO-SOVIET CONFERENCE

Resumption of Negotiations Doubtful: A State of Suspended Animation

London, June 25.

The diplomatic correspondent of the "Daily Telegraph" says that the official Anglo-Soviet negotiations are at present in a state of suspended animation. The British side considers it futile to proceed further until negotiations for raising a loan and reaching an agreement with the British holders of Russian stock have fructified. Therefore, the resumption of the plenary conference is problematical.—Reuter.

Moscow, June 24.

M. Zinovieff, in the course of a speech at the Communist Internationale Congress to-day, declared: "England is now our chief task. If we succeed in creating a mass Communist party there, half the European victory will be achieved. We must not undervalue the happenings in England. We must set to work in the British Colonies."—Reuter.

SYDNEY, June 20.—Sitting in Admiralty Street to-day awarded £6,000 to the owners and crew of the tug Champion for the salvage of the Honolulu Maru, which was wrecked off the coast of New South Wales last April.—Reuter.

RUSSIA'S DESIRE FOR TRADE FACILITIES

Anxious to Place Orders in Britain for Manufactures if Credits Granted

London, June 25.

In the House of Commons to-day, Mr. L. R. Lumley (Unionist) asked whether the Russian Government had intimated that it was prepared to place orders in England which would provide work for large numbers of engineering workers if credit facilities were forthcoming. Mr. William Lunn, the Secretary of the Department of Overseas Trade, said that he understood that proposals involving the placing of orders in England for manufactures had recently been submitted to the advisory committee under the Trade Facilities Act.

Replying to Commander Kenworthy (Liberal), Mr. Lunn said that the trade facilities scheme had not been extended to the Russian Government at present, but that would not prevent the committee from considering the scheme.—Reuter.

SOUTH AFRICA'S NEW PARLIAMENT

Gen. Hertzog's Assurance that Nationalists Won't Raise Secession Issue

Capetown, June 20.

It is reported from Pretoria that Mr. Tielman Roos, the leader of the Transvaal Nationalists, writing in the Dutch newspaper, "Ons Vaderland," invites "our South African Party brothers to unite with us." He says that the Nationalist Party will act moderately and fairly and hope to create a better future for the country. He urges a reunion of all the Dutch, who desire to develop and build up South Africa.—Reuter.

Bloemfontein, June 20.

Addressing an enthusiastic open air demonstration to-day, General Hertzog emphasized the necessity for co-operation between the two races, for which he had always worked. He declared that, although the pact was formally ended, he was convinced that the two parties strongly desired to continue to co-operate. Gen. Hertzog gave assurance that the people of South Africa would no longer be "governed by violence."

No Secession Meditated

June 21.

In an interview published in the "Cape Times," General Hertzog, referring to the statement made by Mr. Tielman Roos, the leader of the Transvaal Nationalists, yesterday, inviting "our South African Party brothers to unite with us," said that Mr. Roos was free to say what he liked but he himself was not.

General Hertzog admitted that it was impossible for the Nationalists to carry on without the support of Labour. He expected that the two parties would shortly come to a mutual understanding with regard to policy.

General Hertzog emphasized that the Nationalists were determined to keep the pledge not to attempt to change South Africa's constitutional relations with Britain as laid down in the Act of Union. The Nationalists did not consider secession a matter of practical politics and were unlikely to do so until the rest of the people, especially the mass of British feeling, favoured it.—Reuter.

Premiership Resigned by Gen. Smuts: Gen. Hertzog to Form a Cabinet

Cape Town, June 23.

General Smuts has resigned the Premiership. The Governor-General has summoned General Hertzog and has asked General Smuts and his Ministry to continue pending the formation of a new Government.

It is announced that General Smuts will not be opposed at Standerston, Transvaal, the seat offered to him by Colonel Classen.—Reuter.

GREAT BRITAIN AND EGYPT

No Intention to Abandon the Sudan or Administration of the Suez Canal

London, June 25.

The British Government has declared that it is not going to abandon the Sudan in any sense whatever.

This definite endorsement of the policy of previous Governments was proclaimed by Lord Parmoor in the House of Lords to-day in reply to a question. It assumes greater importance in view of the impending visit of the Egyptian Premier, Zaghlul Pasha, to discuss outstanding questions with Britain and the Egyptian demand for the cession of the Sudan.

An important contribution to the discussion on the subject in the House of Lords was made by Viscount Grey of Fallodon, who, in the course of a striking utterance, deplored the fact that practically all Lord Cromer's splendid work in the administration of Egypt was gone or going. Viscount Grey insisted that the Egyptian Government should be made to understand that the right of protecting and administering the Suez Canal will not pass to it. We must also make it quite clear that Egypt will have no say whatever in the question of the Sudan. The only exception will be the question of the Nile waters, which is a case for a joint Egyptian and Sudanese Commission.

Lord Parmoor, giving the reassurance afore-mentioned, emphasized that Britain recognized that its obligations to the Sudanese were of such a character that no Government could abandon them without very serious loss of prestige.—Reuter.

THE NEW GOVERNMENT IN FRANCE

A Vote of Confidence: Determination of Socialists to Retain Independence

Paris, June 19.

The Socialist attitude towards the Herriot Government was defined to-day in a statement by M. Paul Faure in the Chamber, namely, that the Socialists will retain their independence, but will support the Government as long as the latter remains true to its own principles.

M. Herriot foreshadowed stringent financial retrenchment and rigorous collection of the income-tax. He declared that at present there was no question of a capital levy.—Reuter.

Latter.

Prior to M. Herriot's departure for London, the Chamber of Deputies passed a vote of confidence in the Government by 313 votes to 234.

The Poincarist, M. de Selves, was elected President of the Senate by 151 votes against 134 votes received by M. Herriot's candidate, M. Bienvenu-Martin.—Reuter.

FREE FIGHT IN FRENCH CHAMBER

Communist Attack on Socialists: From Abuse to Fisticuffs: Opposition Cheers

Paris, June 20.

There was an uproar in the Chamber of Deputies yesterday evening. The sitting was twice suspended, firstly, owing to a battle of expletives between the Right and Left Deputies, and, secondly, owing to a fight with fists between the Socialists and Communists at mid-night.

The Socialists assaulted a Communist Deputy, who declared that the Socialists were traitors to the working class because they supported the Government. The Communists rushed to the support of their colleague and a mêlée ensued. The Communist, M. Marty, standing on a bench, directed the operations, whirling a belt round his hand. The Radicals were against and the Right and Centre cheered ironically.—Reuter.

SECUNDERABAD, June 21.—The Nizam of Hyderabad has granted the ex-Khalif, Abdul Medjid, a life pension of £300 a month, beginning in July.—Reuter.

FRANCE AND SOVIET RUSSIA

Intended Exchange of Views with United States as to Recognition

New York, June 22.

M. Herriot has sent a despatch with a view to bringing about an exchange of views with the United States before taking steps concerning French recognition of Soviet Russia. He intimates the belief that the United States and France have much in common on their attitude towards the Soviet Government, and might therefore benefit mutually and perhaps reach an understanding regarding the course each shall pursue. The despatch significantly recalls President Coolidge's recent message to Congress, when he laid down the conditions of American recognition, namely, abandonment by the Soviet of the policy of confiscation or nationalization of private property, indemnification for past seizures, acknowledgment of Russia's just obligations and cessation of propaganda in the United States.—Reuter's American Service.

Paris, June 22.

The Quai d'Orsay points out that negotiations have not opened between Paris and Washington with regard to recognition of the Soviet. M. Herriot has merely instructed the French Ambassador to communicate to the State Department as an act of courtesy the text of the passage in his Ministerial declaration, thereby drawing official attention to the new French policy towards Russia. A reply was not requested and is not being awaited. A similar démarche was made at the French Embassy in London and in the other capitals interested.—Reuter.

Soviet's Attempt to Pledge Chinese Eastern Rlwy.

London, June 22.

The "Morning Post" says that the transfer of the Chinese Eastern Railway to the Soviet caused M. Herriot to withhold recognition of Russia, and the paper believes that M. Herriot raised the question during his visit to Chequers. It states that M. Litvinoff made an attempt in London to sell the railway or pledge it as a guarantee for a loan but, in view of energetic diplomatic steps taken in London by Japan, the United States and France, M. Litvinoff's efforts failed.—Reuter.

SOVIET ESPIONAGE IN FRANCE

Russian Ex-Officer Sentenced to Imprisonment for Theft of Plans

Paris, June 25.

A former Russian officer, Boris Mindiouck, was to-day sentenced to three years' imprisonment and a fine of 1,000 francs, and a French engineer, Antoine Thivat, to 10 months' imprisonment on a charge of appropriating important plans belonging to aeroplane factories, where they were employed, concerning interests of national defence. It was alleged that Mindiouck had admitted that he intended to communicate the documents to the Soviet.—Reuter.

THE MURDER OF SGR. MATTEOTTI

Kidnapped Socialist Now Said to Have Been Murdered and Body Burnt

Rome, June 19.

The arrest of Signor Marinelli, one of the original Fascists, administrative secretary of the Party since its foundation and enjoying authority second only to that of Signor Mussolini, amazed and shocked the public though the fact that he was not included in the Directory appointed on June 16 had already revealed that he no longer enjoyed the confidence of Signor Mussolini. Reuter.

Rome, June 21.

The "Messaggero" says that one of the principal men arrested in connexion with the Matteotti crime has admitted complicity and has accused three other prominent Fascists, two of whom have been arrested as instigators.

It is alleged that Signor Matteotti was dragged into a motor-car and murdered, the car driven into the woods and the body thrown into a hedge. The murderers returned to Rome and conferred with others with regard to the disposal of the body, with the result that one of the assassins drove into the woods in the night and disposed of the body, which the prisoner believed was burned.—Reuter.

Socialist Meetings of Protest in Geneva and Paris

Rome, June 22.

Cesare Rossi, the former head of the Government Press Office, who is charged with complicity in the Matteotti affair, has surrendered to the police.—Reuter.

London, June 23.

The Matteotti crime is arousing the ire of Socialists throughout Europe.

Reuter's correspondent at Geneva states that a stormy public protest meeting was held there, attended by 2,000 persons, including the Labour Conference delegates representing Britain, France, Holland, Germany and Belgium. Allusion to the Fascist régime in the speeches provoked cries of "Assassins! Bandits!" and tumult, accompanied by expressions of "To the guillotine!" Finally the meeting passed a unanimous resolution demanding freedom for the Italian workers.

Reuter's Paris correspondent telegraphs that disorderly scenes followed a Communist protest meeting, which included many Italians. When the meeting concluded, the participants encountered a procession of local societies with bands playing. They mistook them for a counter-demonstration and a free fight ensued. The police intervened and the fighting became a fierce three-party mêlée. Casualties were inflicted on both political parties before the police cleared the streets.—Reuter.

Indignation and Regret of President of Senate and Signor Mussolini

Rome, June 24.

In the Senate to-day, the President, Signor Tittoni, expressed indignation at the murder of Signor Matteotti and repugnance at the motives of self-interest surrounding the crime. He affirmed the Senate's determination that a full penalty should fall on those responsible.

Signor Mussolini, in a long speech, associated himself with these sentiments. He reiterated his extreme regret and horror. He declared that the Fascisti were among the first to condemn those responsible. Justice would be meted out irrespective of person. The Government would stand fast, but this did not mean that it might not be reconstructed in order to enable it better to achieve national pacification. There was no question of his clinging to office, but he would regard himself as the most cowardly of men if he shirked his moral and political responsibilities at a difficult moment.

He refused to agree to dissolution. Fascism had certainly received a blow, but it had already profited and would continue to profit from it in getting rid of bad elements. Fascism would refuse to bow to the storm of reproach. The incidents at Bologna were indicative of the moral and political tension, which had reached its maximum, particularly in North and Central Italy, where Fascism was not strongly represented. Everything must be done to prevent the situation becoming worse.—Reuter.

RIOT IN THE REICHSTAG

Berlin, June 24.

Violent scenes occurred in the Reichstag to-night in the course of the debate on a motion for the release of political prisoners. A regular hand-to-hand fight took place between Nationalists and Socialists. One Member apparently tried to strangle another. Insults were shrieked across the House. The sitting was twice suspended. The Communists walked out in a body as a protest against a remark by a Nationalist.—Reuter.

BRITISH PRESTIGE IN MEXICO

New York Press Disposed to Resent Mr. MacDonald's Act

New York, June 20.

Commenting on Britain's breaking off of relations with Mexico, the "New York Times" says that Mexico is clearly entitled to demand the recall of Mr. Cummins, but this ought to have been done without the use of offensive language. The world is startled at the sight of a Pacifist MacDonald bearing himself in an international dispute very much as Lord Palmerston would have done.

The "New York World" says that the MacDonald Government inherited from Marquess Curzon the quarrel with the Obregon Administration, which, through ignorance or obstinacy, it has made its own and in breaking with Mexico it has manifested an unfriendly spirit which makes its motives questionable.—Reuter's American Service.

Mexico City, June 21.

Mr. Cummins, the British Agent, left here yesterday evening for the United States on his way home.—Reuter.

AMERICAN DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION

Large Number of Presidential Candidates and Differences of Opinion

New York, June 23.

The city is decorated with miles of flags and bunting and Fifth Avenue at night is glowing under myriads of yellow, white and blue lights, the official colours of the city, in honour of the opening of the Democratic Convention on June 24.

The Convention is expected to prove one of the most exciting on record owing to the large number of potential candidates and the differences of opinion with regard to the questions of Prohibition, the Ku Klux Klan, the World Court of Justice and the League of Nations. Those against the Ku Klux Klan desire a plank in the platform opposing the Klan by name, while others suggest a plank which would merely denounce subversive organizations generally. Division on the foreign relations plank hinges generally on whether or not the League of Nations should be specially referred to. With regard to the liquor issue, some delegates urge a plank suggesting amendment of the Volstead Act so as to permit light wines and beers. Others want enforcement of the law with a proviso that, if the statute is imperfect and out of harmony with the Constitution, Congress should alter it.

Mr. Smith, the Governor of New York, and Mr. McAdoo, the former Secretary of the Treasury, are still the most prominent candidates for the Presidency, but keen political observers declare that Mr. Davis, the former Ambassador to Britain, is daily gaining adherents.—Reuter's American Service.

Republican Home and Foreign Policies Condemned

New York, June 24.

Addressing the Democratic Convention on being elected temporary chairman, Senator Harrison, of Mississippi, unsparingly condemned the Republican home and foreign policies. He referred bitterly to the recent graft disclosures at Washington, exclaiming that "the least the American people expect of their public servants is common honesty. Oh, for a man at the White House with the matchless statesmanship and fine fighting qualities of Woodrow Wilson." Senator Harrison said that President Wilson's policy was definite, wise and brave, while the Republican policy had been vacillating, halting and weak. He praised President Harding's attitude towards the World Court, but complained that President Coolidge, since assuming office, had made only a bow in that direction.

Thirteen thousand party "warhorses," delegates and spectators packed Madison Suare Gardens for the opening of the sitting at midday in stifling summer heat. To-day's proceedings were brief, but surcharged with intense feeling as a result of the pre-Convention campaign.—Reuter's American Service.

Arguments For and Against Joining League of Nations

New York, June 25.

The Democratic Convention at present appears to be at sixes and sevens with regard both to platform and candidates. The resolutions committee all night long listened to arguments for and against America's joining the League of Nations and with regard to Prohibition, the Ku Klux Klan and other internal issues. Apparently no agreement on any of them was in sight when the committee adjourned. Judge Westcott in an impassioned address to the committee urged a platform in favour of joining the League, after which he fell fainting. Other speakers urged a referendum on the question of joining the League, while others favoured adherence to the League under conditions which would not endanger the sovereignty of the country. Some are of the opinion that Mr. McAdoo's chances of nomination have been injured by the refusal of the rules committee to change the rule, making a two-thirds vote of the delegates necessary for nomination to a bare majority vote.

Later.

Senator Walsh, of Montana, has been elected permanent chairman of the Democratic Convention. In a speech he condemned the Republicans' sins of commission and omission, declaring that President Coolidge's party had palliated the offences of unfaithful public servants. "It is in this easy tolerance of turpitude that the real danger of free government lies." Senator Walsh advocated tariff repeal, relief of agriculture and general reform. He warned the Democrats against making the League of Nations the chief issue of the campaign.

Mr. Owen Young, who was a member of the Dawes Committee, impressed on the platform committee of the Democratic Convention that the Democrats should take up a position regarding the attitude of the United States in relation to European politics. He subsequently accepted a resolution as correctly representing his position to the effect that: "The United States should sympathetically co-operate with its former allies and the League of Nations, having in view the ultimate adhesion of the United States to the Covenant with proper reservations."—Reuter's American Service.

Bleeding Noses.

Washington, June 26.

Towards the close of the Democratic Convention yesterday a resolution was passed to hear the nominating speeches immediately as the platform committee was not ready to report. A delegate then began to nominate Senator Underwood. There was a demonstration when candidates hostile to Ku Kluxism were mentioned. Collisions with delegates unfavourable to Senator Underwood resulted in bleeding noses. Brilliant orators submitted the claims of Senator Robinson and Mr. McAdoo. A vigorous demonstration followed continuing in the case of Mr. McAdoo until the adjournment.

And a Black Eye.

Considerable merriment was caused in the Capitol yesterday when simultaneously with the news from New York that Senator Robinson's name had been submitted for Presidential nomination at the Democratic Convention, it become known that the Chevy Chase Golf Club had temporarily suspended Senator Robinson for blackening the eye of another member on the links last week in the course of a dispute.—Reuter's American Service.

THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT

Necessity of Remedies to Rectify Imperfections of Administration

London, June 19.

The terms of reference of the committee, which the Government of India are appointing to inquire into the difficulties and defects in the working of the Government of India Act, show that the committee may only suggest remedies which would be consistent with the structure and purpose of the Act and such amendments as would be necessary to rectify administrative imperfections.

Members of the Committee include Sir Alexander Muddiman, President of the Council of State, who is Chairman of the Committee, the Maharaja of Burdwan, Sir Mian Muhammad Shah and Sir Tejisapru. —Reuter.

BRITISH COLUMBIA ELECTIONS

Amendment of Liquor Act Generally Rejected

Vancouver, June 22.

The general election is proceeding in British Columbia. The Premier, Mr. Oliver, was defeated at Victoria City, but the other Cabinet Ministers have all been re-elected. At the same time a plebiscite taken on the question of amending the Liquor Act to allow the sale of beer and light wines by the glass in licensed premises has resulted in the cities and most of the larger towns voting against the amendment.—Reuter's American Service.

POSTAL STRIKE IN CANADA

Service Badly Disorganized

Ottawa, June 20.

A general strike has been proclaimed by postal employees as a protest against the new wages rates, fixed by the Civil Service Commission. Up to the present the strike has badly disorganized the mail services in Ontario and Quebec. —Reuter's American Service.

BUILDING TYRANNY IN BRITAIN

Lock-out by Employers: Men's Retort: Country in Grip of a Monopoly

London, June 21.

The National Conference of Building Employers to-day decided to declare a national lockout from July 5 to enforce observance of the national agreements.

The lockout will involve nearly 700,000 men and will probably mean the stoppage of the bulk of building throughout the country.

The decision of the employers is all the more surprising because the national agreement, embodying the settlement reached on May 30 for an increase in wages of a half-penny an hour, was formally signed only on June 16.

The employers, in declining to endorse the settlement and breaking off negotiations, point out the continuous disputes and revolts throughout the country, particularly the strikes at Liverpool.

The building operatives declare that the employers have repudiated their own negotiating committee and hint that, if the terms of settlement are not observed, the operatives may strike without waiting for the lockout.—Reuter.

PUNJAB LIBEL CASE

Labour M.P.'s Motion for Removal from Bench of Mr. Justice McCardie

London, June 23.

In the House of Commons to-day, Mr. George Lansbury, Labour Member for Bow and Bromley, asked if the Government would grant time for discussion of his motion asking for the removal of Mr. Justice McCardie from the Bench in connection with [illegible] in the libel case of Sir Michael O'Dwyer, former Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, against Sir Sankaran Nair, a former member of the Government of India.

Mr. Ramsay MacDonald said that the Government had come to the conclusion that discussion of this subject would only add to the harm done to India by the words complained of.—Reuter.

IRISH FREE STATE AND UNITED STATES

Suggested Appointment of a Minister Plenipotentiary

London, June 25.

In the House of Lords to-day, Lord Arnold, the Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, stated that the Government had instructed the British Ambassador at Washington to inform the United States Government that they had concluded that it was desirable that the conduct of matters at Washington exclusively relating to the Irish Free State should be confided to a Free State Minister Plenipotentiary, accredited to the United States, and they trusted that this proposal would be acceptable to the United States Government.—Reuter.

EXTENSION OF OLD AGE PENSIONS SCHEME

Provision for Single People and Married Couples: Not for Mothers and Widows

London, June 25.

A quarter of a million elderly persons will benefit by the result of the extension of the Old Age Pensions Scheme, which has obtained the approval of the House of Commons.

Mr. Philip Snowden, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, introducing the necessary financial resolution, said that single persons having means, not necessarily earned, of 25s. a week, will be entitled to a pension of 10 shillings a week. A married couple, whose income is 50s. a week, will be entitled to a sovereign a week jointly. The cost of this increase will exceed £4,000,000 for the first year, but will rise to £7,000,000. The proposals could in no way be regarded as a final settlement of the problem. Mr. Snowden said that he hoped shortly to submit a scheme for mothers' and widows' pensions and to reduce the age limit to 65.—Reuter.

ORIENTAL POTENTATES VISITING LONDON

Received in Audience by the King

London, June 25.

The King to-day received in audience the Sultan of Perak. The Sultan was attended by Sir Ernest Birch, former British Resident in Perak, who presented the Rajahs Kechil Dngan, Kechil Bongsu, Aznam Shah, Kintas, Datoh Panklima and Tohmuda.

His Majesty also gave an audience to the Regent of Kedah, who presented his two half-brothers, Tunku Mansur and Tungku Mahomed Jiwa.

Sir Ernest Birch also presented the Raja Muda of Selangor.

The Prince of Wales received Sir Robert Ho Tung.—Reuter.

OBITUARY

Sir Dighton Probyn

London, June 20.

The death is announced of General the Rt. Hon. Sir Dighton Macnaghten Probyn, V.C., P.C., G.C.S.I., G.C.B., G.C.V.O., LS.O., at the age of 91.

Sir Dighton Probyn had been Comptroller to Queen Alexandra since 1910 and Extra Equerry to the King since 1910. He entered the Army in 1849, and served on the Trans-Indus Frontier (1852-57), in the Indian Mutiny (1857-58), in China (1860), and in the Umbeyla Campaign (1863). He was knighted in 1876 and attained the rank of General in 1888.

Sir Dighton Probyn retired from the office of Governor of Wellington College in 1919.—Reuter.

BRITAIN'S INCREASED IMPORTS

Improved Exports Also

London, June 19.

In the House of Commons to-day Mr. Sidney Webb, President of the Board of Trade, introducing the Board of Trade estimates, said that trade conditions were considerably more promising than they were last year. There had been a wonderful increase in imports, mainly the principal raw materials on which British commerce depended. Exports had also increased. Coal and steel production in Britain had reached the pre-war figures.—Reuter.

TRAGEDY ON MOUNT EVEREST

Two of the Explorers Killed When Almost Arrived at the Summit

London, June 21.

Tragedy attended the latest attempt to conquer Mount Everest, according to the "Westminster Gazette," which states that Messrs. Leigh Mallory and Irvine, two members of the party, were killed during the final attempt to reach the summit.

The "Daily Express" says that news received by the victims' relatives shows that Messrs. Mallory and Irvine were caught in a monsoon near the summit.

Sir Francis Younghusband, interviewed by the "Westminster Gazette," stated that the expedition was within a short distance of the summit; indeed, higher than it had ever previously attained. It was practically certain, however, that the expedition would now have to be abandoned, at least for the present year.—Reuter.

MURDER OF JAPANESE IN CALIFORNIA

Believed to be the Outcome of a Bootleggers' or Gambling Feud

London, June 22.

The New York correspondent of the "Sunday Express" telegraphs that the dead bodies of two Japanese have been found on a country road near Fort Arthur, California, and another in Colorado Street, outside Pasadena. Police suspect the murders to be a reprisal for the anti-American incidents in Japan. They believe that the men were murdered in Los Angeles and the bodies taken to the spots where they were found.

The correspondent states that recent anti-Japanese outbreaks near Los Angeles have caused the Japanese Businessmen's Association to appeal for police protection.—Reuter.

Los Angeles, June 22.

The police have identified the bodies of the two murdered Japanese as notorious under-world characters. The body of one of the victims was literally riddled with bullets. The police believe that the murder was the outcome of a bootleggers' or gambling feud.—Reuter's American Service.

Japanese Feeling under Control.

Tokio, June 23.

The murders of Japanese in California are understood to be the outcome of an inter-Japanese quarrel, according to information from official sources.

Reports of these incidents naturally found a prompt echo here, especially in the reactionary press, which sensationally displayed the news and commented on it with vigour, while the larger and more moderate papers either refrained from comment or counselled self-control in the absence of details.

As soon as the reports were received extra precautions were taken for the maintenance of order, especially at hotels and the residences of Americans, who were assured by the authorities that every provision would be made to ensure complete control of the radical elements.

The leaders of the Taikosha, which is alleged to have been responsible for the incident at the Imperial Hotel on June 7, now appeal to their fellow-nationals to uphold the character of the Samurai, who would scorn "to persecute innocent Americans in Japan."—Reuter's Pacific Service.

CHINESE SMUGGLERS IN BERLIN

Two Hundred Arrested in Raid of Chinatown: a Plea of Ignorance

Berlin, May 24.

Two hundred members of the Berlin Chinese colony were haled into court yesterday as the result of a raid of Chinatown in search of smuggled goods. The court hearing developed the fact that most of the goods in question were smuggled by way of the occupied area, where the control is not so effective as elsewhere.

Dr. Hoo Chi-tsai, secretary of the Chinese Legation, appearing as interpreter, pleaded that his countrymen were unacquainted with the complicated German import laws and suggested the payment of a lump sum as a fine. The court declined to accept this solution and will issue individual indictments.—Reuter.

RUSSIA'S COINAGE REQUIREMENTS

Contract with British Mint for Manufacture of Forty Million Half-roubles

London, June 22.

In consequence of the inability of the Leningrad mint to meet sufficiently quickly the coinage requirements for trade uses, the Soviet Government has contracted with the Royal Mint for the coining of 40,000,000 half-rouble pieces, called poltinniks. They consist of nine parts of silver and one of copper and their value is about one shilling. The Soviet Trade Delegation in London will supply the necessary silver, all of which has already been quietly secured. Coinage will begin at the end of June and delivery will be effected within four months. The Leningrad mint is also manufacturing silver roubles, silver poltinniks, silver 20, 15 and 10 kopek pieces and also smaller denomination copper-coins.—Reuter.

PRESSMEN IN THE EAST

An Editor's Advice to Young Journalists: a Field for Gaining Experience

London, June 24.

Sir Thomas Bennett, proprietor of the "Times of India," and Mr. Arthur Still, editor of the "Straits Times," were the principal guests at a luncheon of the Institute of Journalists to-day, Sir M. Bhownagree, Sir Alfred Robbins, Mr. Robert Donald and many other prominent Home and overseas pressmen were present.

Mr. Still dwelt on the varied character of the recognition pressmen received in the East. He advised young journalists not to shirk opportunities of securing appointments abroad because every year spent overseas added to their value both as journalists and citizens. He hoped that the Institute and the Empire Press Union would bear in mind that the newspaper press was not entirely confined to Fleet Street.

Sir Thomas Bennett referred to the growth of Indian newspapers during the past 40 years.—Reuter.

THE CRUELTY OF RODEO

A Wild West Show at Wembley That Excites General Condemnation

London, June 20.

The "rodeo" contests in the British Empire Exhibition at the Stadium, in which American and Canadian cowboys performed very daring feats of horsemanship, have excited considerable agitation in Parliament and the country in consequence of alleged cruelty in the course of lassoing and securing wild steers. Several steers were hurt and had to be killed. Police Court proceedings have been instituted against the promoters. Meanwhile, in consequence of the growing volume of protests, steer-roping has been cut out of the programme.—Reuter.

RUMANIA AND SOVIET

Recognition and Bessarabia

Bukharest, June 20.

Replying to an interpellation on the Government's policy towards Russia, the Premier, M. Bratiano, and the Foreign Minister, M. Duca, made speeches declaring that Rumania was anxious to resume normal relations with the Soviet, but emphasized that recognition depended on Russia acknowledging Rumania's rights over Bessarabia.

A motion of non-confidence in the Government was defeated by 136 votes to 35.—Reuter.

WRECK OF THE CLAN MACMILLAN

Rescue of Captain and Crew: Ship Abandoned

London, June 21.

A despatch from Rangoon states that the steamer Leicestershire reports having received an S.O.S. from the steamer Clan MacMillan, in a sinking condition 30 miles south-east of Table Island.

The Leicestershire is within 16 miles of the Clan MacMillan, which was bound from the Clyde and from Calcutta for Nukualofa in the Friendly Islands.

Later.

It is reported from Rangoon that the steamer Leicestershire reached the reported position of the Clan MacMillan at mid-day, but there was no sign of the Clan MacMillan or her boats. A search is being made.—Reuter.

Rangoon, June 21.

It is reported that the Clan MacMillan's boats have been sighted off the Andamans.

June 22.

All efforts to find the Clan MacMillan have failed. The earlier report that her boats had been sighted off the Andamans is untrue.—Reuter.

London, June 22.

No further news has been heard of the Clan MacMillan, which carries a crew of 27 but no passengers. It is presumed that she has sunk or been abandoned. Heavy weather and gales are prevalent in the Bay of Bengal.—Reuter.

London, June 23.

It is reported from Rangoon that the Clan MacMillan was wrecked off the Preparis Shoal. The steamer Minhoa has picked up 60 of the crew to the south of Alguada. The Captain's boat is still adrift. Six steamers are still searching.

Later.

The Clan Line announce that a message has been received in London stating that the Captain's boat has been picked up. All the crew have now been accounted for.—Reuter.

Captain Loth to Leave His Ship Until Last Moment

Rangoon, June 24.

The crew of the Clan MacMillan experienced a trying 48 hours before they were rescued. The night was pitch black and the sea rough when the vessel grounded on the shoals of Preparis Island. Shortly after she started to sink rapidly.

The crew took to the boats, but stood by for 12 hours until the ship was finally submerged. Meanwhile the captain remained on the bridge, and the chief officer literally had to drag him off. The boats then rowed away. They had an electric torch as their only signalling apparatus. They encountered high seas and a strong wind, which necessitated continual baling.

After the Minhoa sighted the two boat-loads of shipwrecked men, she still had considerable difficulty in picking them up owing to a half gale blowing. The tanker Schwe Dagon came up and went off to search for the other boat, which has now been brought to Chittagong with the captain and others on board.—Reuter.

GRAND PRIORY OF THE ORDER OF ST. JOHN

Investiture by the King of Knights, Ladies and Associates

London, June 24.

As the sovereign head of the Grand Priory of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, the King held an investiture at Buckingham Palace to-day of Knights, Ladies and Associates of the Order. Besides 150 candidates for investiture, there was a numerous assemblage in the hall-room of the Palace. The ceremony was attended by the Queen, the Prince of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of York and the Duke and Duchess of Connaught. Among the donats invested were Mr. Ho Kom-tong and Sir Robert Ho Tung, who received silver badges.—Reuter.

SUGAR CULTIVATION IN TRINIDAD

Viscount Milner's Appeal for Further Funds for Development

London, June 23.

In a letter to the press, Viscount Milner, the Chairman of the Colonial Office committee for that purpose, appeals for £100,000 for the Imperial College of Tropical Agriculture of Trinidad in order to complete and equip the laboratories now under construction and also to provide for the establishment of an instructional sugar factory, towards which sugar machinery engineers of Britain have contributed apparatus to the value of £20,000.—Reuter.

CONFERENCE OF COCOA MANUFACTURERS

Scheme for Co-operative Marketing of Products

London, June 25.

The conference in London of representatives of the chief cocoa-growing countries of the world to-day passed a resolution in favour of collaborating with British Empire producers in a scheme for co-operative marketing of cocoa. A committee has been appointed to discuss the details.—Reuter.

EXPLOSION ON BRITISH STEAMER

Seven Men Badly Burned and Two Missing

New York, June 24.

Seven men were badly burned and have been taken to hospital, while two are reported missing, as the result of an explosion on board the British freighter Egremont Castle, which was loading here for China.—Reuter's American Service.

N. YORK-SAN FRANCISCO IN 22 HOURS

Remarkable Feat of Endurance by American Aviator

San Francisco, June 24.

The airman, Lieutenant Russel Maughan, arrived at San Francisco at 9.44 this evening. He left New York at 3.59 this morning and thus flew across the continent, a distance of 2,670 miles, between dawn and dusk.

Lieutenant Maughan used a 275 H.-P. 12-cylinder Curtiss "Pursuit" aeroplane. His actual time, including five stops for refuelling, was 21 hours and 48 minutes.

The object of the flight was to test the speed at which Army airmen could be mobilised at either coast in the event of an invasion.—Reuter's American Service.

AMERICAN OIL TRUSTS

Washington, June 25.

Some 50 of the principal oil companies in the United States are involved in anti-trust proceedings, instituted by the Government in the Federal Court of Chicago. The Attorney-General has asked for an injunction to restrain the companies from further violations of the Sherman Law.—Reuter's American Service.

WORLD'S MOSLEM CONFERENCE

Delhi, June 26.

The Central Khilafat Committee, after private sittings lasting three days, it is understood, has settled the personnel of the Khilafat Delegation to the World's Moslem Conference, including the brothers, Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali. The Committee has also drafted instructions to the Delegation, which, it is believed, will be authorized to urge upon the Turkish leaders the imperative necessity of changing the venue of the Conference from Cairo to Constantinople.—Reuter.

COMMUNIST AIMS AGAINST GREAT BRITAIN

Moscow, June 26.

M. Beinkop, a member of the Dutch Communist Party, speaking at the Congress of the Third Internationale, said that the British Empire was the centre of gravity of the world's capitalism. The United States was also a stronghold of the same creed. They must concentrate their efforts on the British Empire, because there lay the shortest route to a world revolution.—Reuter.

U. S. FARMERS CHOICE FOR PRESIDENT

St. Paul, Minn., June 20.

The National Farmer-Labour Party has nominated Mr. Duncan McDonald, ex-President of the United Mine-workers of Illinois, and Mr. William Bouck, a fruit rancher-owner, as the Party's candidates for the Presidency and Vice-Presidency of the United States, respectively.—Reuter's American Service.

SATURDAY'S TELEGRAMS

THE ANGLO-FRENCH ENTENTE

Premier's Denial of Any Agreement as to a Defensive Military Alliance

London, June 26.

Mr. Ramsay MacDonald was cross-examined at question time in the House of Commons to-day with reference to a statement attributed to M. Herriot in an interview published in the "Independance Belge," which aroused furious controversy in the French and British press, that in the event of a premeditated German attack he had received a firm promise that Britain, as in 1914, would be on the side of France and Belgium and that he had the assurance of a firm pact binding the three countries. Mr. MacDonald complained that his conversations with M. Herriot had been grossly misrepresented and falsified by certain newspapers.

The communiqué issued on June 22 and his statement of June 23 covered the whole ground of the conversations. The reports mentioned in the question were based either on confusion or imagination. There was absolutely no kind of undertaking as regards a defensive military alliance so far as the conversations with M. Herriot were concerned.—Reuter.

The London Conference.

Paris, June 26.

M. Herriot announced in the Chamber to-day that the United States had accepted the invitation to be represented at the London Conference, officially on questions concerning the United States and semi-officially on questions interesting the other Allies.

Inter-Allied Debts

Submitting an account of the Chequers and Brussels conversations to the Senate and Chamber of Deputies to-day, M. Herriot said that Mr. MacDonald told him that, in the event of German default in the execution of the Dawes' plan, Britain would solemnly undertake to stand by the Allies. Britain desired Germany to give a written undertaking to carry out the necessary measures for the execution of the plan. M. Herriot insisted to Mr. MacDonald on the necessity of a settlement of the question of inter-Allied debts. The British Premier admitted that it should be taken up without delay.—Reuter.

Washington, June 27.

The Government have been definitely assured that the conference of Premiers on July 16 will be restricted to discussion of the Dawes' plan and will not include the question of inter-Allied debts.—Reuter's American Service.

Ruhr Expulsions Lifted.

Berlin, June 27.

Following M. Herriot's declarations in the Chamber with regard to expelled Germans, permission has already been given to 30,000 persons to return to French occupied territory. The return of the majority of those expelled will be rendered possible shortly and the majority of those taken prisoner at the time of the Ruhr conflict will be freed.—Reuter.

IRISH FREE STATE AND UNITED STATES

The Right of Representation at Washington: A Self-Governing Dominion

London, June 26.

In the House of Commons to-day, Mr. J. H. Thomas, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, dealing with Irish representation at Washington, said that there seemed to be an impression that, if the Irish Republic asked for it, it would be conceded. It should be understood that any such demand would receive the same reply as he believed would be received from either of the two previous Governments. The Government believed that peace and friendship could be maintained in Ireland by the establishment of the Free State as a self-governing Dominion in the British Commonwealth and in no other way.—Reuter.

GREAT BRITAIN AND THE SUDAN

Alleged Suppression of Patriotic Demonstrations in Khartum

London, June 26.

In connexion with Lord Parmoor's announcement in the House of Lords yesterday that the Government would not abandon the Sudan, Reuter's correspondent at Cairo reports that a Deputy read in the Chamber on June 24 a telegram which he said had been received from Khartum, alleging that the police had dispersed a peaceful demonstration of Sudanese in favour of King Fuad and Zaghul Pasha. Eleven of the demonstrators were wounded and five were imprisoned.

The Nationalist organization, the Wafd, has issued a manifesto alleging that the imperialists are suppressing expressions of public opinion in the Sudan and are trying to obtain the confidence of the Sudanese by illegitimate means and faked petitions. The manifesto says that the Wafd, which has assumed the task of realization of the complete independence of Egypt and the Sudan, protests very strongly against such methods and informs their Sudanese brethern that the hour of salvation is near.

The Egyptian Senate has passed a resolution protesting against the "English methods towards the Sudan directed at preventing the Sudanese from expressing attachment towards Egypt."—Reuter.

OUR AUSTRALIAN LETTER

Mr. Bruce Firm for a Comprehensive Defence Policy: Labour's Gains through Its Opponents Quarrels: Dame Nellie Melba Back: Home Govt.'s £20,000,000 Imigration Scheme

From Our Own Correspondent.

Melbourne, May 19.

Every effort is being made by Mr. Bruce, the Nationalist Prime Minister, and Dr. Earle Page, Country party Treasurer, to arrive at some understanding regarding the position of their respective followings at the next general elections. The fear of a Labour triumph is before them, and naturally Labour wishes to bring about an appeal to the electors before the differences are composed.

One of the wise old statesmen of the last century made the remark that the greatest asset of a politician is patience. We saw Mr. Lawson, the Victorian State Premier, impatiently break up his government, because he was dissatisfied with the attitude of the Country party organization, and though his successor, Sir Alexander Peacocke, is carrying on it seems certain that he will soon be defeated in the Assembly and will than have to go to the country with a somewhat slim chance of success.

It cannot be said that Mr. Bruce, the Commonwealth Prime Minister, is lacking in patience. He refuses to be hustled, makes no promises and is seeking for a programme which will appeal to both sections of his followers. I have on previous occasions mentioned his assertion of adherence to the protectionist policy, concerning which Labour makes capital in the Eastern States on the grounds that ministerialists are inclined to wobble, and in the western States on the ground that protection places undue burdens on the primary industries.

The protectionist declarations of Mr. Bruce are therefore calculated to rob the Labour party of some of its thunder, and at the same time make things easier for the Nationalists.

Then Mr. Bruce has announced the policy of using the excess tariff revenues as a means of compensating the primary producers by granting bounties on production and subsidies on steamers in order to secure markets for the surplus products.

Mr. Bruce Defence Policy

Following upon this, the Prime Minister, without going into details, which we may expect very shortly, has declared for a definite and comprehensive defence policy. That will gratify the Nationalists and at the same time afford the Country party members a chance to reverse the stupid opposition to military and naval expenditure which they displayed in 1922, chiefly for the purpose of harrying Mr. W. M. Hughes.

There is yet another item of policy, which will certainly create a serious division between Labour and the Country party. The latter pledged itself at the last elections to push on with a vigorous scheme of immigration, but in actual fact the results of 1923 appear to be little better if not worse than those of 1922. Again the purpose of the Country party was to discredit the Hughes Ministry, but it not unnaturally would be glad to show that it was accomplishing something of what it said should be done.

Senator R. V. Wilson, whom Mr. Bruce left behind him in England to look after Australian interests at the Wembley exhibition, will shortly return to Australia, and it is announced that he has made arrangements with the British government for a new and elaborate scheme of immigration. It is said that the amount involved will be something like £20,000,000, on the basis of a 15-year loan. This is not, as at present, solely for the purpose of bringing new settlers to this country, but also for the importation of artisans, labourers, and others whose entry is fiercely opposed by the Labour party on the grounds that it tends to swamp the Labour market. The programme so far may thus be summarised:—1.—Maintenance of protection; 2.—Shipping subsidies and new markets;—3.—Comprehensive defence scheme; 4.—Speeding up immigration of all classes.

Industrial Troubles

The Melbourne tramway strike lasted a fortnight, and then collapsed. The leaders told the men that they had won, because the Arbitration Judge had ordered them to go back to work, and had ordered the Board which governs the tramway service to say without delay what punishment it proposed to inflict upon the man whose flat disobedience was the cause of all the trouble. The Board has since said that it will keep him out until July 1, and now the men say that the treatment is harsh, but they do not say it very loudly. The fact is that the men were stampeded into striking in the belief that their services could not be dispensed with, whereas the general public was well-served by motor 'buses, and all sorts of motor vehicles, the congestion of the traffic in the streets was reduced, and time in travelling was saved. The hotheads who brought about this strike have gone a long way to give back to private enterprise the public utility which not so long ago was municipalized.

Another industrial trouble promises to have much the same sort of result. Men have been called off the ships of a certain line, and have been idle for several weeks. The ships remain tied up. The cause of the trouble is that one of the crew of a steamer of the line bruised his thumb, and the union demanded that he be paid £50 damages. The shipping company replied "not until it is ordered by a court," but the union officials refused to take the thumb into court and proceeded to hang up ship after ship belonging to the company. The latest news is that the men who have thus been thrown out of work are beginning to ask themselves what it is all about, and are moving the Disputes Committee of the Sydney Trades Council to bring the impasse to an end. Meanwhile several union officials in connexion with shipping have been committed for trial for alleged conspiracy, with an unpleasant prospect, if they cannot square the jury, of finding themselves in gaol.

In 1923 the number of industrial disputes throughout Australia was easily the lowest since 1919 and the number of workers—directly and indirectly—involved comparatively insignificant. These last two strikes will hardly encourage further interruptions of industry, so that we may expect a relatively peaceful year. For the first quarter of the present year out of 388,960 members of 423 unions only 7.6 per cent. were reported as unemployed, but this did not include persons on strike or locked out.

Victorian Government Defeated

The end of the Victorian government and the final act of revenge against the Nationalists for daring to flout the Country party has come with dramatic suddenness, and the government of Sir Alexander Peacocke has just been defeated in connexion with a Redistribution of Seats Bill upon which the Nationalists and Country party were agreed, prior to Lawson's break with the latter. On the second reading division a number of Country members crossed the floor and joined the Labour Opposition, with the result that the Bill was defeated by six votes. The question now is, what action will the Governor take? Will he give Sir Alexander a dissolution, or will he send for the Labour leader. Naturally Prendergast, the leader of the Opposition, contends that the latter would be the correct procedure. His theory is that no defeated government has the right to control elections—a novel and suggestive contention. It is generally assumed that Lord Stradbroke will grant a dissolution, and thus within a few months yet a third State election will be held in which the anti-Labour forces will fight each other, and allow Labour, quite possibly, to come back strong enough to take office. The late Western Australian elections gave a startling illustration of how Labour wins not on its own merits, but on the quarrels of its opponents. The votes cast for Labour numbered 38,000 and those for the opponents of Labour 55,000, yet Labour achieved the apparently impossible and got into power.

The Governor's Tea Party

The Presbyterian Church is generally considered a very serious body, but in Victoria it has recently given the public something to laugh about. Dame Nellie Melba, the great singer, has brought to Australia a Royal Opera Company, which has been performing to crowded houses in Melbourne. Most of the principals and the whole of the male chorus are Italians or foreigners, and this fact may account for the contretemps which has greatly disturbed the church. It seems that the Earl and Countess of Stradbroke bethought themselves to entertain the vocalists in Government House grounds, and as the proposed guests were mostly engaged on week days the Vice-Royalties chose a Sunday. Everything went off satisfactorily, and hosts and guests, not the least important of whom was Dame Nellie, had a very pleasant time on the beautiful lawns and in quite decent weather. Then terrible to relate it was discovered that four of the young women had found tennis racquets and balls and amused themselves for a few minutes knocking the balls about. This desecration of the Sabbath was brought up at a Presbyterian Assembly and very solemnly debated. At first it was proposed to censure the Governor of the State for permitting tennis to be played on Sunday, but it was felt that this would be disloyal, and eventually a very mild resolution was passed in which the god-fearing qualities of Lord Stradbroke were emphasized, the tendency to non-observance of the Sabbath deplored, and his excellency's own pecadillo just hinted at. It must not be thought for a moment that all the clergy present belonged to the old school of divines who condemned to everlasting torment the small boy "who whustled or went fushing on the Sawbath." There was at least one who had studied his history to such good effect that he was able to tell the assembly that John Knox, the great reformer, played bowls on the Sabbath, while others appeared to think that in the original motion they had caught a tartar and would fain let him go on the easiest terms possible.

Seaplane Flight Round Dominion

The seaplane flight around Australia, to which I referred about a month ago was completed and this morning Wing-Commander S. J. Goble and Flight-Lt. Ivor McIntyre landed in the Bay off St. Kilda, a Melbourne suburban watering place, to be warmly greeted by thousands and officially welcomed. They left to fly round Australia unobtrusively on April 6, and covered 8,500 land miles in approximately 90 flying hours. The same journey if undertaken by one of our ordinary coastal steamers would have occupied 32 days and nights. The ground organization, which was in the hands of the Vacuum Oil Company was excellent, no fewer than 32 depôts being established along the coast. The men were able to test the qualities of the Departmental seaplanes, of which there are only half a dozen in Australia. They are of the Fairey type and are fitted with powerful Rolls-Royce engines. They are designed to carry three men, but in this case additional petrol took the place of the third, and even then the machine was limited to a non-stop flight of 500 miles. The seaplane stood well. It experienced very bad weather in the South, the intense heat of the tropics, and only failed when its engine collapsed about 4,000 miles from home. A delay of ten days was caused by the instalment of a new engine, and in the final fly to base a heavy gale compelled the aviators to turn back to the nearest petrol depôt. All, however, has ended well. The two officers are being lionized, and in their speeches frequently mention the immense areas of country they saw from the air which apparently had never been even trodden by a white man. Their work will of course have an important bearing on the defence issue, which is steadily taking the form of underwater craft and flying machines.

BRITISH PARLEYS WITH SOVIET

The Truth About the "Deadlock:" Russia's Offers and Claims

London, May 6.

The statement made by the Liberal member for Lancaster, Mr. O'Neill, that "the Anglo-Soviet conference has reached a deadlock on the question of debts," is largely justified in substance, writes our Russian Correspondent, if not, perhaps, in form. Technically it is scarcely warranted, as the Committees and Sub-Committees sitting on the subject of claims and counter-claims have not got beyond the stage of mere filing of such claims and counter-claims. But should the Soviet delegates persist in their uncompromising resistance to claims tabulated by British sufferers from the Russian revolution, while urging in full the Soviet "bill" for counter-claims in respect of "foreign interventions," and thus making the Russian counter-claims exceed the claims of British subjects by many millions sterling, no agreement can, of course, be possible.

According to the latest information available, the Russians, while refusing to bind themselves on principle to the recognition of pre-war and war-time debts of the Tsarist and Kerensky Russian Governments, have intimated their willingness to recognize the claims of certain groups of British creditors. Such British creditors are those who have suffered damage and losses as the direct result of the action of the Soviet Government as such and the application of its decrees. Recognition, however, is refused to the claims of British subjects who have suffered as the result of the Revolution. At the same time, the Soviet Government demands the unconditional recognition of all Russia's counter-claims, which amount to over four thousand millions sterling.

The Soviet Delegation, we are given to understand, has been advised to drop this matter for the time being and to seek some form of agreement with the various separate groups of British private creditors of Russia themselves. Certain informal conversations, as previously announced in these columns, with such groups have already been proceeding for some time.

The Russian Guarantees.

The Russian Delegates are still clamouring for substantial credits from the British Government, or, at least, for an extension of credits under the Trade Facilities Act to the amount of £30,000,000

In return for a Government loan with credit facilities, it is stated that Moscow may be inclined to give the following economic and political guarantees:

(1) The sale or transfer to this country of the Eastern Chinese Railway;

(2) The withdrawal from Afghanistan of all Soviet diplomatic, economic, and propaganda representatives, delegations, missions, and agencies and of all organizations or branches of the Third International.

(3) The closing of the special training college for Communist propagandists and anti-British revolutionary agitators established in Tashkeut and composed as to personnel of anti-British subversive organizations in Eastern countries.

(4) The complete cessation of anti-British propaganda in Persia and the withdrawal from that country of all organizations and agents acting on behalf or in connexion with the Third International.

These terms, it is believed, will be discussed at the secret sessions of the pending congresses of the Communist Party and of the Third International which will be held in Moscow in May and June, and until then no final decision can be expected to be taken by the Soviet Government.

Under the circumstances little advance from the stage which the work of the Conference has now reached is likely for some weeks, and to this extent the official assurances denying a breakdown can be accepted as being no violation of the truth.

Moscow's Hand in Our Politics.

Paris, May 6.

Further evidence of the efforts that are being made by the Moscow Soviet to influence the political situation in England has been revealed by documents seized by the Bulgarian Government in the action it has recently taken for the purpose of breaking up the Bulgarian Communist Party. According to the "Matin" the documents secured include details of the decisions of a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Third International held in Moscow on March 12 last, a copy of which was transmitted on March 25 under the number 10,176 to the Communist organization in Berlin by Kolaroff, the General Secretary of the Executive Committee and President of the Bulgarian Communist Party.

Financing Propaganda in Britain.

What is extremely interesting, in view of the persistent efforts which the Soviet delegates now negotiating with Mr. MacDonald are making to secure an immediate loan from Great Britain, is that this official Soviet document reveals that at the same sitting it was decided to advance a sum of £10,000 for the furtherance of Communist propaganda in England, and also to furnish a subsidy of £7,000 a month in aid of the English strike funds, "in order to support the strike movement in the textile industry and among the miners and dockers." It was also decided to contribute £5,000 towards the support of the Communist Press in Great Britain.

The Moscow Committee decided at the same meeting to contribute one million gold roubles towards Communist candidates' campaign in the German general election, 40,000 dollars, plus a monthly subsidy of 25,000 dollars, to the Communist war chest for use in the American election contest, 50,000 gold roubles to aid the use in the French elections.—"Morning Post."

A STRANGE SIGHT

Huge Dust Cloud from Hawaiian Volcano

A Hilo, Hawaii, message of May 11 says:—Volcano House, the Government station, reports that it is the strangest sight seen for many years. Avalanches of rock continue to thunder within it, lava cracks are falling from the crater, and steam and gas are escaping from the crevasses. Volcanological instruments continue to give evidence of the temperamentality of the ancient cauldron. The flow of lava continues, with an unknown outlet, which, the Assistant Volcanologist (Mr. Finch) indicates, is probably into the sea. The sides of the crater are falling in, and the lava movement shows a sinking tendency. Minor earthquakes have been occurring in the neighbourhood, according to the seismograph.

Kilauea is a hill 16 miles to the southeast of Mauna Loa, in Hawaii, and it has the largest active crater in the world. The earliest recorded eruption was in 1879, and there was another in 1882. This volcano was first made known to the civilised world in 1823, when Mr. Ellis and a party of American missionaries visited it. At an elevation of 4,490 ft. above the sea they found in the midst of a plain an oval crater nine miles in circuference with vertical sides 1,000 ft. deep, covered at the bottom with a lake of liquid lava, at one end red and boiling. A stony ledge round the inside of the crater, and 300 ft. or 400 ft. above the lake, indicated that the lava had risen to that height, and had then run off by a subterranean channel to the sea, where some miles of coast had been filled up with liquid lava a few weeks previously. Since that time many travellers have ascended to the craters of both Mauna Loa and Kilauea, and have given vivid descriptions of the very grand and wonderful phenomena they witnessed. Amongst the minor phenomena, they speak of the delicate glassy fibres called Pele's hair by the Hawaiians, which is spun by the wind from the rising and falling drops of liquid lava, and blown over the edge or into the crevices of the crater. Pele in idolatrous times was the dreaded goddess of the volcano.)

OUR PARIS LETTER

Imposing Figures of the Elections: Settling Down to Olympic Games

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Paris, May 9.

One of the most remarkable figures in the French general election contest, which is just on the point of closing, is M. Georges Mandel, who is seeking re-election in the Gironde. As in the case of so many French public men, the name by which he is known is not inherited but assumed. His real name is said to be Jeroboam Rothschild, and he is of Jewish race. During the latter part of the war, he occupied a position of considerable influence, unhampered by responsibility. He was the confidential secretary of M. Clemenceau, who left all details to him and gave him wide powers, which he used freely and at times ruthlessly.

After M. Clemenceau retired from power, M. Mandel resolved to strike out for himself in public life. He was successful in his first attempt to enter Parliament, and he has more than once proved a thorn in the side of M. Poincaré during the past legislature. Needless to say, he is a strong adversary of the Bloc National. He has a bitter, ironical style of oratory, and an inconvenient memory for facts and dates. He generally exasperates his opponents by professing to look down upon them from the heights of his intellectual superiority.

Two Powerful Allies.

Personally he can hardly be much liked, but in his election campaign he has on his list a very popular candidate, the Abbé Daniel Bergey, curé of the parish of St. Emilien, known all over the world for the excellent claret it produces. The abbé is a fine-looking, tall young priest, who served in the war and won the Legion of Honour and Croix de Guerre. He has what the Irish call "a way with him." He knows the wine-growers and peasants of the Gironde and can talk to them in a way which they probably appreciate much better than M. Mandel's irony.

But M. Mandel has an ally even more influential than the Abbé Bergey. Cardinal Andrieux, Archbishop of Bordeaux, is placing all his influence at the service of the Mandel list, and Cardinal Andrieux is no ordinary prelate. Not long ago he expressed himself strongly against the diocesan associations which the Pope now permits for the administration of Church affairs in French dioceses, and now he is advising all Catholics to vote for the list headed by M. Mandel. He thinks they can have confidence in that gentleman because he voted for the resumption of relations between the French Government and the Vatican and in favour of allowing certain congregations to return to France.

The Cardinal does not think that M. Mandel's religious convictions need be taken into account so long as he defends the rights of the Church. "We do not ask those who help us in a just cause to share our religious beliefs," remarked the Cardinal the other day, "but I am none the less surprised that so intelligent a man can be so indifferent in religious questions. I said to him: "My dear M. Mandel, if you turn your mind towards God, He will come to you."

The interviewer asked if the Cardinal had any idea of converting M. Mandel, but the Cardinal only smiled and replied: "It was my duty to say that to him."

The Olympic Games.

The preliminaries of the Olympic Games have begun with the Rugby football tournament match between France and Rumania, in which, as everyone expected, the Rumanians, though plucky enough, were hopelessly outclassed. Next Sunday they play the United States, the latter meet France on the following Sunday and that will finish the tournament, without the participation of any of the countries in which the game finds its highest expression. The Association football tournament which comes next will be larger but equally unrepresentative, and it follows that an Olympic championship title for football can carry no weight. The truth is that too many sports, practised in different seasons of the year and different conditions of climate, have been added to the Olympic programme since the Games were revived at Athens in 1896. On that occasion they lasted only six days and it was possible to get all the competitors together on the Stadium for the opening ceremony.

As the programme stands now, the public, hearing of Olympic football matches, wonders why there has been no ceremony of inauguration, not realizing that this solemnity is reserved for the beginning of the athletic competitions in July. As for the 1924 festival, its organization has been hampered by the indifference or impotence of the public authorities. The Municipal Council became jealous of the Olympic Committee and could not make up its mind to assist liberally. A great deal of time was lost in bickerings over the selection of the site. At the present moment the approaches to the Stadium are in a state of chaos because the work of making extra roads has been left to the very last moment.

Lieut. d'Oisy's Record.

Lieut. Pelletier d'Oisy, the French airman who at the present moment of writing is supposed to be flying somewhere between Calcutta and Siam, has a fine record. During the war he shot down four enemy machines and won the Legion of Honour as well as the Croix de Guerre with numerous bars. Since the war he has made innumerable long distance flights, notably from Tunis to Paris in 11 hours and from Paris to Casablanca and Tunis. He has gained great popularity by his frank and boyish character. While in the army before the war, he was given two days' confinement to barracks for some trifling offence, and, happening to see a pole within reach, he used it for a jump over the wall and escaped. He tried it a second time and broke his leg. When at Bucharest two years ago, hearing that a French team was about to play a Rugby match at Belgrade he put on his football clothes under his flying suit, set off in his machine, came down on the ground and joined in the fray.

During the war he and Navarre, a kindred spirit, were sent to a station where their taste for chasing the enemy was not appreciated, and they were kept under severe discipline, which they resented, and the commander, not knowing what to do with such headstrong spirits, ordered them back to Rheims. They took their departure in the presence of the whole aerodrome staff and of some British officers, and, to revenge themselves, they carried out a little comedy. They started their engines and made straight for the group of officers, pretending that their machines would not leave the ground. The officers hastily threw themselves flat in the mud, and the aeroplanes sailed just over them. When they reached their destination the two jokers were sentenced to 15 days' confinement to barracks for making a "too sensational start."

Of course Pelletier d'Oisy, being a full-blown lieutenant and come to years of discretion, would not indulge in any such pleasantries now! He is known throughout the French air service as "Pivolo" the name of a character in a sensational novel that appeared some years ago. One of Pelletier d'Oisy's comrades happened one day to call him "Pivolo" and the name stuck. It fits the simple, frank and adventurous character of its new owner.

Election Surprises: M. Poincare Overthrown by Discontent at High Prices

Paris, May 15.

The result of the general election has been almost as great a surprise to the French themselves as to the rest of the world. A week ago it was regarded as certain that M. Poincaré would secure at least a working majority. The absence of excitement during the final week of the campaign strengthened this opinion, it being supposed that, if the electors really wanted a change of policy, they would have given some outward sign of their intentions. The results show that the real feeling of the electorate has been misunderstood. They do not condemn M. Poincaré altogether, but they show that in the new Chamber he would be in a minority of between 20 and 30, and he has therefore decided to retire at the end of this month, when the powers of the present Chamber expire, without waiting for an adverse vote.

The voters' verdict may be partly due to the feeling that M. Poincaré was too absorbed in foreign affairs and did not pay sufficient attention to internal questions, but the most likely cause is disappointment and resentment over the high cost of living. The man in the street considers that, as prices began to go down after reaching the high-water mark in 1922, they ought to continue to decline, and that their rise must be due to some mismanagement on the part of the Government.

M. Poincaré also has to bear the burden of unpopularity for this year's increase in taxation, which is now much heavier than it has ever been. He did what his predecessors ought to have done years ago. He realized that one cannot have stability and lower prices without sound national finances or, in other words, tangible proof in the eyes of the world that the country is making sufficient provision to meet its liabilities. Unfortunately the ordinary elector does not reason on the lines of political economy. He is discontented, and he turns to the other side, who promise him, in the usual style, that if he will leave it to them all will be well.

The Royalists' Collapse

After the defeat of the Block National by the Radicals and other sections of the Left, the most striking feature of the elections is the collapse of the Royalists. They do not keep a single seat in Paris. M. Léon Daudet himself is left out in the cold. Both M. Clemenceau's principal lieutenants have bitten the dust. Both had the mortification of seeing other candidates on their list returned while they themselves were rejected. This happened to M. André Tardieu in the Seine-et-Oise and to M. Mandel in the Gironde, where Anbé Bergey, M. Mandel's clerical colleague, got in. One of the new members for Paris is vice-Admiral Jaures (retired), a brother of the great tribune and, like him, a Socialist. M. Malvy, the ex-Minister sentenced for reason, is back again.

M. Herriot, the Mayor of Lyons and leader of the Radicals, seems the most likely person to be the next Premier. It is not by any means certain that the Socialists will share the responsibilities of power with him, and, if they hold aloof, his position will be far from secure. If the Radicals try to carry out their financial programme, which includes considerable decreases in taxation, they will have to find some other source of revenue, and if they resort to a capital levy, to secure the Socialist and Communist vote, they will break up their own party, many Radicals being opposed to such dangerous experiments. It is very likely that some members of the now victorious Left will ask for the abolition of the French Embassy to the Vatican, and that the new Government will not carry out M. Poincaré's promise to allow the return of missionary and charity congregations.

Everyone seems to think that a Radical Cabinet will be just as unlikely as M. Poincaré to give up the Ruhr except in return for some other guarantee, which has not yet been discovered, and if the Germans continue to refuse co-operation unless they regain full control of the Ruhr, we shall be no nearer a settlement than we are now.

Mahjongg Mad

One noticeable feature of the Paris season now in full swing is that there is less dancing than usual. This is due to the popularity of mahjongg the game which Europeans say is Chinese, and which the Chinese say is European. Among the "advanced" set it has not only reduced dancing but has made great inroads on bridge. That game has had a very long innings, and society was ripe for something new. So great is the vogue of mahjongg that it has started a fashion of special tables and chairs inspired by the styles of the country from which the game is supposed to come. The tables are lacquered and have very small drawers, and the chairs are also lacquered, red or black. The women who feel that they really must do the thing thoroughly wear long dresses of Chinese embroidery, and when they manipulate the precious dominoes decicated to the "winds,' the "seasons," the "dragons" and the "flowers" they look rather like priestesses celebrating some mysterious rite.

Paris is simply invaded by things Chinese. Parisiennes have Chinese embroideries on their dresses and use Chinese jade and corals as ornaments. They have a temporary craze, too, for Chinese furniture, and the woman who has no Chinese boudoir is simply not "in it." There is a graet demand for Chinese screens, fans, parasols, braids and heaps of other delightful things. Old Chinese embroidered silks, such as the griffin fresh from "home" is sure to buy during his first months of residence in the guileless East, are made into bags and fancy cases, and, as the quantity of genuine material is limited, the French manufacturers have to imitate it, which they do very successfully. The Parisian of to-day has no need to follow the example of his forefathers of the 18th century who used to send their furniture to Peking to be lacquered, their porcelian to be decorated and their glassware to be shaped. French artists and craftsmen are very quick to assimilate any kind of foreign masterpiece, but it must be admitted that they create more than they copy.

Chinese Legation Wedding

In view of the present Parisian furore for the Far East, countless Parisiennes must be regretting the lack of publicity attending the wedding at the Chinese Legation the other day, when the daughter of the Minister, Mr. Cheng Lo, was married to Mr. Raymond C. Wang, attaché at the Chinese Legation, Berne, and son of the Minister to Japan. The Legation being theoretically Chinese territory, the ceremony was in accordance with Chinese law, but only the bridesmaid wore Chinese dress. The bride had the conventional European costume for such occasions, with veil and orange blossoms, and the white silk of her gown was embroidered with coloured flowers.

It was distinctly out of the common to see a bride in Western costume singing the register in Chinese characters and using a brush for the purpose. As attendants she had two quaint little children of her own race.

WHAT TO DO WITH THE RABBIT?

Some Australian Schemes

I do not know who introduced the rabbits to Australia, writes a Sydney correspondent of the "Observer." There is a historical record of the event, but there is no monument to the hero, for the rabbit is the greatest pest the country has to endure. The prickly pear has covered six million acres, the dingoes are a curse, but the rabbit is long past cursing. You can motor for hundreds of miles, thousands of miles, in Australia with rabbit netting on each side of the road.

Here are a few particulars of what the rabbit means to New South Wales. It costs the country £25,000,000 per annum by eating pasturage which otherwise would feed 30,000,000 sheep. As a sheep is reckoned to eat five acres of pasturage per annum the rabbits have foreclosed on some 150,000,000 acres, and probably a great deal more. The State of New South Wales has already paid out £6,644,015 for wire rabbit fencing. In addition the rabbit is trapped, skinned, and thrown aside, which does not appreciably decrease his numbers but incidentally causes a loss of £5,000,000 per annum to the State. Before the rabbit came there were no blowflies. The carcases of the rabbits have brought the blowflies and attendant troubles. The blowflies cost the State in direct expenditure £12,000 each year.

A proposal is on foot to get rid of the rabbits by commercializing the nuisance. The State will have nothing to do with it. It is sick to death of rabbits, so private enterprise is to try its hand. By carrying out a commercial campaign consistently, it is believed that not only can the rabbits be kept down, but considerable profit made. It is estimated that 86,265,466 rabbits are annually destroyed. They produce 12,323,638 lb. of skins, which are worth £1,232,638. In addition to the skins, the carcases now thrown away can be utilized. Rabbit, properly treated, could be made as useful to Sydney as pig is to Chicago. They make the finest chickmeal—rabbit chickmeal is quoted at £17 per ton. Of course, it takes a lot of rabbits to make a ton of chickmeal, but we have rabbits by the myriad here, and a couple of hundred million would hardly be missed.

Then rabbits make very superior nitrogen fertilizer, claimed to be 100 per cent. better than any other nitrogen fertilizer. Of course, rabbits frozen and rabbits canned are well-known menu items. But, in addition, rabbit alba, or white meat extract, is claimed to be something very superior—a sort of Australian caviare. And, besides freezing, canning, and other forms of preparation, rabbit meat cubes are stated, on the authority of the promoters, to be equal to any meat cubes of any other animal that ever lived and was cubed.

THE OLD BAILEY

What It Would Be Like In France

BY A FRENCH JURIST.

If I met Sir Henry Dickens, K.C., in the tube I should not recognize him again, but I know if I go on riding in the tube for ever I shall never meet him. Yet have I stood on the toe of a French judge (with mutual apologies) in a train, the "Landru Special," to be precise and I know I am likely to meet him at any time.

These thoughts crossed my mind the other day when I sat in the Common Serjeant's Court at the Old Bailey, and tried to compare the different methods of meting out justice as practised in France and England. If the Old Bailey were a French Court there would be a picture of the King, because in every court and police station in France there is a bust of the Republic. On the walls would be a motto, the equivalent of "Liberty. Equality and Fraternity." There would be much more noise; there would be much more fuss; Oh! much more of everything.

In France the judge is like the Public Prosecutor. He says to the prisoner: "Tell me now, why did you kill your wife?" To which the prisoner answers: "Mister, the Judge, I did not kill my wife." And the judge, with an assumption of anger, comes back with: "Now, now; did you shoot her or did you strangle her?" In France a prisoner is held to be guilty until he proves himself innocent.

"Landru Special."

On the Landru Special, as we used to call the train which took the judge, the Public Prosecutor, the witnesses, and the journalists to and fro from Versailles to Paris, the judge was hail fellow with everybody. One evening I saw him rise politely and give up his seat to a large blonde; then he stood and chatted with the Public Prosecutor, and from his pocket took a paper bag, and from the bag a sausage roll, which he munched meditatively. I do not think the Common Serjeant would do that.

I cannot visualise the counsel for the defence in the case at the Old Bailey going out into the lobby while the hearing is suspended, and talking to reporters and the public concerning the merits of the case. I cannot imagine a man on trial for his life at the Old Bailey being treated as an animal at bay: Press photographers standing on the ledge of the dock and fixing a hundred candle-power lamp to obtain a good "close-up" as the judge pronounces sentence. Yet all these things have I seen across the Channel.

Lip-Sticks in Court.

I do not think the British public at a murder trial would drink champagne and eat foie gras sandwiches; nor would women produce lip-sticks and powderpuffs; but it is done—across the Channel.

I was particularly impressed at the Old Bailey by the silence, broken only by the scratching of quill pens, by the dignity of British justice, and, above all, by its scrupulous fairness. The defendant surrendered to his bail, and was bowed into the dock by a policeman. A wonderful dock, large and furnished with chairs and tables. I notice there were no flowers. Possibly by request.

But at the very end I found something that was the same in both cities—the C3 looking young men, with ferrety chins and shifty eyes, dodging about the corridors, and looking very important when summoned to conferences in the corner with men a blind man would know were detectives.

BY order of the Generalissimo, Tsen Kuei-jui, a Chinese resident in Mexico, who was on home leave in Canton, was shot on June 21. He was charged with having instigated the Mexican Government to expel the Kuomintang members.

OUR SCOTTISH LETTER

A Great Canal Scheme: Joining the Forth and the Clyde: Miner M. P. as Lord High Commissioner: Emigration from the Hebrides: America and the Golf Championships

From Our Own Correspondent.

Edinburgh, May 21.

The idea of a mid-Scotland ship canal is not new. It has hovered at the back of the minds of our engineers as persistently as schemes for the Channel Tunnel. It is not surprising, then, that in the "Scots Magazine," Sir Ian Hamilton, that literary general who has the courage of his original ideas, makes a very downright claim for the plan on the rock-bottom ground of practical usefulness. Sir Ian gives these details—one notes with interest the "is to be." "The canal is to be at sea level, flooded with sea water twice every 24 hours from the North Sea. At high water the Eastern sea gate will lie opened, without any lock for an hour for the free passage of ships. There are to be no locks between the sea gate at the Forth and the sea gate at the Clyde. The lift at these gates is to depend on the state of the tide, the highest lift at the Forth end being 18-ft. and at the Clyde 15-ft. The Clyde gate will be close to Glasgow. There are to be extensive docks with an open tidal water-way leading from them to the Clyde and to the sea, so that ships can enter and quit whenever it suits them. The canal will nowhere be less than 40-ft. deep and 120-ft. wide." It is estimated that this scheme would cost 25 million. What are the main advantages which make reasonable this big outlay? First—On a voyage from London to Glasgow the canal would save us 271 miles; from Hull to Liverpool 264 miles; from Hull to Liverpool 264; from Aberdeen to Liverpool 218 miles; from Dundee to Glasgow 434 miles; and from Hamburg to Glasgow (the vital issue of the near future) 487 miles. Apart from the commercial, think of the strategic value of that saving. Then, it would add 29 miles to the coastline of the Highlands and a like distance to the coastline of the Lowlands. Coal, oil, and minerals in plenty lie along this line. What is the danger of delaying for even the shortest space the construction of this ambitious waterway? Sir Ian Hamilton would suggest that there is a danger of American shipping steering a more northerly course and sweeping down into Hamburg by way of the Orkneys, leaving Glasgow and Liverpool as exasperatingly helpless as the old Chinese seaport of Amoy is in the face of the flanking Formosa ports held by the astute Japanese.

Remarkable scenes were witnessed at the opening in Edinburgh of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland by Mr. James Brown, the miner M.P., as the King's representative and Lord High Commissioner. "'From Log Cabin to White House' was nothing to this," said a Highland minister on his way to the State Levee at Holyrood, and entering through the gates he saw the pomp and pageantry. The words are true; for White House is of yesterday. There pageantry is wiped off the slate; but the long centuries are crowded together at Holyrood, and the roots of ancient history are deep embeeded. Not a single change was made in the time-honoured ceremonial. On the steps of the Throne His Grace received the members of the Assembly as every Lord High Commissioner has done for these hundreds of years. And yet there was a difference. For the number who presented themselves to His Majesty's Commissioner was much larger than of recent years; the crowds in the streets were eager in their anticipation; the windows in the "highlands" had each a little crowd with fluttering flags; and the High Street was almost impassable. There is no doubt the appointment of Mr. James Brown as Commissioner brought a new breath of life to the old regal rites. This is a changing world; and the change which brought a Commoner to Holyrood has made a great appeal to the imagination of the people of Scotland.

With the opening of the General Assembly the London papers return with pleasing energy to the subject of Mr. James Brown. Fleet Street correspondents are at Auchtermuchty, and [illegible] dilate on the [illegible] witnessed by the [illegible] when they called on Mrs. Brown, the High Commissioner's wife. "When our representative called on Mrs. Brown yesterday," says one organ, "he found her frying sausages. Is there any one so dead that he is not stirred by the fragrance of the tale? What name more glorious than Brown? What occupation more dignifying for a woman than cooking sausages for her good man?" and so on. The paper adds that it hopes the glorious fragrance of those sausages will carry its message to every snobbish nose in the land. At the present moment, indeed, Mr. Brown may be called the most written about man in London.

In Scotland we are not making such a "steerie," but Edinburgh has been stirred by the coming of the first Labour man to the Assembly as the personal representative of the King. A broadsheet has been issued from the Porpoise Press, and as a curiosity some of the lines—they are from the pen of Mr. R. Watson Kerr—are worth reproducing. The price of the broadsheet is not, as in the olden days, one penny, but one shilling, the title is "The Ascension of Jimmie Broon," and it is not, as may be guessed, cried through the streets by hawkers.

Doon from the North, South, East nad West
Jostle God's holies wi' muckle zest!
Bookies and saints and brother frauds
A' mixed up wi' honest bawds—
The common Scottish term for which is. . .
O then the flingin' O' hats and shouts—
"Good auld Jimmie!" from honest louts.
"Long live His Grace and Lady fair!"
From more respectable people there—
As thro' the slums at Palace gate
Clatters the pageantry o' State:
Officials wi' official faces,
Huddin' grim to silver maces;
Lawyers, Lords and lady bodies
Every whit as prood as cuddies
Prancin' wi' their harness clinkin'—
I wonder what it i s they're thinkin'?—
Body guard o' sodgers trim
Bobbin' on ahint o' Him;
And a' the other pompous swells,
Known to reporters and themsel's. . .
Thus pondering, rode he thro' the toon—
O happy, happy Jimmie Broon!

Wedding.

Married at Fountainhall Road U. F. Church, Edinburgh on May 17, by the Rev. Wm. Ross, B.D., assisted by the Rev. H. Moffat Scott, Robert Victor Liddell, B.B., Ch.B., eldest son of the Rev. J. D. and Mrs. Liddell, Tientsin, China, to Ria Burnet, A.L.C.M., youngest daughter of John Aitken, 70 South Clerk Street, Edinburgh.

Access to Mountains.

The position of Highland deer forests is one on which it is extremely difficult to get an opinion which is not under suspicion of being coloured to some extent by personal interest or predilection or by political opinion. A Highland landowner, harried by taxation, and faced with the problem of making his accounts balance and, incidentally, getting something to live on, is bound to take a somewhat different view of the matter from the social idealist or the town-dweller whose chief interest in the Highlands is that of an occasional tourist. Public interest in the matters dealt with in the Access to Mountains Bill, which received its first reading in the House of Commons, has been heightened by the statements made by Dr. Ernest A. Baker in a recent book on mountain-climbing in the Highlands. Dr. Baker has further elaborated his views in an article contributed to the current number of "The Scots Magazine." His point is that the development of the Highlands has been hindered by the restrictions prevailing in more than half the area comprising Sutherland, Caithness, Ross and Cromarty, and Inverness. The "positive impediments" resulting in prohibition of access mean that "out of 543 peaks attaining the height of 3,000-ft. above the sea, not many more than the odd 43 are freely accessible to the public." The "negative obstacles" consist mainly in the systematic "suppression of all public or private accommodation throughout large areas of country." "No scheme for the utter depopulation of a country should be more effective," says Dr. Baker, "except complete devastation by war." One may admit that it is an anomaly that the mountain areas of one's own country should be less accessible than those of France, Switzerland, or Germany. It is also probably true that the opening up of the Highlands to the ordinary tourist would aid in the solution of the problem of depopulation. But mere freedom of access will not of itself build the bridge between the present state of matters and one in which the economic basis of the Highlands will be satisfactorily broad. A large scheme of organization is necessary, in which all Scottish interests shall be represented. It is in the formulation and furthering of such a scheme, rather than in personal complaint or political agitation, that the hope resides of developing the possibilities of the Highlands as a British Switzerland.

Emigration from the Hebrides.

The exodus from the Western Isles continues. Like the proverbial snowball it tends to grow with every revolution, and unless something is done with Government assistance to arrest its progress it will soon attain alarming proportions. A great many of those who sailed on the Canada with the latest liner did so with money sent home by friends in the Dominion for the purpose of taking them out. It is characteristic of the Isleman to remember his old home, and considerable sums of money are regularly remitted from the Colonies and America to support aged parents and friends. In one village from which quite a number of young men and women emigrated last year, the smallest sum remitted home is said to be £20, while the average total of remittances to the village in question during the year would be upwards of £60. The majority of the latest batch of emigrants bore surnames beginning with "Mac."

By the Way.

When the Russians thought they were going to find an easy thing in the new British Labour Government, they forgot that the Premier is a Scotsman.—Detroit Free Press.

A large motor car stopped before an hotel in the Rob country last week, and its Yankee occupant, strolling up to a laird's son who stood at the door in Highland dress, inquired in all good faith, "Sye, are you the advt. for this ha'owse?"

Dollar Academy must surely be able to supply its pupils with the secret of perpetual youth. At the school sports one of the competitors in a half-mile race was watched from the ropes by his small son seated in a perambulator. An excellent example for the child!

The Scots flier has been held up at Calcutta because water made its way into his petrol supply—the dilution of spirit below proof being unpopular with any Scot even so far away from home.

One of my colleagues who was touring Ulster the other day with a party of British journalists retains as an interesting souvenir of the trip a cutting from a Belfast newspaper, which records their visit to a distillery, "where the party partook of the finished product." The cutting continues—"Reluctantly the visitors left and proceeded to Portrush," where "the plus-four men unfortunately foozled their drives."

A Chance for Cricket.

For the first time this year cricket was in full swing in Scotland. Wickets are still on the soft side, however, with the result that honours lay with the bowlers. Preston, the Grange professional, captured eight Selkirk wickets at a cost of 14 runs. Few tall scores were recorded, although there was one notable exception—the schools game at Old Anniesland. In this match E. W. Wilson, the captain of the Royal High School, scored 115 not out, and he is thus the first player in Scotland this season to top the century. In the Scottish Counties Championship, Clackmannan, 69, beat Aberdeen, 62; and Stirling did capitally by scoring 159 to Forfar's 98. In the Western Union, Drumpellier, Clydesdale, Kelburne, and Uddingston were the winners. Among the principal club matches, Grange easily accounted for Selkirk, —138 for 51. Carlton put on 134 to Perthshire's 111 for 8. Watsonians quite overran Cupar,—202 for 8 to 74. Royal High School defeated Edinburgh Academicals,—124 to 83. Stewart's won from Gala, and Heriot's from Edinburgh University.

America and Golf Championships

The Amateur Golf Championship at St. Andrews a fortnight hence will be all the poorer in respect of the absence of the American competitors. But the thing goes really further than that; and Scotland is to be the unlucky country in this business. Both the Amateur Championship in Scotland and the fight in Britain for the Walker Cup with American amateurs is an affair of every second year. As it is now apparent the American golfers are only going to compete in our Amateur Championship in the same year as they have to cross the Atlantic for the Walker Cup match, it works out that when the Championship is decided in England the Americans will be there and when in Scotland they will be absent.

Golf Record.

Mr. Francis F. J. Brown, of Honolulu, America's one entrant for the Amateur Championship, playing over the Old Course at St. Andrews with Mr. W. L. Hope of Turnberry, the Scottish and British Internationalist, broke George Duncan's record of 68 by going round in 67. Mr. Brown is described as one of the longest smiters of the golf ball ever seen.

ROYALTY AS A VOCATION

Interview with King Alfonso

The "Morning Post's" Paris correspondent writes:—King Alfonso of Spain has just given an interview to a lady representative of the "Figaro," in course of which his Majesty made several very frank and interesting statements as to the vocation of the modern king. In reply to the direct question, "How does your Majesty conceive the role of the modern King?" King Alfonso said:

"Royalty is not a vocation that one would choose, but a duty that is imposed on one. I have been a King since my earliest infancy, and all my education had the functions of royalty for its object. I was always taught to obey my people and love my country—as a Spaniard first and as a King afterwards."

"If your Majesty had been free to choose a career, what would you have liked to be?" the King's interviewer artlessly asked.

"Probably," replied the King, "I should have been a soldier—I would never have wished to be a king. I have never had time, however, to think of anything except the mission that was reserved for me. Whatever happens and whatever contingencies arise, I shall always remain at the service of my country."

In the course of further conversation King Alfonso remarked that he considered the manner in which Spain was judged abroad to be deplorable. "It reminds me," he said, "of the childish discussions of the people who frequent cafés and comment on events of whose meaning they are ignorant and of which they know only a few isolated facts from the newspapers. Foreigners do not understand that the advent of the Directory in Spain was the first necessary phase to changes which must shortly occur in this country. It is the only possible form of government, invested with absolute power to abolish and reform."

"Does your Majesty expect shortly to re-establish Constitutional government?"

Sustaining the Faith of the Nation.

"But we have never gone outside its limits," retorted the King promptly. "I am essentially a Constitutional Monarch, but there are moments in history when it is indispensable to interpret the desires of a people, in order the better to represent it later on. Twenty-one years of reigning have proved that I have always bowed to the will of the country. For Spain, a fresh war began in 1918. There are other wars than trench wars—others more cunning and less noisy, but not less painful. At present Spain is at the period of the union sacrée, and it is necessary to sustain the faith of the nation."

His Majesty intimated that he proposes in accordance with his usual custom, to spend a holiday in both France and England this year, "provided public affairs in Spain continue as well as at present, as to which I have no shadow of a doubt."

NAKED SUN BATHS

Sir H. Barker's Tilt at Mrs. Grundy: Summer Campaign on South Coast

Sir Herbert is convinced that sun bathing offers mankind a cure and a preventive of all its diseases, and would sweep away all minor epidemics, such as influenza.

"I hope to start a world movement by recruiting enough pioneer enthusiasts to assist in educating the people out of foolish conventions," said Sir Herbert to a "Daily Express" representative. "Stark-naked bathing is essential for the best results.

"Questions of prudery should not be considered, and the grandmotherly regulations of seaside towns, compelling people to wear enveloping costumes, should be abolished.

"There are many ideal spots on the south coast which could be set aside for curative bathing, keeping the sexes segregated. Every seaside town, and others possessing open-air baths, should appreciate the value of sun bathing.

"Margate and Ramsgate should be ashamed of themselves for insisting on a two-piece costume. Nakedness does not cause immorality; draperies suggest it.

"Healthy and Moral."

"Mixed bathing is healthy and moral, but thin muslin shorts could be worn to satisfy Mrs. Grundy. Sunrays do not penetrate silks or woollens.

"I am satisfied that people must go back to the sun for health. Look at me." Sir Herbert bared his arms and chest, which are bronzed the colour of an Indian.

"I never really lived before, and at 56 I feel a youngster," he said. "The treatment has made me impervious to colds, and without my clothes I am as warm as when wearing them.

"When you are pigmented as I am you are clothed; it is nature's covering. The best way for a beginner is to do as much as he can in his bedroom unclothed. I am always naked when I shave."

PEER WITH WANDERLUST

Mysterious Expeditions of Earl Of Perth

Once again friends of the Earl of Perth are speculating on the whereabouts of the wandering peer. A great traveller, the Earl has frequently disappeared mysteriously on a pilgrimage to a foreign land. All that his most intimate associates know is that he is alive and well.

"Where is the Earl to-day?" a close relative was asked. "That has become a familiar question in the family of recent years. To tell you the truth, I don't know," he replied. "He might be in the South Seas or on a trip to the North Pole—one of the few spots I believe he hasn't visited so far."

Chief of the Clan Drummond and for some time a captain in the Black Watch, the Earl has spent many years abroad. About 1910 he decided to settle in Germany and sold his Strathallan and Tullibardine estates in Central Perthshire for £127,000. The following year he married Anna, the daughter of the Herr Strauss of Prague, and settled at Munich.

When war broke out he was interned at Ruhleben. His fellow prisoners styled him the "Pearl of Earth," because although then in his 46th year he made the most gallant attempts to race against men half his age. He also gained the reputation of being the best chess player in the camp.

The treatment he received during his internment decided him against Germany as a permanent place of residence, and on his release after the Armistice he returned to London. But it was not for long. Soon the old wanderlust claimed him, and within a very few months he was off again on his mysterious expeditions.

The title of the Earl of Perth is one of the oldest in the country. First of the line, John Drummond, Constable of Stirling Castle, was created Lord Drummond of Cargil in 1488 for noteworthy service to the State

LABOUR'S FIRST BUDGET

A Trade Union View

BY OUR LABOUR CORRESPONDENT.

Manchester, May 22.

Nothing that the Labour Government has done since it was placed in office has created more interest than its Budget proposals. For many weeks prior to Mr. Snowden's declaration of his intentions the press had been full of speculatiye forecasts on what taxes would be reduced, increased, or abolished. The conspicuous feature of these guesses now proves to have been their moderation. That twopence a pound should come off tea, and a halfpenny off sugar, was thought to be all the relief the public were likely to get. The generous largesse they have received exceeded all anticipations. The tea duties were reduced from eightpence per pound to fourpence. Sugar duties were reduced from 2½d. per pound to 1½d. The duties on cocoa, coffee, and chicory, have been halved. The inhabited House Duty has been abolished. The Entertainments Tax has been abolished up to 6d. seats, and reduced from 6d. to 1s-3d. seats. The Corporations Profits Tax has been abolished. The Dried Fruits Duty is to be reduced by 3s-6d. The duty on mineral waters has been abolished. There is to be a reduction in local call and trunk charges on the telephones. There is to be a proportional refund if motor licenses are surrendered before expiring. And finally the much discussed McKenna Duties are to be abolished.

Few budgets have had such a favourable reception on the day following their publication. With the exception of the employers and workers in the industries protected by the McKenna Duties everyone got something. The "Daily Mail," unable at the time to find any evidence of the Hidden Hand of Moscow or Germany in Mr. Snowden's effort contented itself by describing it as a "Sleeping Draught Budget," devised to lull the people into a false sense of security and confidence while fresh schemes were being hatched to ruin the country.

The only dissentient note to the general chorus of approval at the time was that raised by the spokesmen of the Income Taxpayer's League. Their anger and dismay can be easily understood when the present Labour Budget is compared to the budgets of Mr. Bonar Law and Mr. Baldwin. In 1922 the Government of the former gave £50,000,000 relief to "direct income tax payers and only relieved "indirect" tax payers £5½ millions. In 1923 Mr. Baldwin took another 6d off income tax. The result of this, with other reductions, in "direct" taxation was a further cut of £38½ millions in "direct" taxation and about £16½ millions in "indirect" taxation. From these two Conservative budgets the "direct" tax payers benefited by more than £88 millions, and the "indirect" by only £22 millions. Mr. Snowden's budget, on the other hand, was first estimated to benefit "indirect" taxpayers £29 millions, and "direct" taxpayers £14. It is hardly necessary to point out that cuts in "indirect" taxation chiefly relieve the working, and the lower middle classes. Cuts in "direct" taxation largely benefit the wealthy.

If the whole of the tax reductions were passed on to the consumers an average working class family of four persons would benefit to the extent of about 1s-8d per week. At the present time this reduction in the cost of living operates, but we have been warned that it will not last very long. Most of the great multiple shop firms made the reductions the day after the Chancellor of the Exchequer read his Budget speech. They did it for advertising reasons, as the old rate of taxation had been paid on the commodities then in stock at their shops. Merchants now say that these reduced prices are only temporary. It is reported that there is both a sugar and a tea shortage, and the increased consumption arising from the reduced price will enable the planters to reap the whole of the benefit.

The other tax reduction which has created most interest is that on entertainments. This concession seems insignificant to the well-to-do patron of the theatre and kinema, but it will be a great boon to the millions of workers who nightly crowd the cheaper seats of the suburban houses. While the charges for seats in most of the picture theatres in the centres of our great towns are from 1s-0d to 3s-0d it is often forgotten that those for the great suburban kinemas are from 4d to 1s-3d. Most working people now visit such picture houses once, if not twice, every week. As it is the usual custom for all the family to go the reduction in the entertainment tax will reduce the family expenditure by several coppers per week.

Although Labour would like to forget it there is no escaping the fact that all this bounty was made possible by the under estimate of the national revenue made by the previous Chancellor of the Exchequer. Mr. Snowden had nearly £50,000,000 to play with as a result of this over-cautiousness. All parties are agreed that he expended it with extraordinary skill. The Budget has enormously increased Labour's political prestige. The Liberals claim that it is a purely Liberal Budget and have expressed unqualified satisfaction with it. There is little doubt that the satisfaction they express is far greater than that which they feel for they have not failed to mark that it has made their chances of success at the next general election appreciably lower.

The Conservative Party has given all the proposals a grudging approval with the exception of the repeal of the McKenna duties. Their antagonism to this has the support of a number of Labour members whose constituents are likely to suffer as a result of the removal of the protection these duties have hitherto given.

Nothing is more difficult to understand than official Labour's attitude towards such protection. If an employer breaks away from an Employer's Federation and employs non-union labour at less than the trade union rate in any town in England the trade unions affected will go to any lengths to injure his chances of doing business. Yet if a foreign employer works his unhappy serfs for long hours at infinitesimal wages the trade unionist is represented as being eager to provide every facility for him to market his goods in free competition with those produced under decent conditions. In reality this picture of the worker's desires is far from the truth. The unintelligent specimens have only the most hazy idea of the issues involved and are stampeded with the misleading catch phrase "Everything will cost you more." The back bone of the Free Trade movement in Great Britain consists of the clerk, and petty tradesman, section of the community. Joined with them in their opposition to any proposal likely to increase prices are the post office workers, railwaymen, corporation employees, and all other workers who have fixed jobs little affected by foreign competition. The actual producers of the nation have little enthusiasm for Free Trade, and those in trades that have felt the pinch of unscrupulous foreign competition are Protectionists to a man. The workers in the motor industry are now appealing to Mr. Snowden to re-consider his decision to repeal the McKenna Duties. Unhappily, the reasonable claims are being gravely prejudiced by discreditable allies. The 'stunt' press has taken up their case and by over-statement and misrepresentation is making it ridiculous. To read the "Daily Mail" one would imagine that the repeal of the McKenna duties would bring the whole of the industries of Great Britain to a standstill. Millions of men, it is prophecied, will be thrown on the streets as a result of this new German conspiracy. For they have now discovered that Germany is at the back of it. British Labour takes its orders from the "Arbeiter Zeitung" which is controlled by Germans who are sworn to ruin our Empire by making us oppose any form of Protection. As a result of this 'support' the motor workers can confidently anticipate defeat in their just and reasonable claim for the continuance of the small measure of Protection they are now receiving.

One of the factors Mr. Snowden is reported to have entirely overlooked when he was planning the tax remissions is now creating great anxiety among Labour leaders. It is the existence of the many wage agreements periodically re-adjusting wages to the cost of living. These operate in several large industries and by their action the workers affected are in danger of losing any benefit the remissions in taxation would otherwise give. Many anxious workers are now of opinion that Mr. Snowden would have been wiser to have expended his surplus in the establishment of a more comprehensive scheme of industrial insurance or in a widow's pension scheme. As things are there will be very little money now for any of Labour's ambitious schemes of social betterment. It is said that even the proposal to pay Old Age Pensions, irrespective of the income of the pensioner, is in danger although it has received support from all political parties. What truth there is in all these gloomy forebodings we cannot say. It is sufficient for the time being that we are all a little better off than we were a fortnight ago. It will be time enough to deal with trouble when it comes. Not a few men have gone out to meet it by cutting down their wives' housekeeping allowances. In most cases they are reported to have got it.

LONDON TO PEKING IN ONE TRAIN

BY BEN SMITH, M.P., IN THE "EVENING NEWS."

An overland route from Charing Cross to the Far East opens up a new vista of world travel. One thinks of the possibility of travelling direct without change of carriage from say Vladivostock to Wembley. What a fillip would be given to the Wembley Exhibition were a tunnel across the English Channel in actual existence instead of being an aspiration.

The construction of the Channel tunnel would provide employment, directly and indirectly, for many thousands of our own people.

The construction, moreover, would involve no liability on public funds, because it is understood that the necessary funds can be obtained even without any guarantees under the Trade Facilities Act. Over 30 millions of money would be spent, mainly in wages.

The construction of the tunnel would be among the easiest to solve of the world's great engineering problems. The French company has already obtained powers in conjunction with the French Northern Railway Company, and it but remains for the British company and the Southern Railway Company to obtain Parliamentary sanction for the work to proceed.

Waterloo World Terminus.

The financial success of the tunnel is certain, because even 60 per cent. of the existing traffic would ensure its paying its way, and who can doubt that it would attract and could handle successfully an enormous increase on the present traffic?

The reverberations of its construction upon unemployment would be enormous. Adjacent to Waterloo would need to be constructed a great world terminus. The Channel tunnel track would be electrified, and the lines feeding would be converted to the same system.

The new regime in Spain is seriously considering the construction of a tunnel beneath the Straits of Gibraltar connecting Europe with North Africa. The possibility is thus opened up of a through service from London to the Gold Coast.

I visualise our London as the centre from which would radiate services, via the Channel Tunnel, to practically the entire world, with the exception of the Australian and American Continents.

Perhaps even America could be connected by train ferry across the Bering Strait during the summer months, for from East Cape (Asia) to Cape Prince (Alaska is but 40 miles. This last, however, is a vision of the remote future.

The more or less immediate future, following upon the construction of the Tunnel, would see the possibility of through service from London to all European centres, of an overland route to India and China—think of Charing Cross to Pekin!—to Egypt and the Cape, and through Europe to the Pacific at Vladivostock.

To make this possible we need but construct a tunnel 22 miles long.

MACHINERY of the Wireless Station at Chinshan, near Macao, has been transported to Canton, says the "Canton Gazette" which explains that the building of this station was destroyed and the machinery partly damaged recently by tyhoon. The machinery, the paper says, will be stored in Canton temporarily for the time being until funds are available for the repair of the building and machinery of the station.

WHAT HAPPENED TO THIS MAN?

The Ambrose Bierce Mystery

There are people who have never heard of Ambrose Bierce, and there are those who consider him the greatest short-story writer that America has produced since Edgar Allan Poe, Mr. Francis Gribble writes, in "John o' London's Weekly." He certainly wrote short stories with the sure hand of a master. Yet he was a failure. The public voted him "unpleasant." In the end, having a very good and just opinion of his own powers and value, he got cross about it. At the age of 51 he ceased to write fiction; but he lived—a disappointed man, albeit making a sufficient living out of journalism—for another 20 years. Then—he disappeared mysteriously; and it is not known for certain, to this hour, whether he is alive or dead.

Because he once worked as a London journalist, it has sometimes been supposed that he was an Englishman; but that is a mistake. He was an American, born in Ohio in 1842. He fought, as a volunteer, in the Civil War, took part in Sherman's famous march through Georgia, attained the rank of major, and was wounded in the head at Kenesaw Mountain. The Civil War was his subject. He wrote about it with realism. American readers were still keenly interested in that struggle. The vainglorious reminiscences of the generals were very popular with them; but they did not want to be reminded that the hogs assembled at night and gnawed at the dead bodies on the battlefields. So they never allowed Ambrose Bierce to win the reputation which he deserved.

When "demobbed," he is said to have tossed up a coin to decide what his civilian career should be. The upshot was that he went to California, worked for a short time in the Mint, and then drifted into journalism and wrote satirical paragraphs for the "Argonaut." It was not, probably, a very lucrative occupation: and that may be the reason why, in 1872, he turned up in London, where he was just moderately successful. He wrote for "Fun," then edited by Tom Hood, and for the London "Figaro," then edited by James Mortimer, and produced the "Lantern," a journal subsidized by the Empress Eugénie for the purpose of annoying Henri Rochefort.

He also wrote a book—"Cobwebs From an Empty Skull"—highly praised by Gladstone, who had picked it up in a second-hand bookshop; but Gladstone's commendations failed to do for him what they were to do, at a later date, for Mrs. Humphry Ward. In 1876, therefore, he went back to San Francisco, managed a mining company for a season, but spent most of his time in writing for the Californian papers until, in 1896, the Hearst Press took him up and sent him to Washington.

A Proud Craftsman.

He was a disappointed man, but not impecunious. He refused to "write down" to tastes which he deemed degraded. "My wants," he said, towards the end, "are few and modest, and my royalties give me quite enough to live on. Don't you think that, after a man has lived as long as I have, he deserves a rest?"

His age, in fact, was 71 though, save for his white hair, he looked much younger. His immediate destination was Mexico, where, at that date, fierce civil strife was raging. His last letters were written from the Texas border:—

For more than a month (he wrote) I have been rambling about the country, visiting my old battlefields, passing a few days in New Orleans, a week in San Antonio, and so forth. I turned up here this morning. There is a good deal of fighting going on over on the Mexican side of the Rio Grande, but I hold to my intention to go into Mexico if I can. In the character of "innocent bystander" I ought to be fairly safe, if I don't have too much money on me, don't you think?

And then:—

Good-bye—if you hear of my being stood up against a Mexican stone wall and shot to rags please know that I think that a pretty good way to depart this life. It beats old age, disease, or falling down the cellar stairs. To be a Gringo in Mexico—ah, that is euthanasia.

There is a rumour that Bierce, having joined Villa, was captured and shot by the Carranzistas. There was another rumour to the effect thaat he found his way to the trenches in Flanders and perished there in 1915. But neither rumour is backed by evidence. It is just as like that he was murdered by some roving band of brigands. It is barely possible that he is still alive.

COCOA'S FOURTH CENTENARY

And Pepys' First Cup of Tea

The fourth centenary of the introduction of cocoa into Europe is to be celebrated this month by a conference of Empire producers either in central London or at the British Empire Exhibition. Following the conference, the British Empire Producers' Organization (3, Old Queen Street, S. W.) hopes to arrange meetings with foreign producers, manufacturers, and dealers, and anyone interested in cacao production who will be in London in July is invited to communicate with them.

Of the three popular beverages, cocoa was introduced into Europe first. There is no reference to tea in European literature before 1588, and the appreciation of coffee as a beverage dates only from the seventeenth century. How long before the discovery of America by Europeans cocoa was used in its native country it is hard to say. The soldiers of Cortez who landed in Mexico in 1519 first encountered it there, and it was introduced into Spain about 1524.

Coffee, we know, was used in Abyssinia in the fifteenth century, and it was then stated that it had been used from time immemorial. Tea, according to Chinese legend, goes back to almost 3,000 years before Christ, and, if legend is a doubtful basis of history, it is at least certain that it was already a beverage as long ago as the Tang dynasty, which began in the seventh century.

To England the three beverages were introduced about the same time, the middle of the seventeenth century. London coffee-houses date from 1652. Five years later the Public Advertiser" announced that "In Bishopsgatestreet, in Queen's Head-alley, at a Frenchman's house, is an excellent West India drink, called chocolate, to be sold, where you may have it ready at any time, and also unmade at reasonable rates." Cocoa was brought from the West Indies to Bristol, and it is suggested that the large commercial interest which Quakers have in the product may perhaps be traced to this association, Bristol having for long been one of the chief centres of Quakerism.

Pepys drank his first cup of tea on September 25, 1660, but at least two years before this date it had come to London, for the "Mercurius Politicus" of September, 1658, contains the advertisement: "That excellent, and by all physitians approved China drink called by Chineans Tcha, by other nations Tay, alias tee, is sold at the Suitanese Head, a cophee house in Sweetings Rents by the Royal Exchange, London."

INCOME TAX ON BRITONS ABROAD

The conditional provision made in the Snowden Budget for relieving British subjects resident abroad from payment of income tax is the subject of interesting comment in League of Nations quarters. The problem of the double payment of income tax by persons living in a foreign country has been dealt with at various international conferences, more particularly at the Brussels Financial Conference of 1920 and the Genoa Conference of 1922, and has been investigated by the Finance Committee of the League.

Only last month an expert committee of the League drawn from the Inland Revenue Departments of various States met in Genoa to draw up recommendations. Before that a League committee on which Great Britain was represented by Sir Josiah Stamp made a preliminary investigation of the problem. The League hopes to obtain the assent of the various Governments and Parliaments to whatever recommendations are now drawn up by its committee, and it is felt that the lead of the British Government will improve the chances of success.

THE TRINITY IN TERMS OF ENERGY

A Sermon Preached by the Rev. A. N. Rowland on Sunday Evening, June 15, 1924, in Union Church, Shanghai

"In Him was Life and the Life was the Light of Men."—John, ch. 1, vs. 4.

I wonder how many rose this morning with the knowledge that this was the Trinity Sunday, and how many came to Church with a feeling of praise for this last of the Christian festivals. It will have to be confessed there is very little enthusiasm, or even interest, for the doctrine of the Trinity. It is not considered practical or even quite intelligible. I read in a naval chaplain's notebook that the sailor man knows little and cares less about the Trinity, and the observation follows that it is probably the same with his fellows on land. Mr. Wells turned his vivid mind upon the subject in "The Invisible King," wherein he says much that is helpful and fine. But he is wrong in attributing the doctrine to the Council of Nicea—still more wrong when he dismisses it, and unconsciously admits he is wrong when he reconstructs a trinity of his own.

It is hard to believe that there was a time when this doctrine exalted the conversation and inspired the song of labouring men at Constantinople and Alexandria. Now if it is ever referred to, we expect a frown on a high brow. Yet trinity Sunday is the climax of the Christian year. It completes the meaning of those facts that constitute the Christian gospel. The ideas expressed at the season of advent are consummated in this high thought of God.

The difficulty so many of us find is to fit the Holy Ghost into a conception of God that is already filled by the Father and the Son. I remember a lady in London of high standing and influence in the field of Christian education saying that she could not find room for the Holy Spirit in her doctrine of God.

We must allow for the fact that we have nature always with us as the visible sign of the Creator. We have the New Testament close at hand as a mirror of the personality of Christ. But the Holy Spirit has no such outward manifestations; its witness is within. It may be that if we could place the Spirit in our thinking we could make better use of it in our life.

The Conservation of Energy.

Let me invite those who do not appreciate the doctrine of the Trinity to think of it along lines that have recently been made available. There is a doctrine of science called the "conservation of energy," the use of which is one of the chief secrets of Western civilization. In one part of the City you have a power station, in consequence of which trams are run and engines driven in other parts. Heat, motion, light are interchangeable forms of the same energy. The forces of nature are such that if you spend them here you find them there, changed but not lost. Our social life is largely based on the fact that what is originated in mystery may be effectively generated and generally transmitted or applied. And surely what is true of energy, which may be considered the underside of the Divine, is not less true of Personality, in which the Divine is more fully expressed; that being so in essence it is convertible in experience.

Love, Light and Life.

There is a remarkable correspondence between this thought and the Gospel according to John, who presents the Divine in terms of love, life and light that pass into one another. The first half of the gospel is that the love of God is the life of Jesus. That is what we celebrate at Easter. What glorifies the life of Jesus and gives it significance to all mankind is that, in its brevity and sorrow, as well as in its beauty and power, it breathes and brings the very love of God. The foundation of our hope is that the love of God was the life of Jesus. "Herein was the love of God manifested in us that God hath sent his only begotten Son into the World that we might live through him." And the second half of the gospel is commemmorated on Whit Sunday, that "the Life of Jesus is (has been converted into) the light of men." His moral force has been translated into the spiritual power by which we live in faith, hope and charity. I cannot do better than quote the words of John Masefield describing the transformation that came to Saul Kane through the touch of the Quaker lady in the public house.

"The bolted door had broken in,
I knew that I had done with sin.

O glory of the lighted mind
How dead I'd been, how dumb, how blind.
The station brook, to my new eyes,
Was bubbling out of Paradise.
O glory of the lighted soul
The dawn came up on Bradlow Knoll,
The dawn with glittering on the grasses,
The dawn of light, which never passes."

"In Him was life, and the life was the light of men."

By thinking of God as the Father we think of the mysterious origin of spiritual power; by believing in him as the Son we confess the historic generation of that power in the Life of Christ. But just as the power accounts for the lightened house, we also believe that what Jesus was has been made the illumination of our hearts. In no other way could the Divine have access to our personal life but by the conversion of energy historically generated into a spirit of conviction and persuasion. Thus the Spirit is necessary for the final unfolding of God, it is the form of the power whereby alone he can reach and react upon us.

Fire, Forest and Sun.

Six months hence when the cold days of Advent are upon us again the mystery and comfort of fire will be with us. When the coal burns in your grate think of the forest that grew and died and was buried that your coal might have virtue in it, and think beyond that of the original heat in the infinite sun that has made itself at home with you in your need. So when your heart glows with thought, courageous or contrite, refer the influence to Christ, "for the whole fulness of God was pleased to dwell in Him," and to the Father who was "in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself." Thus the doctrine of the Spirit is the means of glorifying Christ as Christ himself was the means of glorifying God.

The Lever of History.

On this last festival of the Christian year let your faith in Christ take this turn. The dynamic that was in Him was not lost through the exigencies of Time and Space any more than physical energy is lost in the wide realms of Nature. It is only "converted," as the scientists would say, into influences that enable and ennoble Christian life. That is the doctrine of Whitsunday that needs to be expressed in the doctrine of the Trinity. It was the teaching of Thomas Carlyle, and it has passed into a commonplace of thought that personality is the lever of history. It is energy of soul that has accounted for every upward move and every saving influence we know. And the supreme illustration is that the life of Christ has supplied the only heavenly light of men. None but he can provide and maintain our conviction of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of men.

Not on Paper but in Power.

The Life of Jesus then is our illumination and inspiration, and we may make that light incandescent in various ways according to our various capacities. Some use sacraments, others use creeds; others again get the glow through efforts of duty or claims of fellowship, or the meditstions and prayer of the heart. But though all these may be of service there is one way that cannot be neglected, and that is contact with the Gospel story, for that is the meeting place of Father, Son and Holy Spirit, the shrine of the Trinity. Only we must remember that the life of Jesus is not on paper but in power. "The Lord is the Spirit." His Life was a divine energy that has been translated into the real presence of His Spirit in resurrection power.

The Conservation of God.

I would put it then to those who have as yet gained nothing from the doctrine of the Trinity that it is in no sense an incubus, but it is an inspiration when expressed in terms of energy. It is no mere orthodoxy or scheme of thought, lodged in the antique and unintelligible formulae of the Athanasian creed. It is the doctrine of the Conservation of God in all the kinds of experience that are open to men. The love of God has been converted into Life that it might reach man; the life of Jesus has been converted into light that it may reach men. This gospel according to John we are especially ready for to-day. As we have the privilege of reading God the Father into the sufferings and sympathies of Christ, so we may realize the presence of Christ in all that enlightens the soul and rejoices the heart. We may take him out of the book, the creed, the sacrament, and apply him to the infirmities and faults, the aspirations and discouragements with which we are so familiar. And we will rejoice in this doctrine of the Trinity that links God in highest heaven with the lowliest needs of the heart.

HOLMES IN SEARCH OF THE K.K.K.

The Master Mind Focussed on the Ku Klux Klan of Shanghai

"Well, my dear Watson, what do you make of this?" Holmes asked, handing me a postcard and at the same time delicately extracting a pinch of cocaine from his snuff-box.

I took the proffered document and examined it with some care. "Obviously," I ventured, after a couple of hours' close scrutiny, "obviously this was written by a man and, if I am not mistaken (a rare occurrence) by a red-headed man with a large family about 6ft. high and with an impediment in his banking account."

"Admirable, Watson, admirable," exclaimed the great detective. "You do but confirm the conclusion I had formed before the postcard arrived. Come, let us decode the cypher.

Always original, Holmes had a decidedly novel, truly Holmsianic method of decoding messages in cypher—as those who did me the honour of reading my modest little memoir on "The Dancing Men" may remember. It was his practice always to work on such conundrums to the soothing accompaniment of slow music. The mysterious communication now claiming attention was written in block letter on a pink-scented, eau-de-cologne-coloured picture postcard, thus:

DV ZIV MLG HL YZW ZH DV ZIV KZRMCVW RMEVHCRTZCRLM RMERCVW KKK N HKPK 7

Placing the card on the mantelpiece against a bust of Gaboriau Holmes took down his beloved Stradivarius from the hat stand and dreamily began playing the latest and daintiest fox trot, "Boston Beans (for two)," and so absorbed did he become in the problem confronting him that all unconsciously he found himself, or rather I observed him, drawing the long bow across the back of the instrument. I listened with rapt attention. Suddenly, Holmes leapt from the piano with an exultant yell.

The Secret Unmasked.

"Upon my word, Watson," he cried, "I have it. Just look at this."

I looked. Tense with excitement, the great man held the postcard up to the mirror and—well, there you were. The code message was simply done by reversal of the letters of the alphabet and by transposition in the mirror the message was read with ease, as thus:

WE ARE NOT SO BAD AS WE ARE PAINTED INVESTIGATION INVITED KKK N HKPK 7

"Holmes," I cried in amazement, affectionately clapping him on the back with a volume of the Encyclopædia Britannica (India paper edition), "Holmes,, you're a genius."

"Thanks, old man," he replied, modestly. "I have often thought so myself. But don't mention a word outside. I shouldn't like the accusation to become known. Now, the thing is, who is going to investigate the matter of the K (u) K (lux) K (lan)?"

"Who but Mr. Sherlock Holmes?" I suggested, concealing deep emotion at the wonderful prospect of another fine and juicy story for readers of the "Stranded Magazine."

"No, Watson" was the rejoinder. "It is a business I cannot conveniently undertake at the moment for, as you well know, I am as it were immersed in The Strange Case of the Small Money Swindle. You must tackle the job yourself, Watson."

I shuddered with surprise and gratification. To think that the mantle of the great Holmes should have fallen into my shoes!

Where to Go?

"You had better start at once," Holmes continued, briskly. "You know how fond these Chinese secret societies are of working on the here to-day and gone to-morrow principle."

"I shall be delighted, Holmes, if you will but tell me where I am to go and what I am to do upon arriving there.

"Go north, young man."

"But why 'north.'?"

"Don't you see the arrow following the letter N in the code?"

Had I really caught the great man bending? I looked at the postcard again. Yes, sure enough, the arrow was not there. I pointed this out.

"Tut tut," Holmes ejaculated, a little petulantly, I thought. "If the arrow isn't there it ought to be, and an arrow always indicates direction. Therefore you go north—Hongkew side."

"And then?' I queried.

"My dear Watson, it really is time you purchased a 'North-China Daily News' map of Shanghai, $5 plain, $8 coloured. You would then know that there is only one thoroughfare the name of which begins with the letters H K P K—Han Kee Pan Kee alleyway. That's your destination."

Without more ado, I grasped my hat and revolver (Frs. 80 f.o.b. Marseilles) and prepared to leave. Then a brilliant thought struck me. "Do you think it advisable, Holmes, I should go in disguise?"

"It might be advisable," he assented. "But, mark you, anything except a Minghong Road topper."

With this sage advice in mind, I slipped on the silvery uniform of a Captain Superintendent (as being least likely to attract attention) and sallied forth into the purlieus of Han Kee Pan Kee alleyway.....

The Sleuth on the Ground.

No. 7 was easily found, but its appearance was disappointing. Not a sign of life. No hum of conspiracy, no mysterious figures in hood and cowl (vide illustrated press) prowling about the neighbourhood. Truly, if these K. K. K fellows had any secret at all, thought I, they jolly well kept it to themselves. I thought of returning to Headquarters at once and reporting all quiet and a distinct slump in the secret service line, when happily I made a discovery. Near the door of the house I descried an object which had at first glance escaped my notice: a wooden box almost large enough to hold a motor car.

What was the box doing there? Following the methods of my friend, I mentally tabulated various alternatives. It wasn't a dog kennel—obviously not, otherwise, there would have been at least one bone outside. It wasn't a garbage receptacle—all available garbage was strewn about the alleyway. It wasn't.....but, stay, it might be.....It was large enough to contain any member of the Society—even a fat Chilean—and might it not be a hiding place for the Tyler peeping through a spy hole upon inquisitive visitors? A distinct clue! Taking out my magnifying glass, I was about to examing the grain of the wood when suddenly a quiet voice addressed the back of my neck.

I swung round, prepared to sell my life for as much as it would fetch, but calmed down upon seeing a disconsolate-looking Chinese of the Student class, carrying a black portmanteau and himself wedged between a couple of sandwich boards, whereupon was an advertisement:

KU KLUX KLAN
THE ONLY KLAN WITH A KICK IN IT
JOIN TO-DAY AND GIVE US YOUR MONEY
TO-MORROW

The disconsolate youth addressed me. "Sir," said he, "It appears that you are interested in our society. May I invite you to join? I have here—(opening his bag)—the Book of Words, membership card, and a brand new domino, and all for five bucks."

I made a wild grasp at the book of words, hastily glanced through some of its pages, saw that they contained full details of the Ku Klux Klan, thrust five dollars into the fellow's hand. "Take that," I cried "and give my compliments to the Grand Klan."

The poor fellow recoiled as if stung, but I, in no mood for ceremony, dashed off and laid my treasures at the feet of Holmes, the next moment sinking exhausted into a chair. Presently Holmes, who had spent a few thoughtful moments looking through the KKK vade mecum, stepped softly across the room and, affectionately patting me on the head, exclaimed:

"Watson, I congratulate you. This is the dope all right."

And so it was.

IMPRESSIONS OF CHINA

By George E. Sokolsky.

A Chinese Emperor

The story is told of the Emperor Chien Lung that his mother was barren until an advanced age, when she gave birth to a girl. At about the same time the wife of a vice-minister of one of the boards also gave birth to a child, a boy. The Empress inquired after the lady and learning that a son had been born to her, invited her and the child to the palace. The lady came. The children were exchanged. The Empress now had a son. When the wife of the vice-minister returned to her home, she told her husband what had happened. He realized that he was now the father of a future Emperor, which was an impossibility. Enjoining his wife to silence on the subject, he cut off his queue and disappeared. He became a monk.

In the course of years, Chien Lung became Emperor. His mother, the Empress, told him of a famous monk in the South whom he ought to know. The monk went by the name of Eight Cross (八叉). Chien Lung journeyed southward. He visited the beautiful cities of Kiangsu and Chêkiang. Hangchow became the garden spot he sought. But nowhere could he find the monk. He searched in temple and monastery, in lonely hermit cave. Nowhere could he find Eight Cross. He thought that his mother wanted him to go south and gave the search of the monk as an excuse. So he gave himself up to the hectic pleasures of the time, to flower boats and the beautiful women of Soochow and Yangchow, to song and dance and the appraising of porcelains and paintings.

In due course he returned to the Capital and told his mother that Eight Cross was nowhere to be found. Other visits southward were made and each time with the same result. Finally, the Dowager asked him to write the characters for Eight Cross one above the other. He did so, both rather large characters and far apart.

"Write them more closely together and smaller," said the Empress.

Chien Lung wrote the characters closely together and they produced the character for Father (父). He understood. He threw himself upon the ground and kow-towed to his ancestor. He understood that he was no Manchu but a Chinese and it was his immediate desire to change from Manchu to Chinese apparel, to order the cutting of the queues and to establish a Chinese dynasty. Other counsel, however, prevailed and this beautiful little story was kept out of the records of the House of Ching.

Three Zeros

During the Revolution a doctrine was preached called the Three Zeros. No nation, no church, no family. No state, no religion, no marriage. It was a doctrine of negation, of nothing, perhaps a modernization of Lao Tze, perhaps affected by Russian Nihilism, but its inventors called it socialism, meaning anarchism—a confusion of words not surprising in the inexact. The doctrine made almost no impression on China, for the three institutions attacked are as powerful in China as elsewhere, or one might say, as powerful elsewhere as in China. Wherever attacked, they survive. In time, everyone forgot the Three Zeros, including the authors of the scheme. Nationalism became the order of the day. And now pagodas and temples are being rebuilt and beautified and a religious revival is taking place.

One sometimes wonders whether those Chinese who adopt the curiosities of Western civilization, the weeds in the garden, the débris of intellectual activity, cannot find activities for themselves in China more harmonious with the character of their own people. The Three Zeros are forgotten, but other peculiar ideas spring up every day, among them, it is now reported, a Chinese Ku Klux Klan, an order despicable in its own country, purposing only the revival of forgotten hatreds, existing because men still retain vestiges of savagery, because the mob functions like a herd, running down the prey, stampeding, wild, unthinking. There are better things China can take from the United States.

Sang de Bœuf

I held a piece of Sang de Bœuf, a colour never to be forgotten. One hundred and 20 years of prosperity produced that vase. One hundred and 20 years of peace made that colour. From K'ang Hsi to the death of Chien Lung, what a world of beauty was produced in China! From the death of Chien Lung until this day, what has been produced in China?

THE GOLD STANDARD

America's Huge Holdings: Need for Financial Reconstruction in Europe

By Hartley Withers.

It seems that the financial authorities in the United States are beginning to be very seriously exercised concerning the huge holding of gold which were poured into the country by its enormous war profits, and by the need for financial reconstruction in Europe, to secure for America some advantage from the possession of this Gargantuan hoard, The London "Times" of May 15 contained a telegram from its New York correspondent quoting from a highly significant statement just issued by the Advisory Council of the Federal Reserve Board on the subject of the policy which, in its view the Reserve system should follow in, the present international situation. It urges the Reserve Board to consider the question of amending some of its regulations so that it may be able to approach Europe's problems in the same helpful spirit as that shown by the Bank of England and other central banks, and the following important passage is quoted verbatim by the telegram:—

"Unless America finds ways to permit her excessive banking strength to benefit other countries, particularly those striving to put their house in order, the dollar cannot maintain its position as the world standard of exchange, and foreign countries—even American banking and commerce—will once more, and in a larger degree, become tributary to the pound sterling to the greater exclusion of the dollar."

All who are anxious for the revival of European prosperity—so vital to that of the rest of the world—will welcome the conclusion reached by the Council, tho' the logic of its argument is rather difficult to follow. It would seem to the "man in the street" that if America finds means of placing her excessive banking resources at the disposal of foreign countries that are trying to work their way back to sounder financial methods, the most probable result will be a rise in the value of Continental currencies and a decline in the premium on the dollar. The pound sterling as an important medium for the remittance of funds between America and the Continent, is likely to benefit from the Continental appreciation, especially if the Bank of England stubbornly pursues its policy of bringing sterling back to par, by every means at its disposal. And if there is consequently a rise in the value of the pound, and a return to a free gold market in London, New York's present eminence as practically the only gold standard centre will be eclipsed.

Serious Difficulties

Curious, however, as the Advisory Council's argument is, its advice to the reserve system that it should play a helpful part in European reconstruction is excellent, if it can be carried out. But there are some serious difficulties in the way. A country's banking system can do a great deal in leading it into fresh fields of investment, but it cannot drag it against its will. For the American banks to give credits to German and other Continental borrowers will be a great help; but if the American public will not follow and place its savings at the disposal of Europe, bank credits will not go very far. And hitherto it does not appear that the hard work that has been done, to make American investors ready to take European securities and cherish them as investments has been very successful. It is confidently stated, for instance, that by far the greater part of that portion of the Austrian loan, which was lately placed in the United States, has already drifted back across the Atlantic, and is held by British investors, and that a similar fate has befallen other securities such as the Dutch East Indian loan, of which a part was issued with apparent success in New York, but failed to find a permanent holding there and so came back to Europe.

It is very natural that American investors should cherish this prejudice in favour of keeping their money at home where there are abundant openings for it in expanding enterprises that are under their own observation, rather than sending it abroad in the present unsettled state of the world; but as long as they do so cherish it the reduction of America's gold surfeit by means of foreign investment is hardly to be expected.

The Dawes Report.

Another interesting observation made by the Advisory Council is to the effect that the Dawes report has "led the world to the cross roads" with regard to the selection of an international standard. It is the question" it says, "whether the world is more likely to regain the blessings of economic stability under the sway of several fluctuating standards of exchange or by a general return to definite relations of exchanges to gold as the ultimate measure and regulator." But has not the Council rather discovered a "mares nest" in this connexion? No one, surely, is advocating "the sway of several fluctuating standards of exchange" —at least, not anyone whose views are accepted by practical banking opinion. Bankers in England only differ as the degree of vigour with which, in their opinion, the policy of working back to the gold standard should be pursued, and in other European countries "definite relations of exchanges to gold" are generally received as the goal towards which every sanely governed nation will wish to work. The Council seems to think that we have been brought to the cross-roads because the Dawes report provides for a German note issuing bank on a gold basis, "but leaves the door open to place it on a sterling basis, and it cannot be denied"—so the council thinks—"that there is no small probability of the latter basis being chosen." If this should happen. "England, in returning to an unrestricted gold basis, would have to pull not only her own weight, but that of Germany also," and so "the world must prepare itself to remain on a basis of exchange instability for a prolonged period, the end of which cannot be foresoon." Now there may be many good reasons why it may be more desirable that the new German Bank should go straight onto a gold basis, but the one put forward by the Council is not very convincing. If American banks are going to grant extensive credits to Germany, England's return to the gold standard seems more likely to be hastened than retarded by the adoption of sterling as the basis for the new German Note issue. But if the Advisory Council's logic is open to question, there is much comfort to be derived from the evidence that its statement gives, that America is beginning to be driven by the urgency of her gold problem, to give help to her poorer neighbours.

MARY'S LILIES

Ye that would marry, make haste, or tarry,
Mate in April, or wait till June:
April for passion, or June for fashion,
But May is Mary's maiden moon.

April is showery, tender, and flowery,
June brings roses, scented and gay:
But Mary's will is for tall, white lilies,
Set round her shrine all the month of May.

Bride's thoughts wander, as dreams grow fonder—
May month through ye shall marry not;
Earth hath eleven, spare one for Heaven,—
Lest Mary's lilies should be forgot!

THE VAGABOND JUGGLER

Marvellous Exhibition of the Conjuror on a Chinese City Wall

By Our Wuchang Correspondent.

He was dressed in coolie-rags. His countenance was ugly, but merry withal and he had a quip or a jest for the passers-by which soon collected in a small crowd around him. He had his station on the high part of the wall over the Hanyang Gate, where there is a broad space in front of spot used to stand the famous Yellow Crane Tower. His stock-in-trade were a piece of sacking with many holes in it, a basket containing two or three old rice bowls, some eggs, marbles, a few pieces of cotton tape and—no doubt the most important of all—a small stick or magic wand. Having leisure, I joined the circle around him and waited to see what he could do.

I had often seen Chinese Jugglers before, performing tricks of a more or less childish nature with rice-bowls and peas. But their methods were more or less obvious, and could only deceive the merest tyro. But here I found a real sleight-of-hand conjuror, performing really mysterious tricks such as Devant himself need not have scorned to show.

First of all, he spread his sacking, and placed upon it inverted two empty rice-bowls. These he tapped with his magic wand, and then he lifted one and placed an egg underneath it. More tappings, mystic wavings, accompanied by a string of jokes about the peculiar properties of eggs. Presently, the rice-bowl was lifted, to discover no egg at all underneath it. But he lifted the other bowl, and there was a little live chicken. He lifted the former bowl again, and discovered an orange! His sleeves were rolled up, so that nothing could have been concealed there. His mechanism must have been underneath the sacking. But that had been spread on the bare ground. One really seemed to be back in St. George's Hall enjoying Devant's jokes and mysteries.

Three Snakes!

A shower of coppers rewarded the effort. Again, he took a rice-bowl, and crushing up in his hand a length of tape, he placed it underneath. A second screwed up ball of tape was placed under a second bowl, and yet another under a third. More tappings with the magic wand, and passes in the air, while the crowd, by now become bigger, gaped in expectation. After a while, he lifted the first bowl. Oh! a real live snake uncoiled itself and wriggled upon the ground. From the second another snake was produced, and from the remaining bowl a third. One of them wriggled away through a hole and disappeared underneath the sacking. The remaining two, he screwed up into balls, just as he had done the tapes, and threw back into his basket. More coppers were flung in by the onlookers. One old gentleman next to me with a fine white beard who was leaning on one of those long tobacco-pipes which serve equally well as a walking stick, waxed enthusiastic, and flung several large coppers for which he received much thanks.

After this, the conjurer produced eight or nine pink marbles, or large beads. These he put in his mouth, one by one, and swallowed them with evidently much pain and effort. But no sooner had he safely passed them down his throat, than he produced them again from different parts of his body. One he plucked forth from his knee, another from his ear, and so on, until the tale in his hand was complete once more.

A Disastrous Sally.

Next, the beads were all flung into the air, and disappeared. The conjurer jokingly accused the crowd of having robbed him, but they all disclaimed having any knowledge of where his precious beads had disappeared to. Turning to a little boy the conjurer insisted that he had one of the beads, and amid roars of laughter he appeared to draw one of them from the astonished youngster's nose. Another he recovered from the waist-belt of a coolie who was standing by. But alas! the performer made a faux pas when he ventured to discover one of his marbles in the white beard of the old gentleman whose admiration had been excited by his previous trick. This sally, which excited mirth in the crowd, was taken as a gross insult by its victim. The old gentleman flew into an ungovernable rage, and poured forth vituperation. Had he not given generously to the vagabond juggler?, and how should such a son of a pig dare to insult one who might be his grandfather? In vain, the conjuror protested that it was only his fun, and no insult had been intended to the venerable beard. Raising his stick, the old man rushed forward in a furious onslaught, and would have beaten the conjuror if some of the bystanders had not seized his arms and restrained him. At last he was led off, more or less pacified. But the show was ended and with a good humoured smile, our conjuror packed up his basket of tricks and left the scene.

AN ECHO OF HENLI

(With Apologies to Goldsmith.)

I

When lovely woman condescends to folly,
Her charms, in public view, strives to display,
The correspondents' mist of melancholy
Is dissipated by refulgent ray.

II.

Yet each, his animus but ill dissembled,
O'erlooks what lovely woman's garb betrays:
That frequently, she's faultily assembled.
As builder of the modern motor says.

SOUTHERN RHODESIA

SOUTHERN Rhodesia which was inaugurated as the youngest self governing Colony of the British Empire on October 1, 1923, and which had previously for 33 years been ably administered by the British South Africa Company possesses one of the finest climates in the world with long hours of sunshine, breezy temperate days and cool nights. For those who wish to take up farming or ranching in order to make the most they can of their capital, energy and technical knowledge, or for those who wish to retire from strenuous business or professional life and make a home, Rhodesia offers many advantages unequalled elsewhere. The business, social, sporting, educational and medical facilities bear favourable comparison with those of other countries. Native labour is plentiful and when properly managed is cheap and efficient. Taxation is light. Good land in healthy surroundings and amidst fine scenery is plentiful and not expensive.

Full information is obtainable on application to The Secretary, Southern Rhodesia Settlers' Board (attached to the Government of Southern Rhodesia), P. O. Box 372, Salisbury S., Rhodesia.

The giving of advice to prospective settlers will be facilitated if applicants will advise the Board in detail of their circumstances and the amount of capital they would be prepared to invest in a suitable venture.

BOOK NOTES AND NEWS

The Earl of Meath has written a second book of memories, covering the past 20 years.

The tercentenary of George Fox falls this summer and the Cambridge Press is to issue an edition of his "Little Journals."

Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch has been making his "Adventures on Criticism," which appeared long ago, into nearly a new book.

Sir Leo Chiozza Money has a volume of verse appearing with Mr. Cobden-Sanderson, "The Immortal Purpose and Other Poems."

A collection of short stories by the late Louis Couperus, the Dutch novelist, is announced by Messrs. White, "Eighteen Tales."

Lady Richmond Brown lately took part in an adventurous expedition to the Caribbean Sea and the Pacific Ocean. She describes her experiences in a book called "My Voyage to the Unknown," which will appear with Duckworth. Its chief interest lies, perhaps, in its account of the discovery of an unknown tribe of Chucunaque Indians. Their marked Mongolian characteristics have disturbed existing theories as to the origin of the native American population and aroused a sincere interest throughout the whole scientific world. Lady Richmond Brown is a clever photographer, and her book is fully illustrated by herself.

At one time Sir William Robertson Nicoll hoped to write the biography of George MacDonald, the Scottish novelist. The years went by, however, and the task and the materials for it fell to the novelist's son, Dr. Greville MacDonald. It will appear, through Allen and Unwin, and it will have an introduction by Mr. Chesterton. The book will mark the centenary of George MacDonald's birth, and another token of that will be new editions of his fairy tales and his story of "Lilith." Some of the celebrities in the biography are John Ruskin, Lewis Carroll, Frederick Denison Maurice, and Lady Byron.

Mr. Murray is adding two more well-known volumes to his series of popular reprints issued at two-shillings net: "Perch of the Devil" by Gertrude Atherton, and "The Bridge Across" by L. Allen Harker.

For 60 years over 200 letters from that incomparable letter-writer, Jane Welsh Carlyle, have been packed away in privacy. The cousin to whom most of them were addressed, Jeannie Welsh, afterwards Mrs. Chrystal, had no notion of their literary value apart from the personal friendship they enshrined; but eventually the present owner of the letters, "Jeannie's" daughter, Miss Chrystal, came to realize the treasure of her possession, and they are now to be published by Mr. Murray under the title "Jane Welsh Carlyle: Letters to her Family, 1839-1863." The letters are full of lively sketches of Mrs. Carlyle's visits and visitors, and all the well-known figures of her circle re-appear: Carlyle himself, Mazzini and the band of exiles, Dickens, Thackeray, Tennyson, Erasmus Darwin, the Bullers, the Sterlings, and Lady Ashburton, to name but a few. The book is edited by Mr. Leonard Huxley, LL.D.

The phenomena associated with Joan of Arc—her voices, her extraordinary career—are naturally regarded by advocates of spiritualism as instances of mediumship on her part. That side of her is studied in a book entitled "The Mystery of Joan of Arc," which John Murray is publishing. It is by a Frenchman, Monsieur Leon Denis, and it has been translated into English by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle. The English version is rather abridged, but it deals fully with the Maid as a "perfect medium," gifted with clairvoyance, clairaudience and prophecy.

WIRELESS WONDERS

THE YEARLY BOOK OF WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY & TELEPHONY—1924—The Wireless Press, Ld.

Out in China the steady advance of wireless communication is probably even more signicant than it is to those in the home lands. There is a fair prospect that not so many years will elapse before it will be possible in Shanghai to receive and send telephonic messages to people in Europe and America with not much greater delay, expense or difficulty than is now involved in a local call. The consequences of this are almost incalculable. The grass-widower will be required to give daily reports of his behaviour to his wife in Harrogate and the Shanghai Champions tickets will be purchased in Reno up to the starting moment of the race.

That such prospects are not very remote is apparent from the annual under review, which is now an established institution. We find it stated that "probably the most notable feature in wireless communication of the year which has just passed (1923) is the great extension in broadcasting." It appears that in Great Britain nearly half a million licenses for receiving sets have been issued, while in the United States as many as 826 licenses for broadcasting stations were issued. Similar activity is proceeding in other countries. Some of the specially interesting items for the year are the new high power wireless station at Saigon, the fitting of a lifeboat with wireless, wireless control of aeroplanes without pilots, radio fogsignals, and traffic control by radio-telephony.

The development of the thermionic value proceeds apace and figures largely in the book. The usual legal information and lists of land and ship stations are given together with key maps. Rather signicantly no new legal information appears under the head of "China." The scientific signal section has been improved and systematized, and the information in connection with aviation is growing. Only one Chinese name appears in the biographical notices (Mr. Tsiang Tseng-yi.) This work is practically indispensible to both professionals and amateurs.

CHINESE SCULPTURE

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE STUDY OF CHINESE SCULPTURE. By Leigh Ashton. (Ernest Benn, Ld. 45s. net.)

In this age it is perhaps futile to expect the art collector to collect only that which appeals to him aesthetically irrespective of its scarcity and antiquity; for this form of collecting amounts to an act of creation. Mostly the collector is impelled by a snobbish whim or some psychological obsession—an obsession on which exponents of the New Psychology, no doubt, would be able to speculate very fully. But the collector who gets the greatest satisfaction from his pursuit is he who has the historic sense richly tempered by a welldeveloped appreciation of beauty. It is this latter type of collector to whom Mr. Leigh Ashton's book on Chinese sculpture will be of greatest value; although it may be said the pure aesthetic will find very little with which to find fault, while the other types of collectors will be rewarded with material enough to provide them with the manifest disguises for their obsessions and their snobbism. The author, never forgetting the aesthetic side of his subject (although he is, at times, inclined to undervalue the primitives' feeling for the sculpturesque appropriateness to the material in which they were working), traces the history of Chinese sculpture from the primitive ages to the decline of the art in the later Ming dynasty. He contrasts the pre-Buddhist era with the epoch of the rise and expansion of Buddhist doctrines in China, and at the same time weaves into his theme the political influences at work throughout the period. There is an uncommon unity of conception throughout the whole of this book which adequately fulfils the purpose, mentioned in the foreword, of providing "a background for the systematic study of Chinese sculpture." The various periods are well represented by half-tone illustrations. Mr. Leigh Ashton has excluded from the illustrations all fragmentary heads, rightly assuming that a work of art, possessing as it does a quality of unity, must necessarily be reproduced in its entirety or not at all.—The "Spectator."

LOVE AND MARRIAGE IN MODERN FICTION

BY R. ELLIS ROBERTS

"JANET MARCH." By Floyd Dell. Lane. 7s. 6d.
"LAST YEAR'S NEST." By Dorothy à Beckett Terrell. Duckworth. 7s. 6d.
"THE TEMPTRESS." By V. Blasco Ibanez. Thornton Butterworth. 7s. 6d.
"DELIVER US FROM EVIL." By W. F. Hewer, Cecil Palmer 7s. 6d.

The inventor of "It's love that makes the world go round" was presumably referring to the recognized revolutionary movement which most of us take on trust rather than on actual experience, or any profound knowledge of the basis of the Copernican theory. To-day, however, novelists almost agree in treating love not as a healthy, normal affection of mankind, with natural results, but as a mixture of disease, dope, and despair responsible for minor and major earthquakes. The world goes round in all these novels, but it goes round in the way so regretably common, if we are to believe the American novelists and not the American Ambassador, in countries where alcoholic liquor is prohibited. Love for our four novelists is a plague, an invasion, quite outside the will and the conscious desire, and the lovers are thrown about with the eccentric energy of mundane revolution.

This agreement is the odder because it is the only thing in common to Mr. Floyd Dell, Miss Terrell, Senor Ibanez, and Mr. Hewer; otherwise in style treatment, and literary merit four books could scarcely be more unlike. But in all of them "the world goes round and round and round and rounder" as the reveller said as he clung to the lamppost and gazed at the twinkling arc-light.

All About Marriage.

Mr. Floyd Dell is a serious American novelist. He wants to tell you; he desires that you should take it from him. And here it is—all about marriage, and birth control, and experimental unions, and prostitution (with cross references to Krafft-Ebing, whom the American young apparently are still reading), and free spirit, and parents. For the purposes of his great "telling" Mr. Floyd Dell chooses two people, Janet March and Roger Leland. First he gives us the history of Janet March—into whose life at the age of six Roger unexpectedly breaks—and then separately the history of Roger. He divides his information very fairly between the two protagonists, who finally enjoy themselves thoroughly by telling each other the story of their lives.

Unfortunately the novel-reader is not likely to share either Janet's or Roger's enthusiasm. Mr. Dell is very serious, most tiresomely conscientious; neither Roger nor Janet ever shows a spark of humour—though Janet has a hoydenish sense of fun. Roger is literary, and keeps a bookshop; Janet is bent on trying to earn her living and on seeing life. Roger tries desperately to be gay and Greek, but unfortunately fixes on Sally, who is bourgeoise and puritan and actually likes "being engaged." What Roger wants is "laughing kisses . . . as inconsequent and untroubled as butterflies," but when he tries to take them "it was a statue he was kissing, cold and passive, with marble lips."

Janet is different, does not mind being called "Devil," and the book ends with her marriage to Roger, after a time of experimental concubinage. It seems strange that so much experience, mostly sordid, and 450 odd pages should be needed to bring these highly-cultured people to a recognition that there is such a thing as matrimony. Mr. Dell takes it all with a kind of sentimental earnestness which should makes his book popular.

Mother and Daughter.

Miss Terrell is lighter in manner; her people are less burdened with experience, but have even smaller claims to verisimilitude. Jenny Morris, a widow, marries Philip, 20 years her junior. Unfortunately, even before their wedding Philip (though he does not realize it, being exceptionally thick-headed) has fallen in love with Jenny's daughter Gillian. Miss Terrell avoids the rather ugly possibilities of her theme, but only by a series of coincidences which finally hurls Gillian into the arms of an ex-officer, so terribly disfigured that he lives in complete solitude. Parts of the story are not without humour and observation. The best thing in the book is the subsidiary story of Raymond Morris and his entanglement with Mrs. Hepburn. In the telling of that Miss Terrell displays more energy, more temper and a good sense of dramatic effect. She shares, however, one fault with Mr. Floyd Dell. Each of these books reads more like an essay with illustrations than a novel about people.

The "Vamp."

This is a charge no one could bring against Senor Ibanez. I imagine "The Temptress" is a comparatively early work of his.

The book is good, old-fashioned melodrama—a modern, vulgarized rendering of the Helen legend, now known in the States as the Vamp movie. Ibanez even calls his enchantress Elena; but he makes the fatal mistake of bringing her often on the stage.

Helen should remain as mysterious as her fascination; and I never find myself crediting this common, greedy, inconsiderate little creature's fatal lure. She is the wife of an Italian Marquis—Torre Bianca—and ruins him. He is rescued by his friend Robledo, who takes both of them to a small town in Patagonia, where Elena upsets the whole community by her frantic passion for attention. She stages a tragedy which turns out in the end a disaster for herself, and the story ends with Robledo's discovery of her, worn out, broken and oblivious of her past, in a cheap Paris café. What merit the novel has lies not in the main story, but in Senor Ibanez's account of Patagonian life, and his ironic, sympathetic presentation of Elena's different wooers.

Mr. Hewer writes of the Church of England; of a tactless, stupid parson; of true love (between the parson's daughter and a young man who is illegitimate,) and of the efforts of a parish worker to marry the vicar. "Deliver us from Evil" is extraordinarily amateurish, and has all the appearance of having lain in a drawer for the last 30 year. —"Daily News"

MUSICAL STORIES

A Conductor's Memories

"MY MUSICAL LIFE." By Walter Damrosch. Allenand Unwin. 18s.

Mr. Damrosch has been a leading conductor and musical organiser in America since 1895, when he founded the Damrosch Opera Company. Most of the celebrated instrumentalists of his time have performed under his baton, and many of the greatest composers were his intimate acquaintances. The dream of his father, with whom he imigrated from Breslau in the sixties, was to introduce the music-dramas of Wagner into their adopted country; after his death Mr. Damrosch set himself the same ambition, the achievement of which he regards with justificable pride and satisfaction. His career, indeed, has been so uniformly successful that no great interest attaches to its record.

The most attractive feature of the book its its pastiche of anecdotes about wellknown figures in the musical world. Mr. Damrosch know Tschaikowsky when he was composing his "Pathetic" Symphhony, of which he was privileged to give the first performance; Saint Saëns, at the height of his popularity, when his appearance in a Paris boulevard used to be greeted with cheers and Liszt in his decline, a kindly old man, sensitive to imaginary slights, striving pathetically to keep up his friendship with Wagner while that ruthlessly uprising personality was busy eclipsing his fame.

Marianne Brandt, the singer, was once refused a registered letter at the New York G.P.O. until she could give evidence of her identity:

"You will not give me the letter? I will prove to you that I am Marianne Brandt." And then she proceeded with full voice to sing the great cadenza from her principal aria in "Le Prophète." Her glorious voice echoed and re-echoed through the vaulted corridors of the post office. Men came running up on all sides to find out what had happened, and finally the agitated official handed her the letter, saying: "Here is your letter, but for God's sake be quiet."

Mr. Damrosch tells us that he was conducting Beethoven's Ninth Symphony before a hushed audience, when one of his braces suddenly snapped, "and for the rest of the performance I was in mortal fear that my trousers would not stay up." The sublimity of this composer's work seems to have been a special target for these incongruities. On another occasion, at the end of a concert given in a Nebraska town.

My double-bass player told me that with a colleague whose head was devoid of hair, he had stood directly below a proscenium box in which a group of cowboys were seated. While the orchestra was playing the Fifth Symphony, one of these cowboys, who was chewing tobacco violently, amused himself by spitting frequently, and always aiming for the bald head of the bass-player, who had to keep one agitated eye on the conductor and the other on this horribly resourceful listener, in order to avoid his only too well-directed shots.

Mr. Damrosch's book is full of such reminiscences, and is sure of a wide welcome among those who like to take their doses of life and music in brief and pleasant draughts.—"Daily News."

STANDING AND STARING

Mr. Davies' New Poems

"SECRETS." By W. H. Davies. Cape. 3s. 6d.

This new book of verse by Mr. Davies is as near to Spring as ink and paper and lyrical genius will ever get. It is true that there is a touch of misanthropy in the new book, that here and there Mr. Davies lays aside his boxwood flute to play the Timon for a verse or so. Thus, the last (and perhaps the worst) verse in the collection has a very misanthropic air:

Call me a Nature poet, nothing more,
Who writes of simple things, not human evil;
And hear my grief when I confess that friends.
Have tried their best to make a cunning devil.

And elsewhere there are references to false friends, and two very angry verses addressed "To a Lady Friend," who, we gather from the poet, only inspired him in his youth because at that time anything would inspire him. But it is Mr. Davies' delight, and not his sorrow and anger, that makes him the poet he is. His best songs, which for artless loveliness cannot be matched in our time, are the fruit of much standing and staring—as, indeed, he tells us himself:

The power was given at birth to me
To star at a rainbow, bird or tree,
Longer than any man alive;
And from these trances, when they're gone,
My songs of joy come, one by one.

And this little book sparkles with songs of joy, telling us that "Rainbows are lovely things," that "Leafy with little clouds, the sky is shining clear and bright," that "The star of Day, both seen and heard is but a little English bird."

Though there are still a number of bad, false rhymes in these verses, the general level of their technique is, I think, rather higher than that of any other single book, excluding collected editions, that the poet has issued. Here and there we find those odd naiveties that are the result of either an abundant but somewhat misplaced humour or of a singular lack of it, such phrases as "When the life-force in my blood," or "Go to that girl and state your happy case," or "He sits to breakfast with no care Of others that have none." On the other hand, we find poem after poem like a May morning, enchanting little things still glistening with dew. Most of them are on familiar themes and in a familiar voice (and no more to be despised on that account than is the lark's song), but there are, too, some unexpected moods and manners. In particular, there is "Down Underground," which describes how "The worms have found the place where Ceauty lies," and is an unusually macabre lyric. As a specimen of the rest, here are two exquisite verses called "The Rivals:"

Pleasure is not the one I love:
Her laughter in the market-place
Makes every fool her echo there;
And from her finger tips she throws
Wild kisses in the open air.

Give me that little miser, Joy,
Who hoards at home her quiet charms;
And offers with her two soft lips
A warmre kiss than any thrown
By pleasure, from her finger-tips.

Here, in these 40 poems, with their quaint decorations, is value indeed for three shillings and sixpence.—"Daily News."

CHITS WE SHOULD LIKE TO SEND

To the Weather Man

BY ELIZABETH PEPYS.

Dear Sir:—In addressing you I have no desire to underestimate the value of the service you daily render us. What the world would do should you neglect to provide it with our diurnal and nocturnal weather, I hesitate to dwell upon. Certain is it that three-fourths of current conversation would cease. Considering the varied tastes you have to meet, the difficulty of reconciling the farmer's requests for rain with the tennis enthusiast's demand for clear skies, the rector's plea for good-church going weather with the would-be stay-at-home's desire for a gentle, soaking rain—I have to say that you even things up very well.

But can you not refrain from playing such practical jokes upon us as seems your daily custom at present? Being of necessity an early rising and industrious person I must needs adjust my costume at an untoward hour. This morning, for example, at eight a.m. it was raining cats and dogs and Ethiopian infants. I scrambled into rainy day togs, thanked heaven for the invention of motors, and before I could reach the office, the sun was blithely shining and my clothes looked about as a appropriate as a thé dansant frock at Henli.

"Uncertain and Unreliable."

The other morning, secure in the promise of early sunbeams, I donned my best hat and classiest light morning frock, with the same results, but in reverse. This mutibility of intention is quite as disconcerting to the leisured golf enthusiast who may call off an appointment for a round only to find that when the shower ceases her partner has already made other arrangements. The mother countermands the motor and postpones a round of errands for an inspection of the house, only to bewail her decision too late. Children grumble at being whisked in and out of rainy-day clothes. Domestic complications are rife.

Such are the trials you inflict upon us, dear Mr. Probilities. Now that it has been explained to you, won't you please give us better weather tips? A system of signals might perhaps be arranged, whereby smart showers at eight a.m. might indicate clearing and warm at nine, or a fair morning prognosticate a thunder storm in the afternoon. Just be consistent, that's all we ask.

Patiently yours,
Perplexed Dresser

SLAVES

BY ELIZABETH PEPYS.

He is only fantastical that is not in fashion.

"Such utter twaddle!" exclaimed a certain clear-thinking woman of my acquaintance impatiently, "Women have only themselves to thank for being slaves. It's not because of the tyrant Man or the disabilities of Sex or the iniquitous Political System. It's their own silly fault!"

With this introduction she proceeded to attack the existing systems of slavery, our conclusions running something along these lines. Physical slavery has gone out of style. We no longer trade in human flesh and blood, and although peonage in a modified form does exist, it can hardly be said to be countenanced by public opinion. But slavery to conventions is still strong. We inherit our political

Miss Margaret G. Bondfield, long known as a leader among British women Labour leaders, and now Chairman of the general council of the Trades-Union Congress as well as Labour Member for Northampton. The settlement of the boiler-makers' strike has been largely attributed to her.

convictions or acquire them early in life, and then by dint of reitterating "My party, right or wrong," it becomes impossible for us to break away from this slavery.

In religion we are slaves to tradition to prejudices, to emotional anesthesias, in thralldom to the faith of our fathers. We are most hopelessly enslaved socially, for while politics do not always intrude and religion is seldom insistent, we are social animals every minute of our existence, keenly sensitive to what people will say.

"The Fashions of These Times."

Nowhere is this more clearly seen than in the world of Fashion. The "little more and how much it is, and the little less and what worlds away" seems to have been written to emphasize the importance of the placing of a lapel, the gravity of the misplaced button. No man would dare wear a straw hat when felts are prescribed, and how then shall pliant woman stand out against the irresistible current of style.

Of course variety spices life, and no one need quarrel with a desire for change, but the irritation of the lockstep is that intelligent women are called upon to discard favourite articles of apparel because the style arbiters have decreed a change. No compulsion, you may say, but is the necessity not practically present. And why? The average woman does not blindly follow out the instincts of her being by wearing her skirts long one season and short the next, affecting red one month and garbing herself in black the next. She may think she does, but is this really so?

An Indictment.

We firmly believe, although we are in no position to prove it with documents and sworn statistics, that in dressing most of us women are puppets, dancing at the whim of the manufacturers or designers who pull the strings behind the scenes. We admit that we are inconsistent, inasmuch as knowing the truth with regard to this, should logically set us free from this thralldom. We are not. Indeed we hug the chains with what grace we may, and shall continue to sing the evanescent vogue with the best fashion articles we can achieve.

Nevertheless and not withstanding, we are all too well assured that it is not pure love of art which causes the designers to utter pronouncements of long waists one year and Empire styles the next. Manufacturers must have their innings, looms must be kept whirring, finished products must be sold. Woman is exploited and happy in her thralldom. Then why change this blissful ignorance, one queries? In the interests of real art, in the name of clear thinking, for the securing of greater leisure for other pursuits.

But how? Ah, that must be another story.

EXPERT ADVICE ON BOOKS

Personal Service Given by Chinese-American Publishing Co.

Martin Tupper first said "A good book is the best of friends," and since that time many have echoed his sentiments. We all love to have friends and there are very few of us who would not love to have books—provided of course that they are the kind of books we love. What a responsibility in choosing a book if we are to make it a friend for life! How even more momentous the decision upon a book for a friend! A subtle compliment or a deadly insult may be conveyed by the choice of a book for a gift

In Shanghai, where opportunities for outdoor sport and indoor socialibities, are so inviting we do not devote as much leisure to books as we do at Home, and hence quickly drop out of touch with the latest literature. Our own fault, too, as we must ruefully admit, when the excellent book shops of Shanghai do their best to keep us supplied with the new books and if our tastes are peculiar will cater to them by sending in special orders.

A Wise Guide

Now comes an announcement of special interest to the Outports, whose residents cannot stroll into our alluring shops and handle the books for themselves. In a letter addressed to inland dwellers by Ellen Hunt of the Chinese-American Publishing Co. we read:

I am sure that there are certain types of reading in which you feel a particular interest. There are books which will so absorb your thoughts that hours will speed by unheeded, long evenings be but welcome, and the dreary heat of summer pass by unoticed.

These are the kinds of books with which I hope to keep you in touch; old books living from generation to generation, new books fresh from the pens of the best authors of the day—and the in-between books which you may not as yet have found time to read.

There are many ways, in which, from time to time, I could personally advise you as to the selection of these books, or attend to the prompt filling of your orders, if desired.

Isn't this almost enough to make you move to the Outports? One might expect an exodus from Shanghai if the happy second thought did not occur to us that we may ask the advice of the well-read clerks in charge of our local shops, and moreover, see their wares for ourselves. Otherwise one might be tempted to conspire with out-of-town friends and mail letters from the wilds of Szechuen as follows:

OLD BRIDGES

That Generations of Women Have Crossed.

Woman with her sixth sense, her intuition, her sensitiveness is quick to respond to the atmosphere of happiness or of depression that greets her in old buildings, churches, palaces, or houses. Some can find charm and atmosphere lingering around old bridges. And why not? There are countless bridges that have been the scene of romance in love and war, scenes of battles, ambushes, lovers' meetings, inspiration to poets and story-tellers.

Memory recalls at once famous names—the Bridge of Sighs, Old London Bridge, the bridge of boats that Cæsar burnt behind him, and in so doing gave to posterity an undying simile; the one Horatius held so well in the brave days of old, and that one at Avignon where they danced.

What a Pageant!

But to women the most interesting of old bridges must be that very ancient one at Crowland, in Lincolnshire, first built in 803. A triangular bridge built to cover three streams, much water has flowed under it in eleven centuries, and countless women of all types have mounted its quaint worn steps and crossed its steep arch. Crowland was famous for its Abbey, old when John of Gaunt went there in 1389, and for the great fairs held in its neighbourhood—the Wembleys of mediæval days—so one could dream for long over the pageant of English womanhood that this old bridge has seen.

Saxon, Norman, and Tudor women in flowing robes and high-built head-dresses; women in farthingales and hoops, the women who wore the first heeled shoes and the first corsets. Women of the Cavalier period, with high tapping heels and sweeping ostrich feathers; beauties of the eighteenth century in powder and patches. Women in crinolines, in shawls, in tailor-mades, and the women of to-day and to-morrow, with their beautiful, unhampered clothes, their 20th century freedom.

Tales of Romance.

Our own land abounds in bridges whose very stones might cry out with tales of romance, of "battles long ago," of fair women and gallant fighters. The Auld Brig of Ayr, for ever immortalized by Burns, many a bonnie lass has trod these hoary stones; the Brig o' Turk—who could linger there on a summer evening and not weave in the whisper and shimmer of the birches pictures and stories of kings and fair maidens, huntsmen and raiders?

Love of Country.

That is a wonderful bridge that spans the rapids at Connal Ferry, a triumph of modern engineering set down in one of the most story haunted and beautiful spots in Scotland. Trains and motors sweep be[illegible] its high-hung cantilevers carrying the traveller as though by magic back to the days of adventure. Here by Appin wandered the lad with the silver button; here sounded the pibroch; and here flashed the fiery cross. One wonders not a little about the women of these far-off days, they had in their lives so many difficult bridges to cross, bridges that only passionate love of their country could carry them over. These women who wept in Glencoe and these others who so gladly sold their jewels for the "King over the water."

When John Duke of Argyle 300 years ago made a Highland high road not so very far from Glasgow he spanned a broad stream with a picturesque Roman arch. Only a few years ago the old bridge was demolished and replaced by a modern concrete one. It took but a summer storm to sweep away the new bridge within a few months of its erection. Well might the stones of Argyle's old bridge cry out in derision.

To-day we have women in Parliament, in the pulpit, in the Law Courts, and even one brave pioneer in a ship's engine-room, but I have not yet met a woman bridge-builder. She may, however, arrive any day in this astonishing age and prove herself a worthy competitor to the strong, silent man so popular with certain women novelists as the typical builder of bridges.—Mabel Penman, in "Glasgow Herald."
